AN INTRODUCTORY NOTE

This collection of articles by Seventh-day Adventist pioneers dealing with the important sanctuary doctrine, is an expansion and updating of a similar collection produced in 1981. This work has been done in connection with the publishing of my book, The Sanctuary, 1844, and the Pioneers, in 1983.

The encouragement for such a collection was given by Ellen White in connection with her opposition to the teaching by Albion F. Ballenger regarding the sanctuary, at the General Conference of 1905. She said:

I am bidden to say in the name of the Lord that Elder Ballenger is following a false light. The Lord has not given him the message that he is bearing regarding the sanctuary service.--Ms 145, 1905.

At that time she also said:

Let the aged men who were pioneers in our work speak plainly, and let those who are dead speak also, by the reprinting of their articles in our periodicals.--Ms 62, 1905.

Again she wrote:

The Lord would have us at this time bring in the testimony written by those who are now dead, to speak in behalf of heavenly things. The Holy Spirit has given instruction for us in these last days. We are to repeat the testimonies that God has given His people [her statements], the testimonies that present clear conceptions of the truths of the sanctuary, and that show the relation of Christ to the truths of the sanctuary so clearly brought to view.--Ms 75, 1905.

It will be noted that in a few instances articles in some series are not included because their subject matter is not directly related to the sanctuary. Those who wish to consult these articles can do so at most Adventist universities or colleges by means of microfiche.

It is the hope of the compiler that this collection will make a positive contribution to a better understanding of the sanctuary in heaven and related subjects as these Bible-based doctrines developed in the Seventh-day Adventist Church.

Feb. 9, 1905 A Personal Saviour and a Real Work in a Definite Place

(EVIDENCE THAT THE JUDGMENT MIGHT HAVE SET ON THE TENTH DAY OF THE 7TH MONTH.)

1st. The reader is referred to the evidence that was presented by Mrs. S. S. Snow, in the "True Midnight Cry," that we are in the last year of prophetic periods, and that to fulfill the type of the High Priest coming out of the Holy of Holies, (Lev. 21: 27-32.) Christ must come on that day.

2d. From a re-examination of the subject, it seems quite probable that the coming out of the High Priest on "the day of atonement" was typical of Christ sitting in judgment, rather than of his personally appearing to the inhabitants of the earth. Let the reader examine Ex. 28: 15, 29, 30; Num. 27: 18-21; Ex. 30: 10; Lev. 16: 29-31. The names of the children of Israel were borne on the breast-plate of judgment, (and why is it called thus?) whenever the High Priest went in before the Lord at those annual atonements. No names could have been upon that breast-plate but those that had complied with the conditions in Lev. 23: 29, 32. Thus the disobedient were condemned already, (John 3: 18,) yet that condemnation was not made manifest until the Priest came out in the presence of the congregation. They suffered judgment to go against them by "default," in refusing to appear in obedience to the summons and enter their plea, or "afflict themselves" on the ninth day.

Examine in connexion with the above quoted texts, Heb. 4: 14-16; Heb. 5: and 8: the whole chap. 4; Heb. 9: 6-12, 19-26, & ver. 27, which shows that there must be a similarity between the appearing of Christ, and that of the High Priest. From Lev. 9: 23-24, it appears that while Aaron was offering the sin-offering he lifted up his hands and blessed the people; (it does not appear that the congregation saw him at that time,) he then came down from the Holy of Holies through the veil into the tabernacle of the congregation, and from thence he came out and blessed the people, and the glory of the Lord appeared unto all the people, and they shouted and fell upon their faces. Here is a blessing the people at two different times by the High Priest: the first when the offering is made at the time their sins are put away, and the second when he came out of the tabernacle of the congregation and appeared to all the people. Christ has gone, as the High Priest did, through "the veil," that is, "into heaven itself." And to harmonize the scripture on this subject it seems necessary that there should be some movement on his part in putting away the sins of his people as a body, before he personally appears.

Acts 3: 19-21, "Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord," (typified in the first blessing conferred by the High Priest,) "and he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you," (typified by the second blessing,) "whom the heavens must receive, until the times of restitution of all things spoken of by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." See Isa. 25: 7, 8, "And he will destroy in this mountain the face of the covering cast over all people, and the veil that is spread over all nations. He will swallow up death in victory," &c. This veil now prevents our discovering the New Jerusalem, and within this veil, according to the tabernacle of the congregation, Christ might have set in judgment on the tenth day, and thus fulfilled the type. It is in this mountain that the veil is to be destroyed. See Isa. 2: 1; Isa. 54: 25, "And the Redeemer shall come (first) to Zion, and (afterward) to them that turn from transgression in Jacob." (Isa. 4: 31, "But Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all.")

Unless something as decisive as the setting of the judgment took place on the tenth day, the antitype is not yet given—the "True Midnight Cry" not sounded; and the overwhelming evidence that we live in the last year of prophetic periods must be abandoned; and God's people are left in darkness, not only to be overtaken as by a thief, but to be devoured by merciless wolves.

EVIDENCE THAT THE JUDGMENT WOULD BE THE PERSONAL APPEARING OF CHRIST AND SUB-SEQUENT EXECUTION OF THE LAWS.

When Christ personally appears to the inhabitants of the world it is not to sit in judgment and pass sentence upon them; but to execute the judgment previously written.

Jer. 31: 5, "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous branch, and a king shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth." Ezek. 5: 4, "Therefore thus saith the Lord God: Behold I, even I, am against thee, and will execute judgment in the midst of thee in the sight of the nations." A fair inference that he is not in sight of the nations when he sits in judgment.

John 5: 26, 27, "For as the Father has life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself; and hath given him authority to execute judgment also, because he is the son of man." Jude 14: 15, "And Enoch also, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of these, saying, Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints to execute judgment upon all, and convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him."

It is not when the judgment sits that the wicked are convinced of their folly, but when it is executed. (Psa. 149: 5-8.) "Let the saints be joyful in glory: let them sing aloud upon their beds. Let the high praises of God be in their mouth, and a two edged sword in their hand; to execute vengeance upon the heathen, and punishments upon the people; to bind their kings with chains, and their nobles with fetters of iron; to execute upon them the judgment written: This honor have all the saints." See also Ezek. 39: 13; Rev. 19: 14, and other places which show that when judgment is executed upon the ungodly, the resurrected saints will have a hand in that work.

The term "Judge" is frequently put for the execution of judgment, but when thus found, its connexion will always determine its import. There must be a rendering of judgment before it can be executed, and we are assured that God hath "appointed a day" for that purpose. (Acts 17: 31) and furthermore that, to all men, he hath given assurance, or "offered faith" (see margin) relative to that appointment.

ITS RENDERING BEFORE EXECUTION. *

Mat. 5: 25, "Agree with thine adversary quickly, while thou art in the way with him: lest at any time the adversary deliver thee (first) to the Judge, and the Judge (after the passing of sentence) deliver thee to the officer (to execute the penalty) and thou be cast into prison."

Rev. 11: 15, 16, "And the seventh Angel sounded, [the antitype of the Jubilee Trump, as all agree, which always sounded on the tenth day of the seventh month] and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become our Lord's and he shall reign forever and ever. And the four and twenty elders, [for the "great multitude," ch. 7: 9, were not yet there] which sat before God on their seats, fell upon their faces." &c. What event do these circumstances refer to? "And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is kindled, and the time of the dead, THAT THEY SHOULD BE JUDGED, and that thou shouldst give (or assign) reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great, and shouldst destroy them that corrupt the earth." Rev. 20: 12, "And I saw the dead [not yet raised] small and great stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were JUDGED out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works."

I trust God will show that we have not been mistaken in the day, and he will soon demonstrate that in proclaiming that day, we have "preached the preaching that God has bid us." That he hath now given assurance of that day to all men we are willing to leave with him. On this subject consult the following text with its parallels. Rom. 2: 14-16, "For when the Gentiles, which have not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law, these having not the law, are a law unto themselves. Which show the work of the law written in their heart, their consciences also bearing witness, and their thoughts the mean while accusing, or else excusing one another: in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men, by Jesus Christ, according to my Gospel." See also 1 Cor. 13: 32; and Dan. 7: 9, 10. The Prophet here says first, the thrones cast down: "The thrones of the four universal monarchies, for of them only had he been speaking. The next thing is the Ancient of days sitting—the "judgment sits," and the books are opened. Next the beast (the fourth beast) is slain—then his body destroyed and given to the burning flame. And then, while life is yet remaining in some parts of the four beasts, the Son of man comes with the clouds, and finally with his Saints takes the kingdoms. The thrones of the four kingdoms, must first be cast down before the judgment sits. Rome, the last of those kingdoms, has maintained its throne, or seat of civil power till the present, or nearly till the present time. The last advices from Rome, were that placards with the inscription "shown with the Pope," "down with the government," were recklessly posted up in the public streets in open day light. This looks as though the last of those thrones might be cast down; and if so, there is no Scriptural evidence in the way of the judgment having set on the tenth day of the seventh month.

I think we are not given to understand that we are personally, individually to appear before God, at the time the judgment sits, but we are told in an appropriate type of that event in Ezek. 21: 30, "I will judge thee in the place where thou wast created in the land of thy nativity." And in Isa. 11: 3, 4, "He shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove with the hearing of his ears: But with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth: and [after that] he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked."

There must be a movement on his part, at that time, if not visible to us, See Psa. 95: 8, 9, "For he cometh to judge, &c." Psa. 50: 3-5, "He shall call to the heavens from above, and [give notice] to the earth that He may judge his people," &c., Psa. 62: 2, "Arise, O God, judge the earth," &c. Psa. 96: 11-13, "For he cometh, for he cometh to judge the earth," &c. Psa. 76: 8, "Thou didst cause judgment to be heard from Heaven: the earth feared and was still." Psa. 2: 7-9, "He hath prepared his throne for judgment," &c. THE PLACE.

Rev. 1-8 "After this I looked, and behold, a door was opened in Heaven: and the first voice which I heard was as it were the voice of a trumpet, [Rev. 11: 15,] talking with me; which said, come up hither, and I will show thee things which must be hereafter, and immediately I was in the spirit: and behold, a throne was set in Heaven, and one sat on the throne." "And before the throne there was a sea of glass like unto crystal." He does not yet see the "great multitude," on that ~~view~~—he only sees it "prepared." Rev. 20: 11, and I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it," and then (ver. 12,) the dead were judged, before the resurrection, which is the resurrection. Rev. 14: 14, "and I looked and behold a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat like unto the Son of Man, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle." After this there was forth an earnest petition for the reaping to take place inasmuch as the time had come for that work, and the harvest also was ripe.

1. Thm. 4: 16, 17; "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel, and with the trump of God," (Rev. 11: 15;) but not to the earth, for them which are "alive and remain," are to be caught up with the resurrected saints "in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air." The Lord descends at the time appointed, and the first came brought before the tribunal of heaven thus "prepared" is that of "the dead in Christ."

From Isa. 34: 1-8; and 40: 2, Rev. 14: 7, 15, and other places I am satisfied that it is made the duty of the Watchmen, to proclaim words of comfort to the Saints during the period lying between the sitting of the judgment, and this first resurrection: If I am wrong, let the Bible student tell me, under what circumstances, the proclamation is to be made! "Her warfare [appointed time] is accomplished, her iniquity is pardoned!" Many will doubt this position, as we learn from Isa 40: 27; "Why sayest thou, O Jacob, and speakest, O Israel, my way is hid from the Lord, and my judgment is passed over from my God! Read the connexion from verse 21 to 31, & also, Isa. 49: 13-17.

The Judgment begins at the house of God, (1 Pet. 4: 17,) and for the whole world cannot occupy more than a full year, (Acts 17: 31,) and for God's people, I have been inclined from the following texts, to believe that it would occupy but 40 days, Gen. 7: 4, 12, 17; "Forty days after Noah was shut into the Ark before it was taken up, and one year and ten days from the time the rain began, till Noah and his family went out upon the reas-vated earth, Gen. 7: 11; and 8: 13; see the use made of this type in 2d Pet. 3: 3-7, Matt. 24: 37-40; 1st. 40: 9, 10; See also, Ex. 24: 12, 18; Rom. 2: 12; Ex. 34: 29, 30; Matt. 24: 2, 11; Gen. 8: 6; Deut. 9: 1-9; 1 Kings 10: 3-8; Num. 13: 23, and 14: 34; Deut. 9: 25; Ezek. 4: 6; compared with Isa. 6, 3: 6; and Acts 3: 19-21; Jonah 3: 4; Acts 1: 3. If those "waiting for their Lord do not gain deliverance from these mortal bodies at the end of forty days, from the tenth day, their peculiar trial of faith during this period, seems to me appropriately typified.

I think also that the 40 years from the elevation of Buonaparte to the Throne of France, in 1804, to the present time, with the circumstances intervening, has its type in some of the following texts; Deut. 25: 1-3; Ex. 16: 35; Josh. 5: 6; Judg. 13: 1; Ps. 95: 10; Acts 7: 30, 36; Heb. 3: 6, 17. The reasons for attaching this importance to his elevation, are, that he was the head of that power which subverted the Papal Government, by which dominion had been held over the Saints for 1260 years. In this act he also opened the way for tearing off the sack-cloth from the two witnesses (word of God,) with which Papacy had clothed it.

One thing must be perfectly plain to every Bible student! that there must be a time for God to judge the world, before judgment can be executed. And the evidence from Scripture is, that when Christ personally appears, it is to execute judgment. Why need any believer in the Bible with these evidences before him, and a thousand more clustering around him, abandon any thing more relative to the tenth day, than that Christ did not personally appear on that day?

THE MIDNIGHT CRY.

No believer in the immutability of Jehovah can doubt that he knew the course the people who were "waiting for him," would pursue in the last days. He seeing this, likened them to ten virgins that first went forth to meet him—afterwards slumbered and slept, at length were aroused by "a cry at midnight;" in the next place refused to furnish oil to the foolish, and finally went in to the marriage and the door was shut.

If there was to be a false cry, would the Saviour failed to have noticed it! At present we are bound to believe that we have had the "true midnight cry," recognised in the 25th chapter of Matthew, with this error on our part, viz. the time proclaimed, and not the proclamation itself, was the midnight. This is evident from the fact that no especial blessing attended the proclamation—no slumbering virgins were awakened, until more than half of the previous three months had expired. And never, in all the history of the church, was a people found "waiting for his Son from heaven," with more earnest expectation than those that looked for him on the tenth day &c.—trimming their lamps constantly, which gave a brilliant light until that day, which brought them to the middle watch, and left them in the middle of the present Jewish year, and in a night darkness relative to the definite time of the Advent. For definite time alone, for the event, could ever have aroused them from their slumber.

Definite time for the personal appearing of our Lord is certainly contained in the Bible, and if it lies not at the end of forty days from the "tenth day," it most assuredly does between that time and the end of the Jewish year. If "the path of the just is as a shining light that shineth more and more until the perfect day," we ought to be sure that our lamps are not gone out upon a subject relative to which we are not to be "in darkness."

The word of God is a lamp to our feet, and a light to our path; but a perfectly useless light if our feet are not to move in that path, and a ray of light is not to be cast before us, to show us the threshold of the celestial gates. Can it be possible, that those who have so earnestly contended for the faith once delivered to the saints, are now to fall back into their old position and say we can know nothing of the definite time—the Scripture has left us in the dark so far that the day will come as a thief upon us as well as a sinner! And why shrink from a position that has been so triumphantly defended in the past? Is it because your wounds are yet unhealed and you dread another conflict? Will you thus abandon your ground to an enemy that has given evidence of hatred to the coming and kingdom of our Lord, and thus leave them to say we have been compelled to fall back upon their position? If I am deluded, let some meek disciple of Jesus make haste to my rescue, and speedily throw down in my path a "thou saith the Lord," for I am now through his ever abounding grace, "HASTENING UNTO THE COMING OF THE DAY OF GOD." I feel an indescribable and glorious light shining upon my path, ever since the moving by of the tenth day; and which I believe to be the result of proclaiming a truth, which I saw from the first, would be so unpopular, that none would proclaim it but those who had been entirely disinterested of love to the world, and possessed a stronger desire for Christ to have his rights, than even for sinners to obtain pardon.

Our forty days of temptation will find us settled upon something—either light or darkness. That period has nearly come, and I am sorry to say that it finds me so unsettled as to the definite day when Christ will come, while I am so well assured from Scripture testimony that it is to be known.

Many are saying, "do not fix upon another time," and when the evidence is poured down upon them from the great treasury of truth, that it is the happy privilege of the wise to understand even this, they say, "Show it to us, and we will believe it too." To them we only reply, there is the word of God, containing fixed periods at short intervals, reaching, as we believe, not only to, but far into the immortal state. God, by his spirit, has impressed these facts upon our heart, as we have prayerfully searched his word, and God alone is able to impress them upon your hearts: "Go to him."

Some have, from my remarks on this subject, drawn the inference that I was proclaiming the end of probation. This is not true. I have never to my recollection proclaimed either the end or beginning of probation, nor do I consider it my prerogative to do so, finding nothing upon that subject in the Bible. I know it has been a popular expression that when Christ leaves the "medietorial throne" human probation will end, but I never have been shown the chapter and verse, nor that Christ had a "medietorial throne." I always have, and always shall, feel it my duty to point the enquiring penitent to Christ, but now especially, do I believe it our duty to comfort God's people. I would refer the reader to my remarks on Matt. 23: 1-14, in Vol. 3, No. 6, of the "Western Midnight Cry," published in May last.

Let those that are now "groaning for adoption, to wit, the redemption of their bodies," prayerfully, and without prejudice, search the subject of the time of their deliverance, and soon surely than we know that the morning sun will rise at its appointed time, shall we know the coming of that day. And now, while darkness reigns in triumph, and the predicted cries of "peace and safety" are fulfilled as never before, the glorious rays of prophetic light, shining from the sacred Word, will glow upon our path till we enter the long sought haven. Our mistakes have not been in wrong calculation of time so much as the proper application of events. No point of time will probably ever be understood long enough before the event to constitute another rallying point. For this would be a second "Midnight Cry," and only one is authorized; but "the wise SHALL understand."

WESTERN MIDNIGHT CRY.

Cincinnati, Monday, December 30, 1844.

* INTOLERANCE.

How earnestly ought God's dear children to pray that they may be saved from that wicked spirit of intolerance, that has driven many of us from the society and fellowship of those we have loved. God has been merciful in hitherto granting us a forbearing spirit, while, on some points we have held views, to say the least, widely differing from each other. These views have been freely and publicly advanced without any fear of denunciation from those who were "looking for the Lord," and with very little apparent danger of weakening the "cords of Love" with which God has bound us together. "We have great need of caution now" in this time of trial, lest this disposition, freely to investigate the word of God, should be checked by the intolerance of brethren. If any view that we may have advanced, with motives, pure as ever dwelt in the human heart, and under a high and solemn sense of duty, is disposed of on a mere caution, headed "Fanaticism," or in any other way, except candid scriptural reasoning, the tendency with sensitive minds, is, to shut out the light. It seems to me that the editor of the "Voice of Truth," has disposed of the arguments of certain brethren, rather too much in this short hand way.

His remarks are as follows, "If any man or minister tells you that the Lord came, in any sense, on the 'tenth day' more than he has come since or for centuries previous, 'Believe it NOT,' &c. Now I do not wish to find fault with Bro. Marsh, for his reference may not be to the particular class which I have supposed; but if it is, with all Christian kindness, I would make a suggestion, not only to him, but for the benefit of all such as may be tempted to dispose of an argument in this summary way. It is this; That the argument be plainly stated. Thus,

1st. There are certain brethren who believe that Christ did in some "sense," come on the "tenth day," "more than he has come since or for centuries previous."

2d. They argue that Christ did on the "tenth day," "come" from his "Father's throne" to his "Judgment seat," where he is now sitting in judgment on our world, Ex. 28: 15, 29, 30; Num. 27: 18-21; Ex. 30: 10; Lev. 16: 29-31; Lev. 28: 29, 31; Heb. 4: 14-16; 8: 1-2; 8-12, 19-26; Lev. 9: 22-24; Acts 2: 19-21. Whether the judgment has yet set upon the "living," they do not pretend to say.

3d. They give as further evidence, that the judgment must not be before Christ personally appears to "execute judgment." Rev. 11: 18-19; 20: 12; Matt. 24: 30; Dan. 7: 9, 10; Ezek. 41: 30; Isa. 11: 3, 4; Psa. 93: 8, 9; 50: 3-5; 82: 6; 96: 11-13; 78: 9; 2: 7-9; Rev. 4: 1-6; 20: 11, 14; 1 Thess. 4: 16, 17.

4th. They hold that when Christ appears to all the inhabitants of the earth, "as the lightning," he will be attended with "all" or "an thousand" "of his saints" that must previously have been "raised," "changed in a moment," and that he will then "execute judgment upon all" that were "left" when the righteous were "taken;" and not till then will "all know and understand" his coming; for he will then "convince all that are engaged among them," &c., Psa. 147: 8-9; Jude

14, 15; John 5: 20, 21; Ezek. 38: 8; Jer. 23: 8; &c.

If these positions constitute an error, sufficient to induce our good brother to caution others to "beware of fanaticism on this point," it is every way worthy of a more extended notice; and it may be the easiest thing in the world to overthrow them.

If we are not now acting under the commission "Comfort ye, comfort ye my people," &c. Isa. 40: 2; it is important we should know it. As for myself, I am solemnly pledged to yield to scripture evidence let the consequences be what they may. Let us possess the "more noble" spirit of the "Bereans," and "Search the Scriptures daily," that we may see whether these things be so.

THE ADVENT HERALD.

VOL. I.—NO. 1.

BOSTON, JANUARY, 1845.

A. HALE & J. TURNER, PDS.

Has not the Saviour come as the Bridegroom?

Parable of the ten virgins Matthew xiv.

V. 1. "Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom." There—on the tower where the faithful and the wise waited, having started the sight which were to indicate that the Son of Man must be near, according to his word, in giving the most in due season to the household; and the evil corrupt with in his heart, My Lord delayeth is coming, and begins to emit his fellow servants, (the wise and faithful,) and to eat and drink with the drunken, then the kingdom of heaven shall be likened unto these virgins which went forth to meet the bridegroom.

Let us here for a moment consider this question. How are we to understand this parable? Is Christ to come in a distinct character, represented by the bridegroom, or is his coming, as King of kings, to be like the coming of a bridegroom in a marriage arrangement? In other parables we invariably understand that some distinct office, character, or work of Christ, is presented to our view. In the parable of the Tares of the Field, we understand the man who sowed good seed in his field to bring to view the Son of God, as Creator and Proprietor of the world, his agency in counteracting the malice of the devil, and the power by which he will finally destroy his works. In the parable of the Hiredmen, we understood to be taught, namely, the fact that our Lord has succeeded by so high, to subvert his kingdom and to return to the measure in which he will dispose of his professed people and the world at large, when he shall have received the kingdom and returned. So the parable of the Vine and Branches—The Sheep-fold—The Vineyard let out to Husbandmen, &c., &c. These all make known some distinct office, character, or work of Christ, which are frequently and plainly brought to view in other portions of the word of God.

Now, if Christ is spoken of in the character of Bridegroom, and the word of God informs us of a marriage coming in which he is to be present as the Bridegroom, why should we suppose that this parable speaks of his coming as the King of glory, and not as the Bridegroom to the marriage. It certainly seems clear that it is in the coming of the Son to the Bridegroom, and not as the King of glory, of which this parable speaks; and the wonder now is, that we should have confounded one with the other as we have.

Let us proceed. Are there, now, any reasons for supposing that the Bridegroom has come, to the effect of the parable? In answering this question several particulars need to be understood. In every marriage arrangement there were the bridegroom and bride; the parable (called in John iii. 35, and Judges xiv. 30, friends of the bridegroom, of whom there were two—on to wait on the bride and other on the bridegroom,) the companions or virgins, Judges xiv. 11, Psalm xiv. 14; and the guests. There must also be a time and place for the marriage.

Does the word of God give us any information upon these particulars in the case of the marriage of the Lamb? 1. Who is the bridegroom? It is hardly necessary to answer, The Son of God. Matthew x. 13, 15; John iii. 35.

2. Who is the bride? Let the Revelation answer:—"And there came unto me one of the seven angels, which had the seven vials full of the seven last plagues, and talked with me, saying, 'Come hither, I will shew thee the bride, the Lamb's wife.' And he carried me away in the spirit to a great and high mountain, and shewed me that great city, the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God, having the glory of God; and her light was like unto a some most precious, even like a jasper-stone, clear as crystal: and had a wall great and high, and had twelve gates, and at the gates twelve angels, and names written thereon, which are the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel. On the east, three gates; on the north, three gates; on the south, three gates; and on the west, three gates. And the wall of the city had twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb."

The testimony of Paul agrees with that of John:—"But Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all." Gal. iv. 26. What Old Jerusalem was to the Church under the old covenant, that the New Jerusalem is to be, to the Church under the new covenant to its perfected state. As Jehovah declares that he married the old Jerusalem. Jeremiah xxi., so the Son of God is to be married to the new Jerusalem.

3. Who may be the paragon—the friends of the Bride and Bridegroom? It, as Dr. Clarke informs us, (seeing in John iii.) it was their office to make the entrance between the parties; and, according to Coloss. (iv. 22.) Marriage is to perform the communion of the wedding, it would seem that "the King who made a marriage for his Son," Matt. xxi. 37, must be the Friend of the Bridegroom, and the Spirit, Rev. xxi. 17, the Friend of the bride.

4. Who are the virgins, their companions? In these Coloss. says: "A number of young people kept him [the bridegroom] company during the days of the wedding, to do him honour: so also young women kept company with the bride all this time, [usually seven days.] The companions of the bridegroom are expressly mentioned in the history of Solomon, Judges xiv. and Cant. v. 1; viii. 13; also the companions of the bride, Cant. 1. 4; ii. 7; iii. 5; vii. 14; Psalm xiv. 14, 15, &c. The friends and companions of the bride and the Epithetism, or wedding song, at the door of the bride the evening before the wedding [Psalm xiv. 15] is such a wedding song. The testimony of the wedding was performed with great solemnity, the young people of each sex being kept separate, in distinct apartments, and at different tables. (Rev.)

May not the companions of the bride, then, be brought to view, singing "the wedding song" in Rev. xiv. 1, 2? And I heard the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thundering, saying, Hallelujah!

For the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth: Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honour to Him. For the marriage of the Lamb is come, And his wife hath made herself ready."

The companions of the Bridegroom, also called virgins, are evidently brought to view in the parable.

5. Who are the guests? All those who are gathered from the churches, by the angels, who are joined with the wedding garment on at the time of the marriage feast.—Matt. xxii. 9-14.

6. When does the marriage of the Lamb take place—before or after he comes, to the King of glory, to make his people immortal? Now let us keep to mind these different parts of the scene, and it may not be so difficult to settle the question as might be at first supposed, viz., the coming of the bridegroom—"to the marriage," the marriage itself, and the marriage supper. It would be evident to all that the coming of the Bridegroom to the marriage, precedes the marriage, and both of these precede the marriage supper; and if we can tell at what point in the process the people of God actually meet the Saviour, we can tell whether they arrive at that point by the fulfillment of this parable.

In what character, then, do they meet him? Not as the Bridegroom coming to the marriage, but as the King of glory—the Lord returning from the wedding. Luke xii. 35-37. Is it not clear, then, that the coming of the Bridegroom, in the sense of the parable, and the marriage itself, must precede the change to a state of immortality? But, G. Where is the marriage to take place? As the Lord Jesus so to receive for himself a kingdom before he returns, and as the New Jerusalem is to be the metropolis of his kingdom—the City of the great King—it is evident that his inauguration must take place before his coming as the King of glory. And so, as the sounding of "the seventh angel," "great voices in heaven," proclaim

"The kingdoms of this world are become
The kingdom of our Lord, & Christ his Christ!
And he shall reign forever and ever!"

Although he is "the appointed heir of all things," "in the world to come," and the decree has given him "the heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession," still, he does not receive his kingdom, so far, till the Ancient of Days sits in judgment. Then one like the Son of Man comes to the Ancient of Days, and these things are seen before him, and there is given him "dominion, and glory, and a kingdom." Most certainly this original bestowment of power and territory is identical, so to speak, with the marriage of the Lamb—of it he has ordered the event denoted by his marriage to his inauguration in the holy city—when "the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David," according to the words of the angel Isaiah? Luke x. 18. It is certainly very clear that it must be so. And if so, the coming of the Bridegroom to the marriage must denote that change in his heavenly state, to which he comes in the Assumption of Mary to receive dominion, and glory, which he does not take place before he receives in his glory, and as he comes in he comes to perfect his earth, his coming on the Bridegroom must precede his marriage, and the presentation of the "chosen" guests at the marriage's feast, when the final ceremony is made.

With these several particulars before the mind, we are prepared to proceed:

Verse 1. "And five of them were wise," careful, provident, "and five were foolish," careless, imprudent.

Verses 2 and 4. "They that were foolish," careless, imprudent, "took these lamps, and had no oil with them; but the wise," careful, provident, "took oil with them, and their lamps were not quenched. And this parable is made by warning a church of men or nations upon the end as Christ also loved the church."—Eph. v. 23—25. But is there any intimation that this relation between Christ and the church is not to exist till he comes again? or does it already exist? Besides, even if it is ever distinctly declared, as in the case of the city, that the church, as its members, was "the bride," or "wife" of Christ, and that he was to be married to her at his return, which is an entire statement, it could only be a matter of doubt which of the two acts could be referred to by "the marriage" in the parable—the reception of the kingdom, city, and throne, or the reception of the members of his body—the church. As it now is, there is scarcely room for a doubt. All the circumstances of the case are clearly in favor of referring it to the former of the two acts.

In one case the relation has existed from the days of the apostles, in the other it was not to exist till the time of the second advent. The old and familiar "allegory" cannot be applied in one case, without making the free-woman both "the mother" and the "children." The literal facts, on which the parable is founded, are in favor of the holy city as the bride; for the Bridegroom, when he came to the marriage, always "came" to the residence of the bride's father. And, finally, to refer the marriage to the actual investment of Christ with "the throne," makes it the means of making a clearly-stated event, which we all know is brought to view as preliminary to his coming in glory, to gather his elect, and to punish the wicked; to refer it to the reception of the church, that this is also an important event, destroys the symmetry of the parable, inasmuch as it would be out of all order to make the virgin and guests the bride or wife.

It will also be asked, "In what sense can it be said, the Bridegroom came? and how did the virgins go in with him to the marriage? Of course it could be only in a sense which regards with the nature of the event which the marriage denotes.—The coming of the bridegroom would point out some change of work or office, on the part of our Lord, in the invisible world; and the going in with him a corresponding change on the part of his true people. With him it is within the veil—where he has gone to prepare a place for us; with them it is outside the veil, where they are to wait and keep themselves ready till they pass in to the marriage supper."

Whether the great transaction, denoted by the marriage, has taken place, or not, we may not be able to decide; but that the Bridegroom has come, and that those who were ready have gone in with him to the marriage, is at least possible; and there are some reasons for believing that to be the fact.

These reasons may be given in considering this awfully serious question:—

Is the door shut?

By this act is undoubtedly denoted the exclusion from all further access to saving mercy, those who have rejected its offers during their time of probation. And none will deny that whenever the Bridegroom shall have come, that change in the condition of the great mass of the world will have taken place. Is there any evidence from the word of God to show that that change is to take place any perceptible time before the Lord Jesus appears in his glory—before his people are made immortal? In the absence of all analogies, which might fairly be referred to, we must rely upon the plain statements and facts brought to view in the word of God. The necessary and natural order of events, in which the question is involved, then, is thus presented: The Son of God sits at his Father's right hand—until his enemies are made his footstool—i. e. are given over to him as enemies doomed to death.—They are no longer the subjects of his intercession.—This, we are assured, takes place "at the end."

Then, next, it is clear, must be the state as that which is spoken of in the second Psalm, in which the brethren are given to the Son for an inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for a possession, whom he loves with a sort of love, and desires to possess like a father's vessel,—the same that marks the coming of the seventh angel, when great cities in heaven perish.—"The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever." For there could be no propriety in saying they had become his, unless it were by actual reception, or they had been his by grant long before. And that all must provide him appearing to gather his elect, for, 1. a part of his elect are under the dominion of death, one of the enemies to be destroyed, and he will not destroy that enemy till he has taken possession of his hands; and, 2. so he appears in his glory when he appears to gather his elect, he must have received that glory before he could appear in it.

Now, so it is almost impossible that this order of events should not thus require order of time, it would seem that some time must elapse, however much we cannot tell, between the closing of Christ's intercessions for the world, and his appearing to gather his elect. May not that time be marked by the Lord himself—the first point by the coming of the Bridegroom, when the kingdom of heaven is likened unto the virgins who go in with him to the marriage; the last point by his return from the wedding, when he shall receive them to the marriage supper?

Again, what is said of the foolish virgins seems necessarily to imply that the righteous are here, after the door is shut: "Afterward came also the other virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open unto us. Can such a prayer as that be uttered, after the appearing of the Lord of glory—after the resurrection of the righteous dead, and the triumph of all the righteous in mercy the Lord? Impossible. They may call upon such and mountains to hide them from the presence of the Lord, but after all that has taken place, the warning and course of an undoubted will be the only signal that falls from the lips of those who may find it possible, even to think of the forgotten door of mercy."

Once more. If the parable is to be considered in its most prominent features, the history of the people of God just prior to the coming of our Lord, and if there is any reason to believe that the history of the Adventists is found there, it would seem to be as clear that the Bridegroom has come, and that they who were ready have gone in with him to the marriage, and that the door is shut, as that any other part of the parable has been fulfilled. And with this supposition the condition of things seems fully to correspond. It is confessed, by those who could never be suspected of any desire in favor our position, that there has not been such a state of religious indifference for many years. It may be shown from a large number of facts that the last signs of spiritual interest among the professed churches were the sought, directly or indirectly, of the Advent doctrine; that where that doctrine has been seriously opposed, and its believers silenced, spiritual death has followed, our enemies being judges. And we do not know of a single case of remarkable religious interest but where the doctrine is revivified, or at least not opposed; and these cases are to be limited in their extent and number, that they can form no objection to the supposition that the door is shut, but rather go to confirm it. May it not, therefore, be fairly supposed, from the fact that, just at present, is that in which we have referred the marriage, is to take place in connection with the end—that by all conditions of logic we determine that the fulfillment of the parable would be place on after a movement, such as we might expect that event to produce, and from the state of things around us, and among us, to say nothing of the harmony of the word of God, not found in any other view, which it affords,—may it not be fairly supposed that the Bridegroom has come, that the door is shut, and that we must come meet the King or stand?

A few words on the practical results of this position and our own duty. 1. How should we expect the world to regard the truth, supposing it position to be correct. Why, that they would care hardly enough about it, to receive interest and concern to give even to a very severe error, upon those who believe it. Having rejected the truth—the only avenue by which God can save men—and having turned away their ears with listening from its warnings and promises, they would be perfectly lulled to sleep by the cry of peace and safety. And if there is any truth in the word of God, this is to be the condition of the world when their destruction cometh—when they are surprised as by the thief in the night. And how do we now stand? Why, it would seem that God is speaking to us as loudly,—by the common indifference, which everywhere prevails around us, and which, in spite of ourselves almost distrusts us, and makes us even afraid of our chosen friends, but we become infected beyond recovery,—as loudly as he has spoken by the falling stars, the darkened sun, or by the army of soldiers who have assembled, though unwillingly, for the truth. And does it not say to us, The judgment is here!

And from this spirit of indifference arises one of our chief trials and dangers. We can hardly realize it, that a danger so well established by the truth of Scripture has existed so long as an enemy, and is so fraught with promise is everything that can rescue the Christian heart, should not into contempt. We have been accustomed to ride upon the whirlwind and storm, it is difficult to accommodate ourselves to the dead calm. With our old landmarks all in sight we felt quite at home; now that we have passed them, instead of keeping our eye steadily upon the lone promise that hangs out like a beacon light at the end of the voyage, the eye wanders around the unmarked horizon in fearfulness that we have lost our track. But God is with us still; and the present, like every other epoch of the voyage, corresponds exactly with the chart. And that assures us, that right in the midst of this dead calm, our Forerunner, who has gone to hunt out the gathering ground within the veil, is to appear to bring in safely all that look for him. There is no trouble about the old land marks, they have answered their purpose, look out for the Forerunner and all will be right.

2. But if the door is shut is any anything more to do for our fellow-men? There may be something, though, as any supposition there cannot be much more to be done. If we attempt to labor as we have done heretofore, it is useless to but little; if we should change our position and try to labor as others do, we could not expect to do any better than they do, and that is a little nearer to nothing than we are doing. We must adjust ourselves to the Bible promises, and see that all our labors are "according to the will of God." Our great work in this: "Let your eyes be guided about, and your lights burning; add ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord when he will return from the wedding; that, when he cometh and knocketh, they may open unto him immediately. Blessed are those servants whom the lord, when he cometh, shall find watching: Verily I say unto you, that he shall gird himself, and make them out doors to meat and some with tabernacle which forms a part of the new covenant Sanctuary, was made and pitched by the Lord, in contradistinction to that of the first covenant which was made and pitched by man, in obedience to the command of God; Ex. 25:8. Now what does the same Apostle say the Lord has pitched? "A city which hath foundations whose builder and maker is God;" Heb. 11:10. What is its name? "The heavenly Jerusalem"; Ch. 12:22; Rev. 21. "A building of God, an house not made with hands eternal in the heavens"; 2 Cor. 5:1. "My Father's house of many mansions;" Jno. 14:2. When our Saviour was at Jerusalem and had pronounced its house desolate, the disciples came to him to show him the buildings of the temple. Then he said: "There shall not be left here one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down"; Matt. 24:1,2. That temple was their Sanctuary; 1 Ch. 22:17-17; 28:9-13. 11 Ch. 29:5,21; 34:14,17. Such an announcement would tend to fill them with sadness and fear, as foretelling the derangement, if not the total prostration of their entire religious system. But to comfort and teach them, he says, "in my Father's house are MANY MANSIONS"; Jno. 14:1-3. Standing, as he was, on the dividing line between the typical covenant and the anti-typical, and having just declared the house of the former no longer valid, and foretold its destruction; how natural that he should point his disciples to the Sanctuary of the latter, about which their affections and interests were to cluster as they had about that of the former. The Sanctuary of the new covenant is connected with New Jerusalem, like the Sanctuary of the first covenant was with Old Jerusalem. As that was the place where the priests of that covenant ministered, so this is in heaven, the place where the Priest of the new covenant ministers. To these places, and these only, the N.T. applies the name "Sanctuary," and it does appear that this should forever set the question at rest.

The Sanctuary was the heart of the typical system. There the Lord placed his name, manifested his glory, and held converse with the High Priest relative to the welfare of Israel. While we inquire from the scriptures what the sanctuary is, let all educational prejudice be dismissed from the mind. For the Bible clearly defines, what the Sanctuary is, and answers every reasonable question you may ask concerning it. The name, sanctuary, is applied to several different things in the O.T.; neither did the Wonderful Numberer, tell Daniel what sanctuary was to be cleansed at the end of the 2300 days, but called it THE SANCTUARY, as though Daniel well understood it, and that he did is evident from the fact that he did not ask what it was. But as it has now become a matter of dispute as to what the sanctuary is, our only safety lies in seeking from the N.T. the Divine comment upon it. Its decision should place the matter beyond all controversy with Christians. Paul freely discusses this subject in his Epistle to the Hebrews, to whom the typical covenant pertained. He takes up their "tables" of the law, which had then become a snare to them, admits all they claim relative to their primitive use and importance, and then explains their object and end. Heb. 9:1. "Then verily the first Covenant had ordinances of Divine service and a worldly sanctuary (ch. 13:11). For there was a tabernacle made; the first, wherein was the candlestick, and the tables and the shew-bread; which is called [Hagia] Holy. And after the second vail, the tabernacle which is called the [Hagia Hagion] Holy of Holies: which had the golden censer, and the ark of the covenant, overlaid round about with gold, wherein was the golden pot that had manna, and Aaron's rod that budded, and the tables of the covenant; and over it the cherubims of glory overshadowing the Mercy seat; of which we cannot now speak particularly." A particular description is found in the last four books of the Pentateuch. "Sanctuary" was the first name the Lord gave it; Ex. 25:8, which name covers not only the tabernacle with its two apartments, but also the court and all the vessels of the ministry. This, Paul calls the Sanctuary of the first covenant, "which was a figure for the time then present, in which were offered both gifts and sacrifices;" verse 9. "But Christ being come an High Priest of good things to come by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands;" verse 11. The priests entered the "figures" or "patterns of the true," which true, are the "heavenly places themselves" into which Christ entered when he entered "heaven itself;" verses 23,24. When he ascended to the right hand of the Father "in the heavens" he became "A Minister of the Sanctuary [or Hagion, Holies] and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched and not man;" Ch. 8:1,2. That is the Sanctuary of the "better (the new) covenant;" verse 6. The Sanctuary to be cleansed at the end of the 2300 days is also the Sanctuary of the new covenant, for the vision of the treading down and cleansing, is after the crucifixion. We see that the Sanctuary of the new covenant is not on earth, but in heaven. The true

But as we have been so long and industriously taught to look to the earth for the Sanctuary, it may be proper to inquire, by what scriptural authority have we been thus taught? I can find none. If others can, let them produce it. Let it be remembered that the definition of Sanctuary is "a holy or sacred place." Is the earth, is Palestine such a place? Their entire contents answer, No! Was Daniel so taught? Look at his vision. "And the place of his Sanctuary was cast down;" Dan. 8:11. This casting down was in the days and by the means of the Roman power; therefore, the Sanctuary of this text was not the Earth, nor Palestine, because the former was cast down at the fall, more than 4000 years, and the latter at the captivity, more than 700 years previous to the event of this passage, and neither by Roman agency.

The Sanctuary cast down is his against whom Rome magnified himself, which was the Prince of the host, Jesus Christ; and Paul teaches that his Sanctuary is in heaven. Again, Dan. 11:30,31, "For the ships of Chittim shall come against him; therefore shall he be grieved and return, and have indignation /the staff to chastise/ against the holy covenant /Christianity/, so shall he do; he shall even return and have intelligence with them /priests and bishops/ that forsake the holy covenant. And arms /civil and religious/ shall stand on his part, and they /Rome and those that forsake the holy covenant/ shall pollute the Sanctuary of strength." What was this that Rome and the apostles of Christianity should jointly pollute? This combination was formed against the "holy covenant" and it was the Sanctuary of that covenant they polluted; which they could do as well as to pollute the name of God; Jer. 34:18; Ezek. 20; Mal. 1:7. This was the same as profaning or blaspheming his name. In this sense this "politico-religious" beast polluted the Sanctuary (Rev. 13:6), and cast it down from its place in heaven (Ps. 102:19; Jer. 17:12; Heb. 8:1,2) when they called Rome the holy city (Rev. 21:2) and enstalled the Pope there with the titles, "Lord God the Pope," "Holy Father," "Head of the Church," etc., and there in the counterfeit "temple of God" he professes to do what Jesus actually does in his Sanctuary; 2 Thes. 2:1-8. The Sanctuary has been trodden underfoot (Dan. 8:13), the same as the Son of God has; Heb. 10:29.

Daniel prayed "Cause thy face to shine upon thy Sanctuary which is desolate;" Ch. 9:17. This was the typical Sanctuary built by Solomon. "Thou hast commanded me to build a temple upon thy Holy Mount, and an altar in the city wherein thou dwellest, a resemblance of thy holy tabernacle, which thou hast prepared from the beginning"; Wis. Sol., 9:8; 1 Ch. 28:10-13. It had shared in the seventy years desolations of Jerusalem; Dan. 9:2; 2 Ch. 28:14-21. It was rebuilt after the captivity; Ne. 10:39. Moses received the patterns of the Sanctuary, built at Sinai when he was with the Lord forty days in the cloud on the Mount; and David received the patterns of that built by Solomon, which superceded Moses; with its chambers, porches, courts, the courses of the priests and Levites, and all the vessels of service, etc., "by the Spirit;" 1 Ch. 28:10-13. It is manifest that both Moses and David had prophetic visions of the New Jerusalem with its Sanctuary and Christ, the officiating Priest. When that built by Moses was superceded by Solomon's, the Ark was borne from the former to the latter; 2 Ch. 5:2-8. The Sanctuary comprehended not only the Tabernacle, but also all the vessels of the ministry, enclosed by the court in which the tabernacle stood; Num. 3:29-31; 10:17,21. So the court in which the Temple stood was properly called the Sanctuary.--Prudeau. We learn the same from 2 Ch. 29:18,21. "We have cleansed all the house of the Lord, and the altar of burnt-offering, with all the vessels thereof, and the shew-bread table with all the vessels thereof." The altar of burnt-offering with its vessels stood before the Temple in the inner court, the whole of which are in verse 21 called the Sanctuary. Well, says one, is not Palestine called the Sanctuary? I think not. Ex. 15:17, "Thou shalt bring them in and plant them in the mountain of thine inheritance in the place, O Lord, which thou hast made for thee to dwell in; in the Sanctuary, O Lord, which thy hands have established."

What is it which the Lord "has made to dwell in," which his "hands have established?" Paul says it is "A City;" Heb. 11:10; a "Tabernacle," Ch. 8:2; "A Building in the heavens;" 2 Cor. 5:1. And the Lord has chosen Mount Zion in Palestine for the place of its final location; Ps. 132:13,14. "For the Lord hath chosen Zion; he hath desired it for his habitation. This is my rest forever; here will I dwell; for I have desired it." "He brought them to the border of the Sanctuary, even to this mountain;" (Ps. 78:54), which was its chosen border or place; but not the Sanctuary itself; any more than Mount Moriah, on which the Temple was built, was the Temple itself. Did they regard that land as the Sanctuary? If they did not, we should not. A view of the text in which the word occurs will show: "Let them make me a Sanctuary;" Ex. 35:9. "The shekel of the Sanctuary," (Ex. 30:13) and above twenty others like it. "Then wrought Bezaleel and Aholiab, and every wise-hearted man, In whom the Lord put wisdom and understanding to know how to work all manner of work for the service of the Sanctuary;" Ex. 26:1-6. "Before the vail of the Sanctuary," Lev. 4:6. "Carry your brethren from before the Sanctuary;" Lev. 10:4. "Nor come into the Sanctuary;" Lev. 12:4. "He shall make atonement for the holy Sanctuary;" Lev. 16:33. "Reverence my Sanctuary;" Lev. 11:30; 26:2. "Nor profane the Sanctuary of his God;" Lev. 21:12. "Vessels of the Sanctuary;" Num. 3:31. "Charge of the Sanctuary;" Num. 3:32,38. "They minister in the Sanctuary;" Ch. 4:12. "In the Sanctuary and in the vessels thereof;" ver. 16. "And when Aaron and his sons have made an end of covering the Sanctuary and all the vessels of the Sanctuary, as the camp is to set forward; after that the sons of Kohath shall come to bear it;" Ch. 4:15; 7:9; 10:21. "That there be no plague among the children of Israel when the children of Israel come nigh unto the Sanctuary;" Ch. 8:19. "Thou and thy sons and thy Father's house with thee shall bear the iniquity of the Sanctuary;" Ch. 28:1. "He hath defiled the Sanctuary of his God;" Ch. 19:20. Joshua "took a great stone and set it up there under an oak that was by the Sanctuary of the Lord"; Jos. 24:26. "All the instruments of the Sanctuary"; 1 Ch. 9:29. "Build ye the Sanctuary"; Ch. 22:19. "Governors of the Sanctuary"; Ch. 24:5. "The Lord hath chosen thee to build an house for the Sanctuary;" Ch. 28:10; 2 Ch. 20:8. "Go out of the Sanctuary;" Ch. 26:18; 29:21; 30:8. "Purification of the Sanctuary;" Ch. 30; 19; 36:17.

I have given nearly every text, and, I believe, every different form of expression in which the word occurs till we come to the Psalms; so that every one can see what they understood the Sanctuary to be. And of the fifty texts quoted, not one applies it to the land of Palestine, nor any land. That Sanctuary, though enclosed with curtains, was called "the house of the Lord," (Ju. 18:31; 1 Sam. 1:9-24), and was pitched at the city of Shiloh at the time of dividing the land; 18:1,10; hence it was called the "Tabernacle of Shiloh," (safety and happiness), Ps. 78:60. The Lord forsook it when the Philistines took the Ark (1 Sam. 4:3-11) and delivered his strength into captivity, and his glory into the enemy's hand; verse 21.

It was brought back to Kirjath-jearim (1 Sam. 7:1,2), thence to the house of Obadedom, thence to the city of David which is Zion (2 Sam. 6:1-19; verse 9), and thence, at the direction of Solomon, the Ark was conveyed into the Holy of Holies of the temple (1 Kings 8:1-6), which was built in Mount Moriah near Mount Zion; 2 Ch. 3:1. The Lord has chosen Zion to dwell in at rest forever; (Ps. 132:13,14) but as yet he had dwelt there but a short time, and then in curtains made with hands; but when he shall appear in his glory he will have "mercy on Zion" and build it up; then Jerusalem upon it, shall be "a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be taken down;" (Ps. 102; Isa. 33:20. And then "the people shall dwell in Zion at Jerusalem"; Verse 18,19. The Song of Moses (Ex. 15); is evidently prophetic, and contemplates the happy scenes of the Eden Zion. And so Ezekiel has it. The Lord will bring the whole house of Israel up out of their graves into the land of Israel; and then set his Sanctuary and tabernacle in the midst of them for evermore. The Sanctuary is not "the land of Israel" nor the people; for it is set in their midst, and is built and forms a part of the city whose name is "The Lord is there."

The Priesthood of Christ.

The priesthood of the worldly Sanctuary of the first covenant belonged to the sons of Levi; but that of the heavenly of the better covenant;, to the Son of God. He fulfills both the Priesthood of Melchisedec and Aaron. In some respects the Priesthood of Christ resembles that of Melchisedec; and in others that of Aaron or Levi.

1. He was "made an High Priest forever, after the order of Melchisedec." Taxis, rendered ordered, properly signifies "series, succession." Christ, like Melchisedec, had no priestly descent or pedigree; Heb. 7:3 (margin), i.e. he neither followed nor will have a successor in office; and "because he continueth ever, hath an unchangeable Priesthood," (which passeth not from one to another; margin) verse 24.

The Priesthood of Levi to be continuous had many and a succession of priests, "because they were not suffered to continue by reason of death;" verse 23.

2. Being after the order of Melchisedec, he is superior to the Sons of Levi; because he is blessed and received tithes from them in Abraham; verses 1,7,9,10.
3. He is King and Priest; a King by birth, being from the tribe of Judah, and a Priest by the oath of his Father; verses 14,21.
4. Being himself perfect, and his priesthood unending, he is able to "perfect forever" and "save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them." He was not called after the order of Aaron; i.e. not in his succession; but this does not at all prove that the Priesthood of Aaron was not typical of the Priesthood of Christ. Paul distinctly shows that it is.

1. After calling upon us to "consider the Apostle and High Priest of our profession (or religion) Christ Jesus," he lays the foundation of the investigation by drawing the analogy between Moses over his house [olkos, people] and Christ over his (Heb. 3:1-6), and says: "Moses verily was faithful in all his house, as a servant, for a testimony of those things which were to be spoken after." This clearly shows that the Mosaic economy was typical of the divine.

2. He shows that he was called of God to be an High Priest "as was Aaron;" Ch. 5:1-5.

3. Like Aaron and his sons, he took upon him flesh and blood, the seed of Abraham, "was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin," was made "perfect through suffering," and "In all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren; that he might be a merciful and faithful High Priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people;" Chs. 2,4

[There is no #4.]

5. Both were ordained for men in things pertaining to God: that (they might) "offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins;" Ch. 5:1; 8:3.
6. Paul evidently considered the Levitical priesthood typical of Christ's from the pains he takes to explain the analogies and contrasts between them; as.
7. "And they truly were many priests, because they were not suffered to continue by reason of death: but this man, because he continueth ever, hath an unchangeable priesthood."
8. "Who needeth not daily, as those high priests to offer up sacrifices, first for his own sins, and then for the people's; for this he did once when he offered up himself."
9. "For the law maketh men high priests which have infirmity; but the word of the oath which was since the law, maketh the Son who is consecrated [perfected, margin] for evermore;" Ch. 6:23-28.
10. "But now hath he obtained a more excellent ministry" than theirs; Ch. 8:6.
11. "By how much also he is the mediator of a better covenant" than theirs; Ch. 8:6.
12. "But Christ being come an High Priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle" than theirs; Ch. 9:11.
13. "Neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood, he entered in once into the holy place," ver. 12.
14. "For if the blood of bulls and of goats and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh; how much more shall the blood of Christ, who, through the eternal spirit offered himself without spot to God purge your conscience;" ver. 13,14.
15. "For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself;" ver. 24.
16. "Nor yet that he should offer himself often, as the high priest entereth into the holy place very year with blood of others;" but now once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself;" vs. 25,26.
17. "And as it is appointed unto [the] men [priests] once to die, but after this the judgment: so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation," vs. 27,28.
18. "For the law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with those sacrifices which they offered year by year continually, make the comers thereunto perfect;" but "by one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified;" Ch. 10:1,12.

19. "It is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins;" "but a body hast thou prepared me;" vs. 4,5. These are a part of the contrasts or comparisons the Apostle draws between the Levitical priesthood and Christ's, and there is a resemblance in every instance, but Christ's is superior to Levi's.

I add one more. Ch. 8:4,5. "For if he were on earth he should not be a priest, seeing that there (margin, they) are priests that offer gifts according to the law: Who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things."

The features of the substance always bear a resemblance of those of the shadow, hence the "heavenly things" referred to in this text must be priestly service "In the heavens" (Vs. 1,2) performed by our high priest in his Sanctuary; for if the shadow is service, the substance is service also.

As the priests of the law served unto the example and shadow of the heavenly service we can from their service learn something of the nature of the heavenly service. "Moses was admonished of God when he was about to make the tabernacle; for, see (salth he) that thou make all things according to the pattern showed to thee in the Mount."

None can deny that, in obedience to this admonition, Moses made or instituted the Levitical priesthood; it was then "according to the pattern" which the Lord showed him, and that pattern was of heavenly things, Ch. 9:23. If there was not another text to prove that the Levitical priesthood was typical of the Divine, this would abundantly do it. Yet some are even denying this obvious import of that priesthood; but if this is not its import, I can see no meaning in it. It is an idle round of ceremonies without sense or use, as it did not perfect those for whom it was performed; but looked upon as typical of the heavenly, it is replete with the most important instruction. As this is the application made of it by the New Testament, so we must regard it, while we examine the atonement made under the Levitical priesthood.

"Now when these things [the worldly Sanctuary with its two apartments and the furniture in each] were thus ordained, the priests went always [daily, Ch. 7:27; 10:11] into the first tabernacle, accomplishing the service of God; but into the second went the high priest alone once each year, not without blood, which he offered for himself, and for the errors of the people." Ch. 9:6,7. Here Paul divides the services of the Levitical priesthood into two classes--one daily in the Holy, and the other yearly in the Holy of Holies. Their stated daily services, performed in the Holy and at the brazen altar in the court before the tabernacle, consisted of a burnt offering of two lambs, one in the morning and the other at even, with a meat offering which was one tenth of an ephah of flour mingled with the fourth part of an hin of beaten oil, and a drink-offering which was one-fourth of an hin of strong wine. The meat-offering was burnt with the lamb, and the drink-offering was poured in the Holy; Ex. 29:38-42; Num. 28:3-8. In connection with this, they burned on the golden altar in the Holy, sweet Incense, which was a very rich perfume, when they dressed and lighted the lamps every evening and morning. Ex. 30:34-38; 31:11; 30:7-9. The same was afterwards done at the Temple. 1 Ch. 26:37-40; 2 Ch. 2:4; 13:4-12; 13:3; Eze. 3:3.

This did not atone for sins either individually or collectively. The daily service described was a sort of continual intercession; but the making of atonement was a special work for which special directions are given. Different words are used both in the Old Testament and New, to express the same idea as At-one-ment.

Examples.--The italicised words are, in the text, synonymous with atone or atonement. Ex. 29:36; "Thou shalt cleanse the altar when thou has made an atonement for it." Lev. 12:8; "The priest shall make an atonement for her and she shall be clean." Lev. 14:2; "This shall be the law of the leper in the day of his cleansing." Ver. 21; "The priest shall make an atonement for him and he shall be clean." The atonement could not be made for him till after he was healed of the leprosy, Ch. 13:45,46. Till he was healed, he had to dwell alone without the camp. Then, Ch. 14:3,4; "The priest shall go forth out of the camp; and the priest shall look, and behold if the plague of the leprosy be healed in the leper; then shall the priest command to take for him that is to be cleansed two birds alive and clean," etc. The law was the same in cleansing a house from the leprosy. Ver. 33-57; The stones affected with the plague were removed and the house "scraped within round about" and then repaired with new material.

Physical uncleanness is now all removed and we would call it clean; but not so; it is only just prepared to be cleansed according to the law. Ver. 48; "And he shall take to cleanse the house two birds" etc. Ver. 49; "And he shall cleanse the house with the blood of the birds" etc. Ver. 52,53; "And make an atonement for the house, and it shall be clean." Ch. 16:18,19; "And he shall go out unto the altar that is before the Lord, and make an atonement for it." "And he shall sprinkle of the blood upon it with his finger seven times, and cleanse it and hallow it from the uncleanness of the children of Israel." Ch. 8:15; "And Moses took the blood, and put it upon the horns of the altar round about with his finger and purified the altar, and poured the blood at the bottom of the altar, and sanctified it, to make reconciliation upon it," 2 Ch. 29:29; "And they made reconciliation with their blood upon the altar, to make an atonement for all Israel," Jer. 33:8; "I will cleanse them from all their iniquities," "and I will pardon all their iniquities." Rom. 5:9-11; "Being now justified by his blood," "by whom we have now received the atonement," 2 Cor. 5:17-19; "Who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ," Eph. 2:16; "And that he might reconcile both unto God," Heb. 9:13,14; "The blood of bulls sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh; but the blood of Christ shall purge our conscience from dead works." He is the Mediator for the "redemption of the transgressions," and to "perfect forever them that are sanctified," Ch. 10:14; Eph. 1:7; "In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of our sins," Acts 3:19; "Be converted that your sins may be blotted out."

From these texts we learn that the words atone, cleanse, reconcile, purify, purge, pardon, sanctify, hallow, forgive, justify, redeem, blot out, and some others, are used to signify, the same work, viz., bringing into favor with God; and in all cases blood is the means, and sometimes blood and water. The atonement is the great idea of the Law, as well as the Gospel; and as the design of that of the Law was to teach us that of the Gospel, it is very important to be understood. The atonement which the priests made for the people in connection with their daily ministration was different from that made on the tenth day of the seventh month. In making the former, they went no further than in the Holy; but to make the latter they entered the Holy of Holies--the former was made for individual cases, the latter for the whole nation of Israel collectively--the former was made for the forgiveness of sins, the latter for blotting them out--the former could be made at any time, the latter only on the tenth day of the seventh month. Hence the former may be called the daily atonement and the latter the yearly, or the former the individual, and the latter the national atonement.

The individual atonement for the forgiveness of sins was made for a single person, or for the whole congregation in case they were collectively guilty of some sin. The 1st Ch. of Lev. gives directions for the burnt-offering, the 2d for the meat-offering, the 3d for the peace-offering, and the 4th for the sin-offering, which, as its name implies, was an offering for sins, in which he who offered it attained forgiveness of his sins. The trespass-offering, Ch. 5 and 5:1-7 was similar to the sin-offering. "If a soul sin through ignorance," Ch. 4:2, "when he knoweth of it, then shall he be guilty," Ch. 5:3, "And it shall be when he shall be guilty in any of these things, that he shall confess that he hath sinned in that thing," ver. 5. From Num. 5:6-8, it appears that confession and restitution are necessary in all cases before the atonement could be made for the individual. "When a man or woman shall commit any sin that man commit, to do a trespass against the Lord, and that person be guilty, then they shall confess their sin which they have done, and he shall recompense his trespass with the principle thereof, and add unto it the fifth part thereof, and give it unto him against whom he hath trespassed." Then he or the elders (if it was for the congregation) brought the victim for the sin or trespass-offering to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation on the north side of the altar of burnt-offering in the court, Ch. 4:24; 1:1; 17:1-7, there he (or the elders) laid his hand on its head and killed it, Ch. 4:2-4, 13-15, 22-24, 27-29. Then, the victim being presented and slain, the priest that was anointed took some of the blood into the Holy, and with his finger sprinkled it before the veil of the Sanctuary and put some of it upon the horns of the altar of sweet incense, then poured the remainder of the blood at the bottom of the altar. Thus he made an atonement for the individual, and his sin was forgiven, Ch. 4:5-10, 16-20, 25, 26, 30-35. The carcasses of the sin-offerings were taken without the camp and burned "in a clean place," Ch. 4:11, 12, 21.

It should be distinctly remembered that the priest did not begin his duties till he obtained the blood of the victim, and that they were all performed in the court (the enclosure of the Sanctuary), and that the atonement thus made was only for the forgiveness of sins. These points are expressly taught in this Ch. and the following one on the trespass-offering. Here is an atonement, to make which, the priests only entered the Holy, and to make It they could enter that apartment "always" or "daily." "But into the second [the Holy of Holies] went the high priest alone once every year, not without blood, which he offered for himself, and for the errors of the people," Heb. 9:7; "Errors of the people," Laos nation. This defines the yearly to be.

The National Atonement, of which the Lord "speaks particularly" in Lev. 16: "And the Lord said unto Moses, speak unto Aaron, thy brother, that he come not at all times into the holy place within the vail, before the mercy-seat, which is upon the ark; that he die not: for I will appear in the cloud upon the mercy-seat:" ver. 2. For what purpose and when could he enter it? "To make an atonement for all Israel (the whole nation), for all their sins once a year," "on the tenth day of the seventh month," ver. 34,29. This was the most important day of the year. The whole nation having had their sins previously forgiven by the atonement made in the Holy, now assemble about their Sanctuary, while the High Priest, attired in his holy garments for glory and beauty, ver. 4, Ex. 28, having the golden bells on the hem of his robe that his sound may be heard when he goeth in before the Lord, the breast-plate of judgment on his heart, with their names therein that he may bear their judgment, also in it the Urim and Thummim (light and perfection), and the plate of pure gold, the holy crown (Lev. 8:9), with "HOLINESS TO THE LORD" engraved upon it, placed upon the fore-front of his mitre that he may bear the iniquities of the holy things, enters the Holy of Holies to make an atonement to cleanse them, that they may be clean from all their sins before the Lord, ver. 30. The victims for the atonement of this day were, for the priest himself, a young bullock for a sin-offering ver. 3, and for the people, two goats; one for a sin-offering and the other for the scape-goat, and a ram for a burnt-offering, vs. 5-8. He killed or caused to be killed the bullock for a sin-offering for himself, ver. 11. "Then he shall take a censer full of burning coals of fire from off the altar before the Lord, and his hands full of sweet incense beaten small, and bringing it within the vail: And he shall put the incense upon the fire before the Lord, that the cloud of the incense may cover the mercy-seat that is upon the testimony that he die not. And he shall take of the blood of the bullock, and sprinkle it with his finger upon the mercy-seat eastward; and before the mercy-seat shall he sprinkle of the blood with his finger seven times," vers. 12-14. So much in preparation to make the atonement for the people; a description of which follows:

"Then shall he kill the goat of the sin-offering which is for the people and bring his blood within the vail, and do with that blood as he did with the blood of the bullock, and sprinkle it upon the mercy-seat. And he shall make an atonement for [cleanse, see marginal references] the holy place [within the vail, ver. 2] because of the uncleanness of the children of Israel, because of their transgressions in all their sins: and so shall he do for [i.e. atone for or cleanse] the tabernacle of the congregation [the Holy] that remaineth among them in the midst of their uncleanness, vs. 15,16; "And he shall go out [of the Holy of Holies] unto the altar that is before the Lord [in the Holy] and make an atonement for it; and shall take of the blood (for himself) and of the blood of the goat (for the people) and put it upon the horns of the altar round about. And he shall sprinkle of the blood upon it with his finger seven times, and cleanse it, and hallow it from the uncleanness of the children of Israel," ver. 18,19. This altar was the golden altar of incense in the Holy upon which the blood of individual atonements was sprinkled during the daily ministration. Thus it received the uncleanness from which it is now cleansed. Ex. 30:1-10; "Aaron shall make an atonement upon the horns of it once a year, with the blood of the sin-offering of atonement." We see from verse 20, that at this stage of the work "he hath made an end of reconciling the holy place, and the tabernacle of the congregation, and the altar," i.e. the Holy of Holies, the Holy, and the altar in the latter.

We have before seen that atone, reconcile, cleanse, etc., signify the same, hence at this stage he has made an end of cleansing those places. As the blood of atonements for the forgiveness of sins was not sprinkled in the court, but in the tabernacle only, the entire work of cleansing the Sanctuary was performed within the tabernacle. These were holy things, yet cleansed yearly. The holy place within the veil contained the ark of the covenant, covered with the mercy-seat, overshadowed by the cherubims, between which the Lord dwelt in the cloud of divine glory. Who would think of calling such a place unclean? Yet the Lord provided at the time, yea, before it was built, that it should be annually cleansed. It was by blood, and not by fire, that this Sanctuary, which was a type of the new covenant Sanctuary was cleansed.

The high priest on this day "bore the iniquities of the holy things which the children of Israel hallowed in all their holy gifts," Ex. 28:38. These holy things composed the Sanctuary. Num. 18:1. "And the Lord said unto Aaron, Thou, and thy sons, and thy father's house with thee shall bear the iniquity of the Sanctuary." This "iniquity of the Sanctuary" we have learned was not its own properly, but the children of Israel's, God's own people's, which it had received from them. And this transfer of iniquity from the people to the Sanctuary was not a mere casualty, incident on scenes of lawless rebellion, bloodshed or idolatry among themselves, nor the devastation of an enemy; but it was according to the original arrangement and regular operation of this typical system. For we must bear in mind that all the instructions were given to Moses and Aaron before the erection of the Sanctuary. Provision was made to make atonement for sins committed in ignorance; but not till after they were known, Lev. 4:14; 5:3-6, then of course they became sins of knowledge. Then the individual bore his iniquity, Lev. 5:1-17; 7:1-8, till he presented his offering to the priest and slew it, the priest made an atonement with the blood, Lev. 17:11, and he was forgiven, then of course free from his iniquity. Now at what point did he cease to bear his iniquity? Evidently when he had presented his victim slain; he had then done his part. Through what medium was his iniquity conveyed to the Sanctuary? Through his victim, or rather its blood when the priest took and sprinkled it before the veil and on the altar. Thus the iniquity was communicated to their Sanctuary. The first thing done for the people on the 10th day of the 7th month was to cleanse it, thence by the same means, the application of blood. This done, the high priest bore the "iniquity of the Sanctuary" for the people "to make atonement for them," Lev. 10:17. "And when he hath made an end of reconciling the holy place [within the veil, ver. 2] and the tabernacle of the congregation and the altar [or when he hath cleansed the Sanctuary], he shall bring the live goat: And Aaron shall lay both his hands upon the head of the live goat, and confess over him all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and all their transgressions and all their sins, putting them upon the head of the goat, and shall send him away by the hand of a fit man into the wilderness: And the goat shall bear upon him all their iniquities into a land not inhabited [margin, of separation] Lev. 16:20-22. This was the only office of the scape-goat, to finally receive and bear away from Israel all their iniquities into an uninhabited wilderness and there retain them, leaving Israel at their Sanctuary, and the priest to complete the atonement of the day by burning the fat of the sin-offerings, and offering the two rams for burnt offerings on the brazen altar in the court, vs. 24,25. The burning without the camp of the carcasses of the sin-offerings closed the services of this important day. Ver. 27.

The Antitype. As this legal system which we have been considering was only a "shadow," a "figure" and "patterns," of no value in itself only to teach us the nature of that perfect system of redemption which is its "body," the "things themselves;" which was devised in the councils of heaven, and is being wrought out by "the only Begotten of the Father;" let us, guided by the Spirit of truth, learn the solemn realities thus shadowed forth. By these patterns, finite as we are, we may like Paul, extend our research beyond the limits of our natural vision to the "heavenly things themselves." Here we find the entire ministry of the law fulfilled in Christ, who was anointed with the Holy Ghost and by his own blood entered his Sanctuary, heaven itself, when he ascended to the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens, as "A minister of the [Hagion] Holies etc., Heb. 8:6-2. Paul, after speaking of the daily services in the Holy, and the yearly in the Holy of Holies, says, Ch. 9:8. "The Holy Ghost this signifying that the way of the Holies [Hodon Hagion] was not yet made manifest; while as the first tabernacle was yet standing, which was a figure for the time then present, in which were offered" etc., "until the time of reformation: But Christ being come, an High Priest of the [ton] good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, "by his own blood he entered on or into the holy things" (eis hagia) Ch. 9:8-12. The phrase, eis hagia, in ver. 12, is the same as that rendered "holy places," ver. 24. Hagia, in these two verses, is in the acc. pl. neuter and governed by the prep. eis which signifies on, into, upon, or among, Hagia, being a neuter adjective, is properly rendered "holy things;" but Hagia in ver. 2, is in the nom. sin. fem. and properly rendered, Holy place. The definite article "the," belonging before "good things" in ver. 11 and Ch. 10:1, makes the expression mean things "good in themselves, or abstractly good." This shows the perfect harmony of Ch. 9:11,12,23,24, and Ch. 10:1. The "things" are "good in themselves," "holy," or "heavenly," and in "heaven itself" where Christ has entered as our High Priest to "minister" for us; and those "holy things" "in heaven" are connected with the "greater and more perfect tabernacle," "which the Lord pitched and not man;" the same as the holy things of the first covenant were connected with their tabernacle, Ch. 9:1-5; and all those holy things together make the Sanctuary. The Holies (two) ver. 8, the way of which was not made manifest till the time of reformation, when Christ shed his own blood, belong to his "greater and more perfect tabernacle," spoken of in the next verse. I translate the names literal, because they are not literal in our common version. The Douay Bible has them as here given. The word in Ch. 9:8,10,19, is Hagion, "of the Holies," instead of the "holiest of all;" and shows that the blood of Christ is the way or means by which he, as our High Priest was to enter both apartments of the heavenly tabernacle. Now if there be but one place in the heavens, as many say, why were there two in the figure? And why, in applying the figure, does Paul speak of two? Perhaps those who "despise the law" and "corrupt the covenant of Levi" can explain this; if not, we advise them to abide by Paul's exposition of the matter.

Chap. 6:19,20, is supposed to prove that Christ entered the Holy of Holies at his ascension, because Paul said he had entered within the vail. But the vail which divides between the Holy and the Holy of Holies is "the second vail," Ch. 9:3; hence there are two vails, and that in Ch. 6, being the first of which he speaks, must be the first vail, which hung before the Holy, and in Ex. was called a curtain. When he entered within the vail, he entered his tabernacle, of course the Holy, as that was the first apartment; and our hope, as an anchor of the soul, enters within the vail, i.e. the atonement of both apartments, including both the forgiveness and the blotting out of sins. Those who hold that Christ entered the Holy of Holies at, and has been ministering therein ever since his ascension, also believe, as of course they must, that the atonement of the gospel dispensation is the antitype of the atonement made on the tenth day of the seventh month under the law. If this is so, the events of the legal tenth day, have had their antitypes during the Gospel Dispensation. The first event in the atonement service of that day, was the cleansing of the Sanctuary, as we have seen from Lev. 16. Then, upon their theory, the Sanctuary of the new covenant was cleansed in the early part of the Gospel Dispensation. Evidence is not wanting that neither the earth nor Palestine, their Sanctuaries, was then cleansed. I call them their Sanctuaries, for they are not the Lord's. But if the Lord's new covenant Sanctuary was then cleansed the 2300 days ended then; but if they are years, which we all believe, they extend 1810 years beyond the 70 weeks, and the last of those weeks was the first of the new covenant or Gospel Dispensation. The fact that those days reached 1810 beyond the 70 weeks, and that the Sanctuary could not be cleansed till the end of those days, is demonstration that the antitype of the legal tenth day is not the Gospel Dispensation: Again, if the atonement of that day is typical of the atonement of the Gospel Dispensation, then the atonement made in the Holy, Heb. 9:6, previous to that day, was finished before the Gospel Dispensation began. It has been shown that that atonement was made for the forgiveness of sins, and I have found no evidence that such an atonement was made on the tenth day of the seven month. The Gospel Dispensation began with the preaching of Christ, and if it is the antitype of the legal tenth day, one of two things is true; either the Saviour, instead of fulfilling, has destroyed the greater part of the law, the daily service of the Holy which occupied the whole year except one day, the tenth of the seventh month; or else he fulfilled the whole law except one three hundred and sixtieth part of it before the Gospel Dispensation began, and before he was anointed as the Messiah to fulfill the law and the prophets. One of these two conclusions is inevitable on the hypothesis that the Gospel Dispensation and the atonement made in it, is the antitype of the legal tenth day, and the atonement made in it. Upon which of these horns will they hang?

If on the former, the declaration, "I came not to destroy the law," pierces them; but if they choose the latter, it then becomes them to prove that the law, which had a shadow of good things to come, was fulfilled within itself, that the shadow and substance filled the same place and time; also they will need to prove that the entire atonement for the forgiveness of sins was made before the Lamb was slain with whose blood the atonement was to be made. Now it must be clear to every one, that if the antitype of the yearly service (Heb. 9:7) began at the first Advent, the antitype of the daily (Heb. 9:6) had been previously fulfilled; and, as the atonement for forgiveness was a part of that daily service, they are involved in the conclusion that there has been no forgiveness of sins under the Gospel Dispensation. Such a theory is wholly at war with the entire genius of the Gospel Dispensation, and stands rebuked, not only by Moses and Paul, but by the teaching and works of our Saviour and his commission to his apostles, by their subsequent teaching and the history of the Christian church. But again, they say the atonement was made and finished on Calvary, when the Lamb of God expired. So men have taught us, and so the churches and world believe; but it is none the more true or sacred on that account, if unsupported by Divine authority. Perhaps few or none who hold that opinion have ever tested the foundation on which it rests.

1. If the atonement was made on Calvary, by whom was it made? The making of the atonement is the work of a Priest? but who officiated on Calvary? Roman soldiers and wicked Jews.

2. The slaying of the victim was not making the atonement: the sinner slew the victim, Lev. 4:1-4, 13-15, etc., after that the Priest took the blood and made the atonement. Lev. 4:5-12, 16-21.

3. Christ was the appointed High Priest to make the atonement, and he certainly could not have acted in that capacity till after his resurrection, and we have no record of his doing any thing on earth after his resurrection, which could be called the atonement.

4. The atonement was made in the Sanctuary, but Calvary was not such a place.

5. He could not, according to Heb. 8:4, make the atonement while on earth. "If he were on earth, he should not be a Priest." The Levitical was the earthly priesthood, the Divine, the heavenly.

6. Therefore, he did not begin the work of making the atonement, whatever the nature of that work may be, till after his ascension, when by his own blood he entered his heavenly Sanctuary for us.

Let us now examine a few texts that appear to speak of the atonement as passed. Rom. 5:11; "By whom we have now received the atonement," [margin, reconciliation]. This passage clearly shows a present possession of the atonement at the time the apostle wrote; but it by no means proves that the entire atonement was then in the past.

When the Saviour was about to be taken up from his apostles, he "commanded them that they should not depart from Jerusalem, but wait for the promise of the Father," which came on the day of Pentecost when they were all "baptized with the Holy Ghost." Christ had entered his Father's house, the Sanctuary, as High Priest, and began his Intercession for his people by "praying the Father" for "another Comforter," John 14:15, "and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost." Acts 2:33 he shed it down upon his waiting apostles. Then, in compliance with their commission Peter, at the 3d hour of the day began to preach, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins," Acts 2:38. This word remission, signifies forgiveness, pardon and more literally sending away of sins.

Now put by the side of this text another on this point from his discourse at the 9th hour of the same day, Ac. 3:19, "Repent ye therefore; and be converted that your sins may be blotted out when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord." Here he exhorts to repentance and conversion (turning away from sins); for what purpose? "That your sins may be (future) blotted out." Every one can see that the blotting out of sins does not take place at repentance and conversion; but follows, and must of necessity be preceded by them. Repentance, conversion, and baptism had then become imperative duties in the present tense; and when performed, those doing them "washed away" (Ac. 22:16) remitted or sent away from them their sins. (Ac. 2:28); and of course are forgiven and have "received the atonement;" but they had not received it entire at that time, because their sins were not yet blotted out. How far then had they advanced in the reconciling process? Just so far as the individual under the law had when he had confessed his sin, brought his victim to the door of the tabernacle, laid his hand upon it and slain it, and the priest had with its blood entered the Holy and sprinkled it before the vail and upon the altar and thus made an atonement for him, and he was forgiven. Only that was the type, and this the reality. That prepared for the cleansing of the great day of atonement, this for the blotting out of sins "when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord, and he shall send Jesus." Hence, "by whom we have now received the atonement" is the same as "by whom we have received forgiveness of sin." At this point the man is "made free from sin." The Lamb of Calvary's cross is our victim slain; "Jesus the Mediator of the new Covenant" "in the heavens" is our interceding High Priest, making atonement with his own blood, by and with which he entered there. The essence of the process is the same as in the "shadow." 1st, Convinced of sin; 2d, Repentance and Confession; 3d, Present the Divine sacrifice bleeding. This done in faith and sincerity we can do no more, no more is required.

Then in the heavenly Sanctuary our High Priest with his own blood makes the atonement and we are forgiven. 1 Peter 2:24; "Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree." See also Matt. 8:17; Isa. 53:4-12. His body is the "one sacrifice" for repenting mortals, to which their sins are imputed, and through whose blood in the hands of the living active Priest they are conveyed to the heavenly Sanctuary. That was offered "once for all," "on the tree;" and all who would avail themselves of its merits must through faith, there receive it as theirs, bleeding at the hands of sinful mortals like themselves. After thus obtaining the atonement of forgiveness we must "maintain good works," not the "deeds of the law;" but "being dead to sin should live unto righteousness." This word we all understand to be peculiar to the Gospel Dispensation.

THE AGE TO COME. All believers in the Bible expect a glorious age to follow the present, and entertain some ideas of its nature which they profess to have drawn from the Bible. The churches think the Bible teaches the final triumph of Christian principles in the conversion of all nations; while we believe that the glories of that age will be ushered in by the personal and visible Advent of Jesus, the resurrection and change of his saints and the destruction of his enemies. Hence all admit our licenses to inquire and speak the nature of that age, and certainly we have liberty to learn what the Scriptures say on the subject.

Lu. 20:34,35: "And Jesus answering said unto them, The children of this world age marry and are given in marriage; but they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world age and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage." "That world" is placed in contrast with "this world"--in "this" they marry and are given in marriage, in "that" they shall do neither; but are exempt from death and are like the angels. Thus he teaches a future and peculiar age, to enjoy which we must also obtain the resurrection from the dead. It will be an age of rewards, "Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." "Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the Kingdom of God." "Verily, I say unto you, That ye which have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall act upon 12 thrones judging the 12 tribes of Israel." Our Father's Kingdom for which we now pray will then have come, when His WILL will be done on earth as it is in heaven. It will be "the day of the Lord," "the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men;" in which the heavens and earth which are now shall pass away, and the promised New Heavens and earth appear. This identifies "the age to come" with "the times of restitution." "Apokalasions, restoration of any thing to its former state, hence, the introduction of a new and better era;" and "the times of refreshing." "Anapauris, refreshing coolness after heat, recreation, rest." The identity of "the times of restitution" with "The Dispensation of the fulness of times." Eph. 1:10 is also apparent. As Peter in Ac. 3: presents the two cardinal points in the atonement, conversion present, and blotting out of sins future; So Paul in this Epistle, ch. 1:7, says, "In whom we have redemption, the forgiveness of sins." At the same time we receive the Holy Spirit of promise, the earnest of our inheritance, ver. 13,14, which makes known to us the mystery of his will, "That in the dispensation of the fulness of times he might gather together all things en, in, or by Christ, both which are in heaven and which are on earth." This gathering is the future object of hope the same as the redemption deliverance procured by the payment of a ransom of the purchased possession. Ver. 14: The things to be gathered are in heaven and earth. Anakephaloios, signifies to bring or reduce back again under one head. That is, the different and sundered parts of the Kingdom, Capitol and King "in heaven," the subjects and territory "on the earth," are to be redeemed or gathered again into one kingdom under one "Head," of the Son of David, and the Dispensation of the fulness of times is the period in which it is to be done. This is the period of inheritance and follows that of ship, the dispensation of grace, ch. 3:2,6. In it the promises of the covenants in their largest sense will be inherited. We think it has been shown that the atonement of the Gospel dispensation is the antitype of that made by the priests in their daily service, and that prepared for and made necessary the yearly atonement, and cleansed the Sanctuary and the people from all their sins. It appears like certainty, that the antitypes of the daily ministration of the priests and the vernal types stretch through the Gospel Dispensation; as that composed but part of the atonement and antitypes, we have good reason to believe that the remaining antitype, the autumnal, and the remainder of the atonement, the yearly, will be fulfilled on the same principle as to time and occupy a period or dispensation of at last 1000 years. "That age" will be highly exalted above "this age," and form the stepping-stone to the unmingled, fadeless and eternal glories of the earth redeemed and Edenized again. Who can find fault, if the Lord has given us in the law the shadows of that age! Who will not rather seek the Spirit of Truth which shall "bring all things to your remembrance," even "the Law of Moses" and "show us things to come," "the good things to come"? It will be literally an age of repairs, in which immortal saints will engage under the supervision of the King of kings--an age of restitution, of blotting out of sin with all its direful effects, the age for the redemption of the purchased possession, the grand and final Jubilee, in which all the captives of Zion in and out of the grave, being released and gathered from among the heathen and out of all countries, shall be cleansed from all their iniquities, possess their "own land," and the wastes shall be builded. They shall be "one nation;" "And David my servant shall be king over them; and they shall have one shepherd: they shall also walk in my judgment, and observe my statutes, and do them." "And I will set my Sanctuary in the midst of them for evermore. My tabernacle also shall be with them: yea, I will be their God, and they shall be my people. And the heathen shall know that I the Lord do sanctify Israel, when my Sanctuary shall be in the midst of them for evermore." They shall know this when Satan shall gather them, Gog and Magog, from the four quarters of the earth about the "camp of the Saints and the beloved City," (Rev. 20:8,9) when they shall "come into the land that is brought back from the sword," "the land of unwalled villages," the [one] desolate places that are now inhabited by "them that are at rest," "that are gathered out of the nations, which have gotten cattle and goods, that dwell in the midst of the land." But "every man's sword shall be against his brother," and "fire from God out of heaven shall devour them;" Ezek. 36,37,38. We have seen that the Dis. following the Gos. Dis. is a day of cleansing. Even after the Lord has taken his people from among the heathen and gathered them out of all countries into their own land, which is evidently the same as bringing them up out of their graves into the land of Israel, "Then, after the resurrection and they are brought into their own land will I sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean;" 36:24,25.

To cleanse the people, that they might be clean from all their sins "before the Lord" was the object of the atonement of the tenth day of the seventh month under the law; Lev. 16:30. The evidence is satisfactory to my mind that that day is the type of the Dispensation of the fulness of times, the age to come. What! are we to be sinful and unclean when immortal! Let us "be patient." "The righteous shall not make haste." The Lord says he will sprinkle them with clean water and cleanse them thereby after he has gathered them into their own land. Whether the sprinkling of water is literal or figurative, it shows that he will perform a cleansing process upon them.

Blood and water issued from our Saviour's side. Objects under the law were cleansed by blood and water; and we have already seen that if those objects were physically unclean, as by the leprosy or any thing else, all such uncleanness had to be removed in preparation for the cleansing. The atonement was made for the object with blood or blood and water, and the atonement cleansed them. So our Saviour after he had cleansed the leper of his disease commanded him to go and offer for his cleansing; Mark 1:41-44. So the people were themselves freed from their sins by the atonement previously made for them individually in the Holy, to prepare them for the yearly cleansing.

From this it is manifest that the whole house of Israel will need to have their sins forgiven and their vile bodies changed to fit them for the cleansing spoken of; Ezek. 36:25. The cleansing of the Sanctuary did not finish the cleansing for the people; for, after the Scape-goat had borne away all the iniquities of the people, the high priest had yet to offer the burnt-offerings and burn the fat of the sin-offerings on the altar in the court, which formed a part of the atonement of the day; and it required the whole atonement of that day to cleanse the people; Lev. 16:22-30.

The cleansing of the Sanctuary, in fulfillment of the law, is the first event in the antitype of the tenth day of the seventh month. We have seen, both from the New Testament and the Old, that this Sanctuary is not earthly but Heavenly, as the Sanctuary of the first covenant formed a part of old Jerusalem, so the Sanctuary of the new covenant formed a part of New Jerusalem. Here an inferential objection arises, which in many minds overwhelms any amount of Bible argument on this point. It is, New Jerusalem cannot be defiled, hence needs no cleansing; therefore, New Jerusalem is not the Sanctuary. A very summary process of inferential deduction truly, especially for those who have said so much on the insufficiency of mere inferential testimony. We would advise them to review the grounds of their faith, and see how many and strong arguments they have for the earth or Palestine being the Sanctuary, and how many objections to the Sanctuary of the new covenant being where its Priest is, that are not entirely inferential; and then in place of their inferences, take the plain testimony of the Word and teach it. But how was the Sanctuary defiled? The Sanctuary of the Old Testament, being on earth, could be, and was, defiled in various ways--by an unclean person entering it; "She shall touch no hallowed thing, nor come into the Sanctuary, until the days of her purifying be fulfilled;" Lev. 12:4. It could be profaned by the high priest going out of it, while the anointing oil was upon him, for the dead; (Lev. 21:12); by a man's negotiating to purify himself; Num. 17:20. All the chief of the priests and of the people polluted it by transgressing very much after all the abominations of the heath; 2 Ch. 36:14. "Surely, because thou hast defiled my sanctuary with all thy detestable things, and with all thine abominations [idolatry], therefore will I diminish thee." Eze. 5:11.

Moreover this they have done unto me; they have defiled my sanctuary in the same day, and have profaned my Sabbaths: for when they had slain their children to their idols, then they came the same day into my sanctuary to profane it; Eze. 23:38,39. "Her priests have polluted the sanctuary; they have done violence to the law." Zeph. 3:4. Antiochus polluted it by offering swine "flesh upon its altar," Mac. From these texts we can clearly see, that it was moral rather than physical uncleanness that defiled the sanctuary in the sight of the Lord. True, it did become physically unclean, but that uncleanness had to be removed before the atonement was made by which it was reconciled or cleansed. See 2 Chap. 29. And that, we have seen was the law of cleansing, Lev. 12 to 15; the object must be made visibly clean, so to speak, so that we would call it clean, to prepare it for its real cleansing with blood. Now no one supposes that New Jerusalem is unclean or ever has been, as its type was when overrun, desecrated and desolated by Syrian, Chaldean or Roman soldiery, or trode by wicked priests. Even if it were, the removing of such defilement would not be the cleansing it was to undergo at the end of the 2300 days. The sanctuary was unclean in some sense, or else it would not need to be cleansed; and it must in some way have received its uncleanness from man. Removed, as the heavenly sanctuary is from the midst of mortals and entered only by our Forerunner, Jesus, made an High Priest, it can only be defiled by mortals through his agency, and for them cleansed by the same agency. The legal typical process of defiling and cleansing the sanctuary through the agency of the priest has been examined. With that in our minds, let us go to the New Testament. Paul says, Col. 1:19,20, "For it pleased the Father that in him should all fullness dwell, and having made [margin, making] peace through the blood of his cross, by him to reconcile all things unto himself; by him I say, whether they be things on earth or things in heaven." When "things on earth" are spoken of in connection or contrast with "things in heaven," no one can understand them all to be in the same place. "Things in heaven" are to be reconciled as well as "things on earth."

If they needed reconciling they were unreconciled; if unreconciled, then unclean in some sense in his sight. The blood of Christ is the means, and Christ himself the agent of reconciling to the Father both the things in heaven and the things on earth. People have an idea that in heaven where our Saviour has gone, every thing is, and always was perfect beyond change or improvement. But he said, "In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you." He went into heaven, and Paul says that the "building of God, an house not made with hands" is in the heavens; 2 Cor. 5:1.

For what did he go to his Father's house? "To prepare a place for you." Then it was unprepared, and when he has prepared it, he will come again and take us to himself. Again, Heb. 9:23, "It was therefore necessary that the pattern of things in the heavens should be purified with these; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these." What were the patterns? "The tabernacle and all the vessels of the ministry," (ver. 21), which constituted the worldly Sanctuary; ver. 1. What were the heavenly things themselves? The greater and more perfect tabernacle (ver. 11), and the good things and the holy things (vers. 11,12). These are all in heaven itself. "For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself," ver. 24. Paul here shows that it was as necessary to purify the heavenly things, as it was to purify their patterns, the worldly. It was therefore necessary. Why? He has before been speaking of the daily ministration of the priests, and its antitype, Christ's mediation of the new covenant, "for the redemption of the transgressions." Under the former the blood of bulls and goats and the ashes of an heifer sanctified to the purifying of the flesh; but under the latter, the blood of Christ purges our conscience. Then (ver. 22) "without shedding of blood is no remission." The necessity of cleansing the heavenly things, is induced by the atonement being made therein by the blood of Christ for the remission or forgiveness of sins and purifying of our consciences. And almost all things are by the law purged with blood. The patterns were purified "every year" (ver. 25) with the blood of bulls and goats; but in the antitype of that yearly expiation the heavenly things themselves must be purified with the blood of the better sacrifice of Christ himself once offered. This reconciles the "things in Heaven" (Col. 1:20) and cleanses the Sanctuary of the new Covenant, Dan. 8:14.

The Scape-Goat

The next event of that day after the Sanctuary was cleansed, was putting all the iniquities and transgressions of the children of Israel upon the head of the Scape-goat and sending him away into a land not inhabited, or of separation. It is supposed by almost every one that this goat typified Christ in some of his offices, and that the type was fulfilled at the first Advent. From this opinion I must differ; because 1st, That goat was not sent away till after the High Priest had made an end of cleansing the Sanctuary, Lev. 16:20,21; hence that event cannot meet its antitype till after the end of the 2300 days. 2d, It was sent away from Israel into the wilderness, a land not inhabited, to receive them. If our blessed Saviour is its antitype, He also must be sent away, not his body alone, but soul and body, for the goat was sent away alive, from, not to nor into this people; neither into heaven, for that is not a wilderness or land not inhabited. 3d, It received and retained all the iniquities of Israel; but when Christ appears the second time He will be "without sin." 4th, The goat received the iniquities from the hands of the priest and he sent it away. As Christ is the priest the goat must be something else besides himself, and which he can send away. 5th, This was one of two goats chosen for that day, one was the Lord's and offered for a sin offering; but the other was not called the Lord's, neither offered as a sacrifice. Its only office was to receive the iniquities from the priest after he had cleansed the Sanctuary from them, and bear them into a land not inhabited, leaving the Sanctuary, priest and people behind and free from their iniquities. Lev. 16:7-10,22. 6th, The Hebrew name of the scape-goat, as will be seen from the margin of ver. 8, is "Azazel." On this verse Wm. Jenks, in his Comp. Com. has the following remarks: ["Scape-goat."] See diff. opin. in Bochart. Spencer, after the oldest opinion of the Hebrews and Christians, thinks Azazel is the name of the devil; and so Rosenmire, whom see. The Syriac has Azazel, the angel, (Strongone) who revolted." 7th, At the appearing of Christ, as taught from Rev. 20, Satan is to be bound and cast into the bottomless pit, which act and place are significantly symbolized by the ancient High Priest sending the scape-goat into a separate and uninhabited wilderness. 8th, Thus we have the Scripture, the definition of the name in two ancient languages both spoken at the same time, and the oldest opinion of the Christians in favor of regarding the scape-goat as a type of Satan. In the common use of the term, men always associate it with something mean, calling the greatest villains and refugees from justice scape-goats. Ignorance of the law and its meaning is the only possible origin that can be assigned for the opinion that the scape-goat was a type of Christ.

Because it is said, "The goat shall bear upon him all their iniquities into a land not inhabited." Lev. 16:21; And John said, "Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh [margin, beareth] away the sin of the world," it is concluded without further thought that the former was the type of the latter. But a little attention to the law will show that the sins were borne from the people by the priest, and from the priest by the goat. 1st, They are imparted to the victim. 2d, The priest bore them in its blood to the Sanctuary. 3d, After cleansing them from it on the 10th of the seventh month, he bore them to the scape-goat. And 4th, The goat finally bore them away beyond the camp of Israel to the wilderness.

This was the legal process, and when fulfilled the author of sins will have received them back again, (but the ungodly will bear their own sins), and his head will have been bruised by the seed of the woman; the "strong man armed" will have been bound by a stronger than he, "and his house (the grave) spoiled of its goods (the saints. Matt. 12:29; Lev. 11:21,22. The thousand years Imprisonment of Satan will have begun, and the saints will have entered upon their millennial reign with Christ. The antitype of the legal tenth day, the Dispensation of the fulness of times, must begin long enough before the 1000 years of Rev. 20: to give time for the cleansing of the Sanctuary, and the antitype of confessing and putting the sins on the head of the scape-goat; which antitype covers the time occupied by "the last end of indignation;" the cry of God's elect to be avenged, Luke 18:1-8, the travail of Zion, (Ezekiel in the valley of dry bones), the loud cry of the 5th angel, Rev. 15:__, the Laodicean church, Rev. 3:14, and the 7 last plagues, Rev. 15 and 16. Our limits will not admit of particulars here. The first resurrection is fixed at the appearing of Christ, 1 Thess. 4:16, and the beginning of the 1000 at the first resurrection, Rev. 20:4-__.

The Sanctuary must be cleansed before Christ appears; because, 1, He "was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Now as his last act in bearing the sins of many is to bear them from the Sanctuary after he has cleansed it, and as he does not appear till after having borne the sins of many, and then without sin it is manifest that the Sanctuary must be cleansed before he appears. 2, The host are still under the indignation after the Sanctuary is cleansed, Dan. 8. Both the Sanctuary and the host were trodden under foot. "Unto 2300 days then shall the Sanctuary be cleansed," or justified (margin). This is the first point in the explanation, and after this Daniel still "sought for the meaning of the vision," and Gabriel came "to make him know what should be in the last end of the indignation." In the explanation which follows; he says nothing about the Sanctuary, because that had been explained by the Wonderful Numberer. He now tells him about the host upon whom the last end of the indignation still rests after the Sanctuary is cleansed. This indignation is the Lord's staff in the hands of the wicked to chastise his people. It was first put into the hands of the Assyrian and has been inherited by each of successors, which have in turn been sent "against an hypocritical nation, to take the prey and to take the spoil, and to tread them down like the mire of the streets." Is. 10.

The last end of the indignation is evidently the bitter persecutions, and the severe and searching trial of God's people, after the Sanctuary is cleansed, and before the indignation is made to cease in the destruction of the little Horn, the fruit and the successor of the Assyrian, Dan. 8:25; Is. 5:12; 25:3. The Sanctuary must be cleansed before the resurrection, for the Lord has provided a comforting message for his people, telling them that it is done. "Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God. Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her that her warfare [appointed time, margin] is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned: for she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins," Is. 40:1,2. Jerusalem and the Lord's people are here spoken of, as the Sanctuary and host are in Dan. 8. His people, when Jerusalem's appointed time is accomplished, are affected and are to be comforted by telling them that her iniquity is pardoned. This must be New Jerusalem, for there was never any time set for pardoning the iniquity of Old Jerusalem which must have had iniquity of some kind and from some source, else she could not be pardoned of it. The fact that the Lord has commanded to comfort his people by telling them that Jerusalem's iniquity is pardoned, is proof positive that she had iniquity, and that it will be removed before his people are delivered and enter her with songs and everlasting joy. This message is similar to that in Isa. 52:9. After the good and peaceful tidings have been published, saying unto Zion, Thy God reigneth, it is declared, "The Lord has comforted his people, he hath redeemed Jerusalem." Jerusalem was in a state from which she had to be redeemed, and that before the resurrection; for the next verse says, "All the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God."--Day Star Extra 1846.

The Transition

The opinion generally obtains that the seventh trumpet ushers in the Age to come. The first thing upon its sounding are "great voices saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ." Three voices must be heard in the world in which those kingdoms are. It is also evident that the kingdoms sustain a different relation to God at the time these voices are heard, from what they did before the 7th trumpet sounded. The declaration, "He shall reign forever and ever;" and the humble expression of thanks from the four and twenty elders (a symbol of the whole church), "Because thou hast taken to thee thy great power and hast resigned," shows that at that time he began to reign in a special sense. Such voices have been heard since the 7th month '44, and produced the effects here described, deep humiliation and profound gratitude. This change of the relation of the kingdoms of this world to Christ, is the same as making his enemies his footstool (Heb. 10:13), which event was expected by him while he sat at the right hand of the Father fulfilling the daily ministration, vs. 11,12.

Rev. 10 gives in part the character and circumstances of the transition from the Gos to the following Dis. The angel that declares, "There should be time no longer," is not the Lord at his appearing, for after uttering that oath he told John, "Thou must prophesy again." Whatever the nature of this prophesying may be, it certainly follows the oath of verses 6,7.

I think we have misunderstood the 7th verse. We have understood or explained the 6th verse as the language of the angel, but the 7th was a declaration of John; whereas both verses are the language of the angel, the 7th being a qualification or explanation of the 6th, showing the manner in which time should close. The angel of the Philadelphia church, having "an open door," gave the Midnight Cry with the solemn assurance of this oath. He swore, or positively declared, "That there should be time no longer, but in the days of the voice of the 7th angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God should be finished, as he hath declared to his servants the prophets." There are "days" (plural) in which the 7th angel begins to sound. Whether these days are literal or symbolic, which is most in accordance with the character of this book, they denote a short period of time, in which not only the 7th angel begins to sound, but the mystery of God is finished also. Thus we see that the mystery is finished, not in a point, but in a period, and while the mystery is finishing, the 7th angel is beginning to sound. What is the mystery to be finished? "The mystery of the gospel," Eph. 6:19. "The mystery which was kept secret since the world began, but is now made manifest." The riches of the glory of this mystery is Christ in you, the hope of glory, Col. 1:27. "The mystery of Christ, which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the spirit; that the Gentiles should be fellow heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel;" Eph. 2:4-6. It is the dispensation of the grace of God; ver. 2. These texts show that the mystery of God or Christ is the Gos. Dis. It is the period of hope and heirship. While we hope we pray for the object of hope, and that is glory--as exhibited on the Holy Mount, immortality, the Kingdom and society of Jesus. Until these are obtained we hope; and while we hope the mystery is not finished. Again, we are heirs during the mystery of God, and when that is finished, we shall become inheritors. We must therefore conclude that the mystery of God will end with the mysterious change from mortal to immortality; 1 Cor. 15:51-54. Then, as the Dispensation of the fulness of times begins with the 7th trumpet, and the Gos. Dis. reaches to the resurrection, it is manifest that the Dis. of the fulness of times, begins before the Gos. Dis. ends. There is a short period of overlapping or running together of the two Dispensations, in which the peculiarities of both mingle like the twilight, minglings of light and darkness.

This was also the manner of change from the Dispensation of the Law to the Gospel. Gabriel said to Daniel, "Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people and upon thy holy city." It is presumed that all agree that these 70 weeks reached to the end of the legal dispensation and no further. The Messiah came at the end of the 69 weeks and began to preach the gospel, (Mar 1:14,15; Matt 4:23) which Paul calls the New Covenant. And he confirmed this covenant with many for one week, the last one of the 70. Hence the legal Dispensation ended seven years after the Gos. Dis. began; and the last symbolic week of one was the first of the other; and while one was being finished, the other was being introduced and confirmed or established. Whether that period is an express type of the crisis period between the Gos. Dis. and the Dispensation of the fulness of times or not, it furnishes a strong argument from analogy, corroborating the plain testimony of the Word, that there must be such a period. I see no evidence that the latter must be of the same length of the former: To learn its length we must have recourse to other sources of evidence. Yet there is a striking similarity between them. At that time the world and the mass of God's professed people were unbelieving, and greatly indifferent about the transpiring events in the Providence of God, momentous as they were. The adherents to the new era were a sect everywhere spoken against. They had little or no reverence for the old and commandment-nullifying traditions of Judaism. They were called movers of seditions, endangering the place and nation; drunken, because filled with the Holy Ghost; and mad, because might in the truth. They had peculiar faith; and their preaching and conduct were such as to cause the professors to accuse them of breaking the law; and finally they denounced and excluded the whole Jewish nation of religionists en masse for their infidelity. The teaching and practice ven of our Saviour and the apostles appeared to them contradictory--at times they seemed to recognize the authority of the law, and then again totally to disregard it, and insist upon the new order of things. He resolved their ten commandments into two, dismissed the woman without being stoned according to the law, forgave sins without the legal sacrifices, healed without requiring to offer according to law, and that even on the Sabbath day; and yet declared that he came not to destroy the law, but to fulfill it. Again, when he had healed a leper, he charged him to go and show himself to the Priest and offer for his cleansing those things which Moses commanded. He also ate the Passover according to law. Both he and his apostles, on some occasions excluded, and on others admitted the Gentiles to privileges, which according to the law could be enjoyed only by the Jews. Thus they recognized the presence and claims of both dispensations at the same time; one entering and displacing the other, not instantly, but gradually, by a succession of events, each distinct in itself, but all connected in harmony, transpiring in fulfillment of prophecy, and forming the circumstances of the Advent, which was one distinct event, and the nucleus of all the rest. A little before his crucifixion Jesus came as King to Jerusalem, the Metropolis and Capitol of that Dis.; the City was under his absolute authority for a time; he had declared its house desolate and now entered and cleansed the temple.

As then, so now, according to the Scriptures, a series of events constitute the circumstances of our Lord's appearing, and form the crisis of the two Dispensations. In that period his crucifixion and resurrection are the principle events to which all others are subservient. But there are other events connected with the Advent and which must of necessity precede it. of these events as we have already seen is the cleansing of the Sanctuary. Another is the marriage. That Christ ever was or ever will be married as human beings are, no one pretends; but that there is a divine transaction, illustrated for our understanding under the figure of a marriage, it is infidelity to deny. Christ is the Bridegroom and New Jerusalem the Bride. The marriage then signifies their union in a special sense, and of course must take place where the bride is, in the heavens. The heavens must receive Jesus till the times of restitution, then the Father will send him from the heavens. He went to his Father's House in Jew Jerusalem, and when he has prepared it he will come again from it to receive us. True the word Gamos, which is rendered marriage or wedding, signifies "the nuptial ceremony, including the banquet; but not the banquet alone, as some would have us believe. Where is the place of these transactions? With the Bride of course. When the Bridegroom came to the marriage the, he could not have come to the earth from heaven, for then he would have come from instead of to the marriage, but he must have come to the place of marriage, in New Jerusalem.

But, says one, How could he come where he was already? We must remember that the Bride is not a person, but a City, 12,000 furlongs or 1500 miles square. The central point and fountain of all its glory is the Ancient of days. Christ doubtless has been personally within the limits of that City ever since his ascension, and when the cry in '44 was given he came to the Ancient of Days and the scenes of marriage, which in their amplitude will occupy a great part, if not all, of the Dispensation of the fulness of times, then began. And, as when Christ comes again he will come from New Jerusalem after the scenes of marriage have there begun, every one will see that he will return to earth from the wedding, and we, waiting, will meet him and return with him to the bridal City to share in the festive joys.

Dear Brethren, I must close for the present and leave the subject with you. May the Lord correct and enlarge our conceptions of himself and his Plan, and direct our hearts into the patient waiting for Jesus. Let us in humble obedience follow the Lamb in the expanding developmetns of His Word and Providence.

To the Brethren and Sisters Scattered Abroad.

We have prayerfully examined the subject presented by Brother Crosier in the light of God's word, and are fully satisfied it is meat in due season, and if properly examined and understood will settle many difficulties in the minds of many brethren at this time.

In order to get it before the brethren, it becomes necessary to loan the money necessary for its publication, with the expectation that all who feel interested and have means will aid in the expense. The expense as near as we can now ascertain will be about $30. Brethren here, as in most other places, are poor, (but rich in faith) but we can bear one-half of the expense, and will more if necessary.

If more should be refunded than the other half, it will be sent to Bro. Jacobs, or as brethren may direct. The subject, brethren, is now before you, and we do pray you will examine it carefully by the Word. May the Lord add his blessing.

The brethren will please direct to F. B. Hahn, Canandaigua, Ont. Co., N.Y.

PREFACE.

In presenting the following subject to the consideration of whom it may concern, I would here state that the two leading motives which have actuated and guided me through this absorbing subject has been—first, the truth of God to encourage and strengthen the true-believer. Second, to correct, or "rebuke" the spiritual views, (may I not say of almost all Christendom,) in respect to the appearing and kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Twenty-one years observation and experience, but more especially the last seven, in pursuit of this object, has taught me that truth is the only thing that can save the soul. But the great mass of the professed Christian world seem to pay no more regard to it than their great Predecessor, who said unto the Saviour "what is truth?" when he had just said to him that he "came into the world to bear witness unto the truth, and every one that is of the truth heareth my voice." Jesus in his last prayer for his disciples asks the Father to sanctify them through his truth. "Thy word is truth." St. John. Again, he saith, "The Spirit is truth." The forerunner of Christ said, "The law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." Jesus says, "I am not come to destroy the law or the prophets; but to fulfil, for verily I say unto you till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law until all be fulfilled." Matthew. Then of course man is required to believe "and live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Third, thousands who have been looking for the personal appearing of the Lord Jesus from heaven in these last days, have, in their disappointment about his coming, given up the only Scriptural view, and are now teaching that he has come in spirit and this is all we shall ever see of him here. One single passage from the Saviour's last words, when about to leave the world in the flesh, ought to have rectified any such mistake: "And lo, I am with you, always, even unto the end of the world," meaning of course, his spirit. But I submit the subject.

THE OPENING HEAVENS.

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, hereafter ye shall see the Son of man, and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the son of man."—John 1: 51.

Notwithstanding my incompetency to do justice to this momentous subject, I feel constrained to throw out my views in this public manner, for the benefit of all who feel an interest in the second coming of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, to set up, and establish his "everlasting kingdom," upon this renovated earth.

I believe, according to the testimony of the "two men seen in white apparel," that "this same Jesus which was taken up into Heaven will in like manner come again," (Acts 1: 11) from the same place, and stand in the same place he left. (See Zach. xiv: 4.) I believe he is in the third Heaven, in Paradise, with God, the Father; (see 2 Cor. xii: 2, 4; Rev. III: 12; Heb. 1: 3, 9 and 34) that he is now about to come with the Holy CITY, THE CAPITAL of his everlasting kingdom, and locate it in the "midst" of the promised land where he was crucified. According to this view then there is but one place in the heavens for this CITY to come from. A spiritual exposition of those glorious things, now about to be realized, bedevils the whole, and leaves no tangible ground for Bible people to stand on. Whoever attempts this wilfully will run the risk of losing his soul, for Jesus says "If any man shall add or take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part (from the tree of life—margin) and out of the Holy CITY." Rev. xii: 19. Proof positive, that the Saints have a part in the City, and not in themselves.

Let us now listen to his description of this glorious view he sees before him, while he sits, pen in hand, all ready to write down what transpires at the command of his guide.

"I, John, saw the holy CITY NEW JERUSALEM coming down from God, out of Heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." In the 5th v. John saw him that "was dead and is alive forevermore," seated upon "his throne;" and he said unto me "write, for these words are true and faithful." "And there came unto me one of the seven angels, saying come up hither, I will show thee the bride, the Lamb's wife; and he carried me away in the spirit to a great and high mountain, and showed me that great CITY THE HOLY JERUSALEM, descending out of Heaven from God, having the glory of God: and her light was like unto a stone most precious, even like a Jasper stone, clear as crystal. And I heard a great voice out of Heaven saying, behold, the TABERNACLE of God is with men." What a beautiful description is here—please read the whole chapter. In the two first verses of the xii. chapter, we learn that the walls of this CITY enclose "the tree of life," "which is in the midst of the Paradise of God." Moses testifies that "the Lord God planted a garden eastward in Eden, and there he put the man whom he had formed. And the tree of life also in the midst of the garden, and a river went out of Eden to water the garden, and became into four heads." (Gen. ii: 8, 10; iii: 3, 17, 22, 24. Compare this with Ezekiel's prophecy, xlvi: 3, 5, 12; also xlviii: 20, 35. There he speaks of waters first shallow and then deep; waters to swim in that could not be passed over, on the "banks of which shall be fruit every month, and the leaves for medicine." He also shows the four sides or "heads" to the river. The prophet Isaiah says "Look upon Zion, the City, Jerusalem, Tabernacle, a place of broad rivers and streams; where shall pass no galley with oars, neither shall gallant ship pass thereby;"—lxviii: 20, 21. Surely this is the same which Moses and Ezekiel has described; and John says, "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the Paradise of God. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." Rev. xii: 17, 2, 7. Then this "Holy City, new Jerusalem, the Zion of God, the Tabernacle of God, the Bride the Lamb's Wife, the Mother of us all," is a City, enclosed with a wall one hundred and forty-four cubits high, which embraces the "garden of Eden, the Paradise of God." And God calls it his "SANCTUARY." I suppose that it will be conceded by all, that the Garden of Eden at the time of the fall, was a hilly place, and was planted eastward. Yes, says one, and it is located in "Ethiopia or Assyria." How then is it, that the traveller and historian are entirely silent about it? Surely, it is a most remarkable place. Hear Moses's description of it: "Therefore the Lord God sent him (Adam) forth from the garden of Eden to till the ground from whence he was taken. So he drove out the man: and placed at the East of the garden of Eden, Cherubims and a flaming sword which turned every way, to guard the tree of life." Gen. iii: 23, 24. Now we have no account that these Cherubims and flaming sword has ever been seen within the orbit of this planet (which is allowed to be 162 millions of miles in diameter) since the fall of man, but has been far removed out of their sight. The prophet says, "Behold the time shall come that those tokens which I have told thee, shall come to pass, and the Bride shall appear, and she coming forth shall be seen that now is withdrawn from the earth;"—xi. Edras: 7, 28. This shows that Paradise is not located in this planet. But perhaps you do not believe that Edras is a true prophet; well then, will you believe St. Paul? He says, "I knew a man in Christ above fourteen years ago (whether in the body I cannot tell, God knoweth) such an one caught up to the third Heaven—God knoweth how that he was caught up into Paradise and heard unspeakable words which is not (possible: margin) for a man to utter." 2 Cor. xii: 4. St. John's testimony agrees with Paul, for he says he "saw the Bride the Lamb's wife, coming down from God, out of Heaven," without doubt, the same place where he had been. But says the objector, if John saw it coming down 1750 years ago, it ought to have been here by this time. Very true; but John "saw things which must shortly come to pass." Rev. 1. Let us just look at a few of the things he saw, and remember at the same time how he was directed to write them down, that every important point might be recorded. He saw the "abomination (Popery) that maketh desolate set up," four hundred and forty-five years in the future. Again, he saw the seven angels going forth with their trumpets to sound—he particularly describes the three last. See Rev. viii: 13; ix: 17, 19. Here he shows us what was to be the component parts of gunpowder, and in a very peculiar and clear manner describes the musket with the ball, (head) how they killed men 1350 years before muskets were used on horse-back—17th v. Further, how could he have described the second advent history so minutely as he has done in the xiv. chapter, if he had not have seen what was to be, and has been fulfilled; and how is it possible he could have given such a favorable picture of "Mystery Babylon," if he had not have seen in these last days of "perilous times," the professed children of God drinking from the old mother's cup of poison, while "she was drunk with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus." Rev. xvii. and xviii. Once more, how did David see that blood thirsty mob shoot out the lip, and laugh to scorn their Savior; and the four Roman soldiers under his cross dividing his garments and casting lots for his vesture, twelve hundred years before it took place. John xix: 23, 24. Why? just as St. John saw the Holy City coming down at the second advent of Jesus—just as I believe, it will be seen, "Having the glory of God; and her light was like unto a stone most precious, even like a jasper stone, clear as crystal." Rev. xxi: 11. The most precious is the green, spotted with red and purple. We will now look at the

ASTRONOMICAL VIEW.

From what part of Heaven will this glorious Coff appear? We answer, from where the flaming sword is "guarding the way of the tree of life," and the Cherubim are stationed. John i: 51. Fergusson, the celebrated astronomer of the last century, in describing some of the many wonders in the heavens, says "that the two bright clouds in the heavens at the south pole, called by mariners the clouds of Magellan, are by astronomers called cloudy stars, but the most remarkable of all the cloudy stars is that in the middle of Orion's sword, where seven stars (of which three are very close together) seem to shine through a cloud, very lucid in the middle, but faint and ill defined about the edges. It looks like a gap in the sky, through which one may see (well were) part of a much brighter region. Although most of the spaces are but a few minutes of a degree in breadth, yet, since they are among the fixed stars, they must be spaces larger than what is occupied by our Solar System—the Solar System includes the Planet Uranus, which is one thousand and eight hundred millions of miles from the Sun, the circumference of her orbit in which she revolves around the Sun is calculated to be three hundred and fourteen millions of miles—and in which there seems to be a perpetual uninterrupted day among numberless worlds, which no human eye can ever discover.—Fergusson's Treatise on Astronomy, edition A. D. 1770.

Out of ninety-three, Orion is the most striking and splendid constellation in the Heavens; her center is mid way between the poles of heaven and directly over the equator of the Earth, and is visible from all the habitable parts of the Globe. On her south-eastern quarter is the beautiful star Sirius, (one of the most magnificent in the Heavens,) and on the north-west is stationed the Pleiades or seven Stars. "She rises at noon about the 24th of March" "and sets at noon about the 21st of June," and comes to the meridian January 23d, at 9 P. M. She is now to be seen for a little while, in the evening twilight, about one hour high, with the Planets Jupiter and Mars on her north and north-west. When the Lord answered Job out of the whirlwind, and demanded of him to answer to the wonderful questions which he was now about to put to him, he says "Canst thou bind the sweet influences of the Pleiades or loose the bands of Orion?" When Amos, the Prophet exhorted his Israel to repentance, he endeavored to impress their minds with the power of God by advertising to the wonderful phenomena in the Heavens, by saying, "Seek him that maketh the Seven Stars and Orion," &c. &c.

Hooke, its first discoverer, gives the following description of it: "Astronomers place three stars close together in the sword of Orion; and when I viewed the middle-most with a Telescope, in the year 1656, there appeared in the place of that one, twelve other stars; among these three that almost touch each other, and four more besides appeared twinkling as through a cloud, so that the space about them seemed much brighter than the rest of the heaven, which appearing wholly blackish, by reason of the fair weather, was seen as through a curtain opening, through which one had a free view into another region which was more enlightened. I have frequently observed the same appearance in the same place without any alteration; so that it is likely that this wonder, whatever it may be in itself, has been there from all times; but I never took notice of any thing like it among the rest of the fixed stars."

Sir William Herschel says, "If stars of the eighth magnitude are to be considered at an average of eight times further distant than those of the first, then this nebula cannot be supposed to be less than 350,000,000,000,000, three hundred and twenty thousand billions of miles from the earth. If its diameter at this distance subtend an angle of ten minutes, which it nearly does, its magnitude must be utterly inconceivable. It has been calculated that it must exceed 2,000,000,000,000,000, or two trillions of times the dimensions of the Sun, vast and incomprehensible as these dimensions are."—See Dick's Siderial Heavens, Vol. III, pp. 181, 182.

Says this author—"Suffice it to say that such an enormous mass of luminous matter was not created in vain, but serves a purpose in the divine arrangements corresponding to its magnitude and the nature of its luminosity, and to the wisdom and intelligence of him whose power brought it into existence. It doubtless subserves some important purpose, even at the present moment, to worlds and beings within the range of its influence. But the ultimate in all its bearings and relations, may perhaps remain to be evolved during the future ages of an interminable existence." Page 184.

Again, says the Illustrated London News of April 19th, 1845: "Marvellous rumors are afloat respecting the Astronomical discoveries made by Lord Rosse's monster Telescope. (This is said to be sixty feet long and its great speculum or reflecting large glass measures six feet in diameter and weighs three and three-fourths tons, and is calculated to discover glorious objects in the Heavens, to men heretofore unknown.) It is stated that Regulus, instead of being a sphere, is ascertained to be a Disc; and stranger still, that the nebula in the belt of Orion (meaning the bright place before stated) is a universal system, a sun with planets moving round it, as the earth and her fellows move around our glorious luminary."

Thus we see from all the testimony adduced, (and we could give much more were it necessary) that here is a most wonderful and inexplicable phenomena in the heavens: a gap in the sky, more than 11,314,000,000 miles in circumference. Says the celebrated Huggins, "I never saw anything like it among the rest of the fixed stars—free view into another region more enlightened." I have had the pleasure (with others) during the past month, to see this wonder in the Heavens a number of evenings, through J. Dolan's, Jr.'s excellent Telescope.

It has been supposed by some, that this wonderful phenomena seen through the sword of Orion, has passed through some material change since it was first discovered by Huggins, one hundred and ninety years ago. On this point Sir John Herschel says: "When it is considered how difficult it is to represent such an object duly, and how entirely its appearance will differ even in the same Telescope, according to the clearness of the air or other temporary causes, we shall readily admit that we have no evidence of change that can be relied on."

As I had before partially examined the Bible view of the opening Heavens, I think I never shall forget the thrill that pervaded my whole being, the first time that I saw this celestial wonder opening its way down the western Heavens! Since then, when I have viewed it through the Telescope, my mind would instinctively revert to Moses's description of the liberated children of Abraham, passing through the Red Sea, with that wonderful miracle "the pillar of fire, between them and the Egyptian Host." My thoughts still running onward, from type to antitype, "God looking through the cloud of fire in the morning watch!" at once recognized the entrance of his chosen people. Exo. xiv: 24, 27.

Be in this morning watch God will not only look through this mighty space, (black on one side with the stormy cloud,) but, as the Prophet Joel says, he will "Hear out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the Heavens and the earth shall shake; but the Lord will be the hope of his people.—So shall ye know that I am the Lord your God dwelling in Zion my holy mountain: then shall Jerusalem be holy." ("CLEANSED.") Joel: 10, 17.

A western view, with an inverting eye piece, gives it the appearance of a stormy dark cloud, with a full moon just shut in behind it, and three bright stars looking through the cloud. This dark looking cloud is called the gap in the sky. This constellation measures about one thousand miles from North to South, and five hundred from East to West, and is visible to all the inhabitants of the earth.

Here then is a mighty image (as represented on the map of the Heavens,) stretched across mid heaven, with his gold and silver epaulettes (four hundred and eighty miles apart) and two burning stars denoting his Northern and Southern extremities: the golden one on his upraised left foot, the other of silver on his right knee, answering to the one on his left shoulder; girded with his brilliant emudded belt and flaming sword; "doubtless, to subserve some important purpose even at the present moment." Let it be distinctly understood, with what has already been stated by the Astronomers, that this "constellation is one of the most brilliant and noted in the Heavens," "that its nebula, (according to the celebrated Sir William Herschel) far exceeds any other object, and its magnitude utterly inconceivable, two trillions times larger than the Sun; while the Sun is allowed to be thirteen hundred thousand times larger than our globe. That it "never yet has been resolved into stars by the highest power of the telescope," "and there is no evidence of any change, even if it were discovered to be resolvable, (as is stated by a writer somewhat acquainted with Lord Rosse's monster telescope.) If so, it goes to strengthen the argument of its first discoverer, who says "through which one had a free view into another region which was more enlight-ened."

If, then, there is nothing to be seen on Earth or in the Heavens except what Joshua and David saw, v. 13, 14; 1 Chro. xxi: 15, 16, that looks like this constellation, would it be thought strange for a Christian to believe that the Prophet Moses had recorded for our instruction the very answer to be given, viz. "to keep the way of the tree of life."

I have now given a general description of this celestial wonder, but some may well doubt whether any thing can be ascertained with respect to objects so far removed. If the most accurate calculations had not already been made in respect to many of the heavenly bodies, how could the tempest-tossed mariner, after being driven for days, and sometimes weeks, sailing on all points of the compass, and perhaps, not have known his position from the time he had taken his departure from his port, only by dead reckoning, (nothing in sight but sea and sky,) ascertain his true position? Just look,—there stands the captain, on some convenient part of the deck of his ship, holding in his hand a three cornered instrument, called a Sextant, measuring the distance between the sun and moon, or if it be in the night, between the moon and some lunar star, (which is millions on millions of miles removed from the Solar System,) noting the moment by his watch when he brings the outer or inner edges of these two celestial objects to touch; then measuring their distances from the horizon. With the help of a Nautical Almanac, (which had been published years before,) in the course of twenty minutes he so confidently ascertains his position, (however strange it may appear to landmen,) that he would, after running ten or one hundred miles more or less, as the case may be, direct one of his crew to go to the next head, and tell him at the same time in what direction to look for land. Presently the cry would come down, thrilling through every soul in the ship, "Land ho!" "Where away?" "Off the starboard bow, sir, where you told me to look." Such instances are not rare, but of daily occurrence. "How could that be?" says our, "it looks like a miracle!" So it would be, if the great God had not directed these celestial objects to move in perfect harmony. A place for every one, and every one in its place.

One at a certain time said, "Canst thou by searching find out God? Canst thou find out the Almighty to perfection?" The wise man answers, "No man can find out the work that God maketh from the beginning to the end." Ecc. iii: 2; Job xi: 7. These texts alone teach us that we yet know but little of the power and wisdom of the Sovereign of the universe, whose spirit fills unlimited space; which space is undoubtedly coeval and coextensive with eternity; studded with millions on millions of worlds, each moving in its appropriate Sphere, like our own Planet. But a still greater wonder is the thousands and millions of blazing Comets, even in the Solar System, (Dick, vol. viii: p. 339,) seemingly sailing with a roving commission, sweeping their burning trails all over the perceptible universe of God, each moving in its proper Orbit; some of them shooting, at times, almost with the velocity of lightning! And yet, with what precision does the Astronomer calculate their appearing again after hundreds and thousands of years, without interfering with any of the celestial scenery. Just turn over to the second page of your Almanac and learn with what admirable accuracy the Astronomer has calculated, even to a moment of time, when the moon of yesterday will be passing under the sun, and cause the darkness to be seen and felt.

Some minds may be troubled about the flaming sword being placed at the East of the Garden, or that we could see the Eastern side. This will be better understood by looking at the motion of our Planet. It is said by Astronomers that this Earth in its annual motion, is booming round the sun at the rate of nineteen miles per second; at the same time has diurnal motion from East to West at the rate of 1000 miles per minute: consequently all the objects we see in the heavens, comes from the East, and among the rest this glorious constellation of Orion, all just as natural as it is for us to see the Sun rise in the East; and in the same direction the world will soon see what the Second Advent believer has long and anxiously been waiting for: viz. the "glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ." Titus ii: 13. Now let us take another view: not through Lord Rosse's, but God's great Telescope, which "declares the end from the beginning." Isa. 46: 10.

BIBLE VIEW.

The patriarch Jacob said to his sons that "God Almighty appeared unto him at Luz, which is Bethel." Gen. 48: 3; 28: 28. Here, while a Pilgrim traveller and stranger, he had laid himself down for the night, he "dreamed, and behold a ladder set up on the earth, and the top of it reached to Heaven; and behold, the angels of God ascending and descending on it." Gen. xxviii: 12. Seventeen hundred and ninety years after this, the Lord says to Nathaniel, "hereafter ye shall see heavens open, and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the son of man." This, then, is in the future. Next in order, Ezekiel has a vision, in the thirtieth "year of the Babylonish captivity by the river Chebar." He says, "the Heavens were opened, and I saw visions of God." He proceeds to describe his vision: please read Chap. i: 6, 10; 24, 24. He sees as the appearance of a man—describes also the stormy cloud with the brightness round about it; he also hears a voice from the firmament, and says that the Lord God spake to him. Now see Chap. x: 4, 5; 10, 20. Here he says "the Cherubims stood at the door of the East gate (where Moses says they were placed) of the Lord's House, and the glory of the God of Israel was over them above." "This is the living creature that I saw under the God of Israel by the river Chebar, and I knew that they were Cherubims." Is it not plain that Ezekiel has shown the same place and station of the Cherubims which Moses has, on the East side, keeping the way of the tree of life. Jacob calls them angels, and cries out in terror, "How dreadful is this place, this is none other but the House of God and this is the gate (or opening) of Heaven." 17 v. Isaiah in a vision sees "the throne high and filled up, and hears the voice of God," as did the others. Let us examine here a few moments to see what Cherubims are, and their use. One writer says, "they appear to be servants of God sent to do his will." Hear God concerning them, "and there will I meet with thee and I will commune with thee from between the two Cherubims which are upon the Ark of the testimony, of all things which I will give thee in commandment unto the children of Israel." Lev. xxi: 10, 22. Psa. cxxviii: 1. "And Hoseaiah (in his distress) prayed before the Lord, and said O Lord God of Israel which dwelleth between the Cherubims," 2 Kings, xix: 15. "And God sent the prophets to tell him that his prayer was heard." v. 20.

"The Lord reigneth let the people tremble; he setteth between the Cherubims, let the earth be moved." Psa. xcix: 1. Then here is where we are to look for the Paradise of God, the Holy City, and where we shall soon hear the voice of God, for he "dwelleth above between the Cherubims," as is represented in the old Tabernacle and Temple. "For soon, saith he, that thou make all things according to the pattern shewed to thee in the mount." Heb. viii: 5; 12: 6. St. John also describes them, and tells what their occupations were in heaven. Rev. v: 11, 12.

Now we will proceed with the testimony concerning the opening heavens. John the Baptist bears record, that when he was coming up out of the water from baptizing the Saviour, he "saw the heavens opened (or cloven or rent) and the spirit like a dove descending upon him, and there came a voice from heaven," &c. Mark i: 10, 11; Luke iii: 20, 22; Matt. iii: 16, 17; John i: 32.

Here is the opening heavens, and the voice of God as before. When Jesus was transfigured on the Mount the Disciples saw the cloud and heard the voice of God.

When the Savior ascended from Mount Olivet, his disciples saw him: the two shining ones said, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? (it must have been open to their view, or they could not have looked into heaven) this same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven shall come again in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts i: 11. "Then of course, it will be from the same place."

Let us not be deceived about this, he has not come yet.

Again, St. Luke says of Stephen, the martyr, (while he was surrounded by a blood-thirsty mob, gnawing on him with their teeth, because of the burning truths which he uttered,) "Being full of the Holy Ghost, looked up steadfastly into heaven, (at a certain point) and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God: and said, behold, I see the heavens opened, and the son of man standing on the right hand of God." Was Stephen mistaken? I think not—it was his dying testimony.

 Here is a more singular case still, two miracles on two individuals of different nations to establish and fulfil Daniel's prophecy of the seventieth week upon his people (the Jews). The time had now come and something out of the ordinary way was to mark this epoch of time. Now look yonder in Caesarea, there is a Gentile in a vision, he sees an angel which directs him to send into Judea for a certain Jew named Peter. Where is he? At a place called Joppa (the sea port of Jerusalem,) lying in a trance, on the top of a house, and made to feel "very hungry, (that he might more readily and willingly follow the teachings of the voice and spirit of God to proclaim salvation to the Gentiles, for he was one of the stolid ones, that held to the present truth; and perhaps could not be prevailed upon to yield in any other way.) Just so with his stolid brethren, who called him to an account for going in to the Gentiles, but after he had rehearsed the whole matter to them, "then they believed and glorified God, for granting repentance to the Gentiles." But what was the miracle? Peter says he "saw heaven opened and a certain vessel descending unto him as it had been a great sheet knit at the four corners, and let down to the earth. This was done thrice (or three times) and the vessel was received up again into heaven," and the voice of the Lord came to him twice, "saying what God has cleansed call not thou common." Acts x. and xi. ch. Here ends the confirming of the Covenant with man for one week. Dan. ix: 27, Heb. ii: 3.

The Apostle Paul in relating his vision says that he was "caught up to the third Heaven into Paradise." 2 Cor. xii: 2, 4. St. John the "beloved disciple," in his solitary confinement on the Isle of Patmos, not only has the same view of the opening Heavens, and hears the same voice, but was called up there in the spirit, and immediately he was there, describing the glories of Heaven. Please read his description of the glorious picture before and around the throne, (from whence the Prophets and Apostles already quoted, have looked through God's all magnifying Telescope, and was burdened with the cry, "This is none other but the House of God and this is the gate of Heaven!" "And lo, the heavens were opened"!!! "I saw Heaven open"!!! At the same time and place God speaks with them). V: 8—here he sees the Lamb. Also vii: 15; viii: 3, 5, and xii: 5. Jesus the Son was caught up there, x: 11, and xxi: 5. Same thing in the iv: 8 v. he has Isaiah's view of the Seraphims and uses nearly the same language in describing them, and says with Isaiah they rest neither day nor night, saying, Holy, Holy, Holy Lord God Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come, 6 v. and in the fifth chapter he says "And I beheld and heard the voices of many angels round about the throne, saying with a loud voice, worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power," &c. &c. Ezekiel's Cherubims and John's Angels are undoubtedly the same. John's four beasts, Isaiah's Seraphims, and Ezekiel's four wheels are typical of the four grand divisions of the Camp of Israel, around the Tabernacle in the wilderness, all marshalled and arrayed by God's direction with their four different standards, (answering to the four faces or sides to Ezekiel's wheel, and the faces of John's four beasts). Jude with the Lion in the front on the East, (Num. ch. ii.) all ready to move at a woman's warning. Even where the "cloudy pillar by day or of fire by night," which rested on the Tabernacle, should direct. The Levites, the ministers of God, all moving in perfect harmony, with the Ark containing the Commandments of God; close after which, in the midst of the camp, in solid column follows the taken down tabernacle. All moving after and watching the direction of this "fiery pillar by night," and the moment it ceased to move the camp halted. The Tabernacle was raised, and the Commandments of God, (the keeping of which will secure an entrance into the Anti-type, the real Heavenly Tabernacle, that is to be "with men," Rev. xxi: 3; xxi: 14.) restored to their proper place heavenly, and under the guardian care of the Cherubim between which his people were directed to pray unto him." Exo. xxv: 22.

John also has described in the above mentioned text, much of the furniture particularized in the old Tabernacle, which Paul says are "patterns of the true." Heb. ix: 23, 24. Conclusive evidence that he was in the "true (or real) Tabernacle which God pitched, and not man." Heb. viii: 2. "The same City which Abraham 'looked for, whose builder and maker is God.'" The Psalmist also agrees with Paul, and says, "The Lord has prepared his throne in the Heavens." Paul says, that Jesus is there. See Heb. viii: 1, 2; and ix: 24. Jesus says, "he that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcome and am set down with my Father in his throne." Rev. iii: 21. Now, is it not evident that God has but one sanctuary, and that his throne is there; and one place for that sanctuary, and that place in the third heavens? Why then, should there be more than one way to approach it, or for it to come from, namely, by "the Cherubim and flaming sword, stationed there, to guard the way?"

The editor of the Day Star asks, "why we stand gazing up into heaven; can you (meaning, I suppose, any one) tell where this same Jesus is coming from?" 2d. "Can you prove God the Father to be in one place, in any great or degree and power, than he is in any and every, and every other place?"

If we have not already offered sufficient evidence, in answer to these two most important questions to the true believer in Christ, we will try a little further; for if we cannot understand, nor in any way comprehend, the teachings of this divine word, in respect to the second coming and kingdom of Jesus Christ, the location of the heavenly Sanctuary, the new Jerusalem, God's dwelling place, other than is figuratively discerned, then, I say, we that truly believe in God, "are of all men the most miserable;" and the sooner we hoist the Shaker's flag, and bring too under the lee of their camp, the better; for I should despair of ever getting my anchor down "within the veil."

In the first place then, we say, Jesus has not yet come the second time, in the manner he promised us. For when speaking of his coming, he says emphatically, "Then shall THEY SEE the Son of man coming in the clouds of Heaven," &c. Now, according to this description, I'll venture the assertion, that there is not a particle of proof in the universe, that one solitary individual has seen him. Hence, I for one, am gazing up into heaven looking, and unswervingly believing, that this, his precious promise, will soon be realized. But you say, he has come in his saints. Well, I say there is no more proof of this, than there was that he was in his apostle's, eighteen hundred years ago—for they certainly wrought many wonderful miracles, and preached with as much power; and the mighty weapons they used, was the death, resurrection and second coming of Christ. Now did the Apostle's ever teach such a doctrine, that Jesus had come in them the second time? and further, I cannot believe that he will be seen any sooner in Ohio, than in New-England or New-York. Again, we answer to the first and second questions, combined—Rev. iv: 2. Here is a throne, with one seated upon it. Is there any proof to be found that this throne was on the Isle of Patmos, Rome, or any other city, or place in this globe? Will it not be conceded by all Bible students, that the Lord God Almighty, the Father, is seated upon it? Does not the Seraphims which are continually crying, Holy, Holy, Holy, in the eighth verse, say so? Who was found worthy to come and take the book out of the right hand of him that sat upon this throne? Did he take it out of his own hand? No, it does not read so. Who, then? John says, it "was the Lamb." Others said, it "was the Lion of the tribe of Judah." We say, "the Son of the Father." Here, then, where the door was opened into heaven, John saw the Father and the Son together, at one time and in one place, transacting business; at the sight of which, ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands and thousands of angels cried aloud, "worthy is the Lamb," &c.; and every creature under heaven acknowledged it! Verse 11, 13. I am aware that it will be said this is symbolical language. Allow me to quote an extract from a celebrated writer. "Even the symbolic parts of a vision have a united character. When real persons, the highest in their kind are mentioned by their proper titles, there is no room for symbols; the objects represent themselves, God and Christ and the good angels; Satan and evil spirits, and redeemed spirits on earth or in heaven, are never symbols. For ake this manner, and symbolic prophecy becomes a chaos, in which nothing is fixed, and who's fancy runs riot in its own exercise."

But you say, God is a spirit. (There is no doubt but what his spirit pervades all space, and every thing in it that has life.) But to the testimony. "Ye have neither heard his voice nor seen his shape." John v: 37. Did Jesus contradict the Patriarchs and Prophets? No, so! He here told his persecutors what they had not seen nor heard; he did not say he had no voice or shape. Who did? Ist. Moses. "And I will cover thee with my hand while I pass by; and I will take away mine hand and thou shalt see my back parts, but my face shall not be seen." Exod. xxxiii: 22, 23. 2d. The "eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and his ears are open unto their cry. The face of the Lord are against them that do evil; the Lord heareth." Psalm xxxiii: 16, 17. Again, the "Ancient of days did sit, whose garment was white as snow, and the hair of his head like the pure wool." Does not this prove a shape, features, and voice, ascribed to God, the same as to man. "And God said let us make man in our own image, after our likeness; so God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him: male and female created he them." Gen. i: 26, 27. Paul says of Jesus, "Who is the image of God, (this can't be spiritually so) the first born of every creature; who being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God." Eph. iii: 6, 8. Now to the Hebrews—"Hath in these last days spoken unto us by his son, who being the brightness of his glory, and the EXPRESS IMAGE of his person." Now turn to the history of Rome for a moment—read how Lactantius describes the Savior to the Roman Senate. Here he describes his stature, countenance, his eyes, beautiful flowing hair, his wisdom, &c., and finally closes with the following: "A man for his singular beauty far exceeding all the sons of men." Paul says, he is the "express image" of God. (I understand him to say that he looks just like him.) Oh, says one, this man is a Unitarian! So then was Paul, or I have not quoted him right. And Daniel, the prophet, teaches the same doctrine. "I saw in the night visions: and behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, (described in the ninth verse) and they brought him near before him; and there was given him dominion and glory, and a kingdom, never to be destroyed." Dan. vii: 13, 14. Now we all admit this personage was Jesus Christ; for no being on earth or in heaven, has ever had the promise of an everlasting kingdom but him. And does not the Ancient of days give it to him? Would it not be absurd to say that he gave it to himself? How then can it be said (or proved) as it is by some, that the Son is the Ancient of days;—this passage, and the one in the fifth Revelation, distinctly prove God and his Son to be two persons in heaven. Jesus says, "I proceeded forth and came from God; neither came I of myself, but he sent me." John viii: 42. "I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world; again, I leave the world and go to the Father." (Does he remain in the same place?) "We are confident I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body, and present with the Lord." Paul.

"The Scriptures testimony accounts for no other spirits but those seen in the shape of men." One of the three which came to Abraham was the Lord. Gen. xvi. The Angel Gabriel was called the "man Gabriel." Dan. ix. The angel which appeared to Gideon was called the Lord. I think here is sufficient proof from the Scriptures to justify the true believer to be still looking for a personal Saviour, and that God the Father is a person, and looks like Jesus and we like him; and God has a habitation where he dwells, as the Scriptures testify: "And I John saw the Holy City new Jerusalem coming down from God out of Heaven."

Another writer in the same paper undertakes to prove that this same City has begun to appear; has been developing itself since the fall of 1844. Who has seen this City? O, he says, it is evident, that it is the saints. Is it possible that the Saints have been coming down from Heaven this eighteen months? Why, there is not the least particle of proof that the righteous dead have yet been caught up? Then, it is 16, 17. I can readily believe that both of these brethren have been fearless advocates for the truth, and I do not doubt their sincerity. They have clearly proved that they are not seeking the applause of the world. I sincerely hope that they will not get so far into the fire on one side of the "highway" as some are in the "slough of despond" on the other. The main business of the Devil is now to make God's people change their course, and it is matter of no moment to him on which side of the "high-way" they fall. In either case he will make sure of his prey. God help us to be on our watch. The great error here has arisen in consequence of taking the symbolical meaning and rejecting the true. The author of the Apocryptic Dictionary, R. C. SHERWELL, says, "Holy City, Jerusalem. Used symbolically of the present visible Church; Literally, that City which comes down from God." Let us examine a few texts: "Go and cry in the ears of Jerusalem," Jer. ii: 2. "And he carried away all Jerusalem," Kings xiv: 14. "The cry of Jerusalem is gone up," Jer. xiv: 2. "Jerusalem has sinned they have seen her nakedness, yea she sigheth," Lam. i: 8. "Jerusalem is a menstruous woman," 17 v. "Awake, awake, stand up O Jerusalem," Isa. li: 17. "Arise and set down O Jerusalem," Isa. 2. "O Jerusalem wash thine heart from wickedness," Jer. iv: 14. "Cut off thine hair O Jerusalem and cast it away," Jer. vi: 8. Here we see that old Jerusalem is personified. The prophets exhort her to "stand up" and "set down," and "awake from sleep," and "wash her heart," and "be instructed," to "cut off her hair and cast it away." She is also called a "menstruous woman," and said to "cry and sigh," and be "carried away." A "tumultuous city," a "joyous city," a "glad city." "Thou art comely, O my love, as Jerusalem," Songs vi: 4. "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest," &c. Now this language never could be understood, unless there was 1st: a Jerusalem, people and government; neither could we understand what is said of the new Jerusalem in many places, without associating organization, as the "Zion of God," "the Zion of the Holy One of Israel," Isa. lx: 14. "Like the kingdom of God among the Pharisees," Luke xvii: 21. The old Jerusalem at her second coming would be the place for the capital of his kingdom; his disciples the subjects; he their king. As also in Daniel viii: 13—concerning the "Host (God's people) and sanctuary." Paul to the Galatians says, "Agar is Mount Sinai in Arabia, and answereth to Jerusalem, which now is, and is in bondage with her children. But Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all." Can this testimony be credited? Did not Abraham look for a city which had foundations? Paul also says of the pilgrims and strangers on the earth, that they "were seeking an heavenly country for God had prepared for them a City," Heb. xi. in the past tense; then it cannot be developing now in the Saints, but they are preparing to enter the City.

When John was describing the City in rev. he said he saw no temple there "for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the Temple of it." Now Peter and Paul distinctly describe the Saints (not the city) coming to the Mount Zion, and Temple, which makes it perfect and complete. Peter says of his "spiritual house," "Ye also as lively stones, [he ye built—margin] up a spiritual house," 1 Pet. ii: 5. To whom coming as unto a living stone. 4 v. For, says sixth verse, behold I lay in Zion a chief corner stone. (Jesus.) Peter says of this Temple, he ye build. Paul says it is growing. Read how admirably he describes it to the Ephesians. "Fellow citizens with the Saints, and of the household of God. And are built upon the foundation of the Apostles and Prophets, (see John's twelve gates representing the twelve tribes in Rev. xxi: 12; and the twelve Apostles of the Lamb representing the twelve foundations of the wall, 14th verse, which enclose the whole,) Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone, in whom all the building fully framed cometh into an holy Temple in the Lord; In whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God. Eph. ii: 19, 22. His Epistle to the Hebrews shows how they are brought together and where. "But ye are come unto Mount Zion, and unto the City of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels; To the general assembly and church of the first born, which are (corroled—margin) in heaven; And to God the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect, and to Jesus the Mediator of the new Covenant." Now has not Paul distinctly described what the Saints shall come to. 5) but, say you, we have already come. No, no, friend, you are too fast. Paul will explain: "Mount Zion the City the heavenly Jerusalem to the innumerable company of Angels (or Cherubims) to the Church of the first born and to God, and to Jesus," xii: 22, 24. Now where? See 25, 26, when he speaketh from heaven. His voice once shook the earth, but now he is about to speak and shake "heaven also, wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, (this is after every thing else is moved,) therefore wait until God shall speak in the language of Jo-ed, and "Roar out of Zion and utter his voice from Jerusalem." Paul shows the Corinthians how it is finished. Hear him: "What agreement hath the temple of God with idol? for ye are the Temple of the living God, as God hath said I will dwell in them, and walk in them, and I will be their God and they shall be my people." Then God and Christ and immortal Saints, constitute the Temple in this glorious City of Zion.

I have been thus particular in quoting the Scriptures, in answer to the questions proposed, to endeavor if possible to dispel some of the thick darkness and mist of Shakerism, Quakerism, Swedenborgianism, and all the Spiritualisms that now seem to be settling down all over the moral world, and shutting out even the very light from the horizon. To my mind this spiritualizing system, when God's word admits of a literal interpretation, and—according to rule—the literal first; is, to use a sailor phrase, like a ship groping her way into Boston Bay in the night, in a thick snow with the moon at full. Nothing could be more deceptive to the mariner; the flying clouds at one moment light up the firmament by the thinness of its vapor, (encouraging the warrior to believe that he shall now see the light house) the next moment it grows darker, and so it continues to deceive them, until of a sudden the breakers are towering all around them—the ship is dashed upon the rocks—one general cry goes aloft for mercy! and all hope is forever gone—ship and rowers strewn all over the beach! Good God! help us to meet clear of these spiritual interpretations of Thy word, where it is made so clear that the second coming and kingdom of Christ will be as literal and real, as the events that transpired at the first Advent, now recorded in history.

When the Saviour comes the second time, it will be with the City, (the Capital of his kingdom) seated upon his throne. Hear him: "When the son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he be seated upon the throne of his glory." Matt. xvi. 31. "And the city had no need of the sun—for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof." "But the throne of God and the Lamb shall be in it." Rev. xvi. 23, and xxi. 3. This glory is none other than the golden City. When "one like the son of man came before the Ancient of days," in Daniel, he received "Dominion, and Glory, and a Kingdom." Glory, signifies worldly splendor, and magnificence. What, I ask, will be more splendid and glorious than this City of Gold poised fifteen hundred miles into the heavens. The Psalmist cries out in view of it, in this sublime language, "Let thy Glory be above all the earth!" and so it will be; and as his dominion is from sea to sea, and from the rivers unto the ends of the earth, so I believe his glory will be seen from the uttermost border. Other views of the glory of God and Christ do not destroy this. Saint John has connected in one, the "Holy City, New Jerusalem, Tabernacle of God, Bride the Lamb's Wife, coming down from God, out of Heaven to dwell with his people." Favour—"And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain." "And he that sit upon the throne said, behold I make all things new, and he said unto me write, for these words are true and faithful." Rev. xxi. 4, 5. Is it not clear that the City, and the King, and Saints, are here distinctly described. Why, then, all this shouting about a figurative fulfillment, while yourselves and the world are groping through the "snow storm."

THE HEAVENLY JERUSALEM.

The old Prophets looking down through the vista of time to the coming of this heavenly city, break forth in language like the following: "And it shall come to pass that he that is left in Zion and he that remaineth in Jerusalem shall be called holy, even every one that is written among the living in Jerusalem." "Then the Moon shall be confounded and the Sun ashamed when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem—(why? because John says they will 'have no need of the sun nor the moon') and before his ancient gloriously." Who are they? Noah, Abraham and the Prophets. Again: "Look upon Zion the City of our solemnities; thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation, a Tabernacle that shall not be taken down; not one of the stakes thereof shall ever be removed." "Break forth into joy, sing together ye waste places of Jerusalem for the Lord hath comforted his people, he hath redeemed Jerusalem." "Give no rest till he establish and till he make Jerusalem a praise in the earth." Do they mean old Jerusalem? The Saviour's prediction is against it, "left desolate," its inhabitants "carried away captive and trodden down by the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." Luke xxi. Further: "But be ye glad and rejoice forever in that which I create, behold I create Jerusalem a rejoicing and her people a joy, and I will rejoice in Jerusalem and joy in my people, and the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying." Isa. lv: 3; xlii: 23; xxxiii: 20; li: 9; lxxv: 7; lxxv: 18, 19. Also read xl: 1; li: 1; li: 14, and lxxv: 10. "At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord, and all the nations shall be gathered into it—neither shall they walk any more after the imagination of their evil heart." "In those days shall Juda be saved and Jerusalem shall dwell safely and this is the name wherewith she shall be called, Thus Loam our gloriousness. For thus saith the Lord, David shall never want a man to sit upon the throne of the house of Israel." Jer. li: 17; xxxiii: 16, 17. "The Lord also shall roar out of Zion and utter his voice from Jerusalem, then shall Jerusalem be holy, and there shall be no stranger pass through her any more." Joel iii: 16, 17.

Here then, in every instance save one or two, the people of God are connected with the "Zion of God," "City of God," "Jerusalem which is to be in the last days." The Paulist says, "Glorious things are spoken of thee, O City of God." lxxvii: 29. John's record is, "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the Temple of my God, and he shall go no more out, and I will write upon him the name of my God and the name of the City of my God, (what union, and yet, how distinct!) which is now Jeru-

* See the man-of-war's man with his glazed hat on and the name of his ship in large gilt letters in front. This very forcibly reminds me of an incident which occurred in the Mediterranean some thirty-six years ago. When making our escape from one of those English prison houses of the bottomless pit, we were met by the admiral and some of the officers of the squadron, who asked us who we were? We answered, that we belonged to an American brig lying in the harbor. Ah, says he, and how came you with that hat on, (marked ship ROSS.) We answered by turning a short corner and escaping for our lives. Our comrade had absolutely forgotten that he had this hat on. I merely introduce this to help out the figure, and show how we understand literal things, until God speaks; then, it seems, salem which cometh down out of heaven from my God, and I will write upon him my new name." How could the Saviour have been more explicit and plain. "Him that overcometh." Who? Why, the Saint; not the City, the new Jerusalem. Again: "Blessed are they that do his commandments that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." If the city is the Saints, what is this that enters into and have right to the tree of life? Can the City go into the City? If so, then we acknowledge the City is the Saints. But it reads, the Saints go, is there.

In Rev. xxi: 16, the City is said to be four square, twelve thousand furlongs; the length, and the breadth, and the height of it are equal. Then, according to arithmetical computation, it is fifteen hundred miles square. Now, if the City spiritually means the Saints of God, then, to carry out the figure, the Saints must stand over, or upon each other (according to the common stature) one million and four hundred thousand deep; or will it be asserted that they are fifteen hundred miles tall?

SANCTUARY.

Well, says one, are you going to call this City the Sanctuary too? If you will allow the Bible testimony you will have to believe it is, or search more diligently for it in this planet than any one else ever has that I have heard of. But it has been proved by most able men, and learned men, that it is the Earth, or the Land of Canaan. Well, let us look at it again. But allow me first to recommend to your particular notice, O. R. L. Gronier's article in the Day Star Extra, for the 7th of February, 1846, from the 37th to the 44th page. Read it again. In my humble opinion it is superior to any thing of the kind extant.

"Sanctuary was the first name the Lord gave the Tabernacle, which name covers not only the Tabernacle with we cannot understand him unless we spiritualize his meaning. Now this will never be the case with immortal Saints, for they will never flee from this glorious City, for it is named "a place of refuge and a covert from the storm, and from the rain." It will ever be their delight when their Captain shall recognize his own new name in their foreheads.

a minister of the sanctuary and of the true Tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man." Heb. viii: 1, 2. "For the invisible things of Him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made." Rom. 1: 20. Paul tells the Hebrews how they may understand these invisible things, which he says are clearly seen. See viii. c., 4 v. "Shadow of heavenly things." For see, (saith he) that thou make all things according to the pattern shewed to thee in the mount." Now then, whenever we want to understand about the heavenly sanctuary, we must turn to Moses's description of the sanctuary in the wilderness, which he made after the pattern God gave him; which Paul says were shadows of heavenly things. How will a man dare (in the face of all this inspired testimony) to stand here on God's earth, and assert that the heavenly sanctuary with all that pertains to it is a riddle, and spiritualize it away. It would be ten thousand times easier for him to spiritualize the old Tabernacle and Solomon's Temple, seeing the one that is to come as far exceeds the temple of Solomon or Nebuchadnezzar (although, it is allowed, that nothing on earth ever exceeded them) as the most splendid palace of the king does the sentry box of his guard. Much safer would it be for him to teach that the rocks had never been rent, or as he passed the streets in the afternoon and saw the shadow of the buildings, should insist upon it that the shadows were real, but the buildings, which cast the shadows, were spiritual. Such doctrine should be ranked with Mahometanism and Jesuitism, save their demonic spirit; it comes from the "bottomless pit and will go into perdition; and they that dwell on the earth will wonder." Rev. xvii: 8. But I wish to present further evidence of the real (not spiritual) coming of this heavenly sanctuary. Ezekiel says in his 37th chapter, where God has promised his spirit and life to the whole house of Israel, "Moreover, I will make a covenant of peace with them; it shall be an everlasting covenant with them, and I will place them and multiply them, and will set my sanctuary in the midst of them forevermore; my tabernacle also shall be with them: yea, I will be their God, and they shall be my people. And the heathen shall know that I the Lord do sanctify Israel, when my sanctuary shall be in the midst of them forevermore." 36-38 v. Now here is God's sacred promise that his sanctuary shall be in the midst of his people; and I have already quoted his 48th chap. 10 v. where he says when the angel had "measured the land twenty-five thousand reeds in length and ten thousand in breadth," said, "and the sanctuary of the Lord shall be in the midst thereof." Now will it be insisted upon that the land, or his people, is the sanctuary; rather let us submit to the Scripture testimony. On the last night of our Saviour's ministry here on earth, in company with his disciples, when everything else had failed to arouse them, he to quicken their sleeping spirits says, "Let not your hearts be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you; and if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also." John xiv: 1, 3. I think I have now proved by unquestionable authority, that this heavenly sanctuary in the very place with mansions which he has been preparing, and according to his promise is now coming to receive his saints. But may there not after all be a failure here. "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my word shall not pass away." Having such testimony as this, we rejoice in "hope of the glory that is to be revealed."

"Unto two thousand three hundred days then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." Dan. viii: 14.

"This, then, I understand, is the self-same 'heavenly Sanctuary, the New Jerusalem, the Paradise of God.'" Well, says the reader, this cannot be; how can Paradise, which Paul said was in the "third heavens," and where you say Jesus our High Priest is, be defiled? Where was the first sin that ever cursed this world committed? O, say you, that was six thousand years ago. Admit that it was, has God ever pardoned that sin? Turn to Gen. iii: 17, 19. The ground is still cursed, and man gets his living by the sweat of his brow. Why? Because the extent of this first sin could never be known, until God had put the last seal upon his saints, "and the dead be judged." But say you, the curse was upon the earth and its inhabitants. Yea; but was not Paradise polluted by this sin? But how can it be that anything in heaven is polluted, or unclean? Have I not proved by the astronomer's conclusive arguments, that this earthly ball which we inhabit is continually flying through the regions of unlimited space, in the same direction with all other planets, seen or known in the solar system? Think you that this little speck of earth is the the two apartments, but also the court with all its hangings, and all the vessels of the ministry." Exo. xiv: 8, 9, and 33, 34; Num. i: 53. This, then, was a dwelling place, and a true pattern of the heavenly, embracing within its "jasper" walls "the Paradise of God," with the "pure river of the water of life," and the "tree of life," and the "Golden City in the midst," all to come down from heaven and be located in old Jerusalem. Zs. 14th chapter. That's too absurd to believe, says you. Is it any more so, then to believe the Apostle John's testimony? Does he not show us that the tree of life is inside of the gates, in xxi: 14. Read also the two first verses. Do not the waters issue out from the throne? and is not the tree of life on either side of it? and is not the promise—to him that overcometh I will give to eat of the tree of life which is in the midst of the Paradise of God? Well, continues the objector, I don't know but that I could have believed your Scripture testimony concerning the city, but I can't believe that God has such a place in the third heavens, and that it will descend to this earth with a river of water in, or on it. How can you believe then, what you are experiencing every day of your life, on the planet in which we live? While she is flying in her orbit around the Sun at the rate of fifty-eight thousand miles per hour, she is at the same time whirling over like a ball from East to West, at the rate of six hundred miles per hour, in her diurnal or daily motion, bottom upwards, as it would appear, every twenty-four hours, and yet, by an unseen power, (readily accounted for by Astronomers,) not only the rivers and the lakes, but the mighty ocean, remains unmoved.

As we have before quoted, Moses says that a river went out of Eden to water the Garden, and became into four heads. Gen. ii: 10, 14. Now let us turn to Ezekiel's prophecy for a corresponding view, as "in the mouth of two or three witnesses, shall every word be established." In chapter 43, 1st and 7th verses, he testifies that this accords with the vision he had by the river Chebar twenty years before, (previously quoted.) Here he sees the Glory of God on the east side of the Sanctuary, (where Moses said the flaming sword and Cherubim were,) and his "voice like the noise of many waters saying to him that the house of Israel shall no more defile God's name." Afterwards, in 47th chapter, 1st and 5th verse: "He brought me again unto the door of the house, and behold waters issued out from under the threshold of the house eastward—(observe how particular to mention the "east side")—for the fore front of the house stood towards the east, and the waters came down from under, from the right side of the house." His guide then measured the waters one thousand cubits (more than one-fourth of a mile) "the waters were to the ankles," but when he had measured four thousand cubits, they had become waters to swim in, that could not be passed over." In 12th verse he describes the tree of life yielding its monthly fruit, for meat, and its unfolding leaves for medicine." Why all this? "Because the waters issued out of the Sanctuary." Now read again in Rev. xxi: 1, 2; does not John tell the same story: the waters issuing from out the throne, the tree of life, the monthly fruit, the leaves for healing, the nations. Is not this after the city comes down? In 48th chapter, 8th verse: "And the sanctuary shall be in the midst of it." Once more the measuring rod is run over it, showing the four sides just like the old pattern in the wilderness, and then says the Sanctuary shall be in the midst thereof. From 30th to 35th verse, he describes the wall and the gates as John does in Rev. xxi: 13, and closes up his prophecy in these words, "And the name of the city from that day shall be, the Lord is there." Now let the old prophet Isaiah testify to what he saw: "Look upon Zion the City of our solemnities, thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation, a Tabernacle that shall not be taken down; not one of the stakes thereof shall ever be removed, neither shall any of the cords thereof be broken. But there the glorious Lord will be unto us a place of broad rivers and streams, wherein shall go no galley with oars, neither shall gallieships pass thereby." xxxiii: 20, 21.

The Psalmist says, "there is a river, the streams whereof make glad the city of God, the holy place of the tabernacle of the Most High. God is in the midst of her"—40: 4, 6. Jeremiah says, "A glorious high throne from the beginning is the place of our sanctuary." xli: 12. The Psalmist repeats, "For he hath looked down from the height of his sanctuary; from heaven did the Lord behold the earth." cii: 19. (If he had said sanctuary instead of earth, we should not have been easily moved from our former exposition.) "The Lord is in his holy temple, the Lord's throne is in heaven." xi: 4. Paul says to the Hebrews, "We have such an high priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the majesty, in the heavens; only thing that is defiled, among the millions and myriads of worlds which send the diadem of space? We are told that the "stars are not pure in his sight." "Yea, the heavens are not clean in his sight." Job xv: 15; xiv: 6. Was not the sanctuary on earth which the high priest cleansed the tenth day of the seventh month every year, a pattern of the true? Does not Paul tell us that Jesus our high priest has entered into the true sanctuary, "into heaven itself." See Heb. ix: 12, 24; and viii: 1, 2. Then is not our high priest in the proper place to "cleanse the sanctuary?" I cannot for the life of the sea, how the pattern or type can be made to appear in any other way. How then can the earth (as one in the voice of truth, and many other writers say) be the sanctuary: while spiritualizers are saying it is the saints. O Lord give us the truth!

The strongest proof ever been adduced to prove that the earth or Canaan was the sanctuary, is found in Exodus xv: 17. Now what place is this which the Lord has made to dwell in? The answer is, "in the sanctuary O Lord, which thy hands have established." Paul says this sanctuary is in the heavens which the Lord pitched and not man. Heb. viii: 1, 2. The only other passage for proof of the land is Psalm lxxviii: 54, both of which go to strengthen the testimony before adduced. "And he brought them to the border of his sanctuary, even to this mountain which his right hand had purchased." Does he in either text say that the mountain is the sanctuary? If I can understand him, he says that the mountain is the border of his sanctuary; just as Ezekiel has shown where his guide measured the land, and then said that the sanctuary of the Lord should be in the midst of it. Now the word sanctuary is mentioned more than seventy times in the Bible, and the whole of them, with but a few exceptions, represent it a dwelling place, a building. The Psalmist says, that the "Lord looked down from his sanctuary from heaven to the earth." Not to his sanctuary. But let us see what Daniel and the angel Gabriel called a sanctuary. Dan. viii: 10-12. Is it not plain here that Popery took away the daily (i. e. destroyed Paganism) by arms or armies that stood on his (Popery's) part, or side)—xi: 31. The taking away his sanctuary or polluting it is the same; for it would be absurd to say that the land was taken away, (11 v.) or that by this transaction the land was now polluted—xi: 31.

Now read ix: 17, 19. Is not Daniel praying for the restoration of old Jerusalem, the city and sanctuary (the temple where God's people worshipped) which had been desolated, burnt up, by the king of Babylon's army, about seventy years before? (see Jer. li: 12, 14) and remained a burnt district until the commandment by Cyrus to Ezra, and afterwards to Nehemiah, to build the temple and city. Now in answer to this prayer, God immediately despatched the angel Gabriel from the court of heaven, to give Daniel "skill and understanding"—22d v. In the 20th verse he informs him that Messiah shall be cut off, (crucify the Saviour) and the people of the prince that shall come, shall destroy the city and the sanctuary. How was this accomplished? Josephus who was an eye witness and historian, informs us that Titus the son of Vespasian, the Emperor of Rome, about A. D. 70, (five hundred and sixty years after the temple and city had been rebuilt by Nehemiah) came with his mighty Roman army and took Jerusalem, and burned up the city and temple (the sanctuary) and it was soon after "ploughed as a field." (Micah iii: 12) "and not one stone left upon another." This, then, was the very circumstance, Prince, and people, alluded to by the angel Gabriel. I believe no one under-takes to dispute this point.

Now we learn from this, that the angel Gabriel's instructions from heaven in answer to Daniel's prayer was, that it was the Temple in the city of old Jerusalem, which is the pattern or figure, or as Paul says "answereth to the new, which is above, which is the mother of us all." Can anything be more plain and explicit than that this is the sanctuary to be cleansed, "unto two thousand three hundred days."

In the 11th verse he says, "the daily was taken away, (that is, Paganism) and the place of his sanctuary cast down." How plain it is that this wicked sanctuary (where idols and devils were worshipped) was a building, cast down. How could they cast down the earth to the earth? (12th v.) and it (this same Popery) cast down the truth to the ground, so the ground was not destroyed; clear proof it was not the sanctuary. Well, but we don't believe that God will ever cleanse the wicked sanctuary of Paganism.

The sanctuary must be cleansed, (made holy) so must the saints; for St. John says, "nothing unclean or unholy shall enter there." Then before the saints can enter the sanctuary it will be cleansed, not by fire, but by blood, (please follow the pattern.) Now will it still be said that the earth is the sanctuary? Can any proof be adduced that the earth is to be burned even, until after immortality is given to the saints? Just look at Zech. xiv. chapter; here he shows us that the wicked shall be punished after "Jerusalem (the sanctuary) shall be safely inhabited," (11th and 12th verses and onward;) and before this, in the 8th to 11th verse, he has shown us that the land shall be turned into a plain; the 8th and 9th verses show who does it, and how it is accomplished; and then of the sanctuary, Jerusalem, as though it was understood that this was done for the express purpose of making a foundation for the building. Here I think any one may see, that the border of this heavenly sanctuary will extend to the "mountain of his inheritance," (Esa. xv: 17; Pal. lxxviii: 64) and this plain for the location and walls of the sanctuary will be made clean and pure. This is all the cleansing the earth will receive, until after "the great battle of God Almighty." So then, if the earth is the sanctuary, God's people need have no trouble here about its being cleansed, for they will have that work to do in immortality; but we believe that work is now being accomplished. Again, "how long shall the sanctuary and the host be trodden under foot." Jesus said that old "Jerusalem should be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles should be fulfilled." But how ridiculous to believe that the heavenly sanctuary is "trodden under foot." Is it any more so than to believe what St. Paul tells us, concerning the High Priest of these "heavenly places" in the heavens. See Heb. x: 29. "Of how much sorer punishment suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing." So we can see according to Paul's exposition, if they have trodden the master under foot, how much more the building and the household, ("the sanctuary and host.") In the preceding verses it is explained; just read 10th, 11th and 12th verses; the papal power of Rome, the abomination which maketh desolate, casting down some of the host and stars to the ground and stamping upon them; also casting down the sanctuary and the truth to the ground, by satanic influences—this is treading down, connected with which is all other ungodly satanic influences operating against it, which is to be purged out; even as the high priest here on earth cleansed the pattern once a year, which was never literally trodden down by any one but himself while in the act of cleansing it.

The angel did not answer the question concerning the host in the 13th verse, but Gabriel at his second visit showed Daniel that seventy weeks were determined upon his people, leaving 1810 years more to be explained at his third and last visit to him. See x: 14; "Now I am come (for what?) to make thee understand what shall befall thy people in the latter days." Please read on to the end of the twelfth chapter and see how faithfully he has described the host (the holy people) and one clothed in linen, (the Lord Jesus; see x: 21,) from above the waters of the river with his hands upraised to heaven, swearing by him that liveth forever that all these wonders, (including the resurrection in 2d verse) shall be finished when he, (meaning the anti-christian powers which are led on and urged forward by the "prince of the power of the air,") shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, by the process of purifying, being made white, and tried, and if they pass through and withstand all this fiery ordeal and come to the 1335 days, they shall be blessed, and then be delivered out of such a time of trouble as never was since there was a nation. Thus, I think, the angel has described the treading down the host, and it appears to me that all this severe discipline is to prepare them to enter the holy city, for an angel trying with a mighty voice has shown them that they have been in company with devils, foul spirits, and every unclean and hateful bird; and another voice says, come out of her my people, for all nations have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication. Rev. xviii: 2, 4. And the poison has operated to such an alarming extent that it has baffled the skill of all the Doctors of Divinity in the universe, and in spite of all their preaching, fasting and praying, with the assistance of the principals of the flock, the famous prophecy of by Amos the Prophet, has come upon them. How awfully he describes it: "Wandering from sea to sea, and from the north to the east, running to and fro to seek the word of the Lord and shall not find it." God never called his people out from any other place than the churches; if the whole truth, the message in due season had been given and received there, and Babylon's poisonous cup rejected, then there would have been as severity in the discipline of its members. The handling of God's word deceitfully, (for it would not be admitted to any of learned men, guardedly) has had the profound world into this labyrinth; and men are now being ridiculed and laughed at (not only because they believe and are looking for the Lord himself to descend from heaven) because they are now sending forth their epistles to (as they think) enlighten their brethren and friends concerning the coming of Christ in the "clouds of heaven," by subscribing themselves "yours, no longer going up into heaven," "yours, in the clouds of heaven—meeting the Lord in the air," while another one in the Shaker's camp in N. H., is shouting and rejoicing that he has found the Mount Zion, (meaning, of course, the holy city) and that the Germans from Europe are gathering to it; while another, from another quarter, (as I understand standing on the "bread platform") has attempted to prove that the powers of the heavens have been shaken, and the sign of the Son of man in heaven has been seen; and another one saying that "God is as much in one place as another," while another is shouting Hallelujah, because he believes it to be so clear that the "saints are the holy city," and yet another subscribes himself "yours, in the kingdom." O, says one, how alarming these things are! they look just like the "perilous times." St. Paul described in Timothy for the "last days." 2 Tim. iii: 4, 5. Jesus also, in Matt. xxiv: 24. I wish the good ministers would teach them sound doctrine; the great trouble would be to ascertain in what denomination to find them, for I have lying before me the creed of a professed Orthodox church of 1844, (right opinion, true belief) of this enlightened place, signed by (as two ministers and one hundred and forty-seven members, (one of them a minister in New Bedford with a similar look) who say in their fifth article, "I believe that Christ came to establish the kingdom of heaven on earth, which is the visible church." Now all the proof they offer from the Scriptures is what follows: "And I say unto thee that thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." "And he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Matt. xvi: 18; Luke i: 33. Now if there is one particle of proof from these two passages, that Christ has established his kingdom here, and that kingdom in this church, then I confess I do not understand English. In the second article the only proof adduced for "and Almighty Saviour" is Hebrews xvi: 26. Their doors are wide open for members, but they must assent to this creed. Why continue to pray "our sinners come!" I wish to be distinctly understood, that I do not mean anything vindictive. I am only stating the truth in behalf of "God's word;" for I believe that of the nominal churches in this place, (and they all profess to be right) are holding the same or similar scriptural errors that has led the world around their altars, for I believe they are more ignorant than in other places, for I believe for general intelligence they will compare with any place of its numbers on the habitable globe. The ministers too, with one exception, I believe, are all college bred. And this creed, be it remembered, is the most sinister and wicked of any in the place, for I believe it is the fashion now when the church is rammed to re-mould the creed also, no matter how antiquated it was before, there are various ways to understand the scriptures, but when once the creed is published, all the members, old and young, must assent to the truth of it as their standard, and some one, more skilled in this business, proposes an alteration. What a business on the never changing truth of the great eternal! Why follow in the footsteps of Popery to trammel the mind? Why not as well require a rule to get money? Then if we are denature of the true light from the word of God in this enlightened place, where in the name of the Lord, in any other village or city, can it be found? God has said that "light is sown for the righteous," and "unto the upright there shineth light in the darkness." Pshaw. But I must pass on—I have dwelt much longer on this lamentable picture than I intended, and yet I have hardly begun.

I wish here to ask a few questions on one of the greatest errors that the world ever embraced, first established by Pope Gregory, A. D. 603. I mean the changing of God's seventh day, Sabbath, (for it is sheer sophistry to call it the Jews Sabbath, as Jesus our divine Lord says "it was made for man," in the first day of the week.

Paul says, "there is therefore remission of a keeping of the Sabbath to the people of God." Jewish shows us that in the New Heavens and Earth all flesh shall keep the "Sabbath." Does any bible reader believe that this will be on any other day than what God has ordained. Let us look at the patterns and shadows of the true. Heb. viii. 6; ix. and x. 1. Is not the true in the eternal state? Think you that God will ever change the true to answer the pattern of Popery, that has been foremost in desolating the world? Every candid mind says no! What should we do then? God will tell us. "Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work, but the seventh is the sabbath of the Lord thy God; (perhaps the minister will tell you he meant the Jewish Sabbath—don't you believe him nor any one else; they can't prove it by the Bible) in it thou shalt not do any work;" "wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it." Exod. xx. Why all this comely array in "building the Tabernacle and afterwards the Temple?" Answer, it was to put the Ark in. 2 Sam. 2.—7. Hear David 1 Chron. xvii: 2, 12. What was the Ark? A small chest in which was a precious relic; the commandments of God; his testimony to man; (see Exod. xxv: 10, 12) how it is guarded night and day by Cherubims. What are these commandments to us? They that keep them shall "enter in through the gates into the city." Rev. xxi: 14. Will you say then that the fourth commandment is abolished? If so, please cite us to the chapter and verse. I say it cannot be found within the lids of the bible. Will you reply by saying that the first day is the Sabbath, or that it was ever kept by Jesus or his apostles as a day set apart for religious worship; if so, where is the text? I challenge the world to produce it! If it cannot be found, why violate still this sacred command of God and reject all the light that is thrown in your pathway? God will have some to keep his commandments, if it be but "one of a city and two of a family." Jer. Some endeavor to clear their conscience by saying there is no Sabbath to be kept. This, to me, looks like infidelity.

I have stated that one writer had asserted that the powers of Heaven had been shaken and the sign of the Son of man been seen. His argument on the twenty-fourth of Matthew, I like much, until he begins to prove what none of us have yet seen or heard. If so, why continue to say that "men's hearts fail them for fear and for looking after the things that are coming on the earth." Jesus does not say that they will be looking for him, but then they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, when they have seen the preceding signs. What arguments are there yet to be presented that will so alarm the Laodicean church, and scoffer, to fulfil. Isa. lx: 14, and Rev. iii: 9. It appears to me that nothing short of the voice of God will do this. Then, I think, the wise will understand, and get their blessing, as in Dan. xii: 12; then will they return and discern between the righteous and the wicked; then will they be found with the world, in the time of Daniel's trouble; they will then have passed through the "fiery trial" and the Sealing Angel have done his last work. This, as it looks to me will be the time when God will roar out of Zion and utter his voice from Jerusalem—and the heavens and the earth will shake; thou shalt Jerusalem be holy. Joel iii: 16, 17. It will then be cleansed from every impurity. This, I think, will be the shaking of the powers of heaven, for then will God's people know that he dwells in Zion, (17th verse) not in the Shaker's camp, but in his Heavenly Sanctuary, and then shall appear the "Sign of the Son of Man in Heaven," the "Holy Jerusalem descending out of Heaven from God, having the glory of God; And her light was like unto a stone most precious, even like a jasper stone clear as crystal." I have not the least particle of doubt but that it will be seen just as he has described it. The glory and effulgence of that night will so light up the heavens in its majestic course down from the parted skies, that we shall have no further need of the telescope; but in the language of our adorable coming Lord, exclaim "I see heaven open and the Angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of Man!" This, I think, will be the Sign of the Son of Man in Heaven. A telescopic view of the burning bright star Sirius, on the southeast of the belt of Orion, in the southwestern heavens, early in the evening, will give a faint view of the above description.

St. John saw this City suspended in the air, he therefore had a clear view of its twelve foundations and the names of the twelve Apostles of the Lamb, and the twelve gates, and the names written thereon, which are the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel. "And he measured the wall a hundred and forty and four cubits," two hundred and sixty-two and a half feet, and they were studded with all kinds of precious stones, and diamonds from the bowels of the earth, while the gates are adorned with the treasures of the ocean. Now this beautiful description of the City is given in the twenty-first chapter, from 16 to 18 and 21st verses. We must keep it distinct from the walls. He says, it hath four square, and measures twelve thousand furlongs. This sum, divided by eight furlongs, which make a mile, would stand thus: 1500—fifteen hundred miles square or seven millions nine hundred and twenty thousand feet on six sides (it being a cubical form.) When we look at the size of this City of Gold, we are at once almost overwhelmed with the view of its dimensions. Fifteen hundred miles high, long and wide! In the seventeenth verse, he gives but one way to measure the wall, and that is its height. If he had undertaken to have given the contents of the City by the same rule, he would have measured the wall.

Then we have nothing more to do in making an arithmetical calculation, but follow the Apostle's description. Jesus said, in my Father's house are many mansions. Now, allowing twelve feet between joints for a story, this seven millions nine hundred and twenty thousand feet square would give six hundred and sixty thousand stories; twelve feet high, (Ezekiel 41: 7.) and fifteen hundred miles square, four hundred and forty stories to a mile: which would amount to 900,000,000, nine hundred and ninety millions of square miles on a level surface, twelve feet high—equal to the square miles contained in five worlds like this, (which is only one hundred and ninety-nine millions five hundred and twelve thousand square miles,) and seventy times more extensive than the Continent of America. Now six hundred and sixty thousand twelve feet rooms in each story, would make in all 436,600,000,000—four hundred and thirty-six thousand and six hundred millions of twelve feet square "rooms,"—Ezekiel; "places,"—John; or "mansions,"—Jesus. It is computed that there are 900,000,000—nine hundred millions of inhabitants now on the Earth. The Bible informs us that there was but one, six thousand years ago. Admit that there was nine hundred millions at the commencement of creation, and this number had passed away every thirty years for two hundred generations, their whole number would only amount to 180,000,000,000—one hundred and eighty thousand millions, a little more than one-third of the mansions in this building; four hundred and eighty-four to every human being now on the earth. Surely, this looks like an "abundant entrance" into the everlasting kingdom. O yes, say many, I see there is abundance of room for every body: The apostle tells us who they are. He says, "There shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh promiscuity or maketh a lie; but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life." This then is the capacious and glorious "Golden City," the "New Jerusalem," the "heavenly Sanctuary," the "Bride the Lamb's Wife," the "Mother of us all," the "Paradise of God," the capital of our coming Lord's everlasting kingdom, which is now about to descend from the "third heaven" by the way of the open door, down by the "flaming sword" of Orion. O let us see to it, that we are all ready to enter into this celestial City.

him: "Behold a whirlwind of the Lord is gone forth in fury. In the latter days ye shall consider it perfectly." "I have not sent these prophets, yet they ran. I have not spoken to them, yet they prophesied. But if they had stood in my council and had caused my people to hear my words, then they should have turned them from the evil of their doings;" xliii: 19-22. In opening my Bible for a passage of scripture to apply here—this was the first reading that caught my eye. As it is given for the last days, it must mean a certain class of teachers which had been in the service of God proclaiming that which he had not authorized them to. I don't know how it will apply except to such as are repeating the messages of 1843 and '44, since the sounding of this seventh trumpet and third wo, as it is said when he begins to sound the mystery of God should be finished. This way mark with high heaps is distinctly in the pathway. This leads us to the next.

EIGHTH WAY MARK.—BRIDEGROOM COME.— MARRIAGE OF THE LAMB,—AND DOOR SHUT.

"And while they went to buy, the Bridegroom came, and they that were ready, went in with him to the Marriage, and the door was shut." Matt. xxi: 10.

Now just so sure as we have had a Cry at Midnight, just so sure in the sense of the parable the Bridegroom has come! That we have had just such a one as our Lord described in the parable of the ten virgins, in its details, is clear from our past history, and has been affirmed too by almost every advent believer in this country; and at a time too when they acknowledged that they had the spirit and power of God as they have not felt it since. Now if this testimony is to be set at naught and overthrown just to suit the interest of men, when shall we ever know that the church can speak the truth; or that we are in the pathway to the kingdom?

Second. This cry is not now being given, neither has it been since Oct. 1844. Neither does any one undertake to show when, nor where, it will or can be given in the future, except a few individuals who say it will be given when Jesus comes, and these can neither show scripture time or order for it. We say therefore that it is clear it was fulfilled as shown in the fifth way mark, in the fall of 1844, when the Bridegroom came. Children of the bride chamber in the church sit apart in their proper place, ready when he came. Matt. xxv: 10; ix: 15. Bridegroom is only another name for Christ, and designates him under this title when brought into connection with his people, or the New Jerusalem—the Mother, and will be completed when the children get home. At his first advent he was Bridegroom to his people; so such he left them, (see the above quotation) went away with this title, that he retains it or assumes it again in connection with his marriage or everlasting union with the New Jerusalem, which is to take place before his second coming is clear from Rev. xxi: 2, 9, 10. But when he comes to receive his people that he was bridegroom to, he comes under quite a different title, viz. a king: xiv: 34. Then it is also clear that he does not come to this earth again under the title of bridegroom. Then the transaction as in the parable, 10th v., is as David and Daniel have represented. "Ask of me, and I will give the heathen thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth thy possession;" Ps. ii: 8. "I saw in the night visions, and behold one like the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the ancient of days, and they brought him near before him." Now this must be Jesus come in his cloudy chariot before the great God, who is represented in the height of his sanctuary in heaven beholding the earth; Ps. Solomon represents him in the heaven of heavens. Here, then, Jesus is brought before him. "And there was given him dominion and glory and a kingdom." Three things—1st, "Dominion," denoting unlimited authority and government; "from sea to sea, and from the rivers to the end of the earth." 2d, "Glory," denoting splendor and magnificence. This, I understand, is the splendid golden city, the New Jerusalem, the capital of all his dominions; Matt. xxv: 31. 3d, Kingdom. John says it is the "kingdoms of this world; Rev. xi: 15. Now the glory that he received is the only one of the three which is in heaven. The other two, viz. "dominion" and a "kingdom," are here where the children or church are sojourning. Then when he comes as king he brings that "glory" the "mother" of the children with him, and when it is located here, and the children with the "mother," the vision of Daniel will be realized in full. The saints of the Most High possessing the kingdom and dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven." Having become perfectly and forever united with the city that has come down from heaven. This is what we have called Paradise lost, but now restored forever. In Matt. xvi: 31, Jesus has taught us that when he shall come to judge the world as king, (34th v.) he will "set upon the throne of his glory;" then he takes possession of his kingdom and dominion under the whole heavens.

Now when Daniel receives the interpretation of this night vision (see 16th v.) the angel gives him the chronological order, by stating that "the saints of the Most High SHALL (in the future) take the kingdom and possess it," 18th v. "And the time comes that the saints possessed the kingdom," 22d v. When did the time come? Certainly after the Son of Man had received his dominion and glory, and a kingdom in the heavens: and when he comes as king to judgment, he brings that glory with him, and sits upon it. (See Matt. xvi: 31, 34; compare with this Titus ii: 13.) "Blessed hope and glorious appearing." Then is it not plain that his union with his glory, the New Jerusalem which is called the Bride, constitutes him the Bridegroom there for that special purpose only, and all this to be done before he can have his Bride, the "glory" that Daniel saw him receive to bring with him, when he comes as king (having changed his name) to possess his kingdom. It certainly will not be disputed that this marriage or union of the Lamb is an event to transpire in time, some where at the close of the prophetic periods, and in order that every event may have its proper fulfilment before he can come as king. For this is the title he claims at his second appearing, and no where is it shown that he will ever be personally seen here under the title of "Bridegroom." We say therefore that his coming in the sense of the parable, is as Daniel describes it. He received, or as we best understand it, was inaugurated as king into his throne, the Holy City, which is the capital of his kingdom, that he will bring with him and establish here, and it will ever be the capital of all his dominions under the whole heaven. Here follow the scriptural names "New Jerusalem," "Holy City," "Tabernacle of God," "City of my God," "Zion of God," "True Tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not men," "a building of God," "a house not made with hands, eternal and in the heavens," "Garden of Eden," "Paradise of God," "the Mother of us all." These all have one meaning, which is the Bride, the Lamb's Wife. She cannot be fully adorned until all the children of the Mother are at home in the capital, with the king.

Now comes again "the law of Moses." Types.—Now understand me; I want you to see what I have partly stated in the fifth way mark. "THREE times in a year shall all thy males appear before the Lord thy G d." First is the feast of unleavened bread, i. e. the Passover. (2d.) Feast of weeks. (3d.) Feast of Tabernacles, in Deut. xvi: 1-16. The reasons are given. The details and explanation are principally in the xxiii. chap. of Lev.

Let us start now understandingly. These three feasts are typical of three of the most important events to transpire in this world from the first to the second advent.

(1st.) Was the crucifixion of our Lord at the Passover feast?

(2d.) Fifty days after, or the 7th week feast, the day of Pentecost, A. D. 31.

Now as these two feasts have been perfectly fulfilled, we have nothing further to do with them here.

(3d.) Feast of Tabernacles on the 15th of the 7th month. This undoubtedly represents the gathering of all Israel at the ingathering of the harvest, the end of the world and will have a perfect fulfillment here.

Now let us examine closely; for here I think we shall find the longitude of our ship, which will enable us to correct our dead reckoning preparatory to receiving the time when we shall enter the glorious harbor of rest.

Here then in this third and last feast are three types each marked by time making perfect order in their fulfillment.

1st. 24th v. Is the memorial of trumpets on the 1st day of the 7th month? In the 7th way mark we think we have shown how this is being fulfilled, viz. sounding the seventh trumpet. If any one doubts respecting this, the next type will make it clear.

2d type: "Also on the 10th day of the 7th month, there shall be a day of atonement. Ye shall afflict your souls from even to even shall you celebrate your Sabbath," i. e. it shall be a 24 hour day. Here in this type the people were all these 24 hours in a deep state of trial, afflicted for their sins, waiting around the Tabernacle, while the High Priest was performing the services in the "most holy place," making the atonement for the sanctuary, himself and people; and when he comes out he pronounces the blessing, and then the day of affliction is over until the next year. Now mark. God was so particular to have this type fulfilled, that he made it a standing order that whosoever would not be afflicted in that day, should be cut off from among his people. Now if I can show the fulfilment or antetype to this type, will you believe?

First, then to be perfect in time it must begin on the 10th day of the 7th month, and no where else. Then please look back to the 10th of the 7th month, 1844, where all the virgins were out looking for the Bridegroom, or as in the type, waiting for Jesus our great High Priest, to finish the atonement for the sanctuary and ourselves, and bless us by his glorious appearing. At this point of time our disappointment when the day came and no indications of our Lord's coming was intense. Here then all the honest and sincere virgins were plunged into a furnace of affliction, which they could not avoid, and have been wading through it these last thirty months. This has been such a universal and simultaneous affliction, presenting itself in all its various forms, prophesied of by prophets and apostles, that it is impossible for advent believers to deny without apostatizing from the faith. They have likened it to the passing of gold and silver through "refining fire." Peter says we must not "think strange concerning it." James calls it the patient waiting time. John calls it the patience of the saints. The angel Gabriel was also instructed respecting the holy people in the last days. He said they should be tried. When we say we are looking for the Lord, we virtually acknowledge all this in the past, for it would be perfect folly to say these trials would come on the holy people after the resurrection. This history is in perfect accordance in the time and manner with the type. Indeed if this is not clear and admitted, we should forever despair of appealing to the conscience for testimony. Here then we say is the perfect antetype to the 10th day of the 7th month affliction. For if the universal and peculiar trials to God's people have not yet come, then vain is our hope of the second advent here. Do you doubt now whether the seventh trumpet, the first type of these three, is sounding, you must see that these two types are 10 days apart. In time therefore the seventh trumpet must sound, first to usher in this very affliction. And now see there is but one type more to be fulfilled in this last feast; and this is the feast of Tabernacles, which cannot take place in April nor May, nor any other month but the 15th of the 7th month. The fulfilment of the two preceding types prove this position. O God, I thank thee for the clear light that arises from this feast of Tabernacles. Then we say at the commencement of this second type, the symbol of our trial, was where the Bridegroom came, and commenced the cleansing of the sanctuary. When God speaks and shakes earth and heaven, Joel says Jerusalem will be holy, the sanctuary will be complete, the atonement finished; for God will then be the hope of his people.

Here then we say on the 10th day of the 7th month, in accordance with the type, God has particularly given the work of reconciliation, atonement or cleansing, it must begin here and no where else, for this is the special time to commence the atonement. It was on the 10th of the 7th month that Aaron the high Priest finished the atonement, and he was the type of Jesus our great High Priest; the most holy place a type of the coming of Jesus out of the third heaven to the New Jerusalem, prepared as a Bridegroom to be united to his Bride.

Let us for a moment look at the type in Lev. xvi. In the first place the High Priest enters the most holy place once a year, on the 10th day of the 7th month, and with the blood of beasts begins by making atonement for himself and house (6th v.). Please read 16th and 17th v., and then 20—34. "And he (the High Priest) shall make an atonement (or cleansing) for the holy sanctuary." And then for the Tabernacle, (the whole building) and for the altar; then for the Priests, and for all the people of the congregation. And this is to be an everlasting statute; 33 and 34 v. The only way to make atonement or forgive sins, until Christ our great High Priest shall come. Now let Paul explain: "Now of the things of which we have spoken, this is the sum; Heb. viii: 1. The sum of the preceding chapters, especially the seventh where he shows that Christ now comes to be our Priest forever, and that of course abolishes the Priesthood, and law of Moses respecting Priesthood. Now read viii: 1, again: "We have such an High Priest" who is with God in the heavens; "A minister of the sanctuary and of the true Tabernacle, which the Lord pitched and not man." This places Jesus our High Priest in the heavens, where the sanctuary, the New Jerusalem is; he ministering there for us in the holy place, not with bullock's blood, but his own, fulfilling in all that has been shadowed forth in the type by the high priest in the Tabernacle on earth. Let Paul speak again in the 4th and 5th v: "Seeing that there are (or was then) Priests that offer gifts according to the law, who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things; as Moses was admonished of God when he was about to make the Tabernacle [a meeting-house on earth].

For see, saith he, that thou make all things according to the pattern showed to thee in the mount;" as stated in Ex. 25—27 and 40 chapters. I understand it thus. Make a meeting-house and every article of the furniture to correspond with the great meeting-house and its furniture which is in the "Third heavens." Why, Paul? "For (or because) Christ has not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true, [that is, the meeting-houses which Moses and Solomon made] but unto heaven itself;" ix: 24 (to become a minister of the great meeting-house in heaven, which God made). Then in the 23d verse he shows that every thing pertaining to the meeting-house on earth was to be purified or cleansed by the blood of Jesus the great High Priest over the house of God;" x: 21. Now if you will read chap. ix: 1—10, Paul will show you the use and meaning of the earthly meeting-house. Then he begins in the 11th v. thus: "But Christ being come an high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect Tabernacle [meeting-house in heaven] not made with hands." How was it made? "Just as the worlds were: by the word of God," ix: 3. He is then there to minister for us the great outtype to fulfil all that is given in the types above stated.

This I understand is a part of what Daniel saw in his night vision. John in his Revelation says, "The temple of God was open in heaven, and there was seen the ark of his testament, (the chest containing the ten commandments) xi: 19; see 15 v. This was under the sounding of the seventh trumpet. Again in the xv. he says, "the Temple of the Tabernacle of the testimony in heaven was open." Now mark; this was after the cry "Come out of her, my people" was given, for here they are altogether rejoicing over the victory they had obtained over the churches; 2d and 3d v. And in the same chronological point of time, he "beheld a cloud, and one sat like unto the Son of Man, having on his head a golden crown;" xiv: 14. Now John shows here that he saw all this after the message of the third angel, and before the seven angels had begun to pour out the seven last plagues; for he never saw them until the temple was open. Now the 15th v. of the xvi. ch. shows clearly that Christ does not come before the sixth plague is poured out. Here then is positive corroborated proof of Christ's receiving his dominion and glory and kingdom or as in the parable of the ten virgins the Bridegroom came to the marriage under the sounding of the seventh trumpet, and after the third angel's message, and before six of the seven plagues are poured out.

I am aware that all this can be objected to. So can the whole vision. But it does mean something which took place in heaven. And who that will read Leviticus xvi: 29—34, and xliii: 27—32, where the type is presented every year can ever doubt but the nontype will take place here on the 10th of the 7th month, where the appointed time must end (2300 days) and Jesus after his marriage enter the Holiest of Holies, and commence the cleansing of the sanctuary; as John has it, "prepare mansions in my Father's house." Jesus says emphatically, "after I have prepared a place for you, I will return and take you with me." Is not this the New Jerusalem? and does he not prepare it before he comes for his saints? This must be the cleansing or justifying the sanctuary. And we say again there is no other place or time for it to take place. And as it respects the history, the only place and time that God's people did simultaneously go out to meet the Bridegroom was on the 10th day of the 7th month, 1844. A more perfect fulfilment never has taken place before. Who can see any thing like this in the future?

Now as our experience shows such a perfect fulfilment of events, where in our history should we look for this important event to take place, if not in the text and type, "And the Bridegroom came, and at the end of the appointed time, (2300 days) where the sanctuary is to be justified or cleansed?" Here, then, we say is the commencing of this important work. Here is the beginning; and Joel tells us when it will be finished or cleansed. When the "Lord roars out of Zion, and shakes the heavens and earth," (see Hag. and Paul's description, also,) "then shall Jerusalem be holy." The Bridegroom will then have changed his title to that of king. At this point of time I think is where John saw the crown on his head. This certainly is before his coming, and after the shaking of the powers of heaven. And that has not yet been done, but is the very next sign in order. What next? The sign of the Son of Man. What next? Jesus coming in the clouds of heaven. Now this is the order Jesus has given us himself—why cannot we believe it? I know it is easy enough for any one who does not search the scriptures very diligently or give any stretch to his thoughts, to say that all these events can, or will take place when Jesus comes. It might just as well have been said that when the sun was darkened ed, the stars fell, but we clearly see there was time and space for both. So there will be for all the signs given. This subject of the coming of the Bridegroom has also been ably discussed, and very clearly seen and admitted. The backsliding of its principal advocates is no more proof of its non-fulfilment, than that there has been no Midnight Cry, because the same class of people have rejected it. The scriptures are our guide. This has been the great escape goat or loop hole, for a certain class to crawl away from the position they had taken, into more respectable congregations and society, and confess this the great error they had been led into, when in fact their hearts were filled with unbelief respecting the short distance they had travelled in the pathway after the fall of 1844. The proof of this is clearly seen in their concessions and confessions to them that retreated back after the cry to what was called the broad platform, the tarrying time in the spring of 1844. They are about all united now in doing the work over again, and in finding fault with the shut door people. I am aware this is plain language, but I speak advisedly. My heart has been burdened and pained while I have been watching the progress of backsliding Israel.

MARRIAGE.—"And they that were ready, went in with him to the marriage." I know it reads so, says one, but is it a literal wedding or marriage? No, it is a figurative representation (as we have shown) of a union effected between Christ the Bridegroom, and his Bride, the New Jerusalem in heaven; and when this took place the church here below were all brought into a certain state ('READY') and participated in the union. This must necessarily be so, for Christ being the vine and the church the branches, also the head and the church the body, one could not move without the other. Again, Jesus says, "My sheep hear my voice, and they follow me." Therefore when Jesus leaves the mediatorial seat to be united to his Bride, the church will as necessarily move as the body does when the head turns round. Now we say that our history on the 22d of October, 1844, was a perfect fulfilment of the figure or parable given to illustrate it. See "While they went to buy, the Bridegroom came, and they that were READY went in with him to the marriage." Here at this point the heavens rang with song and praise, "the voices of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings saying, Alleluia, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him, for the marriage of the Lamb has come, and his wife hath made herself ready. And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen clean and white, (why?) for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints;" Rev. xix: 5-8;—that is, the real saints would at this time be arrayed in fine linen clean and white, or they would be ready by sacrifice and obedience just as the angel Gabriel shewed Daniel it should be with the holy people in the latter (or last) days, "purified and made white, and tried," but the trial is between the wedding and the supper. For he adds in 9th v., "Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb. These are the true sayings of God." His meaning I understand to be this. They only are blessed that are called to the supper, for many would be at the wedding and join in the marriage song that would not be at the supper in the New Jerusalem, because they would not endure the trial that they should be plunged into between the marriage and the supper. Now clear that the marriage takes place, and consequently the bridegroom comes, and the door shut before the trial comes to purge and fan out the chaff from the wheat. "Many are called, but few are chosen." It seems to me that the trial of the saints is as positive proof of the marriage in the past, as that thirty months of our trial is in the past. Says the reader, I thought that those who were at the wedding and were shut into the guest chamber, were sealed and safe. You have no scripture to prove it; but to the contrary. See our Savior's parable or figure for the marriage of the king's son, meaning himself, Matt. xxiii: 1-14. 10th v. shows the last gathering for the wedding to be made up of guests both bad and good (two classes). "And when the king came in to see the guests, he saw there a man which had not on a wedding garment." And when he was asked how he came there "without a wedding garment, he was speechless." What is a wedding garment? John says, "fine linen clean and white, for the fine linen is the righteousness of the saints." They had made their sacrifice, and were waiting for their Lord to come—"were made white." God says, "Gather my saints together unto me, those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice;" Ps. l: 5. "Then said the king, bind him hand and foot, and take him away into outer darkness," &c. So we plainly see there were those at the wedding that did not have on a wedding garment—their sacrifice and obedience was incomplete, this one represents many as in the parable of the virgins, and also the "angel giving the everlasting Gospel," in Rev. xiv. This defines the meaning in Rev. xii: 9, where John was told to write thus: "Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb," for Jesus says, "many are called, but few are chosen."

The positive instructions to all who were ready and entered into this state with the Bridegroom to the marriage, was as Luke has recorded it: "Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning; and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord, when he will return from the wedding, that when he cometh and knocketh they may open to him immediately." Their trials during this interval, if they endure them patiently, will fit them for the marriage supper. This leads to the enquiry

Is THE DOOR SHUT? "While they went to buy, the Bridegroom came, and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage, and the door was shut;" Matt. xiv: 10.

Jesus says, "When once the master of the house is risen up and shut to the door, and ye begin to stand without and to knock at the door, saying, Lord, Lord, open unto us, and he shall answer and say unto you, I know you not whence ye are."

This was in answer to the question "if there were few that be saved." He said, "Strive to enter in at the strait gate, for many I say unto you, shall seek to enter in and shall not be able;" Luke xiii: 24, 25. None can go in short of perfect obedience to God. Jesus says to his disciples, "I am the door of the sheep." Again, "I am the door, by me if any man enter in he shall be saved;" John x: 7-9. He further says, "I am the way, the truth, and the life." Here it is perfectly plain we have got to go in by and through Jesus, the door.

He says to the Philadelphia Church, "be that openeth and no man shutteth, and shutteth and no man openeth. Behold I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it." How clear it is that the door is open to this church: this class of believers. Why? Because they have a "little strength and have not denied his name."—What name? "New name," iii. Rev. 7, 8, 12, "king of kings and Lord of Lords," xix. We believe he has received his kingdom, and his title king of kings, and we acknowledge him as such, while the others in 8 v. deny him, and will not admit him to be king. Christ then will be their open door, and their way while they acknowledge and obey him, their king. Now it appears to me that we can understand how the door is shut. Christ says he is the door. Then when he rises up to leave the office he has been fulfilling these 1800 years, and moves to the most holy place to receive his dominion and glory, and a kingdom, then he virtually shuts the door, and the work for the church is as necessarily changed; because as his sheep they follow him. Now as I have shown in the preceding chapter that this work precedes his advent and must be done on the 10th of the 7th month to fulfil the type and the parable of the virgins, and his people here on earth must participate and do their part, as was done in the type, and it must be something just like what has taken place, and will be known and believed in by God's true children, and history has not recorded any thing like it in the past down to October, 1844. Neither has it transpired since in the 7th month of 1845 or '46. Neither can any thing like it take place again by the virgins in the parable, for they are divided and subdivided, without a possibility of a union. Therefore if it is to be done in the future, it must be by an entirely new set of believers that are united as the virgins once were, when "they all arose and trimmed their lamps to go out and meet the Bridegroom." How clear it is then that the door was shut as I have shown, on the 10th day of the 7th month, 1844, and no where else. And that here ended Daniel's appointed time, 2,300 days. Why end here? Because they were to end at an "appointed time," viii: 19. Hab. says at the end it shall speak and not lie, and then if it tarry, wait for it. This is precisely what we are now doing. Then it has spoken at an appointed time, 22d Oct. 1844, and now is the tarrying of the vision.

It must be pretty well understood by this time how the Advent Herald and its associates have derided those that adhere to this view since the noted Albany conference, and how repeatedly they have cited us to the future for the cleansing of the sanctuary at the ending of the 2,300 days. Now see them making another tack to windward! Here it is: "We shall continue to believe what we have constantly taught, (we should like to see how often since the Albany Conference,) that the 2300 days began about B.C. 457, and must end at a point of time not remote from 1843, as Wm. Miller first taught. The time is past to which the majority of evidence in our minds pointed for their termination."—Advent Herald, Feb. 24. In a few weeks after this, the old chart is drawn out from the rubbish to which it had been exposed through neglect and uselessness and hung up in a conspicuous place in the meeting for reference again, and hailed with joy as an old particular friend. Not by all, for another division has taken place, which is another proof of the unsettled state respecting their true position. A true position they have never had since they began to repeat their message after the Bridegroom came and the door was shut. Their admission of the 2,300 days in the past necessarily acknowledges the principal part if not all which we have claimed, or they may acknowledge it to be so without fulfilling prophecy. They don't show what sanctuary is being cleansed at the end of these days. Luke shows clearly that after the door is shut, those that are outside will begin to knock, and when they are denied admittance, they will tell of the wonders which they have wrought, and still the reply will be "I know you not." Matthew is as clear. He says, "afterwards came also the other virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open to us. He answers, I know you not." After when was this knocking? Why, after the door was shut. Now I ask if the door is not shut before the second advent, unless this knocking afterwards can be proved to be after the change to immortality. And that can be admitted only on the unscriptural ground that the wicked will be also immortal. But according to Paul's order of the the resurrection, a gulf will be between them immediately, and those outside cannot knock for admittance, but we are told that their cry will be for "rocks and mountains to fall on them." Then the knocking will be in this present state as it has been, and now is, clamoring about the door, in favor of backsliders and sinners when they have hardly any faith respecting their own true position—changing like a ship heaving to windward in a heavy head beat sea, losing ground on every tack. Some have attempted to show in Luke xiii, that the 28th and 29th verses were a proof that this knocking would be after the advent. I think it shows the reverse. "Weeping and gnashing of teeth," certainly is not knocking for an open door, but shows, as it is stated, that had already been done. What does the apostle Paul call an open door? He says to the Cor. "For a great door and effectual was open unto me;" xvi: 19: "How he (God) had opened a door of faith unto the Gentiles;" Acts xiv: 27. "Praying also for us that God would open us a door of utterance to speak the mystery of Christ;" Col. iv: 3. "When I came to Troas to preach Christ's gospel, and a door was opened unto me of the Lord;" 2 Cor. ii: 12. Paul's open door, then, was the preaching the gospel!

with effect to the Gentiles. Now let this door be shut, and the preaching of this gospel will have no effect. This is just what we say is the fact. The gospel message ended at the appointed time with the closing of the 2,300 days; and almost every honest believer that is watching the signs of the times will admit it. I know it will be said "why you have, or would close the door of mercy!" There is no such language in the Bible. I have no desire nor wish in my soul to see my worst enemy lost. I think I have made it manifest for the last twenty years, and am still willing to do what I can to save those that will help themselves. But I am perfectly sensible that it cannot be done only in God's appointed way; and all that will walk under the shadow of his wing will rejoice at the fulfilment of his word, although their hearts may be burdened and pained at seeing the opposite in their friends.

I think I have fully proved this eighth way mark and high heap in our pathway, that the Bridegroom has come, the marriage is past, and the door is shut.

"Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee for a little moment, until the indignation be over past;" Isa. xxi: 20.

EXCERPTS FROM A VINDICATION OF THE SEVENTH-DAY SABBATH AND THE COMMANDMENTS OF GOD

The typewritten pages in this collection (pages 88 and 89) have been taken from an original copy, not available for facsimile reproduction. The main theme of Bates' pamphlet entitled A Vindication of the Seventh-day Sabbath and the Commandments of God is the Sabbath doctrine. Only those pages have been reproduced that have a direct relation to the sanctuary.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE BIBLE ADVOCATE

Sir—I was very glad when I learned that your columns were to be opened for the discussion of the Sabbath question, for I thought if you would allow this subject to be fairly brought out, God's holy law would be vindicated and more strictly revered; but I soon see this was, and would be, an unequal warfare. To prevent any one's writing but C. Stowe of N. H., you say her argument will cover, or about cover, the whole ground in favor of the Jewish, or seventh-day Sabbath, and then no one else, until some one had replied against it, &c. This was very well, but I soon perceived that you did not keep the ship on her course. The first part of C. Stowe's arti-

ed, to cover the whole ground, has never yet appeared, and should it come forth at this late hour of the discussion, it would probably avail so much as you mean it shall in its isolated state. But to prevent what you did publish for her, in the same paper, (Sept. 2d,) you got your own unscriptural view, to go with it. Thus, of course, still more injuriously your readers, as you had before that stated objections. I am not sorry, however, that it is still going on in some shape, if it is partly to disprove. We hear that you have now on hand five lines so much matter against the Sabbath as you have for it. This is all natural enough, God's word has ever been advocated by the minority. And when such blasphemous language against the Sabbath we are looking for, was permitted to blotch your columns, and again reiterated that he was right, and you not only let it pass unadvised, but was endeavoring to screen him by withdrawing his real matter from God's children. The inference is, and must be, strong against you. Look at your position now! THE BIBLE ADVOCATE! Show if you can the chapter and verse where the Bible allows any man to advocate God's word, that ever withheld his real name and where those that stood in high places were trying to screen them, because as we should have a good right to suppose, that they were in fellowship with their doctrine. How do the columns of THE BIBLE ADVOCATE look now, since you have opened the way for them to follow your unsifted opinions, to declare and still hold up God's holy law as a Jewish ritual, that had been abolished. It looks to me like the same horn that is to "prevail against the saints until the ancient of days comes." He thought to charge upon me and here! (God's law without doubt.) He, then, through this agency, has been blackening your columns with his own blood. The Devil has been too long engaged in this war to pass any one's sentence, who has left his gate open, without walking in and taking possession. How could you be so careless or wild, after warning with him as you have done in the past, to leave the way open for him to tread your doors. Another thing: In your paper of Dec. 22d, you say, "Mr. Turner, have you sent your second article on the Sabbath? We have not received it." Why do so much haste for this wonderful promised article, to overthrow history, after he has overthrown himself by the bible? Why not publish some of the so much manuscript you have already on hand? I cannot help thinking, after all, that you have so much in your own argument of a week-day, no-commandment system, know this partial call for J. Turner to speak again. His view is really the very thing? It is just as it used to be. If it has got it right the discussion is forever ended, and we have always been right, but did not know it: if we had, we should not have resorted to those rambling arguments of Paul to prove that there is no Sabbath, to get clear of pain, bible doctrine!

As I have answered nearly all your arguments against the Sabbath and commandments, in my work on the Sabbath, and Waynote, and lately in my reply to the Advent Magazine, under the head of the Four Pillars, I shall be brief, because I want to say a word upon another subject that you have named. You say, "to assume or infer that the Sabbath was commanded to men before the Exodo from Egypt, is to walk as blind men. But at creation Adam's first day was the seventh day, or day on which God rested. Hence, if Adam kept the Sabbath, he kept the first day, and then worked six days. Who said so? Not the bible. You would try to make out that Adam contradicted and disobeyed God's law, just as you have. Suppose you were here on Friday, the sixth day, would the next day, the seventh, be your first or second day? Your argument is not worth a straw: Adam's first day was Friday, the sixth day, and if he had been created the seventh day, that would have made no difference. How strange you talk! Because men should happen to come into life upon any other than the first day, then he must surely violate the Sabbath by doing his six days work first! This is in perfect keeping with "let every man be persuaded in his own mind," and not keep any." God rested the seventh day and blessed and sanctified it. Surely it is not so dangerous to follow God's example as it is to contradict and disobey him. Such as there are the blind men. [See these three pages of work on the Sabbath.]

Again, you say, "how long was the covenant or law of ten commandments to remain in force and effect, and answer Gal iii. (all Christ shall come." Under the third pillar, I have answered this. The law of circumcision, and not the law of God, is Paul's whole argument here. The 11th verse shows the covenant in the one with Abraham, four hundred and thirty years before the law to Moses. There is not an intimation of the abolition of the law of commandments. Here it is the law of Abraham and Moses. Therefore it is right for the advocates of the seventh-day Sabbath to demand of you to prove a change of the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day; and the reason we demand it is, because we positively know you have none. You also say that the Apostles evaded their duty of the opportunity to preach to the publishing churches in their synagogues on the seventh day, at the same time keeping up the Christian solemnity and worship on the first day." I say you cannot prove this. You cannot present a passage in the scriptures that shows that the disciples ever met together for worship, in the day time, on the first day of the week, and only once of an evening; and not one word about that being a holy day or a day for them to worship, but to break bread. But why do you want to prove this if all the commandments are abolished? The fact is, as soon as you leave the law of God, you are all adrift, with neither our aid neither, at the mercy of the tide. Again, you say "the misapplication of the law is done away, is abolished." That is just what we say. Suppose you had ceased your misapplication ten years ago, would that have abolished the Gospel? This is your reasoning, and it is the best argument you and others bring for the abolition of the commandments in 2d Cor. iii. There is nothing there but the misapplication abolished, which no more affects the law of God, than the marring of your old sermon out of your house would affect the sermon.

Now will you just turn over your file to Rom. 4th, where you come out against J. P. M. Peck, about the necessity. As I have never presented my view of the necessity's being in the heavens, I shall not stop here, only to say, that there is abundant bible proof for this view, and but one place for it, where James, the High Priest is. But the one you all want is first one thing and then another: Palestine, or Canaan, or Jerusalem, or mountains about Jerusalem; Mount Zion, and generally, the whole world. The reason for this is, because you have no proof of any certain place, after you leave Paul, in Heb. viii: 2. But you say, "I deny that it has been any thing like a general belief that the twenty-three hundred days ended in '44. There was a portion of the adherents that combined, for a while, that theory. But they soon abandoned it, with the exception of a few, who have followed anything but the word of God and sound reason; and they now have no fellowship for, or connection with those who truly look for the cleansing of the sanctuary, at the end of the days; and we have as little fellowship for their teaching as they have for us and our view of the plan word of God." We know enough of the effect of that theory that teaches the 2300 days ended in '44, and seems of Shakers can tell you more often than we can.

Out of the great mass of adrift believers in '44, I do not believe you know of twenty that did not think their days were ended in '44. We will try to show, by-and-by, who have followed sound reason, and who have got "the plain word of God." You say you "know enough of the effect of that theory that teaches the 2300 days are ended." Allow me to tell you that you do not know so much about it as you think you do, for as you will wish you had. You are as much about here as you are on the subject of the Sabbath and commandments. That person who abandoned the idea of the days being ended, of which you boast, are of those that organized and entered the ranks of the Leodomus church, "neither has nor call" neither in one position nor yet in number; "always harping and never coming to the knowledge of (the present) truth." The ending of the 2300 days was the great lesson of the salient teaching in '43 and '44; "then the sanctuary shall be cleansed." You will have it that this cannot be before the coming of the Lord, and you see he cannot be here at any time; yet, now, by the first of January, as your Bible Advertiser states, "You have now heard something of the character of this J. Watson. He would have us believe that he was so full of the spirit of the Lord, that God had revealed to him that Jesus would come the 24th of December, or by the 1st of January. All good—we will publish it! What about the 2300 days, Br. W.?" Oh, no matter, James is coming now. H. H. Green has refuted this story, but look at him last spring: the 1336 days must end the 10th day of April, and the resurrection, or they would not end under forty-five years. Well, he confessed that he was wrong in ever believing that they had ended in '44. Come, then, where will they end here? Oh, somewhere a little while before the 1536 days end in the spring of 1847. Well, time has passed on; out he comes again and says the Lord will come in the spring of 1848. Where will the 2200 and 1535 days end, friend Green? Can't say—that is, he don't say—neither does J. W. Eaton, and he don't not commit him for this; it is only because the advent cannot be until spring. And here I will not enquire—last there is not a man in the whole advent ranks—(it seems to me that I will not even except you)—that can show that the Lord will come this winter or next spring. H. H. Green is just as much mistaken in his calculation this coming spring, as he was this last. Now you may go on and call to what it seems to you good. We are confident that you have not got the present truth, neither have you had it since you have followed any thing but "the word of God and secret revelations." And this is the main reason why you cannot answer brother Puller's important questions on the secret move or Rev. x: 1. It requires some one that has followed the truth, the present truth, answer that you have, to reply to such questions, and they so surely involve the day as a cry at midnight brought us to the end of them. Do you not see how you are first lowering but and then lowering cold? Six weeks ago, you said you knew enough of the effect of that theory that the days are ended. You say "all will see by reading the article, what are Dr. E.'s views." That is, he is also that we have no fellowship for. But, you say, we hope that he and many others may be benefited by a careful and patient investigation of some of the many questions he has asked, &c. &c. Now this is the right and only way to investigate. But if some one undertakes to follow your advice by the scriptures, it would not amount to much, for we should expect to see you right out against them, for those that have rejected plain scripture, misdirected with experience, as you have, and ridiculed those who had faith in it, have but little hope now, since you have become an editor. We deeply lamented that you should have taken such a course; but we have seen since that it required something more than common moral courage, for a shepherd to remain with the tired and tired and sick, when he sees that all his fellow shepherds were deserting them. The warnings you have had, have no doubt brought many solemn convictions to your and your wife's minds, or else we should not find you in this halcyon state. Yes, you have been faithfully warned by your old, firm friends, not to come out with your adventism; you have heard their reason, that two were enough to give the light on the darkness of the advent, and they had hard work to get along. But so, your paper was going to take different ground, in some things! In one respect, it has shown pretty clearly, as the scriptures fully demonstrate, that "the devil know not any thing"; and show me here to tell you, if you go on with your so-called and uncommensurate system, and continue to reject the clear fulfillment of prophecy, in our past expectation, you will be clearly prove that you know but a very little more. But after all you have said and done, you are following hard on in the track—the same old despicable, false, following hard on in the track—the same old despicable, false, made by your panderers. Pharaoh's hard like, the runs made by your panderers, see run out; but as you go deep, you can neither back nor turn out; but as you drive after them, thinking, for God and his cause. "Thus to accomplish something, for God and his cause. The only way that I can see for you to do that, will be, either to abandon your head, or shift the tongue of your chair on the opposite end, drive back with all speed, and get into the highway of the Waymarks and high heels, that you so valiantly abandoned more than three years ago.

The Rayner's education to the Philadelphia note of the church, which was farming, in '42 and '44, was to hold fast that which we have!—and he would "write upon us his new name." This is what we are endeavoring to do; and when we see you doing the opposite, we know you are wrong. Yet, instead of the opposite, you do "Write the Lord I will put my law into their mind and write them in their hearts." Whom means? Answer—the house of Israel; of course, all of God's people. What is this done for? Answer—that law may be our God and we may know him and be his people. Can you tell your so-called panderers what means which law of God Paul means? Whether it was the one you say he attributed to God, Gal. Cor. and Romans, or was it another code of laws which he had made for our journey, and then hid them from us. If you know in what back, or chapter, or men they are in the bible, I beseech you to let us know immediately, for I see by John's witness in the New, that in the last days there certainly will be a company keeping these, and the Devil will persecute them for it; but they will eventually be saved, and enter the city. Rev. xii: 17; xiv: 12; xxi: 14. And finally, if you cannot find any others than those which God gave by his own mouth, and wrote with his own finger on Mount Sinai, more than 3300 years since, the same which Jesus confirmed to us more than 1900 years ago with his Gospel, won't you make that known by publicly confessing that it is impossible for you to tell what other object God had in view than our keeping those same laws; and that you had, contrary to the direct teachings of God, decided both his law and his willing, obedient children. Don't tell us that this law is the "law of Christ or the law of grace," or any other name unless you can show us how many considerations they contain, because James has told us "If we fall in one we are guilty of the whole." Jesus never gave but one commandment.

P. 8. As I predicted on your second page, J. Turner's paper has come. The child is fairly born, and you have fallen in love with it. Now brethren, just look down all your editor columns, J. Turner has got the very thing! "The first day of the week is the sorrowful Sabbath! We have always been right, but we never knew it till now! Thanks to J. Turner for confounding the whole world, and now no more about this much vexed question! "We shall fill our paper abundantly with other matter for the future." This word has forced us, and we have made a first rate tack to withstand, and now we are broken into much fiercer scoring our enemies are ready our law. Now what he says? "We suppose and still do suppose that Damascus had reference to a man well known to the residents in Coelestia and Miamahmetia, who went in to the shut door, and sat in, and almost every other door but the true one into the aboriginal, and many of which became great shelters for the seventh day." &c. Now he goes on and speaks in high praise of those who have been writing for the Sabbath—they are consistent Christians, &c. And now, says he, "we must all be exceedingly careful how we write and speak; the enemy seeks to destroy us, and one of his most useful weapons is to divide the saints by dark interpretations, evil guesses, and guesses." &c.—See Bible Advocate, Dec. 30th, p. 104. Why this caution after the above surprising opinion; are you afraid that some of these misinformed, mistaken people will get into your open door? If they should keep you in, and confess that they were wrong in believing in the shut door, so matter how many others they had been guilty of entering into what you call almost every door, they would immediately become consistent Christians! Out of hundreds who have crawled into your open door and made such confessions, causing the hypocrites and unbelievers to rejoice, and the hearts of the righteous to be sad, &c., I will just name a few: J. and C. Freeman, F. G. Brown, of wonderful memory; and now a few Sabbath keepers: W. M. Ingham, John Horwell, of wonderful memory, and J. Turner, your father's lawyer. What you are not so far to withstand as you think for; when comes another head day, that will drive you down on that too alone again, where you may see the awful havoc you have made of those who are following in your wake. For them dashing them upon the rocks and into them overwhelming nations: Your whirlwind of doctrine has utterly dismantled them, and their cry for help is unavailing; and unless you put forth some more extensive efforts to swell those dangerous seas, you will sweep get off from this low shore, while under these deceitful and flattering words of doctrine.

Again he says—"We take the liberty to add that Dr. T.'s article is inaccurate, and that we are now observing the Sabbath of the Lord our God, and not the Jewish, nor a Pagan Sabbath." Where is he now? Does he mean that J. T.'s Sabbath is "the Sabbath of the Lord our God?" He has always insisted, in his former writings, that "the Sabbath of the Lord our God" was the Jewish Sabbath. There is but one named in the bible, if this is what he calls "the plain word of the Lord," I doubt whether any one will understand him.

He says further—"If you lay was the sixth day—every transaction on the day of our Lord's creation is hereby, and in utter confusion—and the law of types is a like this, and make it an impossibility for the Sabbath of the Lord our God to be kept the next day, for this [was] not

[illegible]

Other teachers, (in reference to J. Turner's article,) from Casanbalegna, N. Y., and Dorchester, Mass., have also, about this same time, referred us to this strong belief, for which we thank them and praise the Lord for this light that forever settles the question. A most striking proof of the sway of the malin in their passions. (Rev. xiv: 12,) no matter where located, though hundreds and thousands of miles apart, they are one on this question. Thus it is as we now understand the Sabbath of the Lord and God, to be the rallying point of all them who are truly looking for the speedy coming of Jesus. Wherefore, deprecators, shall attempt to destroy or slighten God's holy Sabbath, will have to pass the examination of the book. Plead to the Corinthians, Ah, abject and servile twigs, wretches! For even Christ our presence is sacrificed for us." How? Answer—aspired on Friday, the 14th day of the first month, at 3 o'clock, P. M., in exact fulfillment of the type by Moses, in Exo. xli: 9, 11-14, continued for 1670 years. He rested from all his works only one twenty-four hour day, and that was God's holy day. Paul tells the Romans that "he was raised up for our justification." Doxology that "he was raised up for our justification." Rev. 25: and the Corinthians "that he is risen and become the first fruits of them that sleep." 1st Cor. xii: 30; and Gal. i: 36, "first born from the dead." Again, "should be the first that should rise from the dead." And xvi: 23. John says, "The first begotten of the dead." He arose on Exodus morning, the first day of the week, before sunrise—about 3 A. M.—having been dead about valley-eight hours. There he suffered the type in Lev. xxi:17-18—*"the first fruits of the harvest, the bread of the first fruits, called the wave sheaf, which was waved by the priest, with the offering of a lamb (symbol of Christ), as the first fruits of the resurrection, on the morning after the Sabbath—the 16th of the first month—the Sabbath, or feast day, always being on the 10th of the seventh month. Then, from the 14th, at 3 P. M. to the 16th, at 2 P. M. is not thirty-eight hours, nor whole night, (just above)—see whole day, a part of Friday and a part of Saturday. "Thus it becometh Christ to make and to save from the dead the shew bread." Thus in his own testimony a few hours after his resurrection; also a few hours after the offering of the wave sheaf. If this can be overlooking them can also the time of his crucifixion. The feast days confusion that you would make about this great feast day which always followed the passover, is answered here. It so happened in the order of time to come on God's holy Sabbath; and that God so ordered it that Christ should rest from all his works on his holy day, was witnessed from, to fulfill some glorious event yet to come.*

Now, blessed Thursday, if you will not intervene God's holy Sabbath and commandments according to the clear precept, do you let them alone, if you do not want a worse thing to befall you, for just so many as you fight against them they will destroy you. This beating the air, is none else doing with unseasoned mortar; you cannot make any of it stay put. If I were in your place, I should a great deal rather have been fast asleep than to be smitten in such base-revailing business—fighting against God! This looks like "gleaning any thing that the sword of God" and swearing—

During 43 and 44, Dorrington, Stewart, Colver, Chase, and others, took their stand against William Miller and his brethren, to discredit Daniel's vision of the 2300 days. You remember that no two of those apostles had started upon a theory of his own; but that all of them were united as on the one point, and therefore unshaken over them all. Now your leading men are so unshaken over them all. See how it leads: William and consummation of God. See how it leads: William Miller believes the first day is the Sabbath; J. V. Himes believes in selective any day; just as you are persuaded; believers in selective any day; just as you are persuaded; but still could be from the Sabbath; Joseph Melish is not particular, don't believe there is either law, Sabbath or commandments—any way we under the law of grace; but still he will have it, that Sunday is the Sabbath; you say the first day is the seventh of the Lord our God, but it is not the Jewish Sabbath,—that is, the one which is in the decalogue. It is something new—I don't understand you; don't think you can make your words undomated it, either. J. Turner says the first day is the true seventh-day Sabbath; J. B. West says the commandments are right, but the first day is the true seventh-day. Barnabas says "the Jews were right in killing our Lord for a notorious Sabbath breaker, if he did not abrogate all the law when he commenced his ministry;" three years before he abolished Moses' law. Up starts another mighty man, G. Needham, and says, God told him that the commandments were all abolished in St. Paul's epistle, chapter 31. And a great portion of your gathering must be so flying like Mother Carey's Cuckoo to get into your ways to pick up the crumbs! Don't smile, gentle reader, the picture is not overdrawn. There are some of the principal leaders in the second advent; they will tell you to just face that they have measured all sectarian creeds and formulas, and believe every word of God. Now the "first sabbath for the seventh day," are all united on the Sabbath and commandments; they believe God, if they keep his Sabbath, that they shall be sanctified and ride upon the high pinnacles of the earth.—Exalted and exalted. They believe Jesus, that the law and the prophets hang upon the commandments, and that the keeping of them will give eternal life and great reward in the reign of heaven. Thus carries them beyond the Jewish Gospel, and all other dispensations. See also Rev. xxi: 14. They believe the holy Apostles, Paul, John, and James—that "the law is holy, and the commandments holy, just and good." "If we are they [Jas. 1:24] that keep the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus." Rev. xiv: 12. "If we keep the words law and yet offend in one point, we are guilty of all." They feel perfectly secure in following such leaders, and they understood that though you be ever so avaricious in regard to the new dispensation, you fall in the hands, the Sabbath. They believe this to be the "pink word of the Lord," and on this Sabbath question they will be united, waiting for Jesus. And just to save us the pain of explanation were overthrown by rejecting the new word, just so sure you will be overwhelmed in error confessing that oppose God's holy Sabbath and commandments, and your case is now hanging in awful suspense. O Lord, let the clear light shine.

A word more—your wonderful prototype has also threatened to smother the word with respect to the history of the seventh-day Sabbath. If he proceeds with it as he has with the eternal word of God, our minds will have to be remodelled, to believe with him. If any of the little flock feel desirous of spending an hour in looking into this subject, I would recommend them to send to the New York Sabbath Tract Society, and purchase Sabbath tract No. 4, vol. 1, 40 pages. This will save the labor of poring over Roman and English history, or of following the sophistical arguments of the blind leading the blind. Much reliance is placed upon the history of the early fathers, so called, who surrounded the Apostles, to settle the question. We ought to remember that these were uneducated men, and we do not know even so much about their character, as we do of the uneducated scribes of the last century, whose teaching led us all into Babylon. If the true history of the advent doctrine from 1841 to the autumn of 1844, had, with the minutest errors in our history up to 1844, been published 1690 years ago from the advent of Melchizedek, and there even a son had been called the father—it would have put all the wise heads in Christendom, in this age, to have expounded of their meaning; for we see it requires all the energies of the human mind to trace their crooked tracks, even when right before us. For this reason, I have said, that Melchizedek's history, any white and entire release being upon the inspired word of the living God. Thus, we are told, will man be as "perfect and entire—growing nothing."—2d Tim. iii: 17.

If what I have said may here present in this work will not stand the test of what we have seen and felt ourselves—fulfilling the closer word of God in these last days, then I shall fail in my object of comforting and strength-osing the flock of God. I fully believe in history, when all deductions are fully allowed.

PAST AND PRESENT EXPERIENCE.

TO WILLIAM MILLER.

Dear Sir.—The time was, when all second advent believers were dear to you, and they called you father and brother Miller. Alas, how changed the scene is now! Jesus says "whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother and sister and mother." They can't believe that you are doing the will of God, as you once was; though they cannot help loving and venerating your name for the great light which you have given—because you are wounding their feelings by calling them Fanatics, Door-Shutters, and almost any thing but honest people, to destroy all their reputation and christian fellowship, and make them feel if possible, that they are worse than the heathen. In this way you have wrenched their affection from you, and when you give them an opinion of God's word now, they doubt: say they, he first gave us the light, and we relied to his standard, because it agreed with the scriptures—but when we were come to the most trying and toilsome part of our journey then he forsook us and joined in with the shepherds and thums of like faith, to berate us. But we soon learnt from the prophets that there would be a people in the last days, answering this description, that God had promised to save, called Outcasts:—Jer. xxx: 17; Pal. cxlvii: 2. Now you are encouraging those same deniers of our faith to be persecut. Sir—say you—we shall soon get into the kingdom of God. Methinks if we should all meet there under existing circumstances, there would be a great deal of confounding before we could be reconciled to listen to each other's joys. But it will not be so; if you and your brethren, and the severers too, are saved, then I predict that we shall have to stay here until a perfect reconciliation takes place. When that will be, I cannot tell, for in my judgment the gulf between us has been widening for the last three years. Now, I prefer to remain on that side of it with the Outcasts, for they have the promise that they shall be gathered. When we made our sacrifice during a cry at midnight, we considered and were fully persuaded that we were doing our last work, and surely that would be done the best of any work. Then of course we had no right whatever to take back the sacrifices we then made, and rob God. We were fully aware that our disappointments would not change our course, for if we were ever saved it must be by our onward course. But those with whom you were associated sounded the retreat, and all that did not follow in their train have been subject to your unquenching epithets.

If you knew so much about this afflicted and torn people, (whom you have been the instrument in leading out into the Philadelphia state of the church, and then leaving and driving them from you,) as I do, you would shudder to appear before Him who has promised to be a Father to them and keep them. The principal cause of many offences which they committed were from bad teachers and teaching. You have a sample here in this work. (We have no wish, neither do we speak any one who does not follow the teachings of the new word.) I think you have listened too much to them.

If I could just take you with me to some of the stopping places of these people, and show you their scanty wood piles at this inclement season of the year, and then to the barrels which once held their beef, pork and flour, together with the scanty substance they now have, and with no earthly prospect of another supply, only as their trust is in the living God, in whom they had committed their all, because of their honest sacrifices and anxious waiting for their coming Lord; turned out of their former employment and reproached for keeping God's holy Sabbath day; whipped by cruel, unmerciful men for shouting the praises of their God and King, and still persevering in their faith, &c. And then, for a contrast, to step on board the cars and be rolled away to your own comfortable and commodious house, with well stocked barn and gratification, beef and pork barrels—the produce of your own valuable farms—with all things that heart could wish for, and set down by your comfortable fire with your family, (all believers with you in the coming of Jesus,) and recount to them the strange scenes you had witnessed among an afflicted people, who once believed with sincerity and delight to every word you had to say about the second coming of Jesus, and they were so delighted with this, to them, joyful news, that they wanted to hear about it all the time. We may imagine your conversation to proceed somewhat in the following strain:

'You remember how elder Blinn used to insist on my going with him from city to city, and from state to state, lecturing on the people's sacrifice to hear me preach about the coming of Christ in 1843 and '44.'

'Yes, father, I remember it well—for when I was with you it seemed as though the people were hardly willing to let us come home and rest a little while.'

'I know it, my son, and I used to think that God never would have sustained me in such excitement and incessant labors as I was then called to perform, if it were not his cause. Why, when I saw the wonderful effect that it produced on churchmen and sinners, in bringing them to God, and the glow of joy that lit up the countenances of God's lament, halting children, and how they hung upon every word; and then the contrary effect, when some of those hardened sinners raised their objections—I said I know this is God's cause, and as it related on through that cry at midnight, down to its closing scene, you all remember with what joy and glory I was filled, and how I publicly declared my faith, and stated that I might be called a Forerunner, but I said, call me what you please, Christ will come, &c. Well, those English people are some of the very ones that used to hang on my words and others, who preached to them of this doctrine. And during this cry at midnight they made a sacrifice of all they had—(some of them were almost as well off as we are, and some were poor)—but they offered what they had, and that was all that was required.'

'Grandfather, what makes them just now that had something then? You know the Service didn't come then, as you said he would, and that is more than three years ago.'

'Well, they thought it would be contrary to scripture to take back their sacrifices, and so many of them have made no improvement on their farms, nor their buildings,—so, they have got even deader now than:—Some of them said what they had, and have been trying to help the poorer ones, because they and they still believed that Christ was coming, and they would not sell it. For instance, they believe what Luke has recorded in his 21: 28.—"Sell your goods and give them: buy not up treasure on the earth,"—they think this must be understood literally; and they have gone off into many strange notions, believing the door is shut, &c., &c.'

'Well, how do they appear, father?'

'They do not seem to be, in the least, changed at present: they are expecting men to be delivered and made heirs with Jesus, to an unexpressed inheritance that will abide forever. I could get along with many persons in their faith, and believe them honest, if they did not make their souls for us; and because we do not believe in the great work that was wrought in the past, and the present signs that they edify in, they have no charity for us. They say we have churchmen and good men a cold heart-warm Leadenhose state of the church.'

'Well, father, I believe there is a great deal of truth in their statements, for there certainly is a wonderful difference in our camp and conference meetings, to what there used to be, for if any one dares glory in God, now, as they used to in '43 and '44, it secures us if the whole meeting was agitated, until it is excruciated that it is one of the devilish ones, it secures as though they hardly dare say a word, either because they do not believe what you say, or for fear they shall be called fanatics. You know how they tried you and how hard you talked to them about it in the conference in Boston, last spring. You thought it was because they had no religion. And then the camp meeting too, at Lake Champlain: I suppose the most of them thought that you were going to prove that the door was shut, and that the past was time; and a good many of them might still have thought so, if elder Marsh had not taken it up and called forth your explanation, in his paper of Sept. 28th. For my part, I don't really understand all those things—that as soon as you begin to utter words the past truth in any of our meetings, these old-born are either writing or reading you to establish if more fully in their hearts, and then another party seems to be secured. If I were you, I would take a steady-forward course, and try to please God, if I could not say any else."

"Well, my son, you know that those two editors have stood by me ever since 1842, and so for other reasons, he has stood by me and been my warm and fast friend all these last seven years of joy and trials, and I cannot separate from him. No, I have told him that I would not take him and his papers if I had to carry down our 'poster to Boston,' to make the means. You see I must stand by him, and he stood by me. I think I shall not depart and justify my course and views of bible doctrine; and defend my character from the aspersions of my enemies, and finally publish any thing I have to say against the Dover Shakers, &c."

"Yes, you—I know all that, father, but some have or others, these things do not look right. You began with a steady-forward bible course, and it cut like a sword with two edges, and that is the reason why those dear abolition &c., as you call them, believed your cautionary, and they think there is just as much edge to the sword now as there ever was. However, you have studied the bible much more than I have, therefore I shall not dispute you, but I cannot see that the people, whom you have been to visit, are so much out of the way for venturing to go forward, after your own directions to them, soon after the cry of abolition."

But it may be said that these are what are termed the "No-work Folks." No sir, they do not belong to that class, although their views are, in most all other respects, similar. You have been told—or I have—by one of your travelling lecturers, that there were but twenty-five of them, all told. He said they were preaching that they have no such view. We believe, what I shall attempt to prove by-and-by, that there will be 144,000 saved at the coming of Jesus. Furthermore, we believe that the same sanctification which teaches us to keep the seventh-day Sabbath, also teaches that we may labor the whole six days for just as much as we can comfortably make; more than that would constitute the direction of Jesus, viz. "Lay not up for yourselves treasures on the earth."

See. This is all right, for our faith teaches us we do not need it. If we board up what we have got, it certainly is not selling and giving away. My opinion is, that this is now to be made clear, and that God's people will be absolutely refused to be found with a scepter among him, when Christ comes. As the keeping of the Sabbath sanctification, is the true scriptural essence, carried up to the gates of the city, so our believing honestly for what we unhesitatingly want, also carries us to that peak. But we have no controversy with those who honestly and solemnly live to God without blessing; though they tell us that they have no charity for us, still we believe if they honestly live out their faith God, will not condemn them for not working out their faith.

Your explanation, respecting the time that Christ might, or has, begun to reign, to prove that you had no communion or fellowship with "the shakers" or their views, is the most misapprehension of all your ideas, since 1842. I refer to your letter in the Advocate Harbinger of Reg. 1842. It is endorsed by the editor, and also by the Advocate Sabbath, in justifying the ground you took—and grew out of a report that older S. Hall of Bangor, made from your conversation and preaching at the Champlain camp meeting. I repeated what I heard, and it was therefore stated that I was present. This you could have easily detected, but the editor has since acknowledged his misstatement. S. Hall is an entire stranger to me. I have written him two letters on the subject, without reply. But it is your own written statement that no pardon can you give from 1815 to 1847, thirty-two years, as I stated in Doc. XII : 1, to stand up to reign, and you further say it might have been at the end of the 2500 days. This is the first intimation I have had, since you took your stand against us, that you believed the days could; but the forty-five years allotted for Christ to begin to reign, and your assurances at those who believe the day is that, is so inconceivable as not to be reprehensible. I should be surprised to see an Evangelical paper—J. Marsh's or any other exposition of Nov. 9th, to the contrary and withdrawing. As I have already given my views about the time when Christ began to reign, in Way Means, Page 35 and onward, I may not say much more. Have the 2500 days really ended there, and nothing to move there and? This was the burden of your cry. Is was also the people, and one of them said it should speak and not be. Then, of course, it would not come shortly; but the wise would understand when it did not. You reply, I suppose, according to the 11th chapter of Revelations, from which you are speaking, that the seventh trumpet had begun to sound; but was there nothing else connected with the sounding of the 2200 days? You—the third one, because that belongs to the seventh trumpet; see viii: 13. Now the 10th chapter, 7th verse, shows us that, when the seventh trumpet begins to sound, the Mystery of God should be finished. Oh, you say, that's the old story of 1844. You say, and more than say, others hundred years beyond that. Here is your trouble; but the most of your hearers, though they may listen with delight to you, yet they preach that the seventh trumpet does not sound until Christ comes to raise the dead. You ought to correct them here, for they are certainly in the dirt; Christ is not the seventh messenger.

But, if Christ has begun to reign as you say, over the nations, he has, according to your showing in Daniel xii: 1, changed his position. If so, how can he be in the mediatorial seat? His leaving that throne the Mystery, and that forever after the door, takes you or some one else as proof that he leaves this world over the nations, and goes back again to finish what he left undone. Now, who is the man here? You cannot make all this work in harmony—it is impossible; besides, you call us quakers, because of our view of the Sabbath. If we say, pray wait and you; and how did you find out that Christ had changed his position, even twenty years ago? or when the 2200 days ended, somewhere about 1844? It really appears to me, that if we had put both such a view, that we should have been pronounced crazy; and yet your two editors will patch it all up, and throw all the stigma upon me, forward, because they think we shall claim just as an Oldcomer? Their fury is unnecessary—we have no claim to such views; they would only disturb our minds. We believe that the seventh trumpet began to sound on the first day of the seventh month. Then the Mystery was finished, and the third was done. The virgins in the parable, were divided—some went after oil. On the tenth day of the seventh month is the day of atonement. At this point in 1844, is the order of the Sabbath.

Edificant of the types in Leviticus and New Testament testimony (which we have referred to in the 17th March) I now recall his Bible and the Kingdom of the world, and entered the Holy of Holies as our Great High Priest, and commenced the cleansing of the Sanctuary. Why? Because here the 2200 days ended.—The opening of time. At this point too, commenced the trial of God's people, surely you never can forget this, until the trial ends; and that cannot end in accordance with the type, until our Great High Priest and King has finished the cleansing of the Sanctuary, the New Jerusalem, and it is a single body; see Joel iii: 17. Now follow the type and make testimony, and it is positively clear that Jesus changes his position from the daily ministrations to the most holy place, just as certainly as Aaron did. Here then, to show, is where we prove the Book of Daniel came to the Marriage, and the door shut, in the parable of Matt. xxi, and in the types. If it does not prove that in our past history, and that we are now waiting for our coming King, then these types are superfluous. We do not believe that Michael stands up, as you have stated, until he has accomplished what is above stated. We cannot possibly see how he can begin to reign over the nations as king, while he is in the most holy place, cleansing the Sanctuary, and the nations being profaned for the blessing when he lays aside his priestly robes and takes the veil, as in Rev. xxi: 14; and God speaks, as in Joel ii: 16. If what you have stated, had been even speculated in Oct. 1844, it would have thrown the whole harmony of the scriptures, in our past history, into confusion. As I have said, I will have respect to that unless you follow the Bible rule as I have stated here and in the 17th March, you never can harmonize the scriptures with the past nor present; and I think I shall make it plainer still, before I lay down my pen.

One thing more: Much division is made about some of our company that have joined the Shakers. I say it is a shame to them first, to have preached so clearly and distinctly the speedy coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, promising to gather his saints—and then to go and join the Shakers in their faith, that he (Jesus) came spiritually in their Mother, Ann Lee, more than seventy years ago. This, without doubt in my mind, is owing to those previous handling and left in a doctrine called the crispy. How can you find fault with that faith while you are teaching the very essence of that same—no more to be understood, doctrine? For their comfort and faith, and of course your own, you say—"Christ is God, and God is here." As you have given no explanation, we take it to come from you as a literal exposition of the word; and although the editor of the Herald of Dec. 4th, endeavors to justify you in your published view of the Unity in 1842, and should be too much to clear that you have not changed your views on this subject, just so he is in the habit of doing without your knowledge, he still in your view once at least since 1844, leaves us in doubt about the other's sincerity. We ask, then, when you find this passage, and if error here was none; and if that is what we are looking for from heaven, to come the second time? If so, how will it look, and where in the scripture that describes it? It seems to me that the scholars have a better claim to you than we have.

We believe that Peter and the master settled this question beyond controversy, Matt. xvi: 13-19; and I cannot see why Daniel and John has not fully understood that Christ is the Son, and, not God the Father. How could Daniel explain his vision of the 7th chapter, if "Christ was God." Here he says one "like the Son" (and it cannot be proved that it was any other person) of man, and there was given him Daniel's, and Gary's, and a kingdom;" by the sentence of days. Then John describes one seated on a throne with a book in his right hand, and he distinctly saw Jesus come up to the throne and take the book out of the hand of him that sat thereon. Now if it is possible to make these two entirely different transactions appear in one person, then I could believe your sort if I could believe that God died and was buried instead of Jesus, and that Paul was resurrection when he said, "Now the God of peace that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus that great shepherd of the sheep," &c., and that Jesus also did not mean what he said when he asserted that he came from God, and was going to God, &c. &c.; and much more, if necessary, to prove the utter absurdity of such a faith. Without going any further, we say that one of two things is certainly clear, that the doctrine of the second advent, which you, and your adherents promulgated down to Oct. 1844, was positively wrong, if you now are right. We believe it was right and approved of God and therefore we fully believe that we are in the right road still, but we have nothing to boast of; our work has been made dark by your opposition, but still we have traveled on, believing that light is given for the righteous, and we have yielded it to God be all the praise. If you and your adherents could have turned us into your course, you would. We suppose that we are in the furnace. Our divided course, as it is termed, arose from three things that we practiced. First, we are called Judaisms, because we keep the Sabbath according to the commandment; our sabbath for it, as with you. We say further that God set us the example, so he has the whole world. Jesus said the sabbath followed, and so do we. Second, because we speak one another's love, here we have the plain and positive teaching and example of Jesus: "If I, then, the master and the teacher, have washed your feet—Blessed are ye who have thus things provided ye PRACTICE them."

—(Gospel, verse 1)—John xiii. Third, that we practice fasting.—Here we have the teaching of the great apostle to the Gentiles, to churches and households and every individual believer in Christ Jesus; see Rom. xvi: 2, 6, 12-16; 1st Thes. v: 18. "Greet all the brethren with a holy kiss." Phil. iv: 21. "Salute every saint in Christ Jesus." Now I do not say but here is dangerous ground, and so doubt many have fallen, because they could not read the text, so Paul's brethren could not the command; but did Paul advise them to give it up because some had not their lives for it? No! Well, then, the rule is the same with us, not to yield because some have spiritually died. It is a test of our fellowship, for one another, and we may just as well be subverted of the teachings of the bible as to be subverted or misled in practice what is clearly taught. Our course is onward; we leave you to say what you please of us. We very dearly give if we persevere in this course, that it will lead us to immortality.

P. S. Some days after writing the above, an examination of mine located me the Address Herald of Jan. 4th, 1844, to read the remarkable dream, which you had in November last. I am glad that the Lord comforted you by giving you this dream. Since I have read it, I do feel a hope that the Lord will yet save you from the deplorable state into which your premeditated friends seemed to have drawn you. Joel's prophecy, quoted by Peter, at the Pentecost, respecting dreams and visions of the last days, are fulfilled, in my view, fulfilled; for object by making it can be proved that the last days are past. I fully believe that God warns and instructs his children in various ways, when deep sleep is fallen upon them. There certainly are some very remarkable cases on record in the Bible, and I so much believe them, as other portions of his word.

It seemed to me that I could see some of the outlines of this dream; for instance, the "curiously wrought metal, filled with all sorts and kinds of jewels, diamonds, precious stones, and gold and silver coins of every denomination and value, beautifully arranged in their several places in the cabinet." Then, I think, clearly represent the spiritual treasure, the jewels of the Lord of hosts, that are now being made up in the day of trial, as with Malachi: "I brought out and made manifest by the second advent doctrine, which you began to give to the world some few years ago. Many of them, at that time, turned down by the sectarian crowd and forsaken in Babylon, were arrested and won a way by the soul-winning doctrine of the coming of Christ, in 1843 and '44. No wonder that your friends, who then gathered around you, abated for joy when they began critically and anxiously to examine the curiously wrought cabinet, (the word of God,) and to see, the more they examined and expounded, the more the diamonds and jewels increased in splendor, brilliancy and number, (converts from the darkness and the world,) and scattering all over the land, (the entire globe,) and in a few years throughout the world, every nation, kindred, tongue and people (all over the face and hemisphere.) By this time the dying messages in Rev. xiv, began to draw these jewels out into a clear place by themselves, (the Philadelphia state of the church,) saying, behold, the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him! As soon as the disengagement came in Oct. 1844, then your conversion came and immense quantities of precious jewels (by precious and unprecious) were seen to you in your vision among the gemstone. When you felt the great sacred-belly of the doctrine you had been interpreting, and proclaimed that our work for the world was done, and you were prepared to see that no Jew or the great multitude which had expected deluged with you? doctrine, really believed it. Hence you became "weird in your very soul, and began to see physical things to your own end." Here, I think, is where you changed your views and course, in the spring of 1844, and talked with those that have been bewailing them to see, as you say, "floating in dirt, and mud, and sludge and all manner of rubbish and covered up both the gemstone and also jewels and diamonds, &c." Then I think represent the false doctrine, since 1844, mixed up with falsehood every thing, and from every where, calling the honest and confiding children of God almost any thing but their true master; thus covering them up with, as you say, dirt, mud, sludge, and rubbish of all kinds; at the same time so covering up also the precious gems, (false brethren) that nothing of them, or of that beauty and glory that was so equipt a little while since, can now be seen, to men, speaking in person your conduct (the word of God) and comparing it also under God. Just look at the Sabbath controversy. Do you then, and the dealing with unconverted men, this all absorbing subject of Christ coming to judgment, and compare it with Ezek. xxxiv chapters, particularly the 31, 22 and 31st verses, and money it will be estimated that "the Dream is certain and the interpretation thereof sure."

And whereas then answer a man clear the room with a dirt broom and open the windows to cleanse it of its filthiness at which time all the people passed on. The spiritual course also arose and passed out of the windows. The room was then cleansed of all its rubbish. All the genuine diamonds, precious gems and jewels, even to those not larger than the point of a pin, were collected, and beautifully arranged in another cabinet, which, when the Jews called you to look into, caused you to shiver with very joy.

"Know therefore and understand," that in the day of atonement, while our Great High Priest is cleansing the sanctuary, (bathing out his people's sins,) preparing his jewels (Mal. iii: 17) of all sizes to enter the splendid and most glorious mansions in the New Jerusalem, which he promised them, John xiv. And whereas they were not shown in thy vision, how the first cabinet was prepared, that being unnecessary, as thine own experience for the last few years would clearly come into thy mind, which, when compared with our history, brought to view in the xiv chapter of Mark, particularly 8-11 verses, would show thee how it was done. And the content of the scripter or scribe, in performing this first work, will help thee to understand, how the man (or messenger) which thou sawest enter the room will also be distinctly seen; even our great disappointment in Oct. 1844, operating under the divine guidance of the word and spirit, as far as can be seen through the gross darkness and infidelity that is becoming more and more manifest; through all of their inconsistencies, such as prayer, exhortation, visiting, exhorting, writing, especially ordinary correspondence, and all other proper means to ascertain the whereabouts, and the number of the scattered sheep of the house of Israel: even the most lonely and most despised.

Yet patiently therefore and with remembering what God has taught in those last few years respecting the great fulfillment of his word in our experience, and the perfect harmony we are now made to see in place, manner and time, for every point. As he had distinctly taught us, viz. "Which ye shall proclaim in their mansion;" "A time for all things." "Every thing on his day;" "Not one yet or title of the law to fail," even the law given of God towards us is perfectly considered in the latter (or last) days.—Jer. xxxii: 20. As therefore it implied the signs of a few years to arrange and derange the first cabinet, so then here likewise must be order and time to derange, prepare, and properly arrange, the second cabinet, by the same kind of instrument.

And whereas thou didst cry to him to forgive for fear he would injure the precious jewels, and he replied fear not, I will take care of them: that is, those that are "keeping the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus," will not injure the jewels (their brothers) for they will act in harmonious concert, under the new commandments of their edifying great high priest and king.

Your cry to forgive, looks ominous of further restoration and as for any of your assistance in collecting, obtaining and arranging the jewels of the Lord of hosts (the last cabinet,) it looks still more dubious, as it seems you hope your eyes closed (in a quiet state) until the jewels were all arranged. This is the reason why you did not see the jewels that the man (or messenger) had in arranging them.

This I fear, that you will not open your eyes to see this important work until the evening time, and God speaks himself; but I cannot but still hope that your "short first cry," will be one of triumph and redemption. Several nights before I saw your dream, I had finished writing your letter, I presented the subject of my work before the Lord again, for wisdom to direct me in all that I had, or may write for the benefit of the children, and the redemption of the world. And that I may do so, I asked for a dream, vision, or any way that was consistent with his will to instruct me. The next thing, as near as I can now recollect, was the following

DREAM.

A great tumult behind me, with corresponding commotion in the forenoon, so fully confirmed me that the Lord Jesus was coming; that I began to sing and rejoice; very soon the people began to assemble around me. They wanted to hear my opinion about the coming of the Lord. I felt no spirit of communication; my work seemed to be done, except to answer a few questions put to me by one or two out of a great number of backslidden adherents that seemed to be engaged in almost any thing but the work of God. This scene soon changed, and I was in meeting with a large assembly of worshippers. The speaker stood and pointed to a man that he said was under conviction; he seemed very anxious that I should see him. The congregation seemed to have an interest with the speaker looking at him and myself. I looked, and although the man's head was resting on the railing of the seat, I perceived that it was an old neighbor of mine, who had lived and died a Unitarian, several years ago. The speaker's theme, and whole labor, was, look! behold! the man is under conviction! I thought if they knew the man so well as I did, their wonder would soon cease. No other effect was produced, by this effort, other than to suggest use of the extra exertions that had been made by the kneeling professed abolitionists since the spring of 1844, to prove that Quil was converting souls under their hands. Here the scene changed again, the house was cleared, and the seats laid away. The room now appeared very large, with a high stage at one end, on which I was standing with an instrument like a mallet in my hand, knocking off the top of a large box. A few spectators on one side, and a large fleshy man, the owner of the box, on the other, appeared very unwilling for me to open it. But it seemed a clear duty that I was fully authorized to examine all contraband goods, and therefore there was no resistance. As the top of the box flew off, the man angrily seized two or three bottles apparently filled with water and juggled them close to him, smartly wiping the result of the examination. The box was about one-third full of what appeared to be wooden feet and legs—it occurred as though they were painted black. Among them was a very large shawl with ruffled hair, with the hair long black fluted into it. I looked up to the man and exclaimed: 'what in the world did you imagine this hat with a lock of wood in it, is here for.' The man still grasping the bottles, (I have thought emblematical of the water of life,) darted away to the east end of the room, and crouched what appeared to me a black door painted light blue, from which I could discover no light. Now, dear sir, as I have casually, and perfectly attempted to identify your dream, will you write the interpretation of mine, and receive my love and warmest wishes for your perfect reconciliation with God, and all his precious people in the last quarter.

JOSEPH BATES.

follow that the day of the week has changed since God sanctified the Sabbath in Paradise. God first changed locations when the sun is up it is day or morning; when he is down it is night, or evening. God reckoned the first six days from evening to morning, but further on, in the history of the world, he says "from even to even shall you celebrate your Sabbath," or not. This proves that every day in the week begins at evening; so if some conscience within us be so day and night. Surely God has done all things well, but man has sought out many inventions. God help the little flock to follow the truth, and "Remember the Sabbath day and keep it holy," Amen.

THE LAST EXPERIMENT ON DEFINITE TIME;

THE PROLONGING OF THE DAYS ALL PAID.

In 1843, the Herald said: "Midnight Cry for many months stated that all the signs preparatory to the second coming of Christ, were in the past. Soon after the passing of the time in 1844, they changed their minds and told us that we had but "just entered upon the ground of disputed chronology and that we should be justified in looking with more and more confidence to the extreme boundary of 1847, the extreme point of time in dispute."—The Advent Herald, Sept. 26th, 1847. On the strength of this, A. H. also came out with his definite time—LAST EXPERIMENT.

"Well, we have now come to Jan. 1846, and all has failed. What is the matter? Answer—the disputed time was properly named; there is no truth in it. It is all a perfect failure; because all their boasting ends with it. We say the cry at midnight, was right, and the appeal of those that said in the fall of 1844, as shown in the Way Marks. We will now try some further proof, and will further that their confessions and repugnance have fully led them into the Taborian snare of the Church. They say that Christ may come any time; this is the meaning of all three of the Editions, and some of them talk hoarsely about the sealing of the 2300 days, at that point of time. How vain to assert that the 2300 days will end here, the first of January. It is well known, that the spring or fall is the only place one fixed for their coming.

Those who believe that Christ was crucified say where but in the middle of the week are mistaken, as E. H. Green, that his advent will be in the spring. Those who still believe in the types, and that Christ was crucified in the middle or half of the week can see no place for the sealing of the 2300 days or the advent of Jesus, but in the seventh month. Neither can the 6000 years end any where but in the seventh month; the year is close in Gen. i: 11, 12, and 29, that the seed and fruit was due for the harvest when God finished his six days; just as Adam and Eve partook of it. It is also perfectly clear that God changed the beginning of the year from seasons to the first month, to commence the sowing of the seed and the types to which we have, and will say, see; no Exo. xii: 2; xiii: 3, 4; xxxiv: 18; Deut. xvi: 1. This was the beginning of months and the beginning of the year, the passover month.

Now we may have, according to the scriptures, Christ was crucified on the 14th day of Abn, or April, in the middle (or middle) of the week, meaning the last week of the seventh. This is just 4864 years; then the balance eighteen hundred and thirteen and a half years more, would just make the 2300 days, or years. Now carry the last year from the Passover to the fall of the seventh month, then you will have just 1813 full years to come. Then, of course, every full year unto the last, must end here; and it is not in the power of man to make them end any where else, but in the seventh month. Whether it is in the power of any individual, who says he believes in the speedy coming of Christ, to show any thing about their coming, since Oct. 1844, because you have here, and it is not likely we ever shall know of any other place or point, for their coming. If the beginning of the six, three years, has proved a failure, and made the subject grow dark, some, what can be expected from a further experiment. If any one disputes this point, he will consider a great error by showing where they do end.

There is one more point; that is, God's people are now in their trial favored by prophets and apostles; and in their every day experience. If they deny this, then they cannot look for Jesus, because that first must take place en masse in river; and according to the type, it must be while Jesus our great high priest is cleansing the sanctuary—by turning to Lev. xviii: 27-29 versus, we see the type of affliction was always on the tenth day of the seventh month, in the day of atonement, and it continued all the time that the high priest was in the most holy place, cleansing the sanctuary. This means for this is obvious; if we turn to Lev. xvi: 16—"And he shall make an atonement for the holy place because of the uncleanness of the edificium of Israel, and because of their transgressions in all their sins." etc.; see also 29-34 versus, particularly the 30th verse. Thus the true meaning of the cleansing of the sanctuary is, Christ our high priest in the sanctuary which the Lord pitched and not man; Heb. xii: 2, that is, the new Jerusalem in the heavens, making atonement, or blotting out the sins of his true waiting people; and while he is doing this, they are in their trial. "Here is the palace of the Father," so it was in the type referred to, with this difference—that day and trial had atonement was "Jesus came to earth," just twenty-four hours, whereas ours is to be such the tenth "day of the seventh month," until God tears out of Zion and thence his voice from Jerusalem, then Jerusalem will be holy, the atonement will be finished—Joel iii: 16, 17—"God's people be cleansed, smelt, and the captivity of Zion turned. This will be the shaking of the heavens and the earth, the sea and all nations. Matt. xxiv: 29; Amos i: 2; Hag. ii: 6-7; Jer. xiv: 20, 21; Hab. xii: 26; Eze. xlii: 22, 28. According to the signs given by Jesus, the next after this will be the sign of the sun of man in heaven: "And thus the son of man." Matt. xxiv: 30. But as the world is to be taken by surprise, "saying peace and safety," they will not long be troubled with the shaking of the heavens and earth, it will pass from the mind, most likely, as has the cry of antichrist, so that after this, Christ will "come as a thief." But I do not design now to take up the argument, but merely refer to these points to show our position. For further reference, see Why Maran. I now propose to show the certain signs and conclusions of all these adventures who have dated the past, and the ending of the 2500 days. As I have already shown, they have prolonged, et, as in Prov. i: 27, "added to the days." The 2500 days, all the time from when they ended, Oct. 1644, to the extreme end of 1847, which would be three and a half years. Hence on the morning the house; well, we see they have finally moved them 1800 days. But God calls to Daniel and says: "What is that portend that ye have in the hand of Jacob, saying this days are prolonged, and every vision Abiath, 7th then every, thus with the Lord God, I will make this portend to come, and they shall no more use it as a portend in Israel, but say unto them the days are at hand and the effect of every vision, for there shall be no more any vain visions, nor flattering deception with the houses of Israel: For I am the Lord, I will speak, and the word that I shall speak shall come to pass; it shall be so even if prolonged, for in your days, O rebellious house, I will say the word, and will perform it, with the Lord God" xii: 22-25. Thus change here we notice: etc., that the effect of every vision is to fail with the rebellious house of Israel. Thus, then, most certainly includes the gift of Daniel's vision on the second advent between, it is the gift of every vision. The effect of Jesus's vision fills with this every vision. The effect of Jesus's vision fills with this. Now we actually know that the gift of Daniel's vision since 1644, has caused the whole world to tremble. We have no account in history that any vision, or all the visions of the prophets together, ever began, as it were, to have such an effect as was produced here to Oct. 1644. From that time the effect began to come. Second, here at the end of the prolonging of the days then, of this vision, God is to speak. It is well known that he never has spoken to the world since those prophecies were seen; therefore this is in the future, and fulfil here at this point of time, and after this gift, and before the coming of Jesus. Third, then these days spoken of here are no other than the days of Daniel's vision, to measure them, as Ezekiel's vision nor any other vision given in the prophecies, have chronological times to mark their fulfilment, were Daniel's and John's. Regarding the rebellious house of Israel, the prophecies plainly and comparatively describe them to be in those last days, according to Ezekiel. The 27th and 28th verses of this xii chapter of Ezekiel in more emphatic still: "They of the house of Israel (and rebellious house), say the vision that he hath in his many days to come (yes, it is already advanced that his patience. Where is it shown that they do this? Answer--in Rev. XIV: 12th verse, "Here is the patience of the Saints; here are they that keep the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus." Yes! here are they who are denounced as "door shutters" and "great sticklers for the seventh day Sabbath, in and out of almost every door but the right one, following anything but the Word of God and sound reason!" triumphed at last. How amazing these things appear; not more so perhaps than to the prophets when looking down into our history and beholding this first class composed of the leading messengers and about all of the shepherds, after leading the whole flock out into the most dangerous part of their journey, desert, denounce, and betray them; and then go and form themselves into a confederacy and positively disregard the message which God pressed upon them, viz. "Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God," &c. I rejoice in my soul and praise the living God, who is seated upon his Great White Throne in the height of his Sanctuary in the heaven of heavens, that I am still numbered in this third part. Call me what you please, my feet are planted on the Rock. I had rather suffer affliction with the Outcasts, than enjoy the pleasures of sin with all other people. Praise the Lord! if faithful, we shall soon enter the everlasting kingdom. Amen.

CHRIST'S SECOND COMING TO GATHER HIS PEOPLE

According to the Scriptures, God will deliver his people out of the time of trouble that is now flying from the coasts of the earth, and to all appearances forming a junction in this retributive land of blood and slavery; by his voice from heaven, when He has sealed them, and Christ has made the atonement and fitted the mansions in the New Jerusalem, then they will be his chosen ones to execute the "judgment written." After this, in the order of events, the Lord Jesus will "descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God," &c. When God speaks from Jerusalem, then, I believe the "wise will understand" how long it will be before Jesus comes. "The times and seasons are with the Father." I believe that the Scriptures most clearly teach Christ's second coming at the feast of Tabernacles, and no where else; and that our history, in the fulfillment of prophecy, has been imperceptibly tending us there. Here is the chain in the types: "THREE times a year shall all thy males appear before the Lord thy God." These three feasts are typical of three of the most important events since the birth of our Lord Jesus Christ, and every advent believer should have a clear understanding of them. 1st, the feast of the Passover; 2nd, Feast of Weeks; 3rd, Feast of Tabernacles.

First feast was the crucifixion of our Lord at the Passover, on the 14th day of the first month, at 3 o'clock P.M., the very day and hour the lamb was offered in the type for sixteen hundred and seventy years.

Second feast--the day of Pentecost, 1670 years from the time that the commandments were uttered by the voice of God, in the morning, Exo. XIX:16; see Acts II:15, undoubtedly at the same hour. Now as these two feasts are perfectly fulfilled, we have nothing farther to do with them here; only to say, that God never taught any other way to find the fulfillment of these two most important events, than by their typical observance.

Third feast--on the 15th of the seventh month; the feast of the Tabernacles. This undoubtedly represents the gathering of all Israel at the coming of Christ; the ingathering of the harvest; the end of the 6000 years; the end of the world. I see no other point of time for Christ to come than at the feast; see Deut. XVI:1-16; Lev. XXIII; Numb. XXVIII, and XXIX. It cannot be possible that God has been so exact in the fulfillment of the first two, to the very hour of the day, and then left the other without order or time! No, no! Here is the gathering of all Israel; see Lev. XXIII:39-44. Now, this being true, all of the other events which precede this in this chapter, must, to harmonize with the types, be fulfilled first. Now there are three types in this feast; their harmony and order are as follows; First--24th verse is the memorial of trumpets. This is the type of the sounding of the seventh trumpet; there is nothing else for an anti-type--(try and see). Then it is fulfilled by Rev. X:7--"In the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the Mystery of God should be finished." &c. This then, we have shown, sounded on the first day of the seventh month, 1844. Here the virgins were were divided, and the wife came yet ready for the coming of the Bridegroom to the marriage. See Wey March, 36 to 37th pages.

Seventh type—57th verse—"Also on the 10th day of the seventh month, there shall be a day of atonement,—ye shall afflict your souls, for whatsoever soul it be that shall not be afflicted in that same day, he shall be cut off from among his people." Thus, of course, was fulfilled; but it was a type to represent the third state which the virgin in the parable entered into on the tenth day of the seventh month, 1844, when they saw their Lord did not come. Here is where the atonement commenced with the affliction, and as they ended together in the type, so we believe they will in the anti-type, when God speaks from Zion—Isai iii: 16, 17; see Wey March, pp. 66, 69. Now it is certainly evident that God's people are in this very state. This, then, according to the type, proves the Bridegroom as 11th First, offering in the sanctuary, fulfilling the atonement for the same people.

The third type in order, and the last in this kind, is the feast of Tabernacles, 34-35-41st verses. This is yet to come—the true feast of our deliverance. What a harmonious perfect chain is here. First we first day of seventh month, 1844; the seventh trumpet sounds, and the Mystery of God is finished; third we come; "raging divide; on the tenth day of the same month, Bridegroom comes to the wedding; marriage takes place; then that; 41st day trumpet sounds to prepare for the Jubilee and changes in the kingdom of heaven; cleansing of the sanctuary commenced; the rapture on the 1st; the appointed time, the 2300 days ended, and a cry at midnight, with all its accompaniments. If the seventh trumpet has begun to sound, then the rest have followed. If the saints are here in their trial, then the seventh trumpet must have sounded first, or confusion would follow in the type. The story came first, and the chain is broke. Take it in all its parts, it is perfect, harmonious, and complete. Here, too, I understand, ends all the days of Daniel. The church is perfect, and has answered its end. The world here also received their last warning. The Gospel age ends; the message is, "comfort ye, comfort ye my people." If this was not all done before Christ should come, the scriptures would be broken. It is perfect someone to talk of having these things done at his coming, or after he comes. Tell me, if you can, how Christ can stand for his people in the midst of Babylon, at his coming? And then tell me where the saints are to be on their trial, if they will his coming first? Tell me, if you can, where you will place the third son, which brings in the time of trouble, at which the saints are to be delivered? Tell me, if you can, how, and for what purpose the seventh messenger will begin to sound his trumpet, while Jesus is awaiting the triumph of God, and abating for his saints to leave the earth in a moment? And as the seventh messenger is some of the living saints, tell me, if you can, how they will have time even to turn and say the Mystery of God is finished? Tell me, if you can, why God is going to have every thing in confusion at that day, when he has always had perfect order in heaven and earth, ever since the creation? Two things to be kept in remembrance: First—The 11th chapter of Revelations does not touch the coming of Christ in the spirit, nor at any other point. Second—The ingathering of all Israel after the power of God is most clearly taught to be at the feast of Tabernacles, the last type in the Pent, yet unfinished. All the others that have been, and are now fulfilling in these feasts of the Lord, have been tested to the day, and even to the hour of the day.

A CORRECTION.

I perceive that I have made a mis-statement, on page 86, 13th line; also page 69, sixth line from the top, in calling the 16th day of the first month, a holy convocation day, instead of the 14th, which always commenced at the beginning of the 14th day and ended when the 21st began.—Exo xii: 16. The week about this, was to be waved on Sunday morning, the morrow after the Lord's Supper.—Lev xxiii: 3, 11—all which makes the restriction on the third day as clear as light—two nights and three days.

AN
TYPICAL AND ANTI-TYPICAL SANCTUARY,
BY THE SCRIPTURES.
WITH A CHART.

BY JOSEPH DATES.

NEW BEDFORD:
PRESS OF BENJAMIN LINDSEY.

EXPLANATION OF THE CHART:

It appears that God's instruction to Moses on Mount Sinai, was the most simple and yet the most impressive imaginable, viz: Sun-ows. When the sun shines, how clearly the shadows of things, animate and inanimate, appear. Even little children, without the aid of books, can understand them. How impossible to counterfeit the shadows of every day scenes around us.

Then, by giving a little attention to the instructions of God to Moses, in the Mount, we may clearly understand the ministrations of Jesus, our high priest in the holy place in heaven, since his ascension.

By following this instruction we may learn the manner, time and termination of the daily ministration of Jesus in the heavens, &c. &c.

Take one example of this teaching. The time in which God delivered his people from Egypt, about 3440 years ago, they were directed to kill a lamb at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, on the 14th day of the first month, viz: Abib or April. This was to be continued at its appointed season every year, and thus more than fifteen hundred years passed on to the 14th day of the 5th month, A. D. 31, even at three o'clock in the afternoon, and Jesus the Lamb of God yielded up the ghost. This certainly was exact. Can any other type fail? No, no. "And look that thou make them after the pattern which thou was caused to see in the mount." Exo. xxv: 40.

"For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made," &c. Rom. i: 20. What things? A part of what is drafted in the Chart, teaching us more clearly the "Present Truth," viz. The SABBATH AND SHUT DOOR.

Patterns of things, and instructions which Moses received from God on Mount Sinai.

No. 1. This is the Court, simply an enclosure for the Tabernacle. One hundred cubits long, fifty wide, and five high. See Exo. xxvii: 18.

No. 2. This is the Tabernacle in the court, and is thirty cubits long, ten wide, and divided in two apartments—first, the Holy—second, the Most Holy.

No. 3. BRAZEN ALTAR.—No. 4. BRAZEN LAVER.—The place for Burnt, Peace, Trespass and Meat offerings, of the Tabernacle door for the Priests to wash in. Exe. door. See Exo. xxvii: 18-21. 1-9; Lev. iv. v. vi.

FURNITURE OF THE TABERNACLE.

No. 5. GOLDEN CANDLE-STICK.—Southside, represents the seven churches. Rev. i: 20; ii: 1.

* Oil denotes faith. Math. xxv. 8.

Lamp denotes Word of God. Ps. cxix: 105.

Light denotes "Present Truth," 1 Peter i: 12.

No. 6. GOLDEN TABLE.—Northside, twelve leaves of the state of the church, replenished every Sabbath morning. Exo. xxv: 23-30. Lev. xxiv: 5-8.

No. 7. GOLDEN ALTAR.—Before the Vail, continual incense and the golden censer. Exo. xxx: 7-10.

No. 8. ARK OF THE TESTAMENT.—Covered every where with gold. Exo. xxv: 10, 11, 13.

No. 9. MERCY SEAT.—Covering of the Ark. Exo. xxv: 17.

No. 10. CHERUBIMS.—of beaten gold on each end of the Mercy Seat. Exo. xxv: 18-21.

No. 11. HIGH PRIEST.—Aaron. Exo. xxviii: 1-42.

No. 12. GOLDEN CENSER.—in the hand of the High Priest.

No. 13. TABLES OF THE COVENANT.—In No. 8, the Ark. Exo. xl: 20; xxxiv: 28, 29.

OUTSIDE OF THE COURT.

A. & B. Moses and Aaron on the East with their households.

MEN ARMED FOR WAR.

C. On the East towards the Sun's rising, Juda, Issachar and Zebulun: numbering 186,400 under the standard of the Lion.

D. On the South, Reuben, Simeon, and Gad, with 151,650, under the standard of the Cherub.

E. On the West side, Ephraim, Manasseh and Benjamin, with 168,160, under the standard of the Man.

F. On the North, Dan, Asher and Naphtali, with 157,600 under the standard of the Flying Eagle.

All the armed men number 603,550. Num. ii: 32.

Levi and Joseph are not with the men of war.

The tribe of Levi are separated for the Priesthood and burden bearers of all the holy and most holy things.

The three sons of Levi with their tribes are stationed as near the Ark of the Testimony as possible, that no evil come upon the congregation of Israel while they keep the charge of the Covenant (ten Commandments.) Num. i: 53.

G. Merari on the North with 5,200 burden bearers.

H. Gershon on the West with 2,650 burden bearers.

I. Kohath on the South with 2,750 burden bearers.

All of these 8,550 keep in charge the Court, Tabernacle, and all its furniture, and bear it which ever way the cloud moves.

The cloud by day and fire by night, rests on the Tabernacle.

The 603,550 armed men, 8,550 burden bearers of the tribe of Levi, with their families, probably numbering two and a half millions.

Manasseh and Ephraim are substituted for Joseph and Levi, to complete the twelve tribes. Gen. xlviii: 5.

THE PRIESTHOOD IN THEIR DAILY MINISTRATION.

Aaron, the brother of Moses, is the first High Priest for the Holy Sanctuary. His sons are his successors and with him in the Ministry. Exo. xxix: 1-38.

In this daily ministration the individual brings his sac-tifice for his sin of knowledge to the Brazen Altar, slays it and prepares the fat for the Priest, who burns it upon the Altar, and thus atonement is made for the individual sin until the Crucifixion of our Lord, Jesus Christ. The body or carcase of the beast is then burnt without the camp.

Thus the daily atonement for individual sins goes on throughout the year, until the 10th day of the 7th month, then the trumpets sound to call the people to their

NATIONAL ATONEMENT, CLEANSING THE HOLY SANCTUARY.

"An Holy Convocation: an Ecclesiastical Assembly."

[J. E. Wessely.]

The 10th day of the 7th month every year, the holy sanctuary is cleansed. This is the day the sweet incense from the Golden Censer ascends up between the wings of the Cherubims to the Father. This is the day of the sprinkling of blood on the mercy seat and seven times before it, and seven times on the Golden Altar. This is the day of affliction for all Israel, and is to be a Sabbath or rest, from even to even, [24 hours.] you shall rest your Sabbath. The sum of all this whole day's work is in eighteen words, viz. "because of the uncleanness of the children of Israel, and because of their transgressions in all their sins." Lev. xvi: 16.

The following will explain the Convocation day: Lev. xvi: 17, 33; Num. xxix: 7; Lev. xxiii: 1, 27; day of affliction 22 v., rest day or Sabbath, and when to begin it, 32. Day of blood, Lev. xvi: 14, 15, 18, 19, in the Holy Sanctuary, 33. Day to use the Golden Censer 12, 13. See where the multitude was when Zac. performed the service: Luke i: 10. Paul's exposition of this day's work: blood offered for the errors of the people. Heb. ix: 7, the mercy seat, and seven times before the mercy seat, 11, 14. Then kill the goat whose lot falls to the Lord, 9 v. and with his blood enters the holy again and sprinkles his blood upon the mercy seat and seven times before it, 15 v. He also sprinkles the blood of the bullock, and the goat seven times upon the Golden Altar and upon the horns thereof, to cleanse it because of their transgressions, 18, 19.

The scape goat shall then bear away all their sins, 20-

22. And the Priest shall make an atonement for the Holy Sanctuary, and for the Tabernacle of the congregation and the Altar, and for the Priests, and for the people, 33 v.

In this manner the national atonement was to be made every 10th day of the 7th month, until a Priest should come who had no beginning or end of days.

Paul calls them shadows of good things to come. In his epistle to the Hebrews, he shows that Christ came to take these first away that he may establish the second: x: 9, 10.

He also shows that we, under the gospel, have just such an high priest, who is minister of the Sanctuary and of the true Tabernacle which the Lord pitched and not man, viii: 1, 2. He also comments on the Tabernacle and Holy Sanctuary, (See ix: 1-5,) and shows for what the High Priest entered the holiest of all (6, 7.) to blot out the errors of the people.

To understand the good things, (Heb. x: 1,) we must follow the pattern which means types, shadows or figures. Paul shows, first, that Aaron or the High Priest was not a perfect shadow of Christ, but Melchisedec was in all other respects that which Aaron could not be, for he was both King and Priest, without descent, having neither beginning of days nor end of life, but made like unto the Son of God. Heb. vii: 1-3.

Second, that he needed not to offer daily for his and the people's sins, for this he did once when he offered up himself, 27th verse.

Third, nor yet that he should enter into the holy places every year, with the blood of others. He does it but once, (ix: 25, 26,) but he does not enter but one holy place at a time. In other respects Christ will follow Aaron and his successors.

K. ANTI-TYPE OR SUBSTANCE.

Now consider the Tabernacle and furniture in the buildings on the Chart, as a pattern of things in the heavens, and the High Priest to represent the Lord Jesus, as in Heb. viii: 1; ix: 1-5.

When did Jesus ascend there? Ans.—A. D. 31.

Where did he commence his daily Ministration? as Mediator for all the world? Ans.—In the Holy Place.

Proof—Paul, Heb. ix: 12; John, Rev. i: 12, 14; Jesus, Rev. ii: 1. The proof is clear that he was in the Holy Place, where the Golden Candlesticks were, sixty-five years after his ascension, from A. D. 31 to 96, and that his daily ministration could not cease until the end of the appointed time, 2,300, "Evening, Morning," or "daily Sacrifice."

The Ancient of Days, (God,) sits between the Cherubims, in the Most Holy Place. This is where he is sought unto when the National Atonement is made. Where then is His THRONE during the daily ministration? Ans.—In the type. See Exo. xxix: 42-44, and xxx: 6, 36. In the anti-type, Jesus says he sits on his Father's Throne, Rev. iii: 21. John in vision sees the throne in the Holy Place where the seven lamps of fire are. See Rev. iv: 1, 2 and 5; v: 1, 7. God was thereon.

How long will Jesus our High Priest Minister in the Holy Place? Answer—Until the appointed time ends.

TWENTY-THREE HUNDRED DAYS.

Where shall we begin? Ans.—In the 7th year of Artaxerxes, 457 years B. C. Add to this 1811 full years and we come to the end of the appointed time.

If it be asked why the twenty-three hundred days ended on the 10th of the 7th month, 1811, we answer because the commandment did not go forth until the middle of B. C. 457, therefore the first six months of that year must be added to B. C. 1811, which brings us to the 10th of the 7th month, 1811, which two numbers add together, and the result is 2300 years, full and complete.

The typical High Priests appointed time was unto 365 days [one year.] Our High Priest's appointed time to cleanse the Sanctuary was unto 2,300 days, [years,] the 10th day of the 7th month was the time in the year: never to be altered. "Every thing upon his day," Lev. xxiii: 4, 37.

The work of the High Priest continued on in the type until Jesus was crucified and nailed, the sacrifice and oblation, to his cross, (Dan. ix: 27; Col. ii: 14,) in the midst of the seventieth week. Here the work of the schoolmaster ceased, (Gal. iii: 23-26,) when Christ ascended and entered the Holy, (Heb. ix: 12,) then faith came. This was in the Spring of A. D. 31.

To this add the last half of the seventieth week, viz.: three and a half years, and we have the 7th month, A. D. 51. Here ends the 420 years of the seventy weeks. To this add 1810 years, and the 2300 years are complete, ending in the fall of 1614.

Now to the 1810 years add the three and a half years the last of the seventy, and we have the whole time, viz. 1813 1-2 years, (save forty days,) for the time of the daily ministration of our High Priest in the Holy Place in Heaven.

Here his work ceased; Ministering and Mediating for the whole world forever; and he like his pattern in the type, entered the Most Holy Place, bearing upon his breast plate of Judgment the twelve tribes of the House of Israel. See Exo. xxviii. 29, and Rev. vii. 4. Here the DOOR IS SHUT.

For further proof, see the parable of the ten virgins: (Math. xxv. 1-12,) most strikingly and peculiarly fulfilled from the Spring to the Fall of 1844. "Great was the company of those that published it." Ancient nor modern history has never recorded the like of God's people. Why? Because there never was to be but one going out to meet the bridegroom, and that must accord with the one in the type, and it did most strikingly! Just look back to 1837, when the glorious doctrine of the second Advent began its rise and move through this land of messengers, with their first and second message.

What was all of this mighty move for? Ans.—To rally all the host of God on earth to get ready for the APPOINTED TIME. The proof was moving and continued to move more and more rapidly until it was clearly seen that the 2300 days of Daniel's vision was the appointed time for the bridegroom to come and his people to go out to meet him. We explained, and at that time believed that the Lord Jesus was personally coming to redeem his people. We were disappointed in our, then explained, expectation. Jesus did not come to this earth then, but the Bridegroom did come, thus fulfilling the parable, and they that were ready went in with him to the Marriage and the door was shut.

Here is where the master of the house, [walking amidst the seven golden candlesticks.] rose up and shut to the door.

DANIEL VII: 9, 10, 13, shows how the Bridegroom came, viz: I beheld till the thrones were cast down and the Ancient of Days, [God the Father,] did sit. Where? In Judgment; between the Cherubims' wings, over the Mercy Seat, where he always set to judge his people, on the 10th day of the 7th month.

The flying Angel in Heaven and swift Messengers on earth, had just finished their message, crying with a loud voice, "the hour of His judgment is come." Where Daniel saw this, 9, 10.

Then one like the Son of Man, (Bridegroom) is brought near before Him, (the Father,) where he sets in Judgment.

This is how the Bridegroom comes, not to earth, but to the Father, just as it was in the type: Jesus is represented like the son of man. When he descends to earth it is the Lord himself.

I have already adduced the proof that Jesus was sitting with his Father on his throne in the Holy, where the seven lamps of fire were. Then at the appointed time, 2300 days, the Ancient of Days moves in something that has wheels burning like fire, with thousands of angels in attendance. Then one like the son of man is brought near before him, 13th verse, [see Chart.] How evident that both Father and Son here left the throne in the Holy and moved into the Most Holy, in accordance also with, and close of, the message of the flying angel in Rev. xiv. 6, 7, to set in judgment; first to decide who is, and who is not worthy to enter the gates of the holy city; while the Bridegroom, High Priest, Mediator and crowned King of Israel stands before him advocating the cause of all presented on his breast plate of judgment. As Daniel sees it, the judgment is now set and the books open.

After this work is accomplished, then comes the Day of Judgment, [year day,] and perdition of ungodly men.

The seven spots of blood on the Golden Altar and before the Mercy Seat, I fully believe represents the duration of the judicial proceedings on the living saints in the Most Holy, all of which time they will be in their affliction, even seven years, God by his voice will deliver them, "For it is the blood that maketh atonement for the soul."

Lev. xvii. 11. Then the number seven will finish the day of atonement, (not redemption.) Six last months of this time, I understand, Jesus will be gathering in the harvest with his sickle, on the white cloud.

After all, many contend that Jesus entered the Most Holy Place at his ascension. We have given sufficient proof to the contrary. Yet because of a few texts in Hebrews they object. Let us place two translations in juxtaposition.

KING JAMES'S TRANSLATION.

The Holy Ghost thus signifying, that the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while as the first tabernacle was yet standing. Heb. ix. 8.

Neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood he entered in once into the holy place, &c. ix. 12.

It was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these. 23d verse.

For Christ is not entered into the holiest places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us. 24th verse.

Having therefore, brethren, boldness, or liberty to enter into the holiest, by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way which he hath consecrated for us through his death, that is to say his flesh. v. 19, 20.

MACKNIGHT'S TRANSLATION.

The Holy Ghost signifying this: that the way of the holiest place was not yet laid open, while the first tabernacle still standeth. Heb. ix. 8.

He hath entered once into the holiest place, not indeed by the blood of goats and of calves, but by his own blood, &c. ix. 12.

There was a necessity therefore that the representations indeed of the holiest place in the heavens, should be cleansed by these sacrifices; but the heavenly holiest place themselves, by sacrifices better than these. 23d verse.

Therefore Christ hath not entered into the holiest place made with hands, the images of the true holiest place, but into heaven itself, now to appear before the face of God on our account. 24th verse.

Well then brethren having boldness in the entrance of holiest places, by the blood of Jesus; which entrance he hath dedicated for us, a way new and living through the veil, that is his flesh. ix. 19, 20.

Now read Paul's description of these two holy places in other translation (Heb. ix. 1-5,) and see how clear and lucid Macknight makes these texts appear by comparing them with the pattern given to Moses. (See chart.) One thing remember, that the two veils or doors open from the east, therefore it was morally impossible for any one to enter the second veil without passing the first, and then read carefully ix. 6, 7, and it must be seen that neither high priest in the type or anti-type, could enter the Holiest of all first, or even have any service to perform there, until they had first ministered in the holy place. Every argument of Moses and Paul is right opposite to it. Why? It makes the shadow bottom upwards even to pass through the holy and go into the holiest first. The high priest could not go there until he had ministered in the holy one year; Jesus our high priest could not enter into the holiest in Heaven until he had finished his daily ministration and filled his Mediatorial office for all the world from A. D. 31 to A. D. 1844, 1843-44 years.

But, say you, there is one more text in Heb. vi. 19, 20, "which entereth into that which is within the veil," whether the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus made an high priest forever, after the order of Melchisedec." Some think here is proof that our High Priest entered in to the holiest or most holy place first. I ask, where? We see there is a second veil, ix. 3. We have already adduced proofs of his entering within the first veil and of his being there sixty-five years after his ascension. See page 8.

REVELATION X : 7.

"The message of the Second Advent descending from heaven to earth 'one foot on the sea and the other on the land,' with hands uplifted to heaven, crying with a loud voice that time should be no longer. " But in the days of the voice of the seventh angel when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God should be finished, as he hath declared to his servants, the prophets. 7th verse. In the type, (Lev. xxiii. 24,) the trumpet sounds the 1st day, the day of atonement and affliction, ten days after; so in the anti-type, the seventh trumpet must sound before the day of atonement and affliction comes. When it BEGINS TO SOUND, the mystery shall be finished. Paul shows this mystery to be the gospel to the Gentiles. Eph. iii. 4-9. He speaks of its ending and mercy being extended to a remnant of literal Israel before the second advent. Rom. xi. This also is where the door is shut at the end of the 2500 days. The times of the Gentiles are over.

HOSEA V : 6, 7.

"They shall go with their flocks and their herds to seek the Lord, but they shall not find him, he hath withdrawn himself from them. Now shall a month devour them with their portions." How evident that this is after the door is shut and Jesus had gone, or withdrawn himself into the holiest.

REVELATION III.

And to the Angel of the church in Philadelphia, write: He that openeth and no man shutteth and shutteth and no man openeth. 7th verse.

I know thy works, behold I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it. 8th verse.

This open and shut door spoken of here by our great High Priest in Heaven, (Heb. ix. 14; viii. 1) is the same of which was shown Moses in the pattern. Exo. xxxvi. 33, 36. [See Chart.] Paul says, second veil, meaning of course two; first and second. Heb. ix. 2, 3.

The door in 20th verse, is the door of the heart. The meaning is this: After the door is shut and the one in the holiest open which no man can shut; Jesus rebukes, chastens and counsels the Laodiceans to repent and turn back to the open door set for the Philadelphia Church, from which they separated in the Spring of 1845.

In the second and third chapter of Revelation, the Church is divided into seven parts or states, during the Gospel dispensation. The charge of Jesus is very emphatic and peculiar to them all, and can only apply to them in their organized state. The fifth state of the Church is Sardis: iii. 1-6; out of which the great body of the second Advent believers came in 1813 and '44.—4th and 5th verses.

The sixth state of the Church is Philadelphia. It was made up or organized by second Advent believers principally from the churches, in the fifth or Sardis state.

The seventh state is the Laodicean, organized by those who left the Philadelphia after the 2,300 days, the appointed time, had ended. Hosea describes all their converts, v. 7. This is the state which the great head of the church is laboring to disband and dissolve: iii. 14-21; see particularly 19th verse. Repent (and turn to the Philadelphia) for there is no other state of the Church since 1844, where the new commandment can be kept:

John xiii. 34, 35. Bible definition shows it to be the state or church of brotherly love.

Bring to remembrance things in 1844. Comparisons for that time are beyond our reach—past, present and future. The rushing from the sectional, sectarian branches of the nominal church (or Sardis state,) at that time, has no parallel. All, all was tending to a state of brotherly love. It was the noblest, and most mighty and glorious work ever performed by the church on earth. "The vision spoke," Hab. ii. 3. Here then, at the close of this cry at midnight, this going out to meet the Bridegroom, was the point of time when the Philadelphia church was organized. This, I believe, is beyond dispute. Here, then, is where the language of Jesus applies, viz: opens one door and shuts another. Are not these the two doors in heaven, of which Moses received the pattern? [See Chart.]

Again. Is it not plain that the Laodicean, the seventh state, is organized after the sixth state? Yes. Then after the door is shut the Laodiceans organize, and not before.

The seventh state of the church has been organized about five years. It is in vain to say this is not so, and yet look for the second advent of Jesus. These three last states of the church will be here when Jesus comes. They all exist now. The scripture is not to be found, nor an argument from it framed, to prove that the shutting and opening a door in the text is not to be until the second Advent. Then is it not plain and conclusive, that the door was shut when this Philadelphia church was organized in the fall of 1844.

"And the temple of God was opened in heaven and there was seen the Ark of his Testament, or Covenant;" Rev. xi. 19. John, in his vision, speaks of this temple of God several times and as familiarly as of the temple which was in old Jerusalem, where he formerly worshipped, before it was destroyed. The Ark of the Covenant seen here is the same as in Paul's holiest of all: Heb. ix. 3. "The temple in heaven was opened." None but Jesus the master of the house, did this. How clearly this accords with his testimony to the Philadelphia church: iii. 7. The great object for opening this temple was to cleanse the sanctuary at the end of the 2,300 days, the appointed time, and in its season corresponding with the type, viz: 10th day of the 7th month. This door was shut during the 1813-12 years that the other was open. Now this is open and the other shut. While Jesus is pleading for the house of Israel in the holiest no third person is there! See the type, Lev. xvi. 17. As soon as the day of atonement is ended, seven angels come out of the temple with the seven last plagues, xv. 6, 6. This is the duration of the third angel's message in Rev. xiv. 9-13. *

A great voice from the temple directs them to go and pour out the vials of wrath, and when the seventh is poured out, a great voice from the temple, from the throne, saying, it is done! xvi. 1, 17. This is the voice of God.

The third angel in Rev. xiv. 9-13, continues his message and cry, until Jesus leaves the temple and is seated on the great white cloud. He begins as soon as the 2,300 days' end, and the door in the temple opens, for here is where he gets his message. Hear him—"Here is the patience of the saints, here are they who keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus." Why cry this? Because he sees inside of the door of the temple, [see Chart,] the Ark of the Covenant containing the ten original commandments, of which Moses received a copy, pattern or type, and placed it in the typical sanctuary here on earth.

This is God's Covenant with man. See with what sacred strictness and attention he required it to be guarded, viz. 22,000 sanctified Levites to pitch around about, and guard it "that no wrath come on the people." Num. i. 53; iii. 38; Besides the 600,000 armed men on each quarter, on the outside. Is there any less attention in guarding the original Covenant in heaven? No. There it is deposited in the Ark, covered with the Mercy Seat. A Cherubim on each end covering it with their wings; the water of life flowing out from under it. Since the door was opened in 1844, our great High Priest stands before it, and God between the Cherub Wings above, with his all-seeing eye upon it. Ten thousand times ten thousand angels for an outside guard.

God gave the pattern in charge to Moses and forbids him to add or diminish from it.

God says, "My Covenant will I not break, nor alter the word that is gone out of my mouth," at Mount Sinai.

Now we are told by one class of people that the fourth commandment in this Covenant was changed or altered at the resurrection of Jesus, while another in all their zeal declare they were all abolished at the crucifixion of Jesus. Neither of these two classes of people can produce one single text from Genesis to Revelation to prove their assertion.

He has said he will not break nor alter! God can not lie! •Why continue to charge him with folly! His commandments are as holy, pure and binding to-day, as ever they were, and it is not in the power of man to prove them otherwise.

Why this third angel's loud cry about the commandments of God, because the fourth one, which had been trodden down for many generations, is to be restored and kept as the commandment requires. The second angel's message and voice from heaven required God's people to leave the churches. The seventh-day Sabbath could not, nor can not now be restored there. It is to be done in the Philadelphia state of the church, and no where else. This is the present truth in the commandments in the Ark of his Testimony. The present truth in this is: That the master of the house has risen up and shut the door, and now stands beside the Ark containing the commandments. The "Present Truth," then, of this third angel's message, is, THE SABBATH AND SHUT DOOR. See the picture on the Chart.

To prove this I have adduced the following Scriptures in order:

1. The appointed time for it, unto 2,799 days. Dan. viii, 13, 14.
2. Daniel's night visions in the night. vii. 9, 10, 13.
3. Parable of the Virgins and their history. Matt. xxv. 1-12.
4. Paul's commentary to the Hebrews. viii., ix. and x.
5. Second Advent Message and Mystery doubled. Rev. x.
6. Begotten strange children since 1844. Heb. v. 7.
7. Philadelphia state of the church. Rev. iii. 7, 8, and xii. 17.

The Ark of the Testimony from which comes the Sabbath commandment, could not be seen until Jesus shut the first door and opened the second. Hence the door is shut before the Sabbath is given in the Message.

JOSEPH BATES,

Fairhaven, Mass.

Dear Brethren and Sisters—

The Lord has shown me that it is my duty to relate to you, what he has revealed to me relating to the present truth, our present tried, scattered and tempted state, and our duty in view of the coming judgments of God.

Sabbath, March 24th, 1849, we had a sweet, and very interesting meeting with the Brethren at Topsham, Me. The Holy Ghost was poured out upon us, and I was taken off in the Spirit to the City of the living God. There I was shown that the commandments of God, and the testimony of Jesus Christ, relating to the shut door, could not be separated, and that the time for the commandments of God to shine out, with all their importance, and for God's people to be tried on the Sabbath truth, was when the door was opened in the Most Holy Place of the Heavenly Sanctuary, where the Ark is, containing the ten commandments. This door was not opened, until the mediation of Jesus was finished in the Holy Place of the Sanctuary in 1844.

Then, Jesus rose up, and shut the door in the Holy Place, and opened the door in the Most Holy, and passed within the second veil, where he now stands by the Ark; and where the faith of Israel now reaches.

I saw that Jesus had shut the door in the Holy Place, and no man can open it; and that he had opened the door in the Most Holy, and no man can shut it: (See Rev. iii: 7, 8;) and that since Jesus has opened the door in the Most Holy Place, which contains the Ark, the commandments have been shining out to God's people, and they are being tested on the Sabbath question.

I saw that the present test on the Sabbath could not come, until the mediation of Jesus in the Holy Place was finished; and he had passed within the second veil; therefore, Christians, who fell asleep before the door was opened in the Most Holy, when the midnight cry was finished, at the seventh month 1844; and had not kept the true Sabbath, now rest in hope; for they had not the light, and the test on the Sabbath, which we now have, since that door was opened. I saw that Satan was tempting some of God's people on this point. Because so many good Christians have fallen asleep in the triumphs of faith, and have not kept the true Sabbath, they were doubting about it being a test for us now.

I saw that the enemies of the present truth have been trying to open the door of the Holy Place, that Jesus has shut; and to close the door of the Most Holy Place, which he opened in 1844, where the Ark is containing the two tables of stone, on which are written the ten commandments, by the finger of Jehovah.

Satan is now using every device in this sealing time, to keep the minds of God's people from the present, sealing truth; and to cause them to waver. I saw a covering that God was drawing over his people, to protect them in the time of trouble; and every soul that was decided on the truth, and was pure in heart, was to be covered with the covering of Almighty God.

Satan knew this, and was at work in mighty power, to keep the minds of as many as he possibly could unsettled, and wavering on the truth. I saw that the mysterious knocking in N. Y. and other places, was the power of Satan; and that such things would be more and more common, clothed in a religious garb, to lull the deceived to more security; and to draw the minds of God's people, if possible, to those things and cause them to doubt the teachings, and power of the Holy Ghost.

I saw that Satan was working through agents, in a number of ways. He was at work through ministers, who have rejected the truth, and are given over to strong delusions to believe a lie that they might be damned. While they were preaching, or praying some would fall prostrate and helpless; not by the power of the Holy Ghost, no, no; but by the power of Satan breathed upon these agents and through them to the people. Some professed Adventists who had rejected the present truth, while preaching praying or in conversation used Mesmerism to gain adherents, and the people would rejoice in this influence, for they thought it was the Holy Ghost. And even some that used it, were so far in the darkness and deception of the Devil, that they thought it was the power of God, given them to exercise. They had made God altogether such an one as themselves; and had valued his power as a thing of naught.

Some of these agents of Satan were affecting the bodies of some of the saints; those that they could not deceive and draw away from the truth by a satanic influence. Oh! that all could get a view of it as God revealed it to me, that they might know more of the wiles of Satan, and be on their guard. I saw that Satan was at work in these ways to distract, deceive, and draw away God's people, just now in this sealing time. I saw some who were not standing stiffly for present truth. Their knees were trembling, and their feet were sliding; because they were not firmly planted on the truth, and the covering of Almighty God could not be drawn over them while they were thus trembling.

Satan was trying his every art to hold them where they were, until the sealing was past, and the covering drawn over God's people, and they left out, without a shelter from the burning wrath of God, in the seven last plagues.

God has begun to draw this covering over his people, and it will very soon be drawn over all who are to have a shelter in the day of slaughter. God will work in power for his people; and Satan will be permitted to work also.

I saw that the mysterious signs and wonders, and false reformatations would increase, and spread. The reformatations that were shown me, were not reformatations from error to truth; but from bad to worse; for those who professed a change of heart, had only wrapt about them a religious garb, which covered up the iniquity of a wicked heart. Some appeared to have been really converted; so as to deceive God's people; but if their hearts could be seen, they would appear as black as ever.

My accompanying angel bade me look for the travel of soul for sinners as used to be. I looked, but could not see it; for the time for their salvation is past.

At the commencement of the Holy Sabbath, (Jan. 6,) we engaged in prayer with Bro. Balden's family at Rocky Hill, Ct., and the Holy Ghost fell upon us. I was taken off in vision to the Most Holy Place, where I saw Jesus still interceding for Israel. On the bottom of his garment was a bell and a pomegranate, a bell and a pomegranate. Then I saw that Jesus would not leave the Most Holy Place, until every case was decided either for salvation or destruction; and that the wrath of God could not come until Jesus had finished his work in the Most Holy Place—laid off his priestly attire and clothed himself with the garments of vengeance. Then Jesus will step out from between the Father and man, and God will keep silent no longer; but pour out his wrath on those who have rejected his truth. I saw that the anger of the nations, the wrath of God, and the time to judge the dead, were separate events, one following the other. I saw that Michael had not stood up, and that the time of trouble, such as never was, had not yet commenced. The nations are now getting angry, but when our High Priest has finished his work in the Sanctuary, he will stand up, put on the garments of vengeance, and then the seven last plagues will be poured out. I saw that the four angels would hold the four winds until Jesus' work was done in the Sanctuary, and then will come the seven last plagues. These plagues enraged the wicked against the righteous, and they thought that we had brought them down upon them, and if they could rid the earth of us, then the plagues would be stayed. A decree went forth to slay the saints, which caused them to cry day and night for deliverance. This was the time of Jacob's trouble. Then all the saints cried out with angelical of spirit, and were delivered by the Voice of God. Then the 144,000 triumphed.

Their faces were lighted up with the glory of God. Then I was shown a company who were bowling in agony. On their garments was written in large characters, "thou art weighed in the balance, and found wanting." I asked who this company were. The angel said, "these are they who have once kept the Sabbath and have given it up." I heard them cry with a loud voice—"we have believed in thy coming, and taught it with energy." And while they were speaking, their eyes would fall upon their garments and see the writing, and then they would wall aloud. I saw they had drunk of the deep waters, and fouled the residue with their feet—trodden the Sabbath underfoot, and that is why they were weighed in the balance and found wanting. Then my attending angel directed me to the City again, where I saw four angels winging their way to the gate of the City, and were just presenting the golden card to the angel at the gate. Then I saw another angel swiftly flying from the direction of the most excellent glory, and crying with a loud voice to the other angels, and waving something up and down in his hand. I asked my attending angel for an explanation of what I saw. He told me that I could see no more then, but he would shortly show me what those things that I then saw meant.

Sabbath afternoon one of our number was sick, and requested prayers that he might be healed. We all united in applying to the Physician who never lost a case, and while healing power came down, and the sick was healed, the Spirit fell upon me, and I was taken off in vision. I saw four angels who had a work to do on the earth, and were on their way to accomplish it. Jesus was clothed with Priestly garments. He gazed in pity on the remnant, then raised his hands upward, and with a voice of deep pity cried—"MY BLOOD, FATHER, MY BLOOD, MY BLOOD, MY BLOOD." Then I saw an exceeding bright light come from God, who sat upon the great white throne, and was abed all about Jesus. Then I saw an angel with a commission from Jesus, swiftly flying to the four angels who had a work to do on the earth, and waving something up and down in his hand, and crying with a loud voice—"HOLD! HOLD! HOLD! HOLD! until the servants of God are sealed in their foreheads." I asked my accompanying angel the meaning of what I heard, and what the four angels were about to do. He shewed me that it was God that restrained the powers, and that he gave his angels charge over things on the earth, and that the four angels had power from God to hold the four winds, and that they were about to let the four winds go, and while they had started on their mission to let them go, the merciful eye of Jesus gazed on the remnant that were not all sealed, then he raised his hands to the Father and pleaded with him that he had spilled his blood for them.— Then another angel was commissioned to fly swiftly to the four angels, and bid them hold until the servants of God were sealed with the seal of the living God in their foreheads.

I have seen the tender love that God has for his people, and that it is very great. I saw an angel over every saint, with their wings spread about them: and if the saints wept through discouragement, or were in danger, the angel that ever attended them would fly quickly upward to carry the tidings, and the angels in the City would cease to sing. Then Jesus would commission another angel to descend to encourage, watch over and try to keep them from going out of the narrow path: but, if they did not take heed to the watchful care of these angels, and would not be comforted by them, and continued to go astray, the angels would look sad and weep. Then they would bear the tidings upward, and all the angels in the City would weep, and then with a loud voice say, Amen. But if the saints fixed their eyes on the prize before them, and glorified God by praising him, then the angels would bear the glad tidings to the City, and the angels in the city would touch their golden harps and sing with a loud voice—Alleluia! and the heavenly arches would ring with lovely songs. I will here state, that there is perfect order and harmony in the holy City.

All the angels that are commissioned to visit the earth, hold a golden card which they present to the angels at the gates of the City, as they pass in and out. Heaven is a good place. I long to be there, and behold my lovely Jesus, who gave his life for me, and be changed into his glorious image. Oh! for language to express the glory of the bright world to come. I thirst for the living streams that make glad the City of our God.

The Lord has given me a view of other worlds. Wings were given me, and an angel attended me from the City to a place that was bright and glorious. The grass of the place was living green, and the birds there warbled a sweet song. The inhabitants of the place were of all sizes, they were noble, majestic and lovely. They bore the express image of Jesus, and their countenances beamed with holy joy, expressive of the freedom and happiness of the place. I asked one of them why they were so much more lovely than those on the earth. The reply was—"we have lived in strict obedience to the commandments of God and have not fallen by disobedience, like those on the earth. Then I saw two trees, one looked much like the tree of life in the City. The fruit of both looked beautiful; but of one they could not eat. They had power to eat of both, but were forbidden to eat of one. Then my attending angel said to me—"none in this place have tasted of the forbidden tree; but if they should eat they would fall." Then I was taken to a world which had seven moons. There I saw good old Enoch, who had been translated. On his right arm he bore a glorious palm, and on each leaf was written Victory. Around his head was a dazzling white wreath, and leaves on the wreath, and in the middle of each leaf was written Purity; and around the leaf were stones of various colors, that shone brighter than the stars, and cast a reflection upon the letters, and magnified them. On the back part of his head was a bow that circled the wreath, and upon the bow was written Holiness. Above the wreath was a lovely crown that shone brighter than the sun. I asked him if this was the place he was taken to from the earth. He said "it is not; but the City is my home, and I have come to visit this place." He moved about the place as if perfectly at home. I begged of my attending angel to let me remain in that place. I could not bear the thought of coming back to this dark world again. Then the angel said—"you must go back, and if you are faithful, you, with the 144,000 shall have the privilege of visiting all the worlds and viewing the handy work of God."

Dec. 18, 1848, the Lord gave me a view of the shaking of the powers of the heavens. I saw that when the Lord said "heaven" (in giving the signs recorded by Matt., Mark and Luke,) he meant heaven, and when he said "earth" he meant earth. The powers of heaven, are the Sun, Moon and Stars: they rule in the heavens. The powers of earth are those who bear rule on the earth. The powers of heaven will be shaken at the voice of God. Then the Sun, Moon, and Stars will be moved out of their places. They will not pass away, but be shaken by the voice of God.

Dark, heavy clouds came up, and clashed against each other. The atmosphere parted and rolled back, then we could look up through the open space in Orion, from whence came the voice of God. The Holy City will come down through that open space. I saw that the powers of earth are now being shaken, and that events come in order. War, and rumors of war,—sword, famine and pestilence, are first to shake the powers of earth, then the voice of God will shake the Sun, Moon and Stars, and this earth also. I saw that the shaking of the powers in Europe is not (as some teach) the shaking of the powers of heaven, but it is the shaking of the angry nations.

E. G. WHITE.

My Dear Brothers and Sisters—This is a very important hour with us. Satan has come down with great power, and we must strive hard, and press our way in the kingdom. We have a mighty foe to contend with; but an Almighty Friend to protect and strengthen us in the conflict. If we are firmly fixed upon the present truth, and have our hope, like an anchor of the soul, cast within the second veil, the various winds of false doctrine and error cannot move us. The excitement and false reformatations of this day do not move us, for we know that the Master of the house rose up in 1844, and shut the door of the first apartment of the heavenly tabernacle; and now we certainly expect that they will "go with their flocks," "to seek the Lord; but they shall not find him; he hath withdrawn himself (within the second veil) from them." The Lord has shown me that the power which is with them is a mere human influence, and not the power of God.

Those who have published the "Watchman" have removed the land-marks. I saw, two months ago, that their time would pass by; and then some honest souls, who have been deceived by this time, will have a chance to receive the truth. I saw that most of those who preach this new time do not believe it themselves. I saw that our message was not to the shepherds who have led the flock astray, but to the poor hungry, scattered sheep.

In hope,

E. G. WHITE.

THE SHUT DOOR EXPLAINED.

"And while they went to buy, the bridegroom came; and they that were ready, went in with him to the marriage; and the door was shut."—Matt. xxv., 10.

This text is the concluding part of one of the most important parables ever given by the Messiah, while acting in the capacity of a prophet. Its importance will be evident, when we consider the circumstances under which it was given, and the time of the fulfilment of those events it is designed to represent. The time of their fulfilment may be clearly known by the events which precede, and those that immediately follow.

This parable is a part of that memorable and last conversation that Christ had with his disciples, before the night of his betrayal, in which he portrayed to them the destruction of Jerusalem, and the signs and events which should immediately precede his coming, and the end of the world. Let us, therefore, waive every other consideration of minor importance, and candidly, and thoroughly investigate this all-important subject.

The text, according to its natural division, contains five parts:—

1. The buying of oil.
2. Coming of the bridegroom.
3. The going in with him.
4. The marriage.
5. The shut door.

1. The buying of oil is designed to represent a fruitless effort, on the part of the foolish virgins, to obtain that which would produce light upon the subject of the coming of the bridegroom. It also appears that they had previously a stinted share of oil, which for a short time produced a little light, barely enough to lead them to go forth at the first cry to meet the bridegroom. But while they were in the tarrying time, their light became darkness; and when the second cry was made at midnight, "BEHOLD THE BRIDEGROOM COMETH, GO YE OUT TO MEET HIM," they (excited more by fear than love) made an effort to obtain light; but not being ready, could not go in, and "THE DOOR WAS SHUT."

2. Coming of the bridegroom.

The definition of bridegroom is one newly married, or about to be united in marriage to a bride. Now if the term bridegroom, in this parable, applies to Christ, (which all will admit,) then all the scenes represented by this parable are to have their fulfilment in close connection with the marriage, or the giving of the bride to Christ. Here, two questions arise; first, what is represented by the bride, and second, where is she to be given to Christ, or where is the marriage to be solemnized?

First, what does the bride represent? The angel said to St. John, while in holy vision, "Come hither, I will show thee

THE BRIDE, THE LAND'S WIFE."

Here John was shown "that Great City, the Holy Jerusalem." See Rev. xxi., 9, 10. St. Paul, in his letter to the Galatians, says, "But Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all." Gal. iv., 26. From these quotations we learn that the Holy City, the New Jerusalem, which John saw "coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a BRIDE ADORNED FOR HER HUSBAND," is what is represented as the bride; and its being given to Christ is compared to a marriage. Second, where is the marriage to take place? Said Jesus, "Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning; and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord, when he shall RETURN FROM THE WEDDING."—Luke xii., 35, 36.

"He said therefore, A certain nobleman went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return." Luke xix., 12. Daniel also, in the night visions, saw one like unto the Son of man come to the Ancient of days, and he was brought "NEAR BEFORE HIM; and there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom." See Dan. vii., 13, 14. From these passages, it is plain that the receiving of the kingdom (which includes capital, territory and subjects) is what is compared to a marriage, or receiving a bride; and that it takes place near before him, (the Ancient of days,) a little previous to his "RETURN FROM THE WEDDING," in the "far country."

If the above is the correct position in reference to the bridegroom, the bride, and the marriage, then it follows of necessity that the coming of the bridegroom is not to the earth; but "near before" the Ancient of days, to receive the bride, or New Jerusalem, the capital of the kingdom, in connection with the territory and subjects, previous to his second advent; and also, that the coming of the bridegroom, and Christ's second appearing, are two distinct and separate events.

3. The going in with him.

There is, evidently at this point in the parable, a change in the position of the bridegroom, and also in the relation he sustains to the church and world. Now, in order that we may arrive at a correct understanding of this important change, let us examine what inspiration has taught us of the priesthood of Christ in the heavenly sanctuary, which plainly shows this change. St. Paul, in his letter to the Hebrews, written A. D. 64, says, "Now of the things which we have spoken this is the sum: We have such an high priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens; a minister of the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man."—Heb. viii., 1, 2. By reading the eighth and ninth chapters of Hebrews, you will readily discover that Paul, in order to lead us to a correct understanding of all things pertaining to Christ, while occupying the position and relation of priest, points us back to the Aaronic priesthood, the worldly sanctuary, with its apartments, furniture and services as figures, or true representations of the heavenly priesthood, sanctuary, furniture and services. O! how little is known of Christ and his work in the heavenly sanctuary, through a neglect to compare type with antitype, and shadow with substance; and how ready are such neglectors to brand any one with fanaticism, who presumes to follow inspiration in this matter.

I would here state, that we have the best authority for referring to Moses and the prophets. Christ, after his resurrection, said to his disciples—"These are the words which I spake unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled which were written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the psalms, concerning me."—Luke xxiv, 44. Also, Paul, while a prisoner at Rome, when they had appointed him a day, and many came to him, into his lodging, expounded and testified to them "the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the law of Moses, and out of the prophets, from morning till evening."—See Acts xxviii, 23. "Having therefore obtained help of God, I continue unto this day, witnessing both to small and great, saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come."—Acts xxi, 22.

The prophet Malachi, while describing the burning day, and addressing those to whom the prophet Elijah should be sent, before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord, says, "Remember ye the law of Moses my servant, which I commanded unto him in Horeb for all Israel," &c.—See Mal. iv, 1-4. From these Scriptures we see that we are not only directed to the law of Moses, but a positive injunction is laid upon us to remember it. Not to keep it; for its ordinances were nailed to the cross; but its types and shadows, as St. Paul has taught, were figures of the true. They were a true representation of the "good things to come" connected with the ministration of Christ in the heavenly sanctuary. Therefore, they are our positive, and only sure guide, contained in the oracles of truth, to lead us to a correct understanding of the work of Christ in "THE TRUE TABERNACLE, WHICH THE LORD FITTED, AND NOT MAN."

The Apostle Paul clearly shows that Christ, while fulfilling his priesthood, occupies a sanctuary containing two apartments; the Holy, or first tabernacle, and the Holiest of all, or second tabernacle, within the second veil. In the Holy is the candlestick, the table of shew bread, and the golden altar.—See Heb. ix, 2; Ex. xl, 14-26. In the Holiest of all, is the ark of the covenant, the mercy-seat, and the two cherubims overshadowing the mercy-seat, above which is seen the most excellent glory, or Ancient of days.—See Heb. ix, 2-5; Ex. xxvi, 32, 34.

I am now prepared to explain the third division of the text, viz. "they that were ready went in with him to the marriage." In order to make the matter perfectly plain to your understanding, let us go back, and see in what way they went in, under the typical services.

Under the Moesian economy, a cycle of one year embraced all the ordinances, and services of the tabernacle, and typified all the services of Christ, while acting in the capacity of a priest. Under the type there was a daily ministration for the sins of the people, for three hundred and sixty-four days, then that ministration ceased. Then on the last day of this cycle of three hundred and sixty-five days, or the tenth day of the seventh month, the high priest, having washed himself in pure water, puts on the holy garments, made expressly for the services of this day. Thus prepared, he passes from the Holy, into the Holiest of all, bearing on the breast-plate of judgement the names of all the tribes of Israel. In this manner, all the true Israel went in with him.

Thus Christ, in the antitype, in the true tabernacle in heaven, closes the antitypical daily ministration in the Holy Place, clothes himself in the holy garments, having on the breast-plate of judgement, on which is inscribed the names of the true Israel of God, who are described by the following words in the text, "they that were ready." Thus arrayed, he is prepared to perform all the services of the antitypical tenth day, and passes into the Holiest of all before the Ancient of days. Thus, they that were ready went in with him to the marriage as he went in to receive his bride, "and the door was shut."

The cleansing of the sanctuary, blotting out the sins of all Israel, and sending them away upon the head of the scape-goat, &c. in the type, were performed by the high priest on the memorable tenth day of the seventh month, all of which were shadows of the services of Christ in the heavenly tabernacle, after his ministration in the Holy Place closes; some of which I may notice hereafter.

4. The marriage.

I think there are but three portions of Scripture in the New Testament that speak of marriage, which refer to Christ. The parable of the king's son, Matt. xxii, 2-14; the parable of the ten virgins, Matt. xxv, 1-12, and Rev. xix, 7-9; in all these it is used as a figure, to represent something that is not real marriage; but that which bears a close resemblance to it. Therefore, the only reasonable conclusion that I can arrive at is, that marriage, when used in reference to Christ, represents the receiving into close connection, and perpetual union, the Kingdom, or some component part of the Kingdom.

When the prophet says, "thy land shall be married,"—see Isa. lxii, 4—he means that the territory or locality of the Kingdom is to be brought into close connection with the King or Kings and Loins or Loins. When the New Jerusalem is adorned as a bride for her husband, and is given to Christ, and the saints or virgins go in with him, as guests to the marriage, then it is that he receives the capital of his promised and long looked for Kingdom.

And when, as described to John in vision—see Rev. xix, 1-9—God shall have judged her that did corrupt the earth with her fornication, and "shall have avenged the blood of his servants at her hand;" and when the voice as "of a great multitude," and "as the voice of mighty thunders" shall proclaim "Alleluia, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth, let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him; for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready;" and when to her is "granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white," which "is the righteousness of saints," then the subjects of the Kingdom become the bride; and in joint-heirship with the bridegroom possess "the Kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the Kingdom under the whole heaven."

5. THE SHUT DOOR.

A door supposes a change of scenery, or a change from one apartment to another. There are several things to which the term door is applied, such as "door of utterance," and "door of faith." "I am the door," said Jesus. But the door mentioned in the text represents not only a change in the position of the bridegroom, (Christ,) but it also shows a change in his relation to the world, from that which he previously held. Here, again, let us examine the services of the typical priesthood, that we may understand the services of Christ in the antitype. After the priests had performed the daily services, ordained especially for the Holy Place, or first apartment, and the memorable tenth day of the seventh month had arrived, then there was an entire change in the services of the sanctuary to be performed on that day.

By reading the sixteenth chapter of Leviticus, you will find that the high priest here washes his flesh in water, puts on the holy garments, and enters upon an entire new work. The offering up of the daily sin-offerings has ceased, and the high priest, on this day, stones for or blots out the sins of Israel, and removes them from the altar, where they have been imputed or laid during the year, through the blood of the victims daily offered. On this day of atonement, or of cleansing the sanctuary, the high priest (as above stated) passes into the Most Holy Place, bearing on the breast-plate of judgement the names of all such as, through obedience to the typical ordinances, have applied for a remission of sins, through the blood of their victims there offered; and THE DOOR of the first apartment is SHUT. "And there shall be no man in the tabernacle of the congregation when he goeth in to make an atonement in the holy place, until he come out, and have made an atonement for himself, and for his household, and for all the congregation of Israel.—Lev. xvi, 17. On this day of atonement, he is a high priest for those only whose names are inscribed on the breast-plate of judgement. Now just as sure as the Aaronic priesthood was a type of the priesthood of Christ, then the sanctuary, with its apartments and appendages, were figures of the true sanctuary in heaven; and the services and ordinances of the earthly tabernacle were shadows of Christ's ministration, which is the substance. With this view of the subject, it is plain that a time in Christ's ministration must come, (before he puts on the kingly robes, and girds his sword upon his thigh, and comes to execute judgement,) that he will cease to be a priest in the first apartment of the true tabernacle for the sins of the whole world, and put on the holy garments, and, with the true Israel of God inscribed on his breast-plate of judgement, go in with them before the mercy-seat, where John saw one having a golden censor offering the prayers of all saints (wise virgins) before the throne; and be a merciful high priest over the household of faith, cleanse the sanctuary and place all the sins of the true Israel upon the scape-goat, which is the devil. Then, he will lay off the priestly garments, and clothe himself with the garments of wrath, and come to gather his elect from the four winds, under heaven, and destroy the wicked, and burn up their city.

Having thus explained the text, I will now examine some ideas suggested in the foregoing exposition. And first, the time of the fulfillment of the events, contained in the text, may be known by those which precede, and those that follow. Christ, after giving the signs of his coming, and a description of what should take place at his coming, proceeds to give a history of some of the scenes which should be transacted previous to that event. It appears that just before his coming, his wise and faithful servants, seeing the signs fulfilling, and some of the events which were to precede his coming actually transpiring, would raise the soul-thrilling cry—"THE LORD IS COMING," and thus wake up others to an examination of this all-important subject by this "meat in due season." Then this cry would excite those professed servants, who were unfaithful in their Master's cause, and who loved the things of this present world, to raise an opposite cry—"My Lord delayeth his coming." While these opposite cries are being given, THEY commence the fulfilment of the parable of the ten virgins. Here some, by examining the arguments of the faithful servants, and seeing good evidence that the signs were fulfilling, were led thereby to go forth to meet the bridegroom. We here plainly see that the cry of the faithful servants is the cause of their going forth, and that their going forth is the effect produced by this cause; therefore, the fulfilment of the parable could never commence without the cry, "The Lord is coming," being first raised by the faithful servants.

Having shown how this important parable must commence, let us examine the different steps of its progression. First, the virgins go forth to meet the bridegroom; second, they meet with a disappointment; third, they wait or tarry, still believing that his coming is near, yet, by waiting, they become drowsy, and slumber and sleep; fourth, a cry is heard, "BEHOLD THE BRIDEGROOM COMETH, GO YE OUT TO MEET HIM;" fifth, a trimming of lamps, and an effort, on the part of the foolish virgins, to procure oil; and sixth, the scenes described in the text take place. Now has there been a succession of events, within our second advent experience, which bears an exact resemblance to the above named events in the parable? If there has, then we have, at least, some good reasons for believing that the door is shut.

When Bro. Miller, and those who became acquainted with him, and adhered to his expositions of the prophecies, went forth faithfully showing to the world that according to the best light they could obtain from the prophecies, the prophetic periods and the signs, that Christ would come by the end of the Jewish year 1843, then the faithful servants gave "meat in due season." And while giving this cry, the hireling priest, the infidel, and the drunkard, united in raising the cry, "My Lord delayeth his coming."—"These are fanatics who say he is coming;" and thus they smote their fellow-servants. Here were two events, perfectly fulfilling in all their features, the acts of the faithful and wise servants, giving "meat in due season," and the evil servants, uniting with the drunkard, in opposing the truth, who will reap their reward with hypocrites in bitter weeping, and gnashing of teeth.

While these two cries were going throughout the width and breadth of the land, the specified time came, and the virgins, with the word of God, (their lamps,) went forth fully expecting to meet the bridegroom at that point of time. Now for a disappointment, and tarrying time. Were these the next events that actually transpired in our experience after we went forth in the spring of 1844 to meet the bridegroom? Thousands, thousands can answer this question in the affirmative; and the evil servants have not yet forgotten to reproach and taunt us with this disappointment. Next in this series of events is a cry at midnight, or about the middle of the slumbering and sleeping time, "Behold the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him." This also, was fulfilled in exact order as to time and event. It was calculated that the Jewish year, 1843, would end the twenty-first of March, 1844; and this was the time of the first going forth. The second going forth was on the tenth day of the seventh month, 1844. The tarrying time, or time of slumbering and sleeping, was the space between these two points; and at the centre point, or midnight, the second cry began to be heard, which increased in power and effect as it went throughout the land, waxing louder and louder, until the virgins were fully awake.

Thus we had in our experience, previous to the tenth day of the seventh month, 1844, a perfect fulfilment of all the events in the parable, as stepping stones to the next door; and since that time, the event, (knocking at the shut door,) that was to take place after the shutting of the door, has not failed to fill up the concluding scene in the drama. We are thus brought to a clear and perfect fulfilment of every feature of this important parable, and also to a clear fulfilment of those Scriptures connected with, and relating to the shut door; such as the parable of the great supper, Luke xiv, 16-24; the proclamation of the "mighty angel," "that there should be TIME NO LONGER," Rev. x, 1-8; the flying angel, proclaiming the hour of judgement come, Rev. xiv, 6, 7; and the cleansing of the sanctuary, &c. Therefore, we are brought, by the force of circumstances, and the fulfilment of events, to the irresistible conclusion that, on the tenth day of the seventh month, (Jewish time,) in the autumn of 1844, Christ did close his daily, or continual ministration or mediation in the first apartment of the heavenly sanctuary, and SHUT THE DOOR, which no man can open; and opened a door, in the second apartment, or Holiest of all, which no man can shut, (see Rev. iii, 7, 8,) and passed within the second veil, bearing before the Father, on the breast-plate of judgement, all for whom he is now acting as intercessor. If this is the position that Christ now occupies, then there is no intercessor in the first apartment; and in vain do misguided souls knock at that door, saying "Lord, Lord, open unto us." The words of the prophet apply to the fulfilment of this point in the parable.

"They shall go with their flocks and with their herds to seek the Lord; but THEY SHALL NOT FIND HIM—HE HATH WITHDRAWN HIMSELF FROM THEM.

"They have dealt treacherously against the Lord, for they have begotten STRANGE CHILDREN; now shall a moth devour them with their portion."—Hosea v, 6, 7.

But, says the objector, does not this leave the present generation, who have passed the line of accountability, since that time without an intercessor or mediator, and leave them destitute of the means of salvation? In reply to this objection, I would remark, that as they were then in a state of INNOCENCY, they were entitled to a record upon the breast-plate of judgment as much as those who had sinned and received pardon; and are therefore subjects of the present intercession of our great high priest.

The professed conversions, through the instrumentality of the different sects, are also urged as positive proof that the door is not shut. I cannot give up the clear fulfilment of prophecy, in our experience, which shows the shut door in the past, for the opinions, fancies and feelings of men, based upon human sympathy and a superstitious reverence for early imbibed views. God's word is true, though it prove all men liars. As a stream is of the same character as the fountain that seeds it forth, (see James iii, 11,) and does not rise higher than the fountain, so these professed converts will not rise to a better state than the low standard of the fallen sects; therefore, they are converted to the religion of the various sects, but not to God, and the high and holy standard of the Bible. The Prophet Hosea saw this time; and for "our learning" and guide has written—"They have dealt treacherously against the Lord; for they have begotten strange children."

DAVID ARNOLD.

Fulton, N. Y. Dec. 18, 1849.

DANIEL'S VISIONS, THE 2300 DAYS, AND THE FIRST BOOK.

The three visions of Daniel recorded in the second, seventh and eighth chapters, were given expressly for those who live in the last days.

"There is a God in heaven that revealeth secrets, and hath made known [margin] to the king Nebuchadnezzar what shall be in the latter days." Dan. ii, 28. Said Gabriel, "At the time of the end shall be the vision." Dan. viii, 17.

In the first vision given to Daniel, previously given to the king in a dream, an image is shown as a representation of four universal monarchies, comprising the Babylonian kingdom over which Nebuchadnezzar then reigned, the Medo-Persian, the Grecian, and the Roman in its eastern and western divisions, represented by the legs of iron. Its subsequent division into ten kingdoms, is represented by the ten toes of the image, in which state the kingdoms of this world are to be broken in pieces together, and become like the chaff of the summer threshing-floors, and blown away that no place shall be found for them.

Then is shown to Daniel, that the God of heaven will set up a kingdom which shall stand for ever. The evident design of this dream, and vision was first, to show the proud, ostentatious monarch of Babylon, that his kingdom would soon be wrested from him, and given to others; and second, to point out to those who should live in the divided state of the Roman kingdom, that they were living in the last form of government that could be occupied by earthly rulers, and that he, who should rule in righteousness, is about to put down all rule and authority, and reign supreme and eternal on the throne of his father David.

Daniel's second vision, recorded in the seventh chapter, is but a counterpart to the first, representing the same kingdoms by different symbols, which in addition to pointing out their existence, also gives a brief outline of their character;—blood thirsty, ferocious and destructive. The division into ten parts is also clearly delineated. Daniel also saw the thrones cast down, the Ancient of days sitting in judgement, the opening of the books, and the judgement executed upon the beast, because of the great words spoken by the horn.

In the same vision, he also saw one like the Son of man coming, [not to the earth] TO THE ANCHOR OF DAYS, where there is given him a kingdom, glory and everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away.

His third vision, which appeared to him in the palace at Shushan, in the third year of Belshazzar's reign, was also a view of the Medo-Persian, Grecian and the Roman kingdoms, showing the existence of the Medo-Persian and its downfall; the rise of the Grecian on its ruins; the fall of the first Grecian king, and the consequent division of the kingdom into four lesser powers, represented by four horns.

He is also shown a power arising out of one of those horns, small in its beginning, but increasing until it becomes exceeding great. That this is the Roman kingdom, is established by the fact of its standing up against the Prince of princes. This power also, is seen by Daniel to extend its dominion over the land of Judea, or "pleasant land," and to exercise its power in casting down many of the Jews and their teachers, and in crucifying the Saviour, or "Prince of princes;" thus putting an end to all the Jewish ceremonies and sacrifices—the daily and yearly, and also destroying the city and sanctuary.

Then Daniel's attention is called to another scene. Two personages appear, which he calls "saints." A question is asked by one involving the time of treading down the Jews, and their city and sanctuary. The other gives an answer, containing a measurement of time reaching to the end of the treading down, and to where the sanctuary shall be cleansed. Having given the outlines of this vision, I now propose to examine it more closely by the light of scripture and reason, (the two gifts of our Creator on which is based our accountability) and point out where those who still hold on to the old theory, that the sanctuary to be cleansed is the earth, and that the 2300 days reach to the appearing of Christ, are laboring under a serious error.

As the Medo-Persian and Grecian kingdoms are not brought to view in connection with the treading down, I shall pass to notice the doings of the little horn, or the civil power of Rome; recorded in verses 9, 10, 11 and 12.

A horn, when used as a prophetic symbol, represents power; therefore, out of one of the four powers into which the Grecian kingdom had been divided, there arose a little power which waxed, or increased until it "became exceeding great," extending its dominion not only south and east, but also over the pleasant land, where the Jews then dwell.

The term "little horn" is here used only to denote the small beginning of the civil power of the Roman kingdom, and has no allusion to the "little horn" spoken of in Dan. vii, 8, for that is used expressly to designate the small beginning of the ecclesiastical power which arose several centuries after the civil power of Rome had become "exceeding great," and after its division into ten horns, or powers. Consequently in the verses above quoted we have nothing to do with any power save the civil power of Rome.

One of the many curses which the Lord told the Jews he would bring upon them if they "displeased his statutes, and did not keep all his commandments" was—"They that hate them should reign over them;" and that he "would deliver them into the hand of their enemies."

Rome, while extending its conquests, and increasing its power, is permitted by Providence to bring under its iron rule "the host" to whom God had given "statutes and commandments," also a sanctuary, where he required a "daily sacrifice," and a YEARLY CLEANSE. But they transgressed. Therefore, Daniel is taken off in vision by the Holy Spirit, in the third year of Belshazzar's reign over Babylon, and is shown the rise and fall of the Gentile powers, down to the rise and extension of Rome, and its subjugation and treading down of the once "mighty and holy people;" because of their transgression against the daily sacrifice. (See marginal reading of verse 12.)

He also sees the same oppressive power "standing up against the Prince of princes;" thus putting an end to the legality of all the daily sacrifices instituted at Sinai to be daily observed until the Seed should come. Here Christ, the substance, or great antitypical sacrifice was slain by the Roman soldiers. Thus by Rome "the daily sacrifice was taken away," and the place of his sanctuary was cast down by Titus, a Roman general, when he destroyed the city of Jerusalem, and the temple of God, which contained "the sanctuary." Here commenced the fulfilment of Christ's prophetic declaration. "And they shall fall by the edge of the sword and shall be led away captive into all nations, and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, UNTIL THE TIMES OF THE GENTILES BE FULFILLED." Luke xxi, 24.

Daniel having seen how the Romans would tread down the Jews, their sanctuary and city, is by this view prepared to understand the full meaning of the question—How long shall the sanctuary and the host be made desolate, and trodden under foot because of their transgression against the daily sacrifice?

The answer (as I understand it) is—The Jews, their city and sanctuary shall be trodden under foot of the Romans, or Gentiles, unto 2300 days, then shall the sanctuary be cleansed. Now how many events can we reasonably suppose, from this question and answer, will take place at the termination of the 2300 days? Can we with any degree of reason infer that Christ will appear to the astonished gaze of a doomed world? I see nothing to justify such an inference here, or elsewhere. Can we suppose from anything shown in this vision that this sin-cursed earth will then be cleansed? Such a supposition is baseless; and every system based on such a supposition, or inference, is like castles built on air. The inspired word nowhere recognizes the earth as a sanctuary, and common reason, if nothing else, would lead us to conclude that as the sanctuary that was "trodden down" was a type of a better sanctuary, and was yearly cleansed, that the one spoken of in the answer must be the antitypical sanctuary.

Then the only reasonable and scriptural conclusion is, that at the end of the 2300 days [years] the Jews who have been trodden down by the Gentile nations will begin to go free, the time of the Gentiles be fulfilled, and the antitypical sanctuary will be cleansed.

But what shall we understand by cleansing the antitypical sanctuary?

The Mosaic priesthood, sanctuary and services were all types or shadows, here on earth, of a heavenly priesthood, sanctuary and services; yet there is this difference between them. By reason of death the earthly had many priests, the heavenly but one: the earthly had many victims, the heavenly but one; the earthly sanctuary was cleansed at the end of every 864 days, the heavenly at the end of 2300 years.

I will also show a few of the many points of agreement between them. The earthly sanctuary, its apartments, furniture, altar, ark of testimony, mercy-seat, cherubims, &c. &c. were made from patterns of the heavenly, [see Ex. xxv. 9-25,] consequently the heavenly must bear a close resemblance to the earthly. In the earthly, sins were daily imputed, or laid upon the altar through the blood of the victims during the 864 days, and then the daily ministration ceased, and the cleansing commenced. In the heavenly sanctuary sins were daily imputed, or laid upon the altar through the blood of Christ, our victim, during the Gospel dispensation, or time of the Gentiles, which ended with the 2300 days, and then the cleansing commenced. In the earthly, when the daily ministration ceased, and the day of atonement came, the high priest prepared for the atonement, or cleansing, by shutting the door of the outer apartment, [see Lev. xvi. 17,] and by putting on the holy garments, with the breast-plate of judgement, and opening the door into the inner apartment or most holy place, then proceeded to cleanse the sanctuary as recorded in the sixteenth chapter of Leviticus. So in the heavenly; when the daily ministration for the world ceased, and the 2300 days, and time of the Gentiles ended, and the time to cleanse the heavenly sanctuary came, Christ our High Priest prepared for the atonement, or blotting out the sins of all Israel, and cleansing the sanctuary, by shutting the door of the first apartment, (which "no man can open," see Rev. iii. 8,) putting on the holy garments with the breast-plate of judgement, containing all the names of the true Israel, and by opening the door of the most holy place (which "no man can shut," see Rev. iii. 8,) and then he proceeded to cleanse the antitypical sanctuary. For a further elucidation, and description of the work of Christ in the heavenly sanctuary, I refer the reader to the law of Moses, of which Christ said—"All things must be fulfilled which were written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the psalms concerning me." Luke xxiv. 44.

An objection is frequently raised that there can be nothing in heaven that needs cleansing. But let us hear Paul on this point. Speaking of the same sanctuary, he says, "It was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these: but THE HEAVENLY THINGS THEMSELVES with better sacrifices than these." Heb. ix. 23. Here Paul gives us clearly to understand that it was necessary that the earthly sanctuary, made from patterns of the heavenly, should be cleansed with the blood of beasts; (for so the law required,) therefore it was also necessary that the heavenly sanctuary, from which the patterns were taken, should be cleansed with better sacrifices. Then there is a sanctuary in heaven to be cleansed "with better sacrifices," and the "Wonderful Numberer" places the cleansing of this sanctuary at the end of the 2300 days. Then what reason have we for holding on to the theory that the 2300 days reach to the appearing of Christ, and the cleansing of the earth by fire? Verily none.

Think not, because Father Miller once preached, and published to the world in the honesty of his heart, as did also the rest of us, that the sanctuary to be cleansed at the end of 2300 days, was the earth, that this must be, for all coming time, your stereotyped faith; and by stretching chronology, and changing a positive command for a mere permit, (that is not early enough by six years,) from which to start the 2300 days, that you will bring their termination down to the coming of Christ, and thus evade the shut door, and climb up some other way into the kingdom.—Neither please yourselves with the idea that you can make sixty-nine weeks answer the purpose, and thus save one week to put down this side of the cross in order to support a groundless theory, when Gabriel has said, seventy weeks are determined or cut off, and marks their end by events which could transpire only at the cross.

Truly said the prophet—"The bed is shorter than that a man can stretch himself on it, and the covering narrower than that he can wrap himself in it." Yes, in spite of all their efforts their nakedness will appear. But says the objector, does not Gabriel, after being told to make Daniel understand the vision, say, "At the time appointed the end shall be!" True, but does he even once intimate that it is the end of time? No; read the whole verse. And he said "Behold I will make thee know what shall be in the last end or the indignation, for at the time appointed, the end shall be;" that is, the end of his special indignation against the Jews as a nation. For further proof of this, see Isa. x. 2, 3, 4. "O Assyria, the rod of mine anger, and the staff in their hand is their indignation. I will send him against an hypocritical nation, and against the people of my wrath [on indignation] will I give him a charge to take the spoil, and to take the prey, and to tread down like the mire of the streets." Daniel in this vision was given a view of this trampling down, and this indignation against the "host" that transgressed against the daily sacrifices; he was also informed that at the time appointed the end of this trampling down and indignation should be. From a careful, prayerful and critical reading of the vision, I can discover nothing to justify the conclusion that it reaches to the coming of Christ, or any of the circumstances in immediate connection with his coming. But it is clear as the light of noonday that it comprises a space of time, commencing about the year 487 before Christ, where the kingdoms of Media and Persia (the two horns of the ram) were high, that is, in the height of their power, and extending along down the stream of time to the breaking and destroying these powers by the Grecian, the subjugation of the Grecian by the Roman, the rise and increase of the Roman, until the once mighty nation of the Jews are brought under its sway, their nationality lost, the great antitypical sacrifice [Christ] slain, as the terminus of all that marked the typical dispensation; the city, temple and sanctuary, once sacred, abandoned to the rapacity of Roman soldiers, and the "host" city and sanctuary devoted to be despoiled until the Gentile dispensation is fulfilled.

The great crowning event which establishes the whole, and puts upon it the "seal" of eternal truth is the cross. The angel Gabriel says to Daniel, "I am now come forth to make thee skilful of understanding, therefore understand the matter, and consider the vision." The vision was given in days, therefore, seven of those days make a week, and the days being prophetic, that is, a year for a day, a week is seven years. Gabriel then measures off seventy weeks of the "vision" and places the cross, and other events connected with it, right at this point, and then declares that this "seals" the "vision." Yet with this plain and positive declaration of Gabriel, many, in order to avoid the inevitable result of Gabriel's explanation, (viz. the end of 2300 days and that door is 1844.) will write, preach and publish in contradiction of Gabriel's plain explanation of the vision. There is now lying before me a paper of eight quarto pages, lately issued from the press, called, "The Watchman," by two professed watchmen on the walls of Zion, in which they labor hard, by ingenious diagrams and calculations, to make their readers believe that the 2300 days and this spring. And in order the more successfully to accomplish their designs, they, finding the cross, by astronomical calculation, could not be moved from A. D. 33, have left it standing there, where it should. Then in order to make a fair show, that the 2300 days would end this spring, they have taken up the last week of the seventy, which Gabriel counted off to Daniel, to reach to the cross, and have placed it around on this side of the cross. This, according to Gabriel's measurement, would leave a space of seven years between the end of the sixty nine weeks, and the cross. Now, what shall these "watchmen" do! This vacuum before the cross must be filled. Well examine closely their diagram, and you will see what they have done. They have slipped the end of the sixty-nine weeks down to A. D. 33; thus covering the space once occupied by the seventieth week. But this leaves a space of seven years at the other end, to be disposed of; and instead of 400 years from the cross, back to the going forth of the commandment, as Gabriel placed it, the "Watchman" gives us but 493. Now how shall this be disposed of! To make it fair, there must be something in the shape of the going forth of a commandment B. C. 430. As nothing of this description can be found within seven years of that time, except a permit to Nehemiah to go up which was thirteen years after the command of Ezra, to which Gabriel refers us; this permit is taken to supply the place of the true command, although it lacks six years of taking place soon enough to properly answer their purpose. But as it is the best they can possibly obtain to answer their demand, in this pressing state of things, and although it lacks six years of being at the right point in chronology, yet they date their starting point at B. C. 431, and then, as it were, compass sea and land to make proselytes to this theory. "O my soul, come not thou into their secret, unto their assembly, be not thou united." From such "watchmen," O Lord, deliver thy people. There are other points in the "Watchman" directly calculated to lead the mind from the truth, as stated by Gabriel; but I have not time nor space to examine them now.

I will now show the true Bible chronology of the 2300 days, as it stands connected with the events pointed out in the vision. First, Gabriel has fixed its commencement at the going forth of a commandment to restore and build again Jerusalem. Having previously put on the seal of the vision by measuring off 490 years, and placing the cross, and its connected events down at that point, he then gives the event which would take place just 490 years before the cross, which was an important command or decree touching the restoration of Jerusalem from the desolation of the seventy years of Babylonian captivity. Gabriel then divides the 490 years or seventy weeks into three unequal parts. The first division, 49 years, he assigns to rebuilding, in troublous times, the street and wall of Jerusalem. To the second division, 434 years, he assigns no particular event. The third division, seven years, or one week, he devotes to the confirmation of the covenant by the Messiah. This brings us to the end of the seventy weeks, or 490 years, and also to the cross, thus confirming his first statement that the seventy weeks reach to reconciliation for iniquity. The statement that after three score and two weeks, shall Messiah be cut off, and have nothing, and the Jews shall be no more a people [margin] does not in the least invalidate Gabriel's previous assertion; (that seventy weeks reached to the making reconciliation;) for it is obvious that seventy is after sixty-nine. Now, let us measure back from the cross 490 years, or seventy weeks, and from this take A. D. 33, the time of the crucifixion, and we have B. C. 457 left. This is the point to which Gabriel has directed us to look for the going forth of the commandment. Recollect, you will find it where Daniel saw a ram, having two horns, "kings of Media and Persia."

In the seventh chapter of Ezra, you will find under the chronology B. C. 457, a decree issued by Artaxerxes, king of Persia, in the seventh year of his reign, touching the restoration of Jerusalem. Here you find all the peculiar marks by which Gabriel describes the commencement of the 2300 days. The chronology is right, the king is a Persian king, and the commandment is truly a commandment, and not a mere permit or consent, as the one referred to by the Watchman is. It is also given touching the restoration of Jerusalem. Not a point fails; all, all is right. Then why cavil, and try to alter what God in his infinite wisdom has made plain? Having found the true starting point so well defined, let us proceed carefully along down, marking minutely each event as we find them placed as way-marks, until we come to the events which mark the final and definite end of the 2300 years.

From the command given B. C. 457, pass down 49 years, and the streets and walls were finished. Then pass down 434 years further, and we come to the last week, which is 7 years,

in which the covenant was to be confirmed, which makes 490 years to the cross, where all the events marking the end of the typical dispensation transpired, and the time of the Gentiles commences. No other events are sketched in this vision, as way-marks from this point, until we come to where the Jews cease to be trodden down by the Gentiles, and the work of cleansing the sanctuary commences. These mark definitely the termination of the time given.

Then as we have clearly found our way down to A. D. 33, let us see how many years from 33 it will take to fill out the time. From the 2300 years, take 480 or seventy weeks, and we have 1810 years left. Then add 33

the time of the crucifixion and we have 1843 for the termination of the 2300 days, and treading down the Jews. But as we have included all of the year B. C. 457, and as the decree went forth, or took effect in the fall of that year, we must, to make full years, add on as much of A. D. 1844, as we throw off from the year B. C. 457. That will bring us to the fall of 1844, where all the events given to mark the end of the 2300 days had a clear and perfect fulfillment. One of those events, as I have shown was, the Jews, were to be delivered from being trodden down of all nations. Are they delivered? This is so well authenticated, and so generally believed, that I will not detain you long on this point.

I will however refer you to an address of M. M. Noah, published in the N. Y. Tribune, vol. 8, No. 13, Dec. 2, 1848, and give a few extracts from the same.

"THE CHAINS OF THE JEWS ARE UNLOOSED, and they ARE ELEVATED TO THE RANK OF MEN." "The Sultan of Turkey, following the march of civilized nations, says to the Jews in his dominions, YOU ARE FREE. You have my permission to build a synagogue at Jerusalem. "To the Jews, this great revelation has been a wonderful manifestation of God's providence, and watchfulness. It has made them MEN, CITIZENS, A PEOPLE, A NATION. It has given them RANK, position, power. It has elevated them to the highest offices." "We have passed through the promised punishments." From these brief extracts and other testimony, I am led to conclude that the Jews are no longer trodden down. Then the time of the Gentiles is fulfilled, the 2300 days ended, and Christ our great high priest has finished his daily ministration in the first apartment of the heavenly sanctuary, for the Gentile world, clothed himself in the holy garments, and shut the door of the holy place, opened the door of the most holy place, and has passed in before the "Ancient of days," bearing on the breast-plate of judgement, all the true Israel, and is now a merciful high priest over the household of faith.

When He, who sees the end from the beginning, has in his condescension given such evidence of his foreknowledge and goodness, as is manifested in this vision, and when I see such a perfect adaptation of all parts of its fulfillment to the prophecy, I cannot doubt but that the closing scenes will be fulfilled with equal precision.

Neither can I believe, that after guarding it with such care down to the cross, He would then suffer human chronology to be so changed as to render a knowledge of its termination wholly uncertain. No, no. He knows his work better than that. O that men knew better than thus to reproach him.

But we are not wholly dependent on chronology. The prophets, Christ and the apostles, have told of events, which have their fulfillment in close connection with the point of change from the Gentile dispensation, to "the dispensation of the fullness of times;" such as the condition of the professed church, the parable of the ten virgins, the cry sent out at supper time, the cry of the mighty Angel, Rev. x, the cry of the angel who proclaimed the hour of his judgement come, and the angel who followed with the Babylon cry, all of which have had a perfect fulfillment in their appropriate places in close connection with the termination of the 2300 days, and the shut door.

May He who has done so much to make the closing scenes of the last days plain to our understanding, inspire us with living faith, and true wisdom, that we may understand the truth, and be sanctified through it.

THE SANCTUARY. 2300 DAYS, AND THE SHUT DOOR.

"Then I heard one saint speaking, and another saint said unto that certain saint which spake, How long shall be the vision concerning the daily sacrifice, and the transgression of desolation, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot? And he said unto me, Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." Dan. viii, 13, 14.

I. THE SANCTUARY.

The definition of the word Sanctuary is "a sacred place," "a dwelling place of the Most High." It cannot be applied to the earth, or any part of it, for it cannot be shown that the earth, or any part of the earth, is "a sacred place," therefore the Sanctuary is not the earth, neither is it the land of Canaan. The word Sanctuary occurs more than one hundred times in the Bible, and in most cases it applies to the tabernacle and temple of the Jews, or first covenant, sometimes to a part, and sometimes to the whole. It is mentioned four times in the New Testament, all in the epistle to the Hebrews. In chapter ix.

1, 2; xiii, 11, it refers to the Sanctuary of the first covenant, and in chapter viii, 2, it applies to the Sanctuary of the second covenant which the "Lord pitched" in heaven. In two texts [Ex. xv, 17, Ps. lxxviii, 54] it is supposed by some that the word Sanctuary applies to the land of Canaan; but by a close examination of these texts we may see that they alone, condemn such a supposition.

"Thou shalt bring them in, and plant them in the mountain of thine inheritance, in the place, O Lord, which thou hast made for thee to dwell in; in the Sanctuary, O Lord, which thy hands have established." Ex. xv, 17. This is a part of the prophetic song of Moses, sung upon the banks of the Red Sea, in praise to God for their deliverance, and in prospect of their settlement in Canaan. Its fulfilment is declared in Ps. lxxviii, 54. "And he brought them to the border of his sanctuary, even to this mountain, which his right hand had purchased." Cruden says—"By Sanctuary here [Ex. xv, 17.] may be understood the temple on Mount Moriah, which God would certainly cause to be built and established." This view is shown to be correct from the context of Ps. lxxviii, 54. After declaring in verse 54 that God brought his people to the border of his Sanctuary, the Psalmist in verses 58, 60, tells us what his Sanctuary was which his hands established. "But chose the tribe of Judah, the mount Zion which he loved. And he BUILT HIS SANCTUARY LIKE HIGH PLACES." The "border" or "place" of the Sanctuary where God planted his people was one thing, and the Sanctuary itself was entirely another thing. The people were planted, and dwelt in the former, but God dwelt in the latter, among his people. Then as these two texts do not prove that the earth, or the land of Canaan is the Sanctuary, but to the contrary, certainly such a view is unscriptural, and should be abandoned at once.

"The Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel." "Let them make me a sanctuary; that I may dwell among them." That Sanctuary was "a sacred place." There the Lord placed his name, and manifested his glory during the typical dispensation of the law of Moses. But when Christ came and was crucified, that dispensation closed, and all the services of the worldly sanctuary were nailed to the cross, and the Sanctuary was no longer "a sacred place." Since that time the Sanctuary has been in heaven.

"Now of the things which we have spoken this is the sum; we have such a high priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens; A minister of the SANCTUARY, and of the TRUE TABERNACLE, which the Lord pitched, and not man." Heb. viii, 1, 2.

This one text is sufficient to show, that when Christ ascended to heaven he entered the "true Tabernacle" or "Sanctuary," and this Sanctuary which the "Lord pitched" in heaven is the Sanctuary that was to be cleansed at the end of the 2300 days.

The Divine comment upon the law of Moses, contained in the epistle to the Hebrews clearly shows that the worldly Sanctuary, its furniture and services, were a "shadow," "patterns," "figures" of the Heavenly Sanctuary, &c. &c.

"Then verily the first covenant had also ordinances of divine service, and a worldly sanctuary."

"For there was a tabernacle made; the first wherein was the candlestick, and the table, and the shew-bread: which is called the sanctuary."

"And after the second veil, the tabernacle which is called the holiest of all;

"Which had the golden censer, and the ark of the covenant overlaid round about with gold, wherein was the golden pot that had manna, and Aaron's rod that budded, and the tables of the covenant;

"And over it the cherubims of glory shadowing the mercy-seat; of which we cannot now speak particularly."

"Now when these things were thus ordained, the priests went always into the first tabernacle, accomplishing the service of God:

"But into the second went the high priest alone once every year, not without blood, which he offered for himself, and for the errors of the people." Heb. ix, 1-7.

"It was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these."

"For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us." Heb. ix, 23, 24.

A shadow must resemble its body, and a figure or pattern must be in fashion at least, like the thing itself, therefore the Heavenly Sanctuary must be a literal Temple containing two Holies, the Holy Place, represented by the tabernacle of the congregation, and the Most Holy Place represented by the "tabernacle of the testimony." Macknight's translation makes this point still clearer.

"There was a necessity, therefore, that the representations indeed of the HOLY PLACES IN THE HEAVENS, should be CLEANSSED by these sacrifices; but the HEAVENLY HOLY PLACES THEMSELVES, by sacrifices better than these. Therefore Christ hath not entered into the holy places made with hands, the IMAGES of the TRUE HOLY PLACES, but into heaven itself, now to appear before the face of God, on our account." Heb. ix, 23, 24.

"The Holy Ghost signifying this, that the way of the HOLY PLACES was not yet laid open while the first tabernacle still standeth." Verse 8.

"Hath entered once into the HOLY PLACES, not indeed by the blood of goats and of calves, but BY HIS OWN BLOOD." Verse 12.

No point of Bible truth is more clearly revealed than that there is a literal Temple in heaven, containing two Holies, as distinct as the two Holies of the worldly Sanctuary.

In the worldly Sanctuary the priests ministered 264 days of the year in the Holy Place, and then that door was shut, [see Lev. xvi, 17,] and the high priest alone, on the tenth day of the seventh month, entered the Most Holy Place, and on that day cleansed the Sanctuary. This was "a shadow," "pattern," "figure" of the heav-only, therefore Christ ministered in the Holy Place of the Heavenly Sanctuary until the end of the 2300 days, then he rose up and shut that door, and entered the Most Holy Place to receive the kingdom, and to cleanse the Sanctuary. I will here notice a few objections to this view.

1. The question is sometimes sneeringly asked—"Can there be anything in heaven unclean, and that needs cleansing?" We will let the Divine testimony settle this question. "It was therefore necessary that the patterns of THINGS IN HEAVEN should be purified [cleansed, Macnigh] with these; [blood of beasts;] but the HEAVENLY THINGS THEMSELVES, [Heavenly Sanctuary] with better sacrifices [blood of Christ] than these." Heb. ix, 23. No one will contend that the worldly Sanctuary was of itself impure, yet it was cleansed once a year, "because of the uncleanness of the children of Israel." On the day of atonement the sins of Israel were borne away from the Sanctuary on the head of the scape-goat, then it was cleansed. This will give us the correct view of the cleansing of the Heavenly Sanctuary, at the end of the 2300 days.

While conversing with an advent preacher on this subject not long since, he stated that the Sanctuary to be cleansed at the end of the 2300 days could not be in heaven, for this reason, that there was nothing in heaven that was unclean. I then read to him Heb. ix, 23, 24, and he replied—"I admit that there are things in heaven to be cleansed; but it is not the Sanctuary!" A very poor get off indeed, for a professed teacher in Israel.

2. It is thought by some that there is no literal Temple or Sanctuary in heaven, because St. John says—"And I saw no temple therein, &c." Rev. xxi, 22. Read the whole chapter and you will see that John saw the New Jerusalem, not as it is now, but as it will be when it comes down from God out of heaven, at the close of the 1000 years. Then there will be no Temple in the Holy City. The Sanctuary of Old Jerusalem was made purposely for the old covenant worship, and when that typical system of religion closed, God had no more use for that Temple. The New Jerusalem Temple, "the Lord pitched" in heaven, purposely for the new covenant worship, and when the ministry of Christ is finished, and the saints are all redeemed, there will be no more use for the Heavenly Sanctuary than there was for the earthly after the crucifixion.

"And the temple of God was opened in heaven and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament." Rev. xi, 19. See also Rev. xv, 5, 6.

Here is a positive declaration from the beloved John that he saw a Temple in heaven, and that the ark of the ten commandments was seen in it. This testimony should for ever settle it, that there is a literal Temple containing two Holies in the City of the living God.

Now let me ask the candid reader—Does this testimony of John in chap. xxi, 22, contradict his testimony in chap. xi, 19; xv, 5, 7? This you will not contend. Then the only way you can harmonize these texts is to credit the testimony of Paul and John where they testify that the "Sanctuary," the true Tabernacle, which the Lord pitched and not man, [Heb. viii, 1, 2,] the Temple of God, Rev. xi, 19, the "greater and more perfect Tabernacle," [Heb. ix, 11,] is in the Holy City. But when the whole Israel of God are redeemed by the blood of Christ the Sanctuary will be removed from the City, and it will be as John saw it coming down from heaven. "And I saw no temple therein." Why did John say that he saw no Temple in the City then if there never had been a Temple there? This is certainly strong evidence that he had previously seen the Temple in the Holy City.

3. Some take the ground that Jesus entered the Most Holy Place when he ascended to heaven, because he is represented to be at God's right hand. Now I think that no one will contend that Jesus has been perfectly stationary, at the Father's right hand literally, for more than 1800 years. In fact many who urge this objection, do not themselves believe that the Father has hands; but deny his personality.

In the typical Sanctuary, God manifested his glory in the Holy, as well as in the Most Holy. So in the Heavenly Sanctuary, Jesus can "appear in the presence of God for us" in the Holy Place, as well as in the Most Holy. God's throne is above the cherubim, and his glory can be seen from either side of the second veil.

The candid Bible reader will see that such expressions of Scripture, as "right hand of the throne," "right hand of God," "right hand of power," mean that Christ, who was humbled to the cross, rose from the dead in triumph, and ascended in glory, and is the next in power to the Eternal God.

II. THE 2300 DAYS.

"Unto two thousand and three hundred days; [years] then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." Not a word is said about the "host" [God's true worshippers] being delivered at the end of the 2300 days; only that the Sanctuary should then be cleansed. To Daniel is given two measuring rods, one 2300 years long, the other, a short rod, which is "the time of cleansing the Sanctuary." The short rod is the waiting time, since the termination of the 2300 days, in which time the saints must patiently wait the return of their "Lord from the wedding." Paul calls this short rod "a little while," during which we "have need of patience."

Advent believers agree that the seventy weeks [490 years] were cut off from the 2300, therefore, if we can find out where the seventy weeks begin, we can show where the 2300 days terminate,

Here I will give a very important extract from a "Lecture on Chronology," "Advent Herald" for March 2, 1850.

The Bible gives the data for a complete system of chronology, extending from the creation to the birth of Christ, a clearly ascertained date. From this period downwards we have the undoubted Canon of Prophecy and the undoubted era of NABONASSAR, extending below our vulgar era. At the point where inspired chronology leaves us, this canon of undoubted accuracy commences. And thus the whole arch is spanned. It is by the Canon of Prophecy that the great prophetic period of seventy weeks is fixed. This Canon places the seventh year of ALEXANDER in the year A. C. 457; and the accuracy of the Canon is demonstrated by the concurrent agreement of more than twenty eclipses. The seventy weeks date from the going forth of a decree respecting the restoration of Jerusalem. There were no decrees between the seventh and twelfth year of ALEXANDER. Four hundred and ninety years, beginning with the 7th, most commencing in A. C. 457, and ending in A. D. 34. Commencing in the 90th, they must commence in A. C. 444, and end in A. D. 47. As no event occurred in A. D. 47 to mark their termination, we cannot reckon from the 90th; we must, therefore, look to the 7th of ALEXANDER. This date we cannot change from A. C. 457 without first demonstrating the inaccuracy of PROPHET'S Canon. To do this, it would be necessary to show that the large number of eclipses by which its accuracy has been repeatedly demonstrated, have not been correctly computed; and such a result would unseat every chronological date, and leave the settlement of epochs and the adjustment of eras entirely at the mercy of every dreamer, so that chronology would be of no more value than mere guess-work. — As the seventy weeks must terminate in A. D. 34, unless the 7th of ALEXANDER is wrongly fixed, and as that cannot be changed without some evidence to that effect, we inquire, What evidence marked that termination? The time when the apostles turned to the Gentiles harmonizes with that date better than any other which has been named. And the crucifixion, in A. D. 31, in the midst of the last week, is sustained by a mass of testimony which cannot be easily invalidated. ❧

I am glad that the "Herald" has given this testimony on time. A school boy, that can add and subtract, can see that if the seventy weeks commenced B. C. 457, as shown by the "Herald," the 2300 days certainly terminated in 1844. It was oft repeated in 1843, "FIREBURN WON'T LIE." This is as true in 1850, as it was in 1843.

Jesus caused the "sacrifice and oblation to cease" in the "midst" [middle] of the seventieth week by "nailing it to his cross" in the spring of A. D. 31. To this add three years and a half, the last half of the seventieth week, and it brings us to the autumn of A. D. 34 for the termination of the seventy weeks, [490 years.] Then add 1810 years, the last part of the 2300, which reach to the cleansing of the Sanctuary, and it brings us to the Autumn of 1844. Amen.

At that point of time the Midnight Cry was given, the work for the world was closed up, and Jesus passed into the Most Holy Place to receive the kingdom, and to cleanse the Sanctuary.

With these facts before us, it seems strange that any one should contend that the 2300 days are not ended. A singular period indeed that has extended already five and a half years beyond its real length, and has not ended yet!

The "Watchman," (a paper which advocated the termination of the 2300 days in the Spring of 1850,) says—"There is manifestly a great lack of faith on time." It seems perfectly unreasonable to expect much faith on any time that might be set for the ending of the 2300 days, as we are more than five years this side of where the true calculation that aroused the world, ran out. Since 1844, so many times have been published, with little or no evidence to sustain them, and have had so little effect upon the people, and have passed by, that we may naturally expect the people to be disgusted with any set time for the 2300 days to end in the future, and we may reasonably expect that those who have published these false times will be ashamed of their past course in removing the "landmarks."

III. THE SHUT DOOR.

That there is to be a shut door prior to the second advent, many will admit; yet but few seem willing to have it where it actually took place. Let us take a brief view of our past history, as marked out by the parable of the ten virgins [Matt. xxv. 1-11] and I think we shall clearly see that there can be no other place for the shut door but at the Autumn of 1844.

Here Jesus gives us the history of an eastern marriage, and declares that the kingdom of heaven [the history of the living subjects of the looked for kingdom, for nothing else could go forth to meet the bridegroom &c. &c.] should be likened [compared] unto it. Now in order to compare second advent history with that of an eastern marriage given by Jesus, every event in our history, corresponding with each point in the history of an eastern marriage, must be complete, and we must stand down this side of the shut door, then we can look back and compare both histories. This we will now do.

ADVENT HISTORY.

The doctrine of the second advent of Christ called out a devoted people who took their Bibles [lamps] for their light, and who confidently expected to meet Christ [the Bridegroom] in 1843.

We were disappointed, and the best light we could see, for a few months after that disappointment, was that we were in the terrifying time. In that carrying time we "all slumbered and slept" on time.

But soon we saw that the 2300 days extended to 1844; We saw that it would take all of 457, and all of 1843, to make 2300; therefore it would take as much of 1844, to complete 2300 full years, as had passed from the 457; when the decree went forth. From the best light we could then obtain from the autumnal types we were very confident that the days would end at the seventh month, and the cry—"Behold the Bridegroom cometh" was actually raised, and swelled louder and louder throughout the land, until the advent people were fully awake, anxiously expecting to see Jesus on the tenth day of the seventh month.

MARRIAGE.

"Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, who took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom." &c.

"While the bridegroom tarried they all slumbered and slept."

"And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold the bridegroom cometh; so ye ought to watch."

"Then all these virgins arose and trimmed their lamps."

"And the foolish said unto the wise,

When we came up to that point of time, all our sympathy, burden and prayers for sinners ceased, and the unanimous feeling and testimony was, that our work for the world was finished for ever.

"As he [Christ] is, so are we in this world." 1 John iv, 17. The living branches on earth, will sympathize with, and move in concert with the "true vine" in heaven. The reason why the living branches felt that their work was done for the world, was, because the 2300 days were ended, and the time had come for Jesus to shut the door of the Holy, and pass into the Most Holy, to receive the kingdom, and cleanse the Sanctuary. This change, so wonderfully described in Dan. vii, 13, 14, answers to the coming of the bridegroom and shut door, in the parable.

"Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened [compared] unto ten virgins," &c. When? At this very time, when the faithful servant is giving meat to the "mouaakoz," (not to the unbelieving world,) and is opposed by the evil servant, and when the advent history, marked out by the parable, is fulfilled, and the shut door in the past. Now we may see that the only place for the shut door was in 1844. Amen.

But says the objector—"The door of mercy will not be closed until Jesus comes." We do not read of such a door as "the door of mercy" in the Bible; neither do we teach that such a door was shut in 1844. God's "mercy endureth for ever." See Ps. cxxvi: cvi, 1; cxviii, 1. He is still merciful to his saints, and ever will be; and Jesus is still their advocate and priest. But the sinner, to whom Jesus had stretched out his arms all the day long, and who had rejected the offers of salvation, was left without an advocate, when Jesus passed from the Holy Place, and shut that door in 1844. The professed church, who rejected the truth, was also rejected, and smitten with blindness, and now, "with their flocks and with their herds" they go "to seek the Lord" as still an advocate for sinners; but, says the prophet, [Hosea v, 6, 7,] "they shall not find him; he hath WITHDRAWN HIMSELF from them. They have dealt treacherously against the Lord; for they have begotten strange children."

The reason why they do not find the Lord is simply this, they seek him where he is not; "he hath withdrawn himself" to the Most Holy Place. The prophet of God calls their man-made concerns, "STRANGE CHILDREN;" "now shall a month devour them, and their portions."

Says the objector—"I believe that Jesus is still on the mercy-seat." In answer to this oft repeated assertion, let me say; Jesus never was on the mercy-seat, and never will be. The

Give us of your oil for our lamps are gone out.

"But the wise answered, Not so: lest there be not enough for us and you: but rather go to them that sell and buy for yourselves."

"And while they went to buy, the bridegroom came; and they that were ready, went in with him to the marriage and the door was shut."

mercy seat is in the Most Holy Place, where Jesus entered at the end of the 2300 days. It's position is upon the ark of the ten commandments; and over it are the cherubims of glory. Before the mercy-seat stands our Great High Priest pleading his blood for Israel.

If the door (represented by the door in the parable) is not to be shut until Jesus descends from heaven in flames of fire, then where will be the knocking, and saying "Lord, Lord, open unto us"? It is evident that the door is shut prior to the second advent, and that unbelievers are ignorant of the fact of its being shut; therefore they knock at the shut door, and say, Lord, Lord, open unto us." When the great day of God's wrath is come, and unbelievers are apprised of their lost situation, they will not knock, with a hope of being admitted, no, no; but they will flee to rocks and mountains for shelter. See Isa. ii, 10-21; Rev. vi, 15-17. Now their prayer is, "Lord, Lord, OPEN UNTO US;" but then their prayer will be to "rocks and mountains," "FALL ON US, and HIDE us FROM the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb."

It is impossible to harmonize such portions of the Word as Isa. ii, 10-21; Rev. vi, 15-17, with the idea of the shut-door, and knocking being at, and after the advent. The 2300 days and cleansing the Sanctuary of Dan. viii, 13, 14, the parable of the ten virgins, and other parallel portions of Scripture clearly fix the shut door in 1844. This view establishes our holy advent experience in the past, gives certainty to the "blessed hope" of very soon seeing Jesus, and causes our path to shine "more and more unto the perfect day." Amen.

Editors of the Advent Review put a footnote of agreement on the point made on page 7.

We cheerfully admit that we have been mistaken in the nature of the event we expected would occur on the tenth day of the seventh month; but we cannot yet admit that our Great High Priest did not on that very day, ACCOMPLISH ALL THAT THE TYPE WOULD JUSTIFY US TO EXPECT. WE NOW BELIEVE HE DID.*†

-- Advent Herald, Nov 13, 1844

† So do we. The type (see Lev. chap. xvi.) in connection with the 2,300 days of Dan. viii, 13, 14, "justified us to expect" that on the tenth day of the seventh month, 1844, Jesus our High Priest, would enter the Holiest of all, to cleanse the sanctuary.

THE DAY OF JUDGMENT.

"Because he hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness." Acts xvii, 31.

"When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory: And before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats; And he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left. Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world, &c.

"Then shall he say also unto them on the left hand, Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels, &c." Matt. xix, 31-46.

We have never been able to harmonize all the scripture testimony relating to the judgment, with any other view than that the great day of judgment will be one thousand years long. Our Saviour has given a description of the scenes of the judgment, [Matt. xix, 31-46,] and if there was no other scripture testimony to explain the words of Jesus, and show the length of the day of judgment; then we might suppose that the righteous and wicked would be raised together at the second advent, and that the scenes of the judgment would all be acted in a literal day of twenty four hours. But there is other testimony that cannot be harmonized with this view. All the testimony will perfectly harmonize with the correct view. We will now notice some of the events of the day of judgment.

1. It will be introduced by the second advent of the "Son of man, in his glory," and "all the holy angels with him," to gather the elect only—the righteous—both the living and those who sleep. They will be "caught up together" in "the clouds to meet the Lord in the air," and "ever be with the Lord."

2. Then shall He sit upon the throne of His glory. When? Answer. It is the next event immediately following His advent, "in his glory, and all the holy angels with him."

"Verily I say unto you, that ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit in the THRONE OF HIS GLORY, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Matt. xix, 28. This text proves that the followers of Jesus must first be raised to sit on the thrones of judgment, before Christ sits upon the throne of his glory. We will here give Campbell's translation of Matt. xix, 28, which makes this point much clearer.

"Verily I say unto you, that at the renovation, when the Son of man shall be seated on his glorious throne, ye my followers, SITTING also upon twelve thrones, shall judge the twelve tribes of Israel."

Question.—How long will the Son of man and his followers sit on thrones of judgment? Answer.—One thousand years. Proof.—"And I saw THRONES, and they SAT UPON THEM, and JUDGMENT was given unto them; and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and REIGNED WITH CHRIST A THOUSAND YEARS." Rev. xi, 4.

"But the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the DAY OF JUDGMENT and perdition of ungodly men. But, beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a THOUSAND YEARS, and a thousand years as one day." ii Pet. iii, 7, 8. If this testimony from the apostle does not go to prove that the Lord's day of judgment is one thousand years—the seventh millennium—then it is unmeaning language to us. Many minds have been confused by the conflicting views that have been published on this subject. Some have contended that the day of judgment was prior to the second advent. This view is certainly without foundation in the word of God.

It is true, as Paul says, that "the saints shall judge the world," but not while in their mortal state. The Apostle adds, "Know ye not that we shall judge angels?"

"And the ANGELS which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, he hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the JUDGMENT OF THE GREAT DAY." Jude, verse 6.

When the immortal Saints sit on thrones with Christ, in the great day of judgment, then they will not only judge the world, but fallen angels—the Devil and all his angels. Daniel, "in the night visions," saw that "judgment was given to the Saints of the Most High," but not to mortal saints—not "until the ancient of days came," and the "little horn" ceased prevailing, which will not be until he is destroyed by the brightness of Christ's coming.

"I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at [not before] his appearing and his kingdom."—ii Tim. iv, 1.

The advent angel [Rev. xiv, 6, 7,] "saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come," does not prove that the day of judgment came in 1840, or 1844, nor that it will come prior to the second advent. The testimony of that angel would only signify, that the period had come for this generation to be tested by second advent truth. It is true that mortal saints act a part in the trial in probationary time. They bear the cutting truths of God's word, which separate the wheat and tares, the "precious from the vile," but the work of judging to be done in the great day of judgment, and executing the "judgment written" is the work of immortal saints. "This honor have ALL the saints, [dead and living, after their resurrection and change] Praise ye the Lord." Ps. cxlix, 9. God will execute his judgments on this generation, by pouring out the vials of his wrath on all who have the mark of the beast. This must be before the second advent. But the pouring out of his wrath on this generation, will no more be "the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men," than his wrath in drowning the world in the days of Noah, raining fire and brimstone from heaven on Sodom, or his wrath on the Jewish nation for rejecting the first advent. Mark this: "The day of vengeance," or year in which the seven last plagues are to be poured out, is not "THE day of judgment." Those who are cut off by the plagues will have to be judged in the great day of judgment, as well as those who were drowned by the flood, or the men of Sodom, on whom God rained fire and brimstone.

"Verily I say unto you, it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrah, in THE DAY OF JUDGMENT, than for that city." Matt. x, 15.

3. "And before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats."

We have shown that Jesus and the saints reign on thrones in judgment one thousand years, therefore the third great event in the judgment, which is gathering ALL NATIONS before him, will take place at the close of the one thousand years, when "the rest of the dead" at the resurrection of "the unjust" will live "again." All nations cannot be gathered before the king until they are raised, which will be when the "rest of the dead" live again. Then all nations will be indeed gathered before him. And as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats, so will the righteous be separated from the wicked. The saints will all be gathered into the Beloved City, and then the rest of the dead will be raised outside of it, and come up on the breadth of the earth, and compass the camp of the saints. All nations are then gathered, not to be judged, no, for the judging day, one thousand years, will then be passed, but to hear their sentence, and receive their reward.

To those on his left hand the King will say, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." This "everlasting fire" is that which comes "down from God out of heaven" and DEVOURS them. It will "BURN THEM UP, with the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave neither root nor branch." This everlasting fire which will not be quenched until the whole host of Gog and Magog are devoured, which was prepared for the devil and his angels, will burn up, not only the "root," the devil, but the branch, or branches, his children, not a scrap left, thank Heaven! Then God will have a clean universe, and there will be no more tempting devil to annoy the saints or holy beings of other worlds. Then the whole universe of God can join in one grand jubilee, or as John in prophetic vision heard and has written:

"And every creature which is in heaven and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever." Rev. v. 13. The melody of that universal song, ascribing glory, honor, blessing and power to God and the Lamb forever and ever, will not be marred by the wails of the damned. "For yet a little while and the wicked shall NOT BE, yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall NOT BE."

Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. Then the saints of the Most High will inherit the kingdom under the whole heavens.

Said Jesus to the Jews, "For I say unto you, ye shall not see me henceforth, (ill ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." Matt. xxiii, 39. Those wicked Jews who rejected and crucified God's only Son, have never yet acknowledged him blessed, neither can they, until they are raised at the second resurrection. Then, when all nations are assembled before him, those Jews who rejected him will be present, and overwhelmed with anguish, as they behold the marks of the crucifixion on his Kingly form, they will acknowledge him "blessed,"—that he was the true Messiah. Then, and not until then, will EVERY EYE see him.

"Behold he cometh with clouds, and EVERY EYE shall see him, and they also which pierced him; and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him." Rev. i. 7. This text covers at least one thousand years.—His coming with clouds will be when he comes with all the holy angels to raise the righteous dead, and to change the righteous living. Then the eyes of the righteous will see him, but the wicked certainly will not see him, until they are raised. Then they that pierced him will see him again.

The presence of one angel at the resurrection of Christ, caused the keepers of the sepulchre to "shake," and become "as dead men," therefore, when "the Son of man shall come in his glory, and ALL the holy angels with him," the eyes of the living wicked, who remain after the plagues, cannot and will not then see him. Mark this; the man of sin is to be destroyed "with the BRIGHTNESS OF HIS COMING." See ii Thess. ii, 8. When the whole heavens shall blaze with glory, reflected by the Son of man, and "all the holy angels with him," then the wicked will flee to rocks and mountains to hide from the burning glory of that holy throng as it draws near the earth. Their prayer will then be—"Mountains and rocks fall on us, and HIDE US FROM the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb." Rev. vi, 16.

These facts are sufficient to show that "every eye will not see Jesus, until all nations are gathered before the King, at the close of the one thousand years. Then, and not until then, will "EVERY KNEE" bow and "EVERY TONGUE" confess. For we must all stand before the judgment seat of Christ. For it is written, [Isa. xiv, 23, 24.] "As I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God." Rom. xiv, 10, 11. "It is written" in Isa. xlv, 23, 24, "I have sworn by myself, the word is gone out of my mouth in righteousness, and shall not return, that unto me every knee shall bow, every tongue shall swear. Surely shall one say in the Lord, have I righteousness and strength; even to him shall men come; and all that are INCENSED against him shall be ASHAMED." Every knee will bow, and every tongue will confess, and all who have been incensed against God, since the days of Cain, will be "ashamed," when gathered up around the Beloved City to receive their just reward, from a righteous God at the close of the seventh millennium.

"For we must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ, that every one may RECEIVE the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad." ii Cor. v. 10.

It is not to be judged that "all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ," no, for that is the work of the one thousand years, while Christ and the saints sit on thrones; but "that every one may RECEIVE the things done in the body," which cannot be until "every one" are raised and gathered before the King, at the close of "the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men."

THE AGE TO COME will be the great jubilee, the seventh millennium, in which the LAND, the whole earth will rest. There are many things that look very inconsistent in the view that the earth is to be made new at the coming of Christ, and that the saints are to reign with Christ on the earth, during the seventh thousand years. Some of them we will notice.

1. Prophecies which speak of the earth remaining "waste," "utterly emptied," and "none" to "pass through it." This is after the plagues, and second advent. See Isa. xxxiv, 8-15; xlii, 6-22; xxiv, 3. This seems to be shadowed forth by the seventh year rest unto the land, and the jubilee. See Lev. xxv, 1-12.

2. If the earth is made new at the first resurrection, then the wicked must of necessity be raised out of the purified new earth. And what seems still worse, the devil is let loose in that new world, and gathers his numerous army, and they come tramping up over the fields of living green. Then God sends fire from heaven on Gog and Magog, and burns them up on the new earth!!

3. After the saints are 'redeemed' by the blood of Christ, 'out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation' and are made 'kings and priests' unto God, they sing 'a new song,' a part of which is, 'AND WE SHALL REIGN ON THE EARTH.' See Rev. v, 8-10. They are not yet on the earth, the final inheritance of the saints, though 'redeemed,' 'kings and priests,' and singing the 'new song.' Where are they? Answer. In the City of the Living God, which has not yet descended from God out of heaven, reigning with Christ kings and priests, one thousand years, while the earth remains desolate, waste, without inhabitant.

When Christ comes to raise the righteous, he comes not with the saints, no, no; they are sleeping and his coming is to awake them, but with 'all the holy angels with him.' And at the close of the one thousand years, when his feet shall stand upon the mount of Olives, and the mount parts, and there is a very great valley. (just large enough for the New Jerusalem.) then the Lord will come with ALL the saints. 'And the Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with thee.' Zech. xiv, 5. Then the wicked will be raised, Satan loosed for 'a little season.' Fire from 'God out of heaven' will DEVOUR Gog and Magog, and purify the earth. Then the saints will 'REIGN ON THE EARTH.' Amen.

THE LAODICEAN CHURCH.

We believe that this state of the church exists, and that it is composed of second advent ministers and people, who have backslidden and serve "lukewarm."

When and where did this state of the church commence? We believe it commenced in 1845, at the conference in the city of Albany, N. Y., with the two leading teachers in the advent cause, as chairmen and secretary pro tem, viz: William Miller and J. V. Himes, and sixty-two acting ministers and delegates. See Advent Herald, May 14, 1848, page 108.

This organization proceeded by a series of conferences in the cities of Philadelphia, Baltimore and Boston. Page 113, Col. 3. The result was most cheering to their hearts, particularly to J. V. Himes and S. Himes. See Col. 2 of the same page; also the Herald for May 21. We think that this organization was completed April 5, 1848, in the city of Rochester, N. Y. See VOICE OF TRUTH, April 28, page 33; also page 99, Col. 1. "Conference Address." "Our brethren, east, west, north and south, are harmoniously, (with a few exceptions,) united in the faith and hope of the gospel, and well engaged in extending their benign influence and blessings to others. They are making preparations for going to work the present season understandingly, and effortfully, for the SALVATION OF PERISHING THOUSANDS around them."

The editor of the Voice of Truth was not ready to unite at the first conference; for he, with some others, adhered strenuously to the Cry at Midnight. See his article on this point, in the Voice of Truth for June 11, 1848, and then his decided change in Nov. 11, 1848. Here we see the perfect union with the advent editors and their adherents. See the view of the Laodicean church by the editor of V. T. Aug. 13, 1848, published since in the Advent Review Extra. This shows the decided change and departure from the Philadelphia state of the church, where they all professed to be, at the tenth day of the seventh month, 1844. See the "Advent Review," of 48 pages, published at Auburn, N. Y., containing their thrilling testimonies.

Undoubtedly they were then in the right state of the Church, and holding fast to that which they had attained, viz: the change from Babylon, or the Sardis state of the church, to the Philadelphia state.

When they changed from the Philadelphia to the Laodicean state, we believe they influenced hundreds of honest souls to go with them. These are the ones we are trying to seek out, by this article, and every other possible way, and show them their perilous and helpless condition, and utter destruction, if they do not forsake them and turn back immediately to the open door in the Philadelphia church; for there is no promise, or hope for them where they are. See Rev. iii: 10, 18.

Let us just take a general retrospect of the downward progress of the Laodiceans. For six successive years, viz: from the fall of 1844 to the spring and fall of 1850, the most of these leading members have been siding and assisting each other in changing the chronology, i. e. the world's history; to prove that they were on the true position. What have they gained? Answer, nothing but disappointment and confusion. This, too, in direct opposition to their standard work. (Advent Shield.) It has not proved to be their shield, that is clear. Six times, did we say I, yes, more. Some have moved the time for the termination of the 1800 days, from fall to spring, for six years in succession, and thus they have almost finished a circle, (if seven years would make one,) instead of gaining one inch the right way.

The Advent Herald for March 2, 1850, at last came out and proved to be a demonstration that the position of the tenth day of the seventh month, relative to the end of the 1800 days was right. But, said one of them to me; nothing was accomplished. Daniel was told that the sanctuary should be cleansed; but nobody knew anything about it, nor, nor even HIMSELF! In 1844, it moved the whole church to change their position into the open door, in the Philadelphia state of the church, and to sacrifice their houses, lands, and personal characters to the God of Israel, because they believed it, and that the Lord Jesus also was coming. In the Laodicean state now, the opposite is the case. If proof is wanted, read the Advent Herald, the most professed standard published in the world, to enlighten and prepare the church of God for the great and dreadful day of the Lord, right upon them.

What is the matter? Answer—personal character is at stake. Who is in the wrong? The greatest difficulty is to ascertain who among them is right. Just call at the city of Boston, where, in 1844, the citizens trembled under their thrilling appeals, to be ready for the coming of Jesus. What now? The reverse. Slandering and devouring one another with their Extras, Vindications, &c. &c. Is this the true church? God forbid! Why, methinks the very angels in heaven would shudder to see them appear there in their present state. Will they grow any better? If the past is a criterion by which to judge, we answer, never, no, never. Then you that hope for salvation, flee quickly, flee, I say, for your lives! You have not one moment to spare. Utter destruction awaits every soul that is found in this Laodicean state.

*We admit that about 25 churches of Advent brethren helped in this work upon the 23d of 1844.

To get a right understanding of the Laodicean state of the church, let us examine a few things concerning the seven states of the churches. The first, second and third chapters of Revelation present to our view seven distinct and differ at states of the church under the gospel. Some have supposed that these churches described in the second and third chapters of Revelation were literal, because there were seven literal churches in Asia Minor, bearing the same names.—But we think the bible definitions of these names describe the spirit and qualities of the seven states of the churches. They cannot be literal, for several reasons. First, this is a revelation, or prophecy of the future. "The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to show unto his servants, things that must shortly come to pass. Rev. i. 1. John had his vision, A. D. 96, but the literal churches existed A. D. 66, 35 years before. Second: "I Jesus have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches." &c. Ch. xiii, 18. This brings us down to the close of time. Nothing has been known of these literal churches for hundreds of years. More may be said on this point, if necessary; but this suffices now.

As the first four states of the church were in the past, (about A. D. 1294,) let us confine our exposition relative to the last three, which are all in an organized state, at the present time.

Fifth state, Sardis, signifies "that which remains, that are ready to die." Rev. iii, 2. "Her works are not perfect before God."—v. 2. Jesus writes them to get ready before he comes upon them. v. 3. "Thus have a few names, even in Sardis, which have not defiled their garments; and they shall walk with me in white; for they are worthy. He that overcometh the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life; but I will confess his name before my Father." &c. verses 4, 5.

Thus, we understand to be the present nominal church, the Babylon, which God's people came out from under the second angel's message, which closed up at the tenth day of the seventh month, 1844. They were then "about to die," and are now spiritually dead.

Those that came out of Babylon under the cry, in obedience to the call from heaven, Rev. xviii: 4; and overcome, i. e. continue in the third and other angel messages, Jesus will acknowledge before his Father, and their names will not be blotted from the book of life. Six years ago, there were thousands that did witness to the above state of things, of whom the greater part are alive upon this day, and the greatest portion are now in the seventh, or Laodicean state of the church. How did they get there? Answer—they passed into the sixth, or Philadelphia state of the church, in the fall of 1844; and staid there long enough, to prove to their genuine satisfaction that they had changed their position, to one which was true and clear. For proof, please read their own statements and letters, in the "Advent Review" of 1850.

Symptoms of untruthfulness were soon discovered in our leader. It was evident that his sphere of action was too limited to remain with those who had entered the open door in the "Morning Watch," for January 16, 1845, headed, "Is THE FIELD AGAIN?" and so on; we have put the press in full operation again, our work—is to the saints, and re-arouse the slumbering churches.

We should exhort, AGITATE! until they see the falsity of their position. On he goes with conferences in Waterbury and other places in Vermont, and Western New York. See pages 21, 22. "His strengthened him and others, so that the call for the Albany conference was made, to convene April 29, 1845. Hence we see the sudden change from a true position, to another. But, says the reader, what of that? Answer, he is the leader, and when he moves the others follow. You may ask again why confine this work for the whole church right here, in this country? Because the great hunter for the advent labor has moved out from this continent; something, no doubt, is doing in other countries; but this is the great field for the three Advent Messengers. It is in vain, however, to attempt to prove that J. V. Himes has been the leader and leading color in the Advent cause, for ten years past. This does not prove that he has taken one right step since January, 1845. He has led on others to fulfill prophecy, to their utter destruction. I pity him, and really wish that his many, and deep trials had ever driven him to God.

Sixth state, Philadelphia signifies brotherly love. This is the state that all advent believers were moving into, when that united thrilling cry was "aching through the land, like many waters." "Behold the cry was 'aching through the land, like many waters.'" Babylon's Scattered Bridge-room cohorts, go ye out to meet him." Babylon's Scattered organizations (in the Sardis state) were shaken in every direction, and their most precious and efficient members were led and moved directly to the state of brotherly love. Not an advent believer went any where else, until the dispersion, after the cry ended. Chap. iii, 7, shows the shut door, and the open door, that no man can shut.

The Master of the house, our Great High Priest, in the Sanctuary in heaven, (Heb. viii, 1, 2; ix: 1—5.) rose up and shut the outer door of his daily ministration with the world, and no man can open it, and open the door into the holiest of all; where the ten commandments are seen.

[Rev. vi, 19.] and "no man can shut it." This was done when the 2300 days ended, on the tenth day of the seventh month, 1844, and no where else. Here was the perfect harmony of shadow and substance. Aaron once a year in the shadow; Jesus, in the substance at the end of 2300 years. This proves the day and year that the door was shut; and that the last, and only safe one was then opened for the overcomers in the Philadelphia church. The Philadelphia church kept the Servant's word and have not denied his name. Those that left this state, and became Laodiceans, took the opposite, i. e. they did not hold fast his word, but because they denied his name. See Rev. iii, 8.

Jesus, in verse 10, promises to keep all from the hour of temptation, or trial that have kept the word of his patience. That is, all that are patient waiters, in this state of the church, he will keep, when the decree goes forth from the Dragon [Rev. xiii, 15] to kill them.

Then Jesus is to come quickly, and the true church is exhorted to hold fast their experience in the past, verse 11. If they do not some one will take their crown. See what befalls those that give up their experience. Verse 9. In verse 12, is the precious overcoming promise to all in this church. They are to be pillars in the temple of God, and have the name of God, the Holy City, and Jesus' own new name written upon them. Here we see that all the precious promises are made to this church that believe in the shut door, and keep in the open door. They cannot be claimed by those remaining in the Sardis, or Laodicean state of the church.

Verily state, Laodicean signifies, the judging of the people. "Those things which the Amen, the faithful and true Witness." "I know thy work" that thou art neither cold nor hot. I would thou wast cold or hot or then, I would thou wast neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth." Verses 16, 17. This state neither cold nor hot, represents their unsettled state for six years past while they have been continually changing the chronology to prove the end of the 2300 days in the future, which they had acknowledged did end in the fall of 1844.

Jesus would have them either believe their true position or stop, and let the chronology alone; for as often as their calculations failed it caused their own and others faith to wane; and thus they have been continually sinking into a Laodicean state, neither one thing nor yet another. In this state it is impossible for them to be saved; for Jesus says that he will spue them out of his mouth, or destroy them.

"Because thou sayest, I am rich, and increased in goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked" verse 17. If you want the truth on any point of doctrine, especially, any thing relative to the second coming of the Lord, the Advent Herald and Harbinger are the profound standards. They are profoundly rich in Biblical knowledge. Their continued reading and writing on the subject of the advent, and all subjects connected with it, in the Bible, make them rich. And yet they know not that they are "wretched and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked."

How? Answer, spiritually; because they would certainly know it, if they were literally in this state. Then with all their Bible knowledge, they have not got the meet in due season. At their general conference, last May, a question arose about their declaration of principles for the future. It was finally settled that the Address that they sent forth from the Normal Conference of Adventists at Albany, N. Y., April 29, 1845, should be their principles of faith for this present 1850. It is true they have given the right view in the general, that was to guide them to the end of the 2300 days; but as they are to proceed on in their course of action, in their proclamation of an open door for Babylon, and all the world, just as they came from the Albany Conference in 1845, they prove clearly that they have gained nothing; made no progress. They have only run almost round a circle, in a five years race, beating the air, and now they declare their starting point from April 29, 1845, to be the best they can give for May, 1850. It looks clear that they have acknowledged their Laodicean state of neither cold nor hot. They have neither one position nor yet another. How unlike the path of the just, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day.

It is in vain for them to apply the Laodicean state of the church, now existing, (and must exist before Jesus comes,) to any other class of believers on earth. The shut door believers are in the Philadelphia church. The nominal church, ere back of 1814, in the Sardis state, spiritually dead. "I counsel of thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, [present truth, that has stood the trial of six years opposition, and now is shining brighter and brighter,] that thou mayest be rich; and white raiment that thou mayest be clothed, [righteousness, or righteous acts of the saints,] and eye-salve that thou mayest see." [See the present truth.] Verse 18. Jesus counsels no one to buy of him earthly riches, &c., no; it is the present truth that the Laodiceans must have to be saved. "As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten; be zealous, therefore, and repent." Verse 19. Jesus still loves those that are in the Laodicean church, and calls on them to repent. If they were deceived by false teachers, they must leave them as soon as possible, and be "zealous" and "repent;" for every one that is found in that state when Jesus leaves the Sanctuary, and passes to plead for the honest ones among them, will be destroyed. They must get back into the open door in the Philadelphia church that no man can shut, where they came from; for that is the only true church, or place of safety. Read, in verse 20, the last, loving message of Jesus to you,—"Behold I stand at the door, and knock. If any man hear my voice, and open the door, [the door of the heart,] I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and lie with him." Jesus will commune with you if you will open your heart and receive the truth. "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne." Thus the promise is extended from verse 18th to the 20th. Now is the time to repent and turn to the truth. Be quick! Hasten for your life!!

Jesus is cleansing the Sanctuary, or is blotting out the errors of the houses of Israel. When this work is finished, he will take his place on the great white cloud. Then, the seven Angels will pour out the seven last plagues. This will begin the "great day of his wrath," Rev. vi, 17. This is the day of Babylon's plagues. Her plagues will come in one prophetic "day, death, and mourning, and famine, and she shall be utterly burned with fire: for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her." Rev. xviii, 8.

"In all the land with the Lord; TWO PARTS therein shall be cut off, and die; but the THIRD shall be left therein. God says he will bring the THIRD PART through the fire, and refine them. They shall call upon him, and he will hear them. He will say IT IS MY PEOPLE; and they shall say the LORD IS MY GOD." First part, Sardis, the nominal church or Babylon. Second part, Laodicea, the nominal Adventist. Third part, Philadelphia, the only true church of God on earth, for they ask to be translated to the city of God. Rev. xiii, 12; Heb. xii, 22-24. In the name of Jesus, I exhort you again to flee from the Laodiceans, as from Sodom and Gomorrah. Their teachings are false and delusive; and lead to utter destruction. Death? DEATH!! eternal DEATH!!! is on their track. Remember Lot's wife.

MIDNIGHT CRY IN THE PAST.

In the fall of 1844, almost every Advent believer taught and believed that a cry of midnight, as taught by Jesus our Saviour in the parable of the ten virgins, [Matt. xiv, 6.] was the true cry, then sounding throughout the land; and that cry would come by the personal appearing of the Lord Jesus, on the tenth day of the seventh month, 1844.

The basis of the whole argument rested on the termination of the 2300 days, [years], which were to begin at the going forth of a certain decree to restore and build Jerusalem, after the Babylonish captivity. See Dan. ix, 23. It was clearly established that this decree was given to Ezra, by the Persian king Artaxerxes, in the seventh year of his reign, the chronological date of which, is a. c. 457. See Ezra vii, 7, 12, 13. See also the date in the margin. It was admitted on all hands, that if this date was right, the whole argument was conclusive; for by subtracting a. c. 457, from 2300, it would inevitably bring the time to a. d. 1843 or 4. Our opponents would not admit this date, because it was the work of uninspired men.

This date, a. c. 457, was the starting point, and had been from about the commencement of the proclamation of the Advent doctrine. Learned men, both in and out of the college; ministers and historians throughout the land, raised all their most weighty objections. Chronology was examined, and re-examined, discussion after discussion was had between them, and the leading men in the Advent doctrine. It was finally settled, as far as it then could be, that Advent believers had the clear light, that a. c. 457, was the only, and true point from which to begin to count the 2300 days. And thus, with all confidence it was placed upon the old chart, and in the Advent standard works. And it was the starting point to settle the whole subject of the Advent doctrine; and with it the true Midnight Cry was shown by all the lecturers. Indeed, without this date to start from, it was utterly impossible for any Advent lecturer to prove where, or when, the 2300 days would end. Hence with this decree, or permission to Ezra, to restore and build Jerusalem, began Daniel's seventy weeks of 490 years, which were to be cut off from the first part of the 2300 years leaving 1810 years more to carry on to the end.

A simple figure will illustrate this point. Suppose for instance, that all of the Advent lecturers referred to above, should have understood the science of navigation, equally as well as the science of chronology. And they, by some invisible power, had been placed on board a ship on the ocean, nothing visible but sky and water; and were then told, that the ship had sailed from Boston, some indefinite number of miles, and was bound for Liverpool. That the precise distance between B. and L. was 2300 miles. Could they have ever understood how many miles they would have to run, to reach Liverpool? No, it would have been impossible, except it had been revealed to them how many miles the ship had run from Boston, up to the time they found themselves on board of her.

A starting point is equally as necessary in chronology, as in navigation, to understand our whereabouts, and how much farther to go to reach the end of a point given. But with the true starting point, as settled in chronology, all the Advent lecturers and believers moved on with unswerving confidence, that they should come to the end of the appointed time [2300 days] in 1844. And what makes it very clear, that they were then right, is that there is not one of them now that knows how to fix another date. No, search the world over, and the man is not to be found that can point, with any greater degree of certainty than a mere guess, that the days will end somewhere in the future.

Now with this clear starting point, a. c. 457, (not so clear however, as it will be seen in the sequel,) we will try to learn from the Bible the great and glorious object of the 2300 days; and what was to be accomplished at the end of them, so that those who were faithfully engaged in accomplishing the revealed purposes of God in proclaiming the Advent, may know for a certainty when, and where these days would end. We come then to the OBJECT OF THE 2300 DAYS.

"And he said unto me, Unea 2300 days; THEN SHALL THE SANCTUARY BE CLEANSED."—Dan. viii, 14. Daniel saw in his vision that this was an "APPOINTED TIME." See, chap. viii, 19 and x, 1. Habakkuk saw the same, and says further, "But at the end it shall speak and shall lie." Now there is no other marked appointed time in the Bible. Then when we come to the end of this bible marked, appointed time, it will speak. Now! Answer, by the voice of the very people that understand the prophecy, and in no other way. It was to be by a Cry of midnight. In two very prominent ways we learn from the scriptures the event to transpire at the end of the 2300 days.

1. By God's instruction to Moses, on Mount Sinai, viz: And let them make me a Sanctuary; that I may dwell among them." Ex. xxv, 8. According to this, and some of the following chapters, God directed Moses, to build him an house after the pattern which he showed him to see; and it was called a Sanctuary. It was the only place for the public worship of God, for his Israel, then in the wilderness. It was to have two rooms, first, the Holy, and second, the Most Holy. Aaron and all the priests that succeeded him in his office, officiated in the Holy Place 364 days in the year. This was the daily ministration for all the people, or daily statement for individual known sins. The high priest had, as an "appointed time" to visit the Most Holy Place—once a year. God directed that day to be on the tenth of the seventh month. This may be called the national statement; and besides the work of the whole year; for on this day, the Sanctuary must be cleansed. This work was done by first assembling all Israel around the Tabernacle.

They remained there in a state of affliction from evening to evening, twenty-four hours. At the same time the high priest was active in his royal robes, with the breast-plate of judgments over his breast, and the names of the twelve tribes of Israel represented thereon by twelve precious stones. He appears before God, in the Most Holy Place, with the blood of a goat, emblematical of the blood of the Lord Jesus, and sprinkles it on the mercy-seat, and seven times before the mercy-seat, to atone for the whole people. See Lev. xvi, 14, 15. "And he shall make an atonement for the holy, because of the uncleanness of the children of Israel, and because of their transgressions in all their sins." Verse 16. Will the reader please read these eighteen words again, and see if he cannot tell the meaning of the cleansing of the Sanctuary. Oh yes! You say, it was to cleanse the people, all of them, from their sins. Very well, do not forget it, when it comes down to you in the antitype.

For further instruction read this whole chapter; and see how the whole work is accomplished in the type, figure, or shadow, once a year upon all Israel. Now Paul calls them, shadows of good things to come, and goes on to show how Jesus is the substance of the typical priesthood thus:—"Then said he, [Jesus,] Lo, I come to do thy will, O God. He taketh away the first that he may establish the second. By the which will we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once.—Heb. x, 9, 10. The high priest offered the same sacrifice daily. Jesus makes but one. The high priest appears in the Most Holy Place once a year. Jesus but once. Chap. ix, 23, 26. Paul says again, We have such an high priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens; A MINISTER OF THE SANCTUARY, and of the vesture tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man." Chap. viii, 1, 2. The same Sanctuary which John saw.—Rev. xi, 19, 20, 21. Here it is perfectly plain that the Tabernacle in heaven, is the one which Moses saw while on the Mount. He made the Sanctuary in the wilderness just like it. This is the house that our Great High Priest officiates in, since the day of Pentecost, when his first work in his daily ministration commenced by the conversion of 3000 souls. And when his daily ministration ends, he will, like the shadow, rise up and shut to the door, and still following the shadow, or type, he will pass into the Most Holy Place, and present the whole house of Israel before God. This he must do, on the tenth day of the seventh month, at the end of his "APPOINTED TIME," which is the last day of the 2300 years. This is one clear part of the scripture testimony, which brings us to the Midnight Cry. We come then to the second prominent portion of scripture which shows the event to transpire at the end of the 2300 days, viz, the teachings of our divine Lord, in the parable of the ten virgins.

On this point we design to be brief; hence our view, and the history of this glorious work which we wrote about four years since, is now published in part in the "Advent Review," No. 3, page 98. "At Midnight there was a Cry made, Behold, the Bridegroom cometh: go ye out to meet him. Then all these virgins arose, and trimmed their lamps. And the foolish said unto the wise, give us of your oil: for our lamps are going out. [See margin.] But the wise answered, saying, not so;—lest there be not enough for us and you: but go ye rather to them that sell, and buy for yourselves. And while they went to buy, the Bridegroom came; and they that were ready, went in with him to the marriage: and the door was shut. Afterward came also the others virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open to us."—Matt. xiv, 9-12. When the parable was fulfilled, it brought us to the true sanctuary of the shadow of which we have been speaking in the first prominent portion of scripture, with this difference, the true Israel are in every nation, indeed, and tongues, and people; hence the evangelists, and their names are flying in every direction, to every nation, proclaiming the hour of his judgment has come. Seven years is about the period of this proclamation. See "Advent Herald" No. 1, Page 33. "It was not however until the winter of 1837-8 that the work attracted much attention," &c. Here we see it requires a series of years to get the true Israel ready; whereas in the type they could be, and undoubtedly were brought around the tabernacle in a few moments, by the sound of the silver trumpet. They remained around the tabernacle, outside of the court, one day in a state of affliction, with their minds and sympathies within the sacred veil, in the Most Holy Place; listening to hear the sound of the bells on the robe of their high priest.—The first sound would be knowledge to them that their sins were all blotted out; and then the cry-post would carry them away into a land not inhabited. During all this time the door was shut.

Now in the antitype, all of the true Israel of God, must be in a similar position, by faith, in every place where they are. For when the Midnight Cry is made as it was, in the fall of 1844, at the end of the 2300 days, then at that time the door is shut. Do read the parable again, Matt. xxv, 10. See how clear it is when compared with the type. The door must be shut, for our High Priest to open the outer door, (Rev. iii, 7, 8; xi, 19,) and enter into the Most Holy Place to cleanse the Sanctuary, to fulfill the prophecy; because Daniel was shown in vision, that it WOULD BE.

This work of cleansing the Sanctuary in this; Jesus our Great High Priest, crowned and robed, in his royal court dress, (just like the high priest in the shadow,) rises up, and shuts the door (Luke xiii, 35,) where he had been the Mediator for all the world, and opens the door of the Most Holy Place, (for as John calls it, the Temple of God,) and there appears before God, as Daniel saw him (chap. vii, 13,) with the whole Israel of God represented on his breast-plate of judgment, (like the high priest,) in plaid with God, to shut out the sin of Israel. This is the coming of the Bridegroom to cleanse the Sanctuary, at the end of 2300 days; and the fulfillment of Matt. xxv, 10. From this time to the coming of God, the whole Israel of God are in the fifth week, Heb. x, 26, 27, their soul affecting time, as in the type, Lev. xvi, 20, patiently waiting establishing their hearts, for the Judge stands before the door: the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. James v, 7-9. "Here in the privacy of the saints; here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus. Rev. xiv, 12. They are doing the work of the third angel's message, and are waiting their Lord's return from the wedding. Luke xxi, 28. The previous promise of the Bridegroom to all: such is, "Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I ALSO WILL KEEP THEE." &c. Amen. This is the state of the Israel of God, and must be until the house of God is judged, 1 Peter iv, 17, and fired for deliverance. See how it resembles the type. Now this must all take place after the Midnight Cry, and the door is shut. And to have any agreement with the type, Jesus our High Priest must have a calling out, and gatherings of the true Israel, in their places of worship on earth, at his "appointed time," (2300 days,) just as much as the high priest did at his appointed time, once a year. Both in the type and anti-type, must be on the tenth day of the seventh month.

When the high priest went in before God, to plead for the forgiveness of the sins of ancient Israel, on the day of atonement, in other words, to cleanse the Sanctuary, the people did not see him until the whole work was finished, and the cry-post had gone away with all their sins.—When the whole day's work was finished they were delivered from their state of affliction, and returned to their tents, rejoicing in God for deliverance. So Jesus our Great High Priest is invisible to the true house of Israel, when he shuts the outer, and opens the inner door, and appears before the Ancient of days, in the Most Holy Place, in the New Jerusalem, to cleanse the sanctuary, on the day in which the Midnight Cry is made. That is not his coming to this earth after his people. No matter if we did explain it so, that will never make it true. Our more explanation of the thing did not, neither will it, alter the prophecy. The prophetic and clear cry was: "Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him." This was the proper, the right, and only true time for it. The Cry was in its fullest sense given, and the Bridegroom did come, according to the "manner" in the type, and they that went to meet him did it by faith. Therefore, when the Bridegroom is cleansed, and the great day of atonement ended; which work will be the blotting out of all the sins of the true Israel of God; then we twinge the Devil, [the scape-goat,] will be chained, or led away into a land uninhabited, bearing on him all the sins which are now being confessed by the whole Israel of God, in this day of atonement.

Then, "the Lord who shall rent out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem, and the heaven and the earth shall obey," &c. Joel iii, 10. Then he will deliver every one that shall be found written in the book." Dan. xii, 1. This event is the signal for "the battle of that great day of God Almighty." After this work is finished, then Jesus will descend from heaven with a shout, &c., and reform his waiting people. This is scripture testimony.

Jesus plainly taught us that there would be a Cry at Midnight, and that the door would be shut, and the Bridegroom would come, (Matt. xxv, 8, 10,) and that this would not be the "coming of the Son of Man." For he had already said, "But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only." Matt. xxiv, 36. Then again in the parable he admonishes us thus: "Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh." Chap. xxv, 13. But we did know the very day the Bridegroom came, viz: on the last day of the 2300 years, the tenth day of the seventh month, 1844. This was also the last day of a Cry at Midnight, and that day the door was shut. If we are not, then the whole Advent doctrine which has been proclaimed throughout the land, is as mere to us than "sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal." It is even worse than "hay, wood or stubble." For the 2300 days was the rallying point during the two angel messages, clear down to the tenth day of the seventh month. Take these figures from the true chart, the old one, and every advent believer would lose their reckoning. Before 1844, the 2300 days, speaking after the manner of men, was EVERY THING. Since Oct. 1844, by the greater portion of Adventists, it is NOTHING, only as a point which they have moved from year to year, to suit their purposes. We say that it was the sure guide that led us to the end of a Cry at Midnight; and the only sure guide in the vision, to run from, to the day of deliverance and redemption. We see, also, that it is impossible for the Sanctuary to be cleansed, or for the shadow given by God to Moses to find its substance, unless, (as we have stated,) the anti-type of the national atonement is accomplished after the door is shut.

We say that Jesus came to us as the Bridegroom; but does go no more, to the Father. Therefore he does not come here at the end of the 2300 days; neither does the world with these days. Now in the clear light of this subject, let us just look at the course taken by the conductors of the two leading Advent papers in our midst, viz: the "Advent Herald," and "Voice of Truth;" also, Bro. Miller, and almost all the Advent lecturers in this work. Please read their Confessions, Indications, Promises, and their then present duty, respecting this very work, in the "Advent Review," for 1850.

We will here give a few extracts:

"Those who have not been in this late movement, can appreciate nothing respecting it. And we regard it as another, and a more SEARCHING TEST, than the first proclamation of the time."

"So we believe that THIS LAST CRY HAS BEEN A TEST; and that with our views of duty, we should as much have sided against God, had we refrained from giving that message, as Jacob did when he rose up to see unto Tophel from the presence of the Lord."—Page 8.

"In the meantime we kept two power presses in continual operation, as long as was needed, in multiplying the copies of our paper of Oct. 10, of which we issued about 100,000 copies." Page 6. [Copied from the Advent Herald.]

The motto for the above paper was, "BEHOLD THE BRIDGROOM COMETH, GO YE OUT TO MEET HIM!"

Again—"But we cannot yet admit that our Great High Priest did not on that very day, ACCOMPLISH ALL THAT THE TYPE WOULD JUSTIFY US TO EXPECT. WE NOW BELIEVE HE DID."

"We think the parable of the ten virgins clearly tells where we are. The proclamation of the tenth day of the seventh month, we believe was the midnight cry, when all, and a part, of the virgins arose and trimmed their lamps. This work continued until the tenth day passed." Page 7. [Copied from the "Voice of Truth,"]

Further—"We have done our work in warning others, and in trying to awake a formal solemn. God in his providence has SHUT THE DOOR." Page 8.

"I presume, brother Marsh, you have seen Bro. Hale and Turner's Advent Mirror," printed in Boston, Jan. 1843, concerning the marriage, in the parable of the virgins. I do believe in the main they are right—that cannot be the personal coming of Christ. "His Christ came in the same spoken of, Matt. xxv, 10! I think he has." Page 10.

"That God has been in this cause, I have not a shadow of a doubt; and that time has been the main spring, is equally so clear; and that if we leave out time, no mortal could prove that Christ is near, even at the door. Yours as ever, looking for, &c. WILLIAM MILLER." Page 11. Their more:

"They found the spirit and the Providence of God concurring most significantly to give the Midnight Cry. Amid the signs of these last days nothing like this occurred till after the varying. Nothing like it has occurred since. The Cry was given at the right time, so far as could be ascertained by a prayerful, critical, study of the word. It came in the right place, in the series of prophetic fulfillment. J. H. Cook." Page 24.

And thus we might go on, adding testimonies from scores of writers, from the Review, and their papers; but let what we have quoted suffice. The question of the Midnight Cry, was settled in the time that we have stated, by about all that believed in the Advent doctrine. With all this array of argument before them, many of them would say, at times, why I believe it to be true; because it looked too glorious to deny it. We say that God never had this work done in power. It was all accomplished then, and we have just shown how it was affirmed to by the church of God. When they say they believe it, they prove themselves liars; for after the formation of the Landmark state of the church at Albany, N. Y., April 29, 1845, the greater portion of the Landmarks went out through the land, advertising an open door, in direct and immediate opposition to the work of the Midnight Cry. For that work shut the door without the shadow of a doubt.

Shall we not now repeat what they said? bear it. "SO WE BELIEVE THAT THIS LAST CRY [Midnight Cry] HAS BEEN A TEST; and that with our views of duty, we should as much have sided against God, had we refrained from giving that message, as Jonah did when he rose up to the unto Turkish from the presence of the Lord."

We say then, that here is positive proof that they have been SINNING AGAINST GOD EVER SINCE, in writing, preaching, and in various other ways, by opposing and setting at naught the very and essential point in their Advent experience, which was the "MAIN-SPRING" of the whole vision. Yes, after the Albany Conference in 1845, when they organized the Landmark Church, they went out openly and boldly declaring to their hearers, that the door was wide open. They said it was not shut, neither would it be, until Jesus came, and then the 2300 days would end. This of course began to destroy, and has eventually ruined the whole work and design of the Midnight Cry, and left them not on the flat rock which they boasted of, but on sliding sand, which in a little moment will leave them that continue to stand there in the gulf of perdition.

To make their case appear consistent, these leaders claimed the three and a half years of dispute time about the Seventy's birth, before A. D. which would run out until the spring of A. D. 1847. During this time, or at that point, the 2300 days would end, and the Lord Jesus would come. It was obvious and clear still, that secret enviousness were on the minds of some of the leading ones, that the 2300 days were in the past; but this must be swept up and kept behind the curtain, and out of the papers; for such a view again made public, would destroy the very foundation of their advent salvific. But in the minds in their history. Around this confusion, about all that believed in the Lord's coming were looking to the fall of 1843. That passed; and some after came A. Hale's work, "Time of the Advent to be known." The prophetic periods were now moved two years forward (1845) and of course the starting point, plan, to make the 2300 days and there. Next came the rallying point for 1847. We were told that there were no chronological data beyond this, that would prove any thing about the close of the 2300 days. If they did not end there, then our reckoning was up. The prophetic periods must all be moved again. Thus also proved a perfect failure, and ran their ship ashore, high and dry out of all disputed time. This did not quell the rebellious house of Israel. They still continued sliding down, and pouring out their mouthpieces and contempt on those who were insisting that the work was done, where they had affirmed that it was, in the fall of 1844. They were still determined to have their own way; so away goes all the "chronological data" down to the spring of 1844. It seemed to be just as easy to stretch and move the date in history, as to prove that Sebastians and the Pope of Rome were living in 1809. "One built up a wall, and so, others dashed it with untempered mortar." But the vision did not speak. Well the days would end in 1844; so the time must be altered again, and there was nothing but disappointment there. Not satisfied with this continued stretching, and prolonging the vision, the spring of 1850 was fixed upon as the true termination of the appointed time for the Lord to come. The great argument to prove it, was, that Jesus was crucified in the end of the 69th week; a clear perversion of the Angel Gabriel's message to Daniel. Nevertheless, they were right now! No matter if the appointed time did come on the fourth day of the seventh month, the 2300 days would end this spring, and the Lord would come. Months, seasons and times, which God had fixed, could be altered easy enough, when they desired it.

The tenth day of the seventh month is now past, and with it, all their hopes and "doomings." Now we ask, how much is gained by these six or more successive failures, every time moving further off from the true point, and causing disappointment and confusion in their ranks, every passing time? NOTHING. Much like this makes the starting point look clear. See, first, seven years examining chronological dates, to get the true starting point, viz. A. C. 457, to prove that the 2300 days of Daniel's vision would end in the fall of 1844. This they scolded beyond all controversy, and affirmed to it, before God, and the world; and then came up in rebellion against it, and for about six successive years, wrote, preached, and argued against it, with all their power; without giving one single particle of light, or moving the point they started from. But have filled themselves and their hearers with pride, worldly-mindedness, and a distrust for every thing that God would have them honor and love, under the sounding of the third angel's message.

Bay, is the Midnight Cry in the past? Are the foolish virgins manifest? Is the starting point settled? We suppose the Editors of the Advent Herald claim some merit for settling this starting point in their paper for March 2, 1850. See also, the extract in "Present Truth," No. 10, page 78. God will give them credit, for they settled it right in 1844. If, after their five years rebellion against it, they had acknowledged the truth connected with it, I think they might have been rewarded. Instead of this, the writer of the article told us that the 2300 days were ended; but nothing was accomplished. He well knew that that was a "lying divination." He knows it now. It is plain, therefore, that those articles were not given, to bring back the honest erring ones, to the plain simple truth, that the Midnight Cry was given in 1844, and that the door was shut. For they knew that was the clear fulfillment of the Cry, both in the parable and type. We said that they settled it in 1844. The following letter is still further proof.

"Boston, Oct. 30, 1844. My dear Bro. Bates—This will be handed to you by Bro. Davis. He will tell you of our affairs, and of our faith in this time, this 'trying time.' I repeat to God, I never felt more happy and reconciled to his will; the late work has saved me—it has been a blessing to us all. Now let us hold on. Let us remember, that though we have not realized our hope, yet we have endeavored to walk by our faith and stand justified before God. Abraham did not offer Isaac, God provided a lamb; so he has provided something else for us. And now to suffer and live for his name a little while longer.

Yours,

J. V. Himes."

If the reader is still curious enough to know how the leader of the rebellious house of Israel gets round this, we reply—He very kindly and frankly acknowledges that he did believe it but he saw his error, and confessed it. Very true; but what did he confess? Please turn to the first page of the Advent Review, and read on and there you will see not only his confession of all the past being true, but he vindicates it, and declares the whole word to be right, the LAST CRY (Midnight Cry) A TEST, both in the type and parable, as we have already quoted. He says, "We are free to confess that we have been twice disappointed in our expectations in the time of our Lord's Advent." The two disappointments were the spring and fall of 1844. Those few words comprise his confession. After this, hundreds of others followed in confessions, in the two leading papers; and to their confessions, except some few that afterwards, acknowledged they were mistaken about the shut door view.

Here was a general acknowledgment of all the past; and yet after the organization of the Landmark Church, April, 1845, they came out in open rebellion against the very vital point, that gave them any title to the name of Adventists. Consistency would have required them to have adopted their proper Scripture name; [Rebels]; then all the honest believers, searching for truth, would have endeavored them, and avoided their treacherous dealings against the Lord; and the "strange children" they have begotten in connection with fallen Babylon. If by any means whatever, they could prove from all their past six years' unaided labor, throughout this land, England, or the West Indies, that they had gained one single convert to God, then would they appear to a hundred fold more benighted light than they now do. For, by their own published, standing confessions, (as before stated,) the Lord Jesus, as Master of the house, (he is described,) had shut the door, and no man could open it. See Rev. iii, 7; Luke xiii, 25; Matt. xiv, 10. This was the last day's work of the Midnight Cry, when the falcon of the Gentile came in, (Rev. xi, 25). Now if they have opened the door, then they have gained the victory over the Son of God, and proved him to have uttered a falsehood. In no other way could they get one true Gentile convert. But there need be no fear on this score. Jesus has done this work, and he is now advocating the cause of all true believers in the house of Israel. We know that these people are saying, and will still say, that they have reclaimed hundreds of backsliders, and that scores have been converted to God, under their teaching, since the Albany Conference, April, 1815.

We say, that as long as they continue rebellious against their lawful Prince, it is morally impossible for them to begot for him one peaceful subject. God has a true test, by which to try every individual since the Midnight Cry. It is "the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus," Rev. xiv, 12. We have yet to learn, that one single one of their professed converts, or reclaimed backsliders, have reached this standard. But we fully believe they have some honest souls that they have drawn away with them, into their delusive snare, by their treacherous dealing with the Lord, and false teaching. Our hearts yearn after these. We would use every right way to get them from this Land of sinners. This then is one strong reason why we send forth this article, to open the eyes of those who were, and still are honest, and may possibly be saved, if they will at once flee from this rebellious house of Israel. For he is about to open the rebellious ones out of his mouth; while he tenderly invites the honest ones. Do be persuaded to read his invitation. Here it is:—"As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten; be zealous, therefore, and repent."—Rev. iii, 19. Yes, after all your backsliding, if you have not done it willfully, Jesus says to you, "repent." If you overcome, you will sit with him on his throne. Perhaps you will say, that we have written hard things, and that you cannot bear them. Our answer is, we have no unkind feelings towards the most rebellious person in the house of Israel. We would plead for them as long as we see any Bible ground for it. We have spoken the simple unvarnished truth. God requires this, that the precious may be separated from the vile. For he is now about to destroy them. We therefore beseech you, in the name of Jesus, who stands before the Father, speaking but a few moments more on your doubtful case, to have you sealed for him, or your precious name forever blotted from the book of life, to flee from all such delusive, treacherous, soul-destroying teaching. We repeat it, if there is any hope in your case, you have but a little moment more. The seven last plagues, with the four sore judgments of Almighty God, are just upon all those who have denied the great truths of God, which we have been passing through. And every one that does not repent speedily, and confess every known sin, in this treacherous work, will in a little moment, as it were, be ushered into the great and dreadful day of the Lord, and be destroyed by the wrath of God and the Lamb. O, do, do! I entreat you, arise the glimmering light of salvation, that is about to be forever extinguished from this guilty world. Grasp it with all your soul, and might, and mind. Plead with the blessed Jesus, for immortality and eternal life. Talk about searching out sinners, that the work of the Midnight Cry left in outer darkness six years ago! He will not save you, if you do not quickly flee from the dreadful snare you are now in. Hear the warning of God. "Son of man, thou dwellest in the midst of a rebellious house, which have eyes to see, and has not; they have ears to hear, and hear not: for they are a rebellious house."—Eze. xii, 2. This is the 21st verse inclusive, refers to literal Israel, when they were carried to literal Babylon, and held there for 70 years, while the land enjoyed her sabbaths.—2 Chr. xxxvi, 20, 21. It is evident that they were continually rebelling against them. From verse 21, and onward to the end of chap. xiii, God shows Ezekiel the perverse, rebellious spirit of both men and women, in the anti-typical rebellious house of Israel, since the speaking of Daniel's vision of the 2300 days, at the end of the Midnight Cry, in the fall of 1844. Let us read.

"Son of man, what is that proverb that ye have in the land of Israel, saying, The days are prolonged, and every vision faileth? Tell them therefore, thus saith the Lord God; I will make this proverb to cease, and they shall no more use it as a proverb in Israel; but say unto them, the days are at hand, and the effect of every vision. For there shall be no more any vain vision nor flattering divination within the house of Israel. For I am the Lord: I will speak, and the word that I shall speak shall come to pass; it shall be no more prolonged, for in your days, O rebellious house, I will say the word and, will perform it, saith the Lord God."—Verses 22-25.

Throughout the Scriptures there is but two literal prolongings of God to the people, first, from Mount Sinai, and second from heaven. See Heb. xii, 22, 26. This second time, then, is from heaven, in the midst of the great and dreadful day of God, that is now dawning upon this doomed world. Dear reader, do you not clearly see that there was no vision when God spoke from Sinai; but there is one here which perfectly agrees with the one mentioned by Ezekiel. Six long years this rebellious house have been stretching out, moving and prolonging the days of the 2300 days vision. Time will be spent in vain searching the Bible for any other. Will you admit that the history which we have given you is true? God says, "It is a settling divination within the house of Israel." Only see how souls have been flattered to believe, by these treacherous dealers with God's word, that the end of the days was always in the future. They have been prolonged to suit the pleasure of any one of their teachers, like this. They will end weeping! Well, they will next fall! Very soon! Any time! I do not know but today. We should be expecting it all the time, &c., &c. Says God, "I will SPEAK, and the word that I shall speak shall come to pass, it (the vision of days) shall be no more prolonged; for in YOUR DAYS, O rebellious house, will I say the word." How plain that here, right before us, this prophecy is to be fulfilled. This settled, then what follows is unavoidable, and conclusive.

"Thus saith the Lord God: Ye unto the foolish prophets, that follow their own spirit, and have seen nothing. O Israel, thy prophets are like the foxes in the deserts. Ye have not gone up into the gaps, neither made up the hedge for the house of Israel to stand in the battle of the day or your sons. They have seen vanity and lying divinations, saying the Lord saith: and the Lord has not sent them: and they have made others to hope that they would confirm the word. Have ye not seen a vain vision, and have ye not spoken a lying divination, whereas ye say the Lord saith it, albeit I HAVE NOT SPOKEN?"—Eze. xiii, 2-7.

This rebellious house made others to hope that they would confirm the word, and said the Lord said it. God says he did not say it. It was their ruin and lying divinations. They prolonged the days. He did not tell them to. Hear what God says to them for their rebellion against him.

"Therefore thus saith the Lord God: Because ye have spoken vanity, and seen lies, therefore, behold I am against you, saith the Lord God. And mine hand shall be upon the prophets that see vanity, and that divine lies; they shall not be in the assembly of my people, (secret or council, see margin,) neither shall they be written in the writing of the house of Israel; neither shall they enter into the land of Israel: and ye shall know that I am the Lord God. Because, even because they have seduced my people, saying peace and there was no peace; and one built up a wall, and lo, others dashed it with untempered mortar. Say unto them which dash it with untempered mortar, that it shall fall; there shall be an overflowing shower; and ye, O great hailstones, shall fall; and a stormy wind shall rend it. [See Rev. xvi, 21.] Thus will I accomplish my wrath upon the wall, and upon THEM THAT HAVE DASHED IT WITH UNTEMPERED MORTAR, and will say unto you, the wall is no more, neither THEY THAT DASHEN IT."—Chap. xiii, 8-11, 13.

This is the end and dreadful state, and fearful doom, which God has pronounced upon those who were once among our dearest friends, with whom we took sweet counsel together in the house of God; and listened with delight to their soul-stirring teaching. Alas, alas, they have turned "diviners," and "speak lies;" and have continued their rebellious course (without repentance, when Jesus urged, counseled, and entreated them to repent.—Rev. iii, 18-21.) for six long years, stretching out and "prolonging" the fulfillment of the 2300 days of the prophecy of Daniel; which prophecy they so faithfully labored to proclaim, and then affirmed to it, before God and the world, that the MIDNIGHT CRY WAS IN THE PAST.

JOSEPH BATES.

Fairhaven, Dec. 12th, 1850.

THE SIXTY-NINE WEEKS AND 2300 DAYS.

We are now more than two years past the disputed ground in chronology for the ending of the 2300 days, and some, from the consideration of this fact, admit that they terminated in 1841, but are unwilling to admit the solemn and glorious truths which of necessity follow. Others, to avoid the truths consequent upon the termination of the days in '44, deny the fact of their being reached in the past, and endeavor to remove the landmark of the crucifixion, from the midst, (middle,) of the week of confirmation, back to the end of the sixty-nine weeks.

The false fabric built on this basis was exploded in the spring of 1850. And now some are ready to give up the connection between the eighth and ninth chapters of Daniel, rather than admit the days ended, and the truths which of necessity follow. Others, unwilling to give up the connection of Dan. viii, and ix, yet, to avoid the fact of the days being ended, think it can be clearly proved that the 8000 days and the 6000 years end together. But no proof is even attempted; but another calculation is made from these wrong premises for the ending of the 2300 days in the spring of 1851. Then the calculation based upon the crucifixion being at the end of the sixty-nine weeks, somehow or other, is made to stretch forward one year from the spring of 1850, to the spring of 1851. But this calculation is certain to fail. The pretended argument for removing the crucifixion from the middle of the week of confirmation, back to the end of the sixty-nine weeks, is Heb. ix, 16, 17. "For," say they, "a testament is of force after men are dead; otherwise it is of no strength at all while the testator liveth." To this pretended argument, we reply, that the manifestation of the Messiah, his death as a testator, and his testament to come in force are separate events, one following the other in order. Paul, in Heb. ix, 16, 17, uses a common business transaction, familiar to us all, to illustrate the confirmation and bringing into force the new covenant. The figure is as follows. A man executes and confirms his will before witnesses chosen by himself to testify to the same after his death. Then after the testator dies, the witnesses are called upon to testify concerning the will, and the will is annulled, made void, or confirmed and established according to the testimony in the case. Then after this it takes effect and becomes of force.

Now let us look at the reality illustrated in this figure. And first Jesus is anointed and manifested as the Messiah, at the end of the sixty-nine weeks, as we shall hereafter show. He then confirms the covenant before witnesses, (chosen before of God, see Acts x, 38—41,) three and a half years, then comes the "sacrifice and the oblation to come," in the middle of the week of confirmation, by dying as the testator. Then after his resurrection he appears to his chosen witnesses, tells them to "wait for the promise of the Father, which saith he, ye have heard of me." "Tarry ye in Jerusalem until ye be endowed with power from on high." "John, indeed baptized with water, but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence." This was to qualify them to be suitable witnesses in confirming and establishing his will and testament. Mark this: The new covenant was to be made and confirmed with the house of Israel. On one occasion a Gentile woman petitioned Jesus to have mercy on her, but he would not answer her. His disciples requested him to send her away. He answered them, "I am not sent but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel." He said to the woman, "It is not meet to take the children's bread and cast it to dogs." And when he sent forth his disciples to preach, he said to them, "Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not; but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel." This they strictly adhered to, "preaching the word to none but unto the Jews only," until they had confirmed the covenant three and a half years, which brought them to the end of the week of confirmation. Thus the word "amen" to be spoken (three and a half years) by the Lord, and was confirmed unto him (three and a half years) by them that heard him." Heb. ii, 3. At the end of the week, Cornelius and Peter have visions, and while Peter thought on his vision, "the Spirit said unto him: Behold three men seek thee: Arise therefore, and get thee down, and go with them doubting nothing, for I have sent them." Thus God made choice of Peter that the Gentiles should first hear the word of the gospel, by his mouth and before. See Acts x, 7. And Peter was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision, but went; and when he had come to the house of Cornelius, "he said unto them, Ye know how that it is an unlawful thing for a man that is a Jew to keep company, or come unto one of another nation; but God hath showed me that I should not call any man common or unclean."

Here then, for the first time, he preached the gospel to the Gentiles, and the result was glorious. But some of Peter's brethren were tried with him for going to the Gentiles. Peter rehearsed the matter from the beginning, and when they had heard him through, they held their peace, and glorified God, saying, Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life. And Paul and Barnabas also waxing bold, said to the Jews, It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you; but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles. For so hath the Lord commanded us, saying, I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles, that thou shouldst be for salvation unto the ends of the earth. Under the new covenant dispensation all the families of the world were to be blessed; but the Gentiles were held as strangers and foreigners, until the week of confirming the covenant had expired; then the word was sent to them, and they were permitted to become fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God.—Here then, at the END of the seventh week, the new testament comes into full force, and not at the end of the sixty-nine weeks. Seventy weeks were determined upon the Jews and their city to finish their transgression, &c., at the end of which the kingdom of God was taken from them, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof. See Matt. xxi, 43. The sixty-nine weeks were to reach unto the Messiah the Prince.

"Know therefore and understand that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem unto the Messiah the Prince shall be seven weeks and three-score and two weeks." MESSIAH signifies ANOINTED: To anoint then, constitutes the Messiah the Christ. This is the only definition of the term MESSIAH. The time when God ANOINTED Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with POWER, will mark the termination of the sixty-nine weeks. We will notice a few texts on this point. Acts x, 36—42. "The word which God sent unto the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ, he is Lord of all. That word I say ye know, which was published throughout all Judea, and SAMARIA from GALILEE, after the Baptism which John preached; how God ANOINTED Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power; who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil; for God was with him, and we are witnesses of all things which he did, both in the land of the Jews, and in Jerusalem; whom they slew and hanged on a tree. Him God raised up the third day and showed him openly; not to all the people, but unto witnesses chosen before of God, even to us, who did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead. John's testimony is, "And I knew him not: but that he should he made MANIFEST to ISRAEL, therefore am I come baptizing with water. And John bare record, saying, I saw the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon him.— And I knew him not; but he that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me, Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending and remaining on him, the same is HE which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost. And I saw and have record," &c. It is clear that previous to this time Jesus was not known, or manifest to John, nor Israel, as the MESSIAH. Neither do the Scriptures recognize him as the Messiah previous to this point of time. But from this point they begin to recognize him as such. See John 1, 41. Andrew said to Simon, We have found the MESSIAH; which is, being interpreted, the Christ. [margin, the ANOINTED.] Again, when Jesus talked with the woman of Samaria at Jacob's well, "The woman saith unto him, I know that Messiah cometh, which is called Christ;" "Jesus saith unto her, I that speak unto thee AM HE." John, iv, 25, 26. On another occasion He said to his disciples, "But whom say ye that I am?" "Peter answered, Thou art the CHRIST." He answered Peter, "Blessed art thou Simon Bar-jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." Matt. xvi, 15—17. And when he was demanded of the high priest whether he was the Christ, "Jesus said I am." Mark xiv, 61, 62. After Jesus was anointed, he was led by the Spirit into the wilderness, being tempted forty days; he then returns in the power of the Spirit (into which he had been anointed) into Galilee, and there was delivered to him the Book of the prophet Esaias, and he opened it and read, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, BECAUSE HE HATH ANOINTED me to preach the gospel, &c." Luke iv, 1—18. Here in Galilee is where Jesus BEGAN to preach the gospel of the kingdom of God, saying, THE TIME IS FULFILLED. Mark 1, 9—15. Here "the fullness of the time was come, when God sent forth his Son." Gal. iv, 4, "Hearing ye him," and from this point Jesus began to preach, &c. The sixty-nine weeks was the fullness of the time here fulfilled. For no other time is given to reveal the point of time for the manifestation of the Messiah. From the above considerations it is perfectly clear that the sixty-nine weeks ended when Jesus was anointed with the Holy Ghost and with power, and began to preach the Gospel of the kingdom which was A. D. 27. And he caused "the sacrifice and oblation to cease," in the middle of the seventieth week, by the sacrifice of himself, A. D. 31. And the seventy week ended when the gospel was sent to the Gentiles, A. D. 31.

The seventy weeks, 480 years, terminate then in A. D. 31, 1810 years added fill up the 2300 years, which terminated in 1844. Amen.

THE REVIEW AND HERALD.

"Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth."

PARIS, MONDAY, MAY 8, 1881.

THE SANCTUARY.—There is much importance attached to a correct and thorough understanding of the subject of the Sanctuary to be cleansed at the end of the 2300 days. The correct view of this subject shows clearly that the days have terminated, harmonizes our past Advent experience, and shows that the proclamation of the Angel, which produced such happy and sanctifying effects up to 1844, was the work of God. Those who apply the word Sanctuary to the earth, or Palestine, and the cleansing of it to the burning of the world, cannot explain their own position. It is hoped that some, at least, of those who have advocated the end of the days this spring, and have again been disappointed, will now look at our views of this subject, before seeking a new date for their termination.

But it is a fact that many who profess to stand on the present truth, have neglected a prayerful and persevering study of the Scriptures, and are, therefore, unprepared to give the reasons of their faith. Such are now only unprepared to instruct, and lead others into the truth, but they are in danger of being overthrown by the reasonings of those who oppose it. We wish to urge upon all the importance of taking heed to the injunction of Christ, to "Search the Scriptures." To aid the brethren and sisters in studying the subject of the Sanctuary, we give the following from the pen of O. R. L. Crozier.

"The definition of the word Sanctuary is, 'a sacred place,' (Webster.)—'a holy or sanctified place, a dwelling place of the Most High,' (Cruden.) It seems to us that the word Sanctuary cannot be applied to the earth upon any principle whatever. The primary meaning of the word forbids such a use of it, and it cannot be so applied in a figurative sense, because the thing to which it is figuratively applied must possess a quality agreeable to the meaning of the word—it must be holy. This cannot be said of the earth. Therefore the Sanctuary is not the earth.

We now notice the Scriptural usage of the term. The word Sanctuary occurs 104 times in the Bible—100 in the Old Testament, 4 in Daniel, and 4 times in the New Testament, all in the epistle to the Hebrews. It occurs 5 times in its plural form, Sanctuaries. It is applied 60 times to the tabernacle and temple, sometimes to a part and sometimes to the whole. It is so applied twice in Daniel, chap. ix, 17, 26, and three times in Hebrews, chap. ix, 1, 9; xiii, 11. In two texts it is by some supposed to be applied to the land of Canaan, Ex. xv, 17, and Ps. lxxviii, 54; in two to the Lord, Is. viii, 44 and Ezek. xl, 10; in one to Judah, Ps. cxxiv, 9; in three to Heaven, Ps. cii, 10, Jer. xvii, 19; and Heb. viii, 9; in one to Moses' place of prayer, Is. xvi, 10; and in one to Jeroboam's chapel at Bethel, Am. vii, 13, (margin.) We have not counted Dan. viii, 11, 12, 13, 21, 22, because its meaning in those texts is disputed by some. We believe that any who will take the pains to examine will find the above to be a full and faithful statement of the different senses in which the word Sanctuary is used in the Bible. From these we can learn its primary meaning and legitimate usage. If the vast majority of evidence can determine our judgment in favor of any one among the several, as the proper application of the term, we should decide at once that its appropriate application was to the tabernacle and temple while they stood; and after their day, to that of course which they, while standing, represented, while its application to other objects is unnatural and figurative. This we hope, if the Lord will, to make appear to the satisfaction of the sincere.

Let us, in the first place, examine the texts in which the term Sanctuary seems to be applied to other objects than the tabernacle and the temple; and we shall find that we shall find "the testimony of Jesus" uniform. 1st. "Thou shalt bring them in, and plant them in the mountain of thine inheritance, in the place, O Lord, which thou hast made for thee to dwell in; in the Sanctuary, O Lord, which thy hands have established." Ex. xv, 17. This is a part of the prophetic song of Moses, sung upon the banks of the Red Sea, in praise to God for deliverance from Egypt, and in prospect of their inheritance in Canaan.

It is quoted in Isaiah, lxxviii, 54, and its fulfillment declared, "And he brought them to the border of his Sanctuary, even to this mountain, which his right hand hath purchased." Some have understood the word Sanctuary in these texts to mean the land of Canaan; and then, from the fact that that land was a type of the whole earth, they inferred that the Sanctuary in the vision of Dan. viii, was the earth. On Ex. xv, 17, Cruden says, "The Sanctuary here may be understood the temple on Mount Moriah, which God would certainly cause to be built and established." This opinion is conclusively shown to be correct from the context of Ps. lxxviii, 54. After declaring in v. 51 that God brought his people to the border of his Sanctuary, the Psalmist in v. 63 and 64 tells us what his Sanctuary was which his hands established, "But clear the tribe of Judah, the Mount Zion which he loved. And he built his Sanctuary like high palaces." This was the temple of Solomon, built on Mount Moriah, near Mount Zion in Jerusalem; and this Mount Zion was the "mountain of his inheritance," "the border, (i. e. the place) of his Sanctuary." Thus the Lord dwelt upon the mercy seat among his people. This explanation of the Psalmist dissipates the only plausibility that exists for calling the Sanctuary the earth; and shows beyond all cavil that those very Scriptures which have been taken to support that opinion actually condemn it. Will our respected brethren, who have taught as this opinion, candidly look at this matter, and honestly confess the truth. May the Lord help them to do it. 2nd. Isaiah, chap. lvi, 13, 14, says, "Sanctify the Lord of hosts himself, and let him be your fear, and let him be your dread. And he shall be for a Sanctuary;" and the Lord says in Ezek. xli, 10, "Although I have scattered them among the countries, yet will I be to them as a little Sanctuary in the countries where they shall come." The Sanctuary was a place of security from the avenger of blood and from their enemies, and when in foreign countries they prayed with their faces toward the temple at Jerusalem, hence God's providence towards his people, while scattered in their captivity was "for" or "as," i. e., instead of their Sanctuary. 3d. "Judah was his Sanctuary," Ps. cxxiv, 9, "when Israel came out of Egypt," i. e. God was among them in a cloud and a pillar of fire; and, in the division of Canaan, Jerusalem, where the temple was afterwards built, fell in the lot of Judah, Josh. xv, 63; and when the ten tribes revolted, Judah remained loyal, and was the happy tribe. 4th. When Moses said, "Shall come to his Sanctuary to pray, he shall not prevail," Jer. xvi, 19. This shows that the heathen Sanctuary was a place of religious gathering and worship. 5th. The chapter in which the King of Israel built at Bethel, as a rival to the temple at Jerusalem, was called his Sanctuary, Am. vii, 13, (margin.)

The way is now prepared to notice the primary meaning of the word Sanctuary, and its history.

In Bible history the Mosaic Tabernacle was first the Sanctuary, then the temple which took its place, and from the time the Temple was "left desolate" the Sanctuary was in Heaven.

The first name given to those things of which the Tabernacle formed a part, was, Sanctuary. While Moses was in the mount with God he received the institutions which Israel were to observe in the land in which they journeyed. He was commanded to receive from the people their voluntary offerings of the necessary materials, and the Lord said, "Let them make me a Sanctuary; that I may dwell among them." According to all that I shew thee, after the pattern of the tabernacle, and the pattern of all the instruments thereof, even so shall ye make it." Ex. xxv, 1-9. From this we learn, that the Sanctuary embraced the tabernacle and the instruments thereof, which are described in the following chapters of Exodus,—the principal parts of which are, the Ark with its Mercy-Seat and Cherubims, the two Altars, one of Incense, the other of Burnt-Offerings, the Table of Shew-bread, the Candlestick and the Laver. These were all enclosed in a Court 100 cubits long and 50 broad, made of curtains hung upon brass pillars. The tabernacle itself seems to have been only an adjunct to the Sanctuary to hide its most sacred parts, and services from the common gaze. This is evident from the book of Numbers. After the tabernacle had been set up at Sinai, the Lord chose the tribe of Levi to be dedicated to his service. They were divided into three families, descended from the three sons of Levi, Gerson, Kohath and Merari. The sons of Gerson had charge of the tabernacle; and the tent, the covering thereof, and the hangings for the doors of the tabernacle of the congregation, and the hangings of the court, and the curtains for the door of the court, which is by the tabernacle, and by the altar round about, and the cords of it for all the service thereof." Num. iii, 23, 26. The sons of Kohath were to "keep the charge of the Sanctuary," defined to be, "the ark, table, candlestick, altar, and the vessels of the Sanctuary, where with they minister, and the hanging, ('between the holy and the most holy,' Ex. xxvi, 31-33,) and all the service thereof," v. 27-32. The sons of Merari were to "keep the charge of the Sanctuary, and the bars thereof, and all the vessels thereof, and all that serveth thereto, and the pillars of the court round about, and their sockets, and their pins, and their cords," v. 26, 27. When the camp was to set forward, Aaron and his sons covered the Sanctuary, composed of the things mentioned in Kohath's charge, and all its vessels, which were the furniture of the altar, table and candlestick, such as spoons, bowls, tongs, snuff-dishes, oil-vessels, censers, flesh-hooks, shovels, basins, &c., and the sum of Kohath came "to hear it," ch. ix, 4-15. It is distinctly said that when the camp set forward, the sons of Kohath should bear the Sanctuary upon their shoulders, ch. vii, 0; x, 21. In the charges of these three families of Levi we find a particular definition of the Sanctuary. The sons of Kohath had charge of all that properly constituted the Sanctuary, the things embraced in the charges of Gerson and Merari being only the appurtenances of the Sanctuary. In strict definition, therefore, the Sanctuary was composed of those things only which were necessary to, and actually used in, the work of making atonement for the people. The reader, perhaps, cannot now see the importance of defining so particularly what the Sanctuary was; but the reason for it will appear in the sequel, if the Lord permit us to pursue the subject.

This Sanctuary was called "the house of God," Josh. ix, 23; xviii, 1; Judges xviii, 31; xix, 10; xx, 19, 20, 31; xxi, 9; 1. Sam. i, 3, 7. It was his prepared dwelling place among his people,—the place of his special presence was in the most holy place of the tabernacle, on the mercy-seat, between the cherubim, (Ex. xxv, 22; Lev. xvi, 2; 1. Sam. ix, 4; 2. Sam. vi, 2,) though at the morning and evening sacrifices he met them at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, Ex. xxix, 34-35. This continued to be the Sanctuary and house of God, till Solomon built him no house for the Sanctuary, 2. Sam. vii, 4-13; 1. Chr. xxi, xxviii, 1-10. David received the pattern for it, "by the Spirit," and gave them to his son, 2. Chr. xxi, 11-13. When Solomon had built the temple, the ark and the holy vessels were brought into it, 1. Chr. xxi, 10; 1. Kings viii, 0. While in battle or in their enemies' land, they were to pray with their faces toward this house, 1. Kings viii, 44-49, which was called the temple of the Lord's holiness, Ps. v, 7, (margin.) This Daniel did at Babylon, Dan. vi, 10. The Sanctuary being the place whence they looked for help, Ps. xx, 2, and the place of their sacrifices, it was, among the gifts of God, the centre object of their affections—a thing indispensable to the perpetuity of their peculiar polity. When the Assyrian desolated their Sanctuary, their religion was prostrated—their nationality gone. Hence Daniel's fervent interest in prayer to God, to cause his face to shine upon his Sanctuary that was desolate, Dan. ix, 17.

We feel confident that we have now presented, though briefly and doubtless imperfectly, the true view of the Sanctuary for the period of time spoken of, that is, from Moses to Daniel. No other view can be supported from Scripture. We apprehend none will be attempted, unless it be that which applies the term to Palestine; but that theory is refuted by the context of the only two texts that can be adduced to sustain it. Within three months from the time that the song was sung, of which Ex. xv, 17 is a part, the children of Israel were commanded to make the Lord a Sanctuary at Sinai, Ex. xxv, 8. There is not the least hint that any thing else was the Sanctuary besides that which they then made, until the Lord appointed his people a place and "planted them," 2. Sam. vi, 10-13, according to Ex. xv, 17, by the building of the temple and the establishment of the kingdom under Solomon. Its fulfilment is again recorded in Ps. lxxviii, 54, and explained in verse 60:—"And he built his Sanctuary like high palaces." Though that song may have contemplated a more remote and glorious fulfilment, yet these scriptures declare, at least, its temporary fulfilment, and they leave not a shred of plausibility for the theory that the land of Palestine was the Sanctuary—not a foothold for even an infurcate.

We come in the next place to inquire what the Sanctuary of Dan. viii, 14 is. The chronology of that prophecy makes it certain that it was not the Jewish Sanctuary, because our Saviour declared it "left desolate," Matt. xxiii, 38, the Romans "destroyed the city and the Sanctuary," about a. d. 70, and "the end thereof shall be with a flood," Dan. ix, 26—irreversibly destroyed. Yet, though the Jewish Sanctuary ceased to be the Sanctuary 1800 years ago, something else existed to the end of the 2300 days which was called the Sanctuary, and was at the end of that period, to undergo a change which is expressed by the word "cleansed," "justified," "vindicated," or "declared just." Do the Scriptures teach us to what the name Sanctuary was transferred from that which had been the Sanctuary under the Mosaic dispensation? We think they do. Paul, after stating the prominent parts and uses of that Sanctuary, tells us that it "was a figure for the time then present," Heb. ix, 1-9.

Of what was it a figure? On this question two positions have been taken: 1st. That it was a figure of the Gospel church; 2d. That it was a figure of heaven or something in heaven. In the epistle to the Hebrews one thing is made very clear, which if kept in view will greatly aid us in the solution of this question, viz: That Christ at his ascension entered the place of which the Jewish Sanctuary was a figure, pattern or type, and that it is the place of his ministry during the Gospel dispensation. This fact Paul places beyond all controversy. Now, if the Gospel Church be the antitype of the Mosaic tabernacle and the temple of Solomon, as many believe, then Jesus never ascended to heaven as his disciples thought he did, and the angels said he did, Acts i, 9-11; but he vanished into his disciples that "stood gazing up into heaven," and the two angels only completed the deception—he never "went away" and will never "come again," and our hope is vain; for, if there be no second coming, there will be no resurrection, no reward. "The sum" of Paul's argument to the Hebrews is: "We have such an High Priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens; A MINISTER OF THE SANCTUARY, and of the true tabernacle; which the Lord pitched, and not man." This is the only text in the New Testament in which the word Sanctuary is found, except the three that speak of the Jewish Sanctuary. And now we feel safe in stating, that there is no Scripture authority for calling any thing else the Sanctuary under the Gospel dispensation, but the place of Christ's ministry in the heavens, from the time of his ascension to the Father till his second coming. If there be, let it be produced.

May grace, mercy and peace be with you.—Amen.—Dry Den.

THE REVIEW AND HERALD.

"Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth."
ROCHESTER, THURSDAY, SEPT. 24, 1852

THE SANCTUARY.

[This is a very interesting and important subject. And we hope that it will be fully brought out by some one soon, and presented to the readers of the REVIEW AND HERALD. We give the following from the pen of O. R. L. Crozier, written in 1846.]

The Sanctuary was the heart of the typical system. There the Lord placed his name, manifested his glory, and held converse with the high priest relative to the welfare of Israel. While we inquire from the scriptures what the Sanctuary is, let all carnal prejudices be dismissed from the mind. For the Bible clearly defines what the Sanctuary is, and answers every reasonable question you may ask concerning it. The name, Sanctuary, is applied to several different things in the Old Testament; neither did the Wonderful Numberer, tell Daniel what Sanctuary was to be cleansed at the end of the 2,300 days, but called it THE SANCTUARY, as though Daniel well understood it, and that he did is evident from the fact that he did not ask what it was. But as it has now become a matter of dispute as to what the Sanctuary is, our only safety lies in seeking from the New Testament, the divine comment upon it. Its decision should place the matter beyond all controversy with Christians. Paul freely discusses this subject in his Epistle to the Hebrews, to whom the typical covenant pertained.

"Then verily the first covenant had ordinances of divine service and a worldly Sanctuary, for there was a tabernacle made; the first, wherein was the candlestick, and the tables and the shew-bread, which is called [Hagia] Holy. And after the second veil, the tabernacle which is called the [Hagion Hagion] Holy of Holies, which had the golden censor, and the Ark of the covenant; overlaid round about with gold, wherein was the golden pot that had manna, and Aaron's rod that budded, and the tables of the covenant; and over it the cherubims of glory overshadowing the Mercy-seat; of which we cannot now speak particularly." Heb. ix, 1-5.

A particular description is found in the last four books of the Pentateuch. "Sanctuary" was the first name the Lord gave it, [Ex. xxv, 8,] which name covers not only the tabernacle, with its two apartments, but also the court and all the vessels of the ministry. This, Paul calls the Sanctuary of the first covenant, "which was a figure for the time then present, in which were offered both gifts and sacrifices." Verne 9. "But Christ being come an High Priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands." Verse 11. The priests entered the "figures" or "patterns of the true," which true are the "heavenly places themselves," into which Christ entered when he entered "heaven itself."—Verses 23, 24. When he ascended, to the right hand of the Father, "in the heavens," he became "A Minister of the Sanctuary [or Hagion Holies] and of the True Tabernacle, which the Lord pitched and not man." Chap. viii, 1, 2. That is the Sanctuary of the "better [the new] covenant." Verse 6.

The Sanctuary to be cleansed at the end of the 2,300 days, is also the Sanctuary of the new covenant, for the vision of the treading down and cleansing is after the crucifixion. We see that the Sanctuary of the new covenant is not on earth, but in heaven. The True Tabernacle which forms a part of the new covenant Sanctuary, was made and pitched by the Lord, in contradistinction to that of the first covenant which was made and pitched by man, in obedience to the command of God. Ex. xxv, 8. Now what does the same Apostle say the Lord has pitched? "A city which hath foundations whose builder and maker is God." Heb. xi, 10. What is its name? "The heavenly Jerusalem." Chap. xii, 22; Rev. xxi. "A building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." 2 Cor. v, 1. "My Father's house of many mansions." John xiv, 2.

When our Saviour was at Jerusalem, and had pronounced its house desolate, the disciples came to him to show him the buildings of the temple. Then he said: "There shall not be left here one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down." Matt. xxiv, 1, 2. "That temple was their Sanctuary." 1 Chron. xxii, 17-19; xxviii, 9-13. 2 Chron. xxix, 5, 21; xxxvi, 14, 17. Such an announcement would tend to fill them with sadness and fear, as foretelling the derangement, if not the total prostration of their entire religious system. But to comfort and teach them, he says: "In my Father's house are many mansions." John xiv, 1-3. Standing as he was, on the dividing line between the typical covenant and the anti-typical, and having just declared the house of the former no longer valid, and foretold its destruction; how natural that he should point his disciples to the Sanctuary of the latter, about which their affections and interests were to cluster as they had about that of the former.

The Sanctuary of the new covenant is connected with New Jerusalem, like the Sanctuary of the first covenant with Old Jerusalem. As that was the place where the priests of that covenant ministered, so this is in heaven, the place where the Priest of the new covenant ministers. To these places, and these only, the New Testament applies the name "Sanctuary," and it does appear that this should for ever set the question at rest.

But as we have been so long and industriously taught to look to the earth for the Sanctuary, it may be proper to inquire, by what scriptural authority have we been thus taught? I can find none. If others can, let them produce it. Let it be remembered that the definition of Sanctuary is "a holy or sacred place." Is the earth, is Palestine such a place? Their entire contents answer, No! Was Daniel so taught? Look at his vision.

"Daniel prayed, 'Cause thy face to shine upon thy Sanctuary which is desolate.'" Chap. ix, 17. This was the typical Sanctuary built by Solomon. "Thou hast commanded me to build a temple upon thy Holy Mount, and an altar in the City wherein thou dwellest, a resemblance of thy Holy Tabernacle, which thou hast prepared from the beginning." Wis. Sol. ix, 8. 1 Chron. xxviii, 10-13. It had stood in the seventy years desolation of Jerusalem. Dan. ix.

2; 2 Chron. xxxvi, 14—21. It was rebuilt after the captivity. Neh. x, 39. Moses received the patterns of the Sanctuary, built at Sinai when he was with the Lord forty days in the cloud on the Mount; and David received the patterns of that built by Solomon, which superseded Moses, with its chambers, porches, courts, the courses of the priests and Levites, and all the vessels of service, &c., "by the Spirit." 1 Chron. xxviii, 10—13. It is manifest that both Moses and David had prophetic visions of the New Jerusalem with its Sanctuary, and Christ, the officiating Priest. When that built by Moses was superseded by Solomon's, the Ark was borne from the former to the latter. 2 Chron. v, 2—8. The Sanctuary comprehended not only the Tabernacle, but also all the vessels of the ministry, enclosed by the court in which the Tabernacle stood. Num. iii, 29—31; x, 17, 21. So the court in which the Temple stood was properly called the Sanctuary.—prideaux. We learn the same from 2 Chron. xxix, 18, 21.

"We have cleansed all the house of the Lord, and the altar of burnt offering, with all the vessels thereof, and the shew-bread table with all the vessels thereof." The altar of burnt-offering with its vessels stood before the Temple in the inner court, the whole of which are in verse 21 called the Sanctuary. Well, says one, is not Palestine called the Sanctuary? I think not. Ex. xv, 17. "Thou shalt bring them in and plant them in the mountain of thine inheritance, in the place, O Lord, which thou hast made for thee to dwell in; in the Sanctuary, O Lord, which thy hands have established."

What is it which the Lord "has made to dwell in," which his "hands have established?" Paul says it is "a City," [Heb. xi, 10,] a "Tabernacle," [Chap. viii, 2,] a building in the heavens. 2 Cor. v, 1. And the Lord has chosen Mount Zion in Palestine for the place of its final location. Ps. cxxxii, 13, 14. "For the Lord hath chosen Zion; he hath desired it for his habitation. This is my rest for ever; here will I dwell; for I have desired it." "He brought them to the border of the Sanctuary, even to this mountain," [Ps. lxxviii, 54,] which was his chosen border or place; but not the Sanctuary itself, any more than Mount Moriah, on which the Temple was built, was the Temple itself. Did they regard that land as the Sanctuary? If they did not, we should not.

A view of the texts in which the word occurs will show. "Let them make me a Sanctuary." Ex. xxv, 9. "Thou shalt make the Sanctuary," [Ex. xxx, 13,] and above twenty others like it. "Then wrought Bezaleel and Aholiab, and every wise-hearted man, in whom the Lord put wisdom and understanding to know how to work all manner of work for the service of the Sanctuary." "Before the veil of the Sanctuary." Lev. iv, 6. "Carry your brethren from before the Sanctuary." Lev. x, 4. "Nor come into the Sanctuary." Lev. xii, 4. "He shall make atonement for the holy Sanctuary." Lev. xvi, 18. "Reverence my Sanctuary." Lev. xxi, 30; xxvi, 2. "Nor profane the Sanctuary of his God." Lev. xxi, 12—14. "Vessels of the Sanctuary." Num. iii, 31. "Charge of the Sanctuary." Num. iii, 32, 38. "They minister in the Sanctuary." Chap. iv, 12. "In the Sanctuary and the vessels thereof." Verse 10. "And when Aaron and his sons have made an end of covering the Sanctuary and all the vessels of the Sanctuary, as the camp is to set forward; after that the sons of Kohath shall come to bear it." Chap. iv, 15; vii, 9; x, 21. "That there be no plague among the children of Israel when the children of Israel come nigh unto the Sanctuary." Chap. viii, 19. "Thou and thy sons and thy Father's house with thee shall bear the iniquity of the Sanctuary." Chap. xxviii, 1. "He hath defiled the Sanctuary of his God." Chap. xix, 20. Joshua "took a great stone and set it up there under an oak that was by the Sanctuary of the Lord." Jos. xxiv, 26. "All the instruments of the Sanctuary." 1 Chron. ix, 20. "Build ye the Sanctuary." Chap. xxii, 19. "Governors of the Sanctuary." Chap. xxiv, 5. "The Lord hath chosen thee to build a house for the Sanctuary." Chap. xxviii, 10; 2 Chron. xx, 8. "Go out of the Sanctuary." Chap. xxvi, 18; xxix, 21; xxx, 8. "Purification of the Sanctuary." Chap. xxx, 19; xxxvi, 17.

I have given nearly every text, and I believe every different form of expression in which the word occurs till we come to the Psalms; so that every one can see what they understood the Sanctuary to be. And of the fifty texts quoted, not one applies it to the land of Palestine, nor any land. That Sanctuary, though enclosed with curtains, was called "the house of the Lord," [Judg. xviii, 31; 1 Sam. i, 9—24,] and was pitched at the city of Shiloh at the time of dividing the land; [xviii, 1, 10,] hence, it was called the "Tabernacle of Shiloh." [Safety and happiness.] Ps. lxxviii, 60. The Lord foretold it when the Philistines took the Ark [1 Sam. iv, 3—11] and delivered his strength into captivity, and his glory into the enemies' hand. verse 21.

"It was brought back to Kirjath-jearim, [1 Sam. vii, 1, 2,] thence to the house of Obadedom, thence to the City of David which is Zion. [2 Sam. vi, 1—19; v, 9,] and thence, at the direction of Solomon, the Ark was conveyed into the Holy of Holies of the temple, [1 Kings viii, 1—6,] which was built in Mount Moriah near Mount Zion, 2 Chron. iii, 1. The Lord has chosen Zion to dwell in at rest for ever; [Ps. cxxxii, 13, 14,] but as yet he had dwelt there but a short time, and then in curtains made with hands; but when he shall appear in his glory he will have "mercy on Zion" and build it up; then Jerusalem, upon it, shall be "a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be taken down." Ps. cii; xxxiii, 20. And then "the people shall dwell in Zion at Jerusalem." Verses 18, 19.

The Song of Moses [Ex. xv] is evidently prophetic, and contemplates the happy scenes of the Eden Zion. And so Ezekiel has it. The Lord will bring the whole house of Israel up out of their graves into the land of Israel; and then set his Sanctuary and tabernacle in the midst of them for evermore. The Sanctuary is not "the land of Israel" nor the people; for it is set in their midst, and is built and forms a part of the City whose name is, "The Lord is there."

OUR PRESENT POSITION.

There has never been a time since we first embraced the Advent faith, that our position lacked no clear and satisfactory as at the present. Our pathway, like "the shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day," is brightening at every step we take. This was to be the portion of the "just," who, in the waiting, watching time, should "live by faith."

THE 2300 DAYS.—This prophetic period has been, and still is, the main pillar of the Advent faith. It is, therefore, of the utmost importance that we have a correct view of the commencement and termination of this period, in order to understand our present position.

B. C. 457, was the year presented, and clearly proved by Brother Miller, as the true date for the commencement of the 2300 days. It was published to the world by every Second Advent paper in the land, by books, and by public lectures, as the true date. The proof was so very conclusive that those who examined the point with candor embraced it at once. Learned opponents did not, and could not, show that we were incorrect in dating the 2300 days from B. C. 457. With this clearly ascertained date for the commencement of the main pillar of the "original" Advent faith, leopards went forth united to give the judgment last cry. This was the date written upon the "chronological chart of the visions of Daniel and John, published by J. V. Himes, 14 Devonshire St."

It was the united testimony of Second Advent lecturers and papers, when standing on "THE ORIGINAL FAITH," that the publication of the chart was a fulfillment of Hab. ii, 2, 3. If the chart was a subject of prophecy, (and those who deny it leave the original faith,) then it follows that A. C. 457 was the year from which to date the 2300 days. It was necessary that 1843 should be the first published time in order that "the vision" should "tarry," or that there should be a tarrying time, in which the virgin band was to slumber and sleep on the great subject of time, just before they were to be aroused by the Midnight Cry.

There is a seeming contradiction in the language of the Prophet—"though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry," which may be explained only by Second Advent History.

"Write the vision, and make it plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth it. [This was fulfilled when the first published time was made plain upon the chart.] For the vision is yet for an appointed time, [Mark this. There is "appointed time" connected with the "vision" made "plain upon tables;" and what one it refers to, but the vision of the 2300 days of which it is said, "when thou up the vision for it shall be for many days," "the time appointed was long," and "as the time appointed the end shall be,"] but at the end it shall speak, and not lie; though it tarry, [means to tarry, by reaching into 1844, beyond the first published time,] wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry."

Here we will give extracts from the "Advent Shield" No. 1, published May, 1844, pages 122—124. This is a standard work for Advent believers, and presents their unanimous view of their true position at that time.

"Having passed the point of the apparent termination of the prophetic periods, we are placed in a position, which God forewarn his children would be placed in, at the end of the vision; and for which he made provision, by the prophet Habakkuk, (ii, 1—3,) when he says, "I will stand upon my tower, and will watch to see what he will say unto me, and what I shall answer when I am reproved," or as it reads in the margin "argued with." "And the Lord answered me and said, Write the vision, and make it plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth it. For the vision is yet for an appointed time," (the seven times) "but at the end [of the prophetic periods] it shall speak and not lie; though it tarry," [beyond their apparent termination] "wait for it; because it will surely come," [in the fulness of the prophetic times, beyond which,] "it will not tarry."

That this admonition has reference to the present time is evident from Paul's quotation of it in Hebrews x, 36—38. "For ye have need of patience; that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise. For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry. Now the just shall live by faith; but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him. But we are not of them who draw back unto perdition; but of them that believe to the saving of the soul."

We believe that we are occupying that period spoken of by our Savior, when the Bridegroom tarries—Matthew xxv, 5, to which the kingdom of heaven should be likened when "that evil servant [there having been an apparent failure in the time] shall say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming, and shall begin to smite his fellow-servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken."

"We believe it was in view of such an apparent tarrying of the vision that the apostle James said, "Be patient, therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord, be ye also patient; establish your hearts, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh," and "Behold the Judge standeth before the door."

And we believe it was in anticipation of the passing by of the expected time that our Saviour admonished us, in the 13th of Luke, "Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning; and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord, when he will return from the wedding; that when he cometh and knocketh they may open unto him immediately." "Ye wait implies a passing by of the time; for till that we do not wait. Therefore our Lord adds:—"Blessed are those servants, whom the Lord when he cometh shall find watching."

If the vision did not speak in the autumn of 1844, then it never spoke, and never can speak. It was then so clear as the noon-day sun, that all the evidence that was brought to prove that the 2300 days would end in 1843, proved that they would end in the fall of 1844. It was proclaimed everywhere, "it will surely come it will not tarry." The vision spoke in language not to be misunderstood, nor soon forgotten, though many would be glad to blot the facts in the mass from the history of the past.

"Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the Sanctuary be cleansed." We believe that the appointed time did not tarry, that the vision did speak in 1844, and that the time for cleansing the Sanctuary then came. This we will examine in another place.

This, it is well known, was our first published time. It was the year—Jewish time—in which we looked for the Lord. There were never any set days in that year, as our opponents have repeatedly asserted, upon which the Adventists were united in their expectations, as the day which would be honored by the Lord's Advent. There were, however, several days in that year, which were looked to with great interest; but while some had their eyes upon one day, others had their minds directed to other days, so that there was no unanimity of expectation respecting them. In the year we were all united, and believed that sometime between March 21st, 1843, and March 21st, 1844, the Lord would come. Our minds were directed to that point of time, from the fact that dating the several prophetic periods from those years in which the best chronologists assign the fulfillment of those events which were to mark their commencement, they all seemed to terminate that year. This was, however, only apparent. We date the "seven times" or 2520 years, from the captivity of Manasseh, which is, with great unanimity, placed by chronologists B. C. 677. This date is the only one we have ever reckoned from, for the commencement of this period; and subtracting B. C. 677 from 2520 years, there remained but A. D. 1843. We, however, did not observe, that as it would require 577 full years B. C. and 1843 full years A. D. to complete 2520 years, that it would also oblige us to extend this period as far late A. D. 1844, as it might have commenced after the beginning of B. C. 677. The same was also true of the other periods. The great jubilee of 2450 years, commencing with the captivity of Jehoiakim B. C. 607; and the 2300 days, commencing with the 70 weeks B. C. 457, would respectively require 1843 full years after Christ added to so many full years before Christ, as the years in which we have always respectively commemorated each period, to complete the number of years in each; and as subtracting from each period the date B. C. of its commencement, there would remain A. D. 1843, no reference whatever was made to the fraction of the year, which, in each case, had transpired from its commencement, and which would require that each period should extend so much beyond the expiration of A. D. 1843, as they respectively began after the commencement of the year B. C. from which they are dated.

While this discrepancy was not particularly noticed by us, it was also not noticed by any of our learned opponents. Amid all the arguments which were brought to bear against our position, no allusion was made to that point.

The "Herald," however, soon left this position, which perfectly harmonized in past course in teaching the time, 1843, the tarrying time and the Midnight Cry, and took an intermediate position relative to time. That the 2300 days would probably terminate somewhere between that time and 1847, was called a "safe position." Joseph was said relative to "doubtful chronology," and a space of four years in which chronologists did not agree. The year 1847 came and passed by; yet the "Herald" was far from acknowledging that the 2300 days were ended. Those who stood on the "original Advent faith," as presented in the above extract from the "Herald," and contended that the 2300 days ended in the autumn of 1844, were held up, by many Advent preachers and papers, to public notice, as fanatic, and they were classed with Mormons, Shakers, &c. &c.

But the "Herald," after saying so much in a "safe position" of indefinite time, and "doubtful chronology," has returned to its old position relative to the 2300 days, and has, with the most conclusive evidence, settled the question, that the 2300 days commenced B. C. 457. Here we give an important extract from "Lecture on chronology," "Advent Herald" for March 2, 1850.

"The Bible gives the data for a complete system of chronology, extending from the creation to the birth of Christ, a clearly ascertained date. From this period downwards we have the undisputed Canon of Ptolemy and the undoubted era of Naxos, extending below our vulgar era. At the point where inspired chronology leaves us, this canon of undoubted accuracy commences. And thus the whole arch is spanned. It is by the Canon of Ptolemy that the great prophetic period of seventy weeks is fixed. This Canon places the seventh year of Artaxerxes in the year B. C. 457; and the accuracy of the Canon is demonstrated by the concurrent agreement of more than twenty eclipses. The seventy weeks date from the going forth of a decree respecting the restoration of Jerusalem. There were no decrees between the seventh and twelfth years of Artaxerxes. Four hundred and ninety years, beginning with the 7th, must commence in B. C. 457, and end in A. D. 34. Commencing in the 40th, they must commence in B. C. 444, and end in A. D. 34. As no event occurred in A. D. 34 to mark their termination, we cannot reckon from the 20th; we must, therefore, look to the 7th of Artaxerxes. This date we cannot change from B. C. 457 without first demonstrating the inaccuracy of Ptolemy's Canon. To do this, it would be necessary to show that the large number of eclipses by which its accuracy has been repeatedly demonstrated, have not been correctly computed; and such a result would unsettle every chronological date, and leave the settlement of epochs and the adjustment of eras entirely at the mercy of every dreamer, so that chronology would be of no more value than mere guess-work. As the seventy weeks must terminate in A. D. 34, unless the 7th of Artaxerxes is wrongly fixed, and as that cannot be changed without some evidence to that effect, we inquire, What evidence marked that termination? The time when the apostles turned to the Gentile harmonies with that date better than any other which has been named. And the crucifixion, in A. D. 31, in the midst of the last week, is sustained by a mass of testimony which cannot be easily invalidated."

We will here give another short extract from the "Herald" which is to the point. The article is headed, "THE DATE OF THE CRUCIFIXION." It establishes an important point, that the crucifixion was A. D. 31.

"At the death of Christ, God ceasing to have pleasure in 'sacrifice and offering and burnt offerings and offering for sin,' it follows that his death caused 'the sacrifice and oblation to cease.' (Heb. ix, 27;) and this, as predicted, was 'in the midst of the week.' This falling in A. D. 31, the last week could not extend beyond A. D. 34, which would be the latest point to which seventy weeks, 490 years, could be extended from B. C. 457—the seventh year of Artaxerxes Longimanus. Thus with the crucifixion in A. D. 31, all the dates harmonize, which cannot be said, if placed at any other time."—Herald for Aug. 24, 1850.

Now if the crucifixion was in the spring of A. D. 31, in the "midst" (middle) of the seventieth week, so clearly shown by the "Herald," then it follows of necessity that the seventy weeks, 490 years, terminate at A. D. 34. For three and a half years, the last half of the week of seven years, would reach to that point of time. As the seventy weeks, or 490 of the 2300 years, terminated in the autumn of A. D. 34, then the remaining 1810, after the seventy weeks are "cut off" certainly terminated in the autumn of 1844. Really, the "Herald" should not consider us heretics for honestly believing what they have so clearly taught, and established, relative to the main pillar of the Second Advent faith!

It will not be denied that this calculation of the 2300 days, that they commenced B. C. 457, was the foundation of the judgment hour cry, [Rev. xiv, 6, 7,] by the angel dying in the midst of heaven. This calculation of the days was the burden of the first angel's message. Therefore, consistency shuns us up to the faith that when that calculation ran out the message ceased. Shall we admit that the first message is now being given by those who virtually acknowledge that its very foundation, the 2300 days, ended in 1844? Certainly, we shall not. None will fail to see the utter folly of such a position. Then we say that those who have proved the commencement of the 2300 days B. C. 457, the crucifixion A. D. 31, have virtually acknowledged the days ended, and the first angel's message [Rev. xiv, 6, 7,] fulfilled more than six years since.

It being evident that the burden of the first angel's message [Rev. xiv, 6, 7] was delivered, and that it closed up for the world more than six years since, we certainly have just cause to look to the history of this point, and to the present, for the fulfillment of the second and third angels. True, the "evangelizing-gospel" has not lost its power to affect the hearts of those who are still within the reach of mercy, and salvation; but that it has ceased to arouse and move men to repentance as in 1843, no sane man will deny. Then the message was proclaimed everywhere, and everywhere felt. Then its preachers were perfectly united in faith, in feeling, and in their course of action. Now those who profess to be still giving the same message, are very much limited in their sphere of action; for, but few have any interest in the doctrine. And, what makes their case look really "wretched and miserable" is the fact that the work of many of them, for months past, has been to "bite and devour one another." They are, therefore, being "consumed one of another."—Yes, they have successfully exposed each others faults to the scoffers of these last days, and have, in a most conclusive manner, proved to the scoffers of "the blessed hope," that many who are still professing to give the judgment hour cry, are deceptive and wicked men. If any question the above statements, we invite them to peruse the scandalous pamphlet, entitled, "The trial of J. V. Himes before the Chardon Street Church, &c. by Prof. J. P. Westcott and Elder George Needham." Then read the reply in "The Supplement to the Advent Herald," and also the "Vindicator," by Westcott, Needham, and others, and you will say "that the half was not told" you.

We fully believe that the great trouble with these men is, that they set themselves to work to "re-arouse the sleeping churches," after they had done all their duty to them faithfully, and after God had said, by his Spirit and Providence, let them alone. Many of them declared their work done. Their sinking cause, their course for six years past, and their present condition afford abundant evidence that God did not set them to work to do over again, what they had once well done. When God was with them, and when his hand was seen in the great work, the judgment hour cry went forth with power until the first published time closed, and thousands joyfully received the glad tidings of the coming kingdom of God. But when men undertake, woe to the Spirit of the great God, "to re-arouse the sleeping churches," we see the sad reverse.

When the Spirit of God spoke through feeble clay, then the trumpet gave a certain sound. Ten thousand voices were raised in sweet harmony to swell the last note of warning to the churches and world, until the work was finished. Then feeble man was seen "in the field again," with human energy, trying "to re-arouse the sleeping churches," that had fallen into a perpetual sleep. Loud calls were heard for others, who had confessed their work for the world forever done, to give up the mighty work of God in 1843 and 1844, as a "mistake," "a mismerman," &c., and to enter "the field again." Now we enquire, what has been the result? The history of six years past will tell the sad story.—Spiritual death has followed. Thousands who were consecrated to God, had living faith in the Advent, six years since are now buried up in the spirit of the world. They have taken their sacrifices from the altar, and have lost their faith, by reason of the darkness and uncertainty which has been thrown over the whole Advent movement, and they are now prepared for the coming of Christ.

*More let it be remembered, that this is the man that stated that God had shown him that all the commandments of God were abolished.

True, some have professed conversion to God, and to the Advent faith since 1844, enough to fulfill the words of the Prophet, [Isaiah 5, 7.] "they have begotten strange children." But it will not be denied that some one has embraced the faith (on have given it up. In many towns of emigration, where there were hundreds, once happy in the "blessed hope," now but two or three, if any, can be found who profess any faith in the Advent.

Most of the shepherds, instead of feeding the flock with meat in due season, left them to perish, and went out "to re-arrange the plumb-line." Many of the previous flock could not unite with them to end, or do over again, what find had finished. And being described as "thrust" by these shepherds, they were left to fall under wrong influences, and in take the opposite extreme, and embrace such gross errors as modern spiritualism, &c. But—Glory be to God! we are now turning to see the fulfillment of his precious promise, "I will seek out which was lost, and bring again that which was driven away, and all bind up that which was broken, and will strengthen that which was weak." Ezek. xxxiv, 16.

Those that profess to be still giving the judgment hour cry, and reject the Advent movement up to 1844, occupy a singular position. For if they are right now, then the angel with the "everlasting gospel" did not start right. And for some half dozen years, up to the autumn of 1841, he did not correctly understand his message; but labored under a "MISTAKE." And being under the influence of misapprehension, or error, he caused a false excitement which has destroyed the confidence of those that dwell on the earth, "to whom he was to preach, in his message. Therefore the message of the angel had to be corrected, and with the new edition of it, the plumb-line churches are to be "re-arranged."

Again, according to their singular position, the thousands of conversions, before 1844, the great love and study of the Bible, and the holy, happy, united and unswerving state of the (so called) deluded ones, who believed that Jesus would come in 1843, and again at the tenth day of the seventh month, was the fruit of "misapprehension," or to use their mild term, "a mistake." And that, under the present circumstances, when contention, betraying and deceiving one another, darkness and death is among them, they are accomplishing the purpose of God, in the judgment hour message!

Our object in these remarks, is to expose the absurdity in the position of those who reject the present truth, and still profess to stand on the "original faith." We would, with deep feelings of humiliation, thank God that our present position is clear and harmonious; and that we can show a more excellent way. Our position is clearly marked out in the word of God. The fourteenth chapter of Revelation is one of those dear prophecies which show plainly our whereabouts.

The first angel, of verses 6 and 7, has made his flight. He delivered the burden of his message, and gave place to the second that "rejoice" more than six years since. "And there FOLLOWED another angel, saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen." Mark this. Both angels were not making their flight, and declaring their messages at the same time. No, no. The second "followed," after the first had given the burden of his message. Have we heard such a message, in the order presented in this chapter? All Advent believers are compelled, by reasons of fact, in their own experience, to acknowledge that we have. Is not this important "way-mark" we do not have to refer to old dusty volumes of history, but to a holy, living experience, wrought in us very beings by the Holy Spirit, and the plain word of God? We loved, felt and proclaimed the cry ourselves, and in obedience to the word from heaven, "Come out of her my people" we came out from her sectarian churches.

"And the third angel followed them, &c." Here we learn that the third angel follows the other two, that he does not go on his mission with the others, but follows, after they have finished their work. Now if the first has been sounding for some dozen years up to this present time, and is to continue, as some teach, until the Advent, then we ask you, to show us when and where the second and third angels are to deliver their solemn messages. No one will say, in harmony. Then they must give up their error, that the first is to continue until the coming of Christ, and give the second and third angels their proper places. Thus our past experience and present position is a perfect harmony. "Here is the patience of the saints: here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus." Then comes the solemn message of the third angel. By "the patience of the saints" we understand to be meant their trying, waiting time, after the termination of the 2300 days. The burden of the second angel's message was delivered prior to the fall of 1844. There the celebration of the prophetic time run out, and the great disappointment to all that loved the appearing of Christ, then came. Since that point of time our faith and patience have been severely tried.

But in this time of deep trial and affliction of soul, for our comfort and strength, we hear the cheering voice of the third angel, saying, "Here is the patience of the saints." Amen! It is so! Paul testifies to this point as follows. "Cast not away therefore your confidence, [in the Advent movement,] which hath great recompense of reward. For ye have need of PATIENCE, that after ye have done the will of God, [in giving the first two messages,] ye might receive the promise." This declaration "Here is the patience of the saints," is however but a part of the present truth. The angel continues, "Here are they that keep the commandments of God." He does not say, here are they that keep nine of the commandments; neither does he say, here are they that keep the "New Testament commandments," or the "law of grace." Such unscriptural language, so commonly used by those that oppose the Sabbath of the Lord our God, is not found in his message. But he proclaims the existence of a people, in the time of "the patience of the saints," that keep the "commandments of God." They certainly observe the Sabbath, for the law that enjoins it, is one of the commandments of God. Who will deny this? No one will assert that the fourth commandment is not one of the commandments of God.

The class of Christians mentioned by the third angel are those who went forth to meet the Lord; were disappointed in not seeing him at the end of the days; and in their disappointed situation, and time of "patience" are keeping the Sabbath of the Lord our God. Glory to God! we met them! They are our dear brethren and sisters "in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ"; who claim the right of following the example of the followers of Jesus, who "rested the Sabbath-day, according to the commandment," after "the hand-writing of ordinances" was nailed to the cross.

THE SANCTUARY:—Daniel was told that the cleansing of the Sanctuary would be at the end of the 2300 days. "Unto two thousand and three hundred days: then shall the sanctuary be cleansed."—Dan. viii, 14. There is no intimation of a space of time between the end of the days and the cleansing of the Sanctuary. Whatever it may be, the work of cleansing it immediately follows the end of the days. Now if the 2300 days commenced A. C. 457, as published to the world by Adventists up to 1844, and as clearly shown by the "Advent Herald" of 1850, then they terminated in 1844, and we, as consistent men and Christians, should look to that point of time for the work of cleansing the Sanctuary to ensue.

If the days ended in 1844, and we believe that they did, then, certainly, the Sanctuary to be cleansed at their end is not the land of Canaan, for the simple reason that that land is not being cleansed. Therefore, it is irrelevant to hold on to the view that the land of Canaan is the Sanctuary, while successfully proving the commencement of the days A. C. 457, the crucifixion in the spring of A. D. 31, consequently the end of the seventy weeks in the autumn of A. D. 34, and the termination of the 2300 days in the autumn of 1844. We do not believe that there is a blank space of already more than six years between the end of the days and the cleansing of the Sanctuary.

By a careful investigation of this subject we have been led to believe that the Sanctuary, mentioned in Dan. viii, 14 is not the land of Canaan; but the New Jerusalem Sanctuary spoken of by the Apostle as follows: "Now of the things which we have spoken this is the sum: We have such an high priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens; A minister of the SANCTUARY, and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man."—Heb. viii, 1, 2. In fact we do not know of one text of Scripture in all the Bible where the land of Canaan is called the Sanctuary.

The definition of the word Sanctuary is, "a sacred place." The land of Canaan is not such a place. No one will attempt to prove that it is. We are aware that many are ready to reject the view that the Sanctuary is to be cleansed at the end of the days in heaven, for want of information on the point, for, say they, "there can be nothing that needs cleansing in heaven." We will here give one text from Paul's clear commentary on the law, where he speaks of the earthly and heavenly Sanctuaries, and will answer the objection more fully in another place. This one text, however, fully answers the objection.

"It was therefore necessary that the pattern [worldly Sanctuary] of things in the heavens should be purified [purged]. . . . [The] high priest [Christ] with these; but the heavenly things themselves [heavenly Sanctuary] with better sacrifices than these."—Heb. ix, 23. Here we see that the "heavenly things," which can refer to nothing but the Sanctuary in heaven, was to be "purged," "cleansed," by "better sacrifices" than those of the law. They were to be cleansed by virtue of the atoning blood of the Son of God. Those, therefore, who are at war with the idea of the heavenly Sanctuary being cleansed, differ widely with the Apostle Paul, and are at war with his comment on the law.

The word Sanctuary occurs more than one hundred times in the Bible, and in most cases it applies to the tabernacle and temple of the Jews, sometimes to a part, and sometimes to the whole. It is mentioned four times in the New Testament, all in the epistle to the Hebrews. In chapter ix, 1, 2; xiii, 11, it refers to the Sanctuary of the first covenant, and in chapter viii, 2, it applies to the second covenant Sanctuary, which the "Lord pitched" in heaven. In three texts only [Ex. xv, 17; Ps. lxxviii, 54; Isa. lxxiii, 18] it is supposed by some that the word Sanctuary applies to the land of Canaan. But by a close examination of these texts we may see that such a view rests upon a more supposition. The "Advent Herald" for April 27, 1850, says:

"What are we to understand by the 'cleansing the sanctuary?' To understand this correctly we must ascertain what is meant by 'the sanctuary.' The word sanctuary is used by the inspired writers in the following significations. 1. It is the name of a particular part of the temple.—Heb. ix, 2. 2. The different apartments of the temple.—Jer. li, 61. 3. The temple itself.—1 Chron. xxii, 10; xxviii, 10. 4. Places of worship generally, true or false.—Amos vii, 9; Eze. xlviii, 10; Dan. viii, 11. 5. Heaven is called the sanctuary.—Ps. cii, 10. 6.

The promised land.—Ex. xv, 17; Ps. lxxviii, 54; Isa. lxxiii, 18. 7. The tabernacle of God in the heavenly state.—Eze. xlviii, 80, 86.—These are the principal significations of the word sanctuary, in the word of God. According to which of these significations is the word to be understood in the text before us? I think the most obvious sense is that which points out the promised land; for it must be evident to every one that the sanctuary here spoken of must be capable of being "trampled under foot," and of being "cleansed," and as I think we shall see, of being cleansed at the coming of Christ and the resurrection of the righteous dead. The text should also be understood in a sense that will harmonize with other cases in which the word is used by Daniel in particular, with the views of the other prophets, and the word of God generally."

With the first four, and the seventh and last, "significations" of the word Sanctuary, as given above, we agree. The texts are plain and afford positive testimony; but with the fifth and sixth we widely differ. There is no positive testimony that "heaven" is called the Sanctuary. That God's Sanctuary, the "true Tabernacle which the Lord pitched, and not man," the "greater and more perfect Tabernacle" of which Christ is a "minister," is IN HEAVEN, we have abundance of plain Scripture testimony. See Heb. viii, 1-4; ix, 11, 23, 24; Rev. i, 12, 13; xii, 10; xv, 5. The text referred to above, to prove that heaven is called the Sanctuary, is as follows: "For he hath looked down from the height of his sanctuary: from heaven did the Lord behold the earth."—Ps. cii, 10. *

The most natural, and the obvious meaning of this text is, that the Sanctuary, from the "height" of which the Lord "looked down" to "behold the earth," is the "Temple of God in heaven" in which "we see" the "ARK OF HIS TESTAMENT." This view is sustained by a mass of plain Scripture testimony, while the other view has only an inference from Ps. cii, 10, to sustain it.

We object to the sixth definition of the word Sanctuary, that it is "the promised land," because that view has no other foundation than weak and unwarrantable inferences from only three texts of Scripture. We have never seen but three texts quoted to sustain this view. Those we will now examine.

The first is Ex. xv, 17, "Then shalt bring them in, and plant them in the mountain of thine inheritance, in the place, O Lord, which thou hast made for thee to dwell in; in the sanctuary, O Lord, which thy hands have established." This is a part of the prophetic song of Moses sung by Israel upon the banks of the Red Sea, in praise to God for their deliverance, and in prospect of their settlement in Canaan. Its fulfillment is declared in Ps. lxxviii, 54, which is the second text claimed as proof that the promised land is the Sanctuary. "And he brought them to the border of his sanctuary, even to this mountain, which his right hand had purchased." Cruden says—"By Sanctuary here [Ex. xv, 17] may be understood the temple on Mount Moriah, which God would certainly cause to be built and established."

This view is shown to be correct from the context of Ps. lxxviii, 54. Adam declaring in verse 51, that God brought his people to the border of his Sanctuary, the Psalmist in verses 68, 69, tells us where the Sanctuary was which his hands established, as follows. "But chose the tribe of Judah, the Mount Zion which he loved. And he BUILT his SANCTUARY like HIGH PALACES." The "border," or "place" of the Sanctuary, where God planted his people, was one thing, and the Sanctuary itself, which he caused to be built "like high palaces," was entirely another thing. The people were planted, and dwelt in the former, but God dwelt in the latter, among his people. "The Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel: . . . Let them make me a sanctuary, that I may dwell among them." That Sanctuary was "a sacred place." There the Lord placed his name, and manifested his glory. It is clear that no other Sanctuary is brought to view in Ex. xv, 17; Ps. lxxviii, 54, than the pattern of the "true Tabernacle" in heaven, which God caused to be built "like high palaces." Why should we confound the "border" or "place" of the Sanctuary, which was the promised land, with the typical Sanctuary itself? Certainly there is no necessity for so doing. And there is no more propriety in such a course, than there would be in saying that a house, and the yard or farm around it were one and the same thing. And to say that Ex. xv, 17; Ps. lxxviii, 54, which speak of "the place," and "the border" of the Sanctuary, as well as the Sanctuary itself, prove that

The promised land to the Sanctuary, is equal in asserting that a farm and a house are only a house. We use this simple figure to make the error, that the land of Canaan is the Sanctuary, appear in its true light. We see that these two texts, when examined by the light of truth and reason, are found to contain, in themselves, sufficient proof to corroborate the view that the promised land is called the Sanctuary.

The other text that is quoted to sustain this position is Isa. lxxiii, 16. "The people of thy holiness have possessed it [the promised land], the inheritance"; but a little while; our adversaries have ridden down thy sanctuary." The history of the Jews shows a perfect fulfillment of this text, therefore, the Sanctuary mentioned in the text refers to the typical Sanctuary.

There is no more necessity for, or propriety in, confounding the "inheritance," with the Sanctuary in this text, than in Ex. 27, 17, and Ps. lxxviii, 84. It is true that the "tribes" of Israel "possessed" the promised land "but a little while," and it is also true that their "adversaries" did tread down their Sanctuary, by despoiling and demolishing their Temple.

Says the "Herald,"—"It must be evident to every one that the sanctuary here spoken of must be capable of being 'traded under fore,' and of being 'cleared.'"

No one believes that the words "trodden under foot," and "trodden down," mean that the saints land of Canaan has been literally trampled down by the feet of wicked men, any more than the text, "I will tread down the people in mine anger," Isa. lxiii, 6, means that the Almighty is to literally trample on men. Those that teach that "the promised land" is the Sanctuary must, therefore, admit that the words "trodden under foot," and "trodden down," are figurative expressions, and mean that the promised land has been overrun with "the wicked agents of its desolation." Then they should not object to our using the expressions figuratively, in applying the words "trodden down" [Isa. lxiii, 16] to the typical Sanctuary, and the words "trodden under foot" [Dan. viii, 13] to "the true Tabernacle" or "Sanctuary" in heaven.

It may be said that the heavenly Sanctuary is not "capable of being trodden under foot." But we ask, is it not as capable of being trodden under foot as "the Son of God," who is the "MINISTER" of the same Sanctuary? Says Paul:

*Of how much more preciousness, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath TRODDEN UNDER FOOT THE SUN OF GOD, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of Grace?—(Heb. x. 29.)

We say, then, that the Sanctuary in heaven has been trodden under foot in the same sense that the Son of God has been trodden under foot. In a similar manner has the "holy," the true church, also, been trodden down. Those who have rejected the Son of God have trodden him under foot, and of course have trodden under foot his Sanctuary.

The Catholic Church have troubled under God, not only the "Holy City," but the Sanctuary, and its Minister, or Priest, "the Son of God." Rome has been called "the Holy City," and the "Eternal City," which was only be said of the City of the living God, the New Jerusalem.

The Pope has professed to have "power on earth to forgive sins," which power belongs to Jesus in Calvary. The people have been taught to look to "the man of sin," seated in his temple, or so Paul says—"as that he as God sitteth in the temple of God," &c.—instead of looking to Jesus, seated on the right hand of the Father, in the heavenly Sanctuary. In thus turning away from Jesus, who alone could forgive sins, and give eternal life, and in bestowing on the Pope such titles as MOST HOLY FATHER, they have "troubled under him the Son of God." And in calling Rome the "Eternal City," and the "Holy City," they have troubled down the City of the living God, and the heavenly Sanctuary. The "best," the true church thus have looked to Jesus in the true Sanctuary for pardon of sin, and eternal life, but, as well as their living Lord and his Sanctuary, been troubled under him. Yes, the true worshippers have been rejected and perverted, and some of the brightest "stars," or gospel ministers, in the church have been "stamped upon," by the little horn.

The Protestant sects, with their spiritualizing views, in denying the existence of the person of God the Father, the personality of the "Son of God," the literal City and Sanctuary, have also acted their part in leading under and the Sanctuary.

Adventists who reject the true Scripture light on this subject, and teach that the Sanctuary to be cleansed at the end of the 2300 days is the "promised land," notwithstanding they have not one text to prove it, are also engaged in this work of treading under foot the Sanctuary.

It is supposed by some that the heavenly Sanctuary is now capable of being cleansed, for the reason that there can be nothing filthy in heaven. But we are aware that this objection is often urged for want of an understanding of this important subject. No sane person believes that the heavenly Sanctuary needs cleansing from physical uncleanness, so we would cleanse a room or a garment. The type will give light on this point. And here we will observe that we have the example of our Divine Master, and the Apostle Paul, for entering to the type. Said Jesus to his disciples,—

"These are the words which I spoke unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things might be fulfilled in which were written in the LAW OF MOSES, and in the prophets, and in the psalms concerning me." — Luke xiv. 24.

When Paul was a prisoner at Rome, he "called the chief of the Jews together," "unto his lodging," "to whom he expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the LAW OF MOSES, and out of the prophets."—Acts xxviii. 23. Here we see that Jesus and Paul both refer to Moses, evidently to the law of types. And we believe that of those who preach Christ would more closely follow the example of the Great Teacher, and the Apostle Paul, and trace each shadow to its glorious substance, the "good things to come," the true light would shine all about them. And they and their hearers would be enlightened and comforted, as were the two lonely disciples traveling to Emmaus, who exclaimed, "Did not our hearts burn within us while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the Scriptures?" But some that profess to preach Christ at this day are, no doubt, much more blind and "slow of heart" to believe, and guilty than those that Jesus rebuked as follows:

"O God, and who of us can believe all that the prophets have spoken! Ought we not to have suffered these things, and to enter into his glory? And beginning at MOSES and all the prophets he expounded unto them in all the scriptures the things concerning himself." — Luke xiv. 25, 26, 27.

The typical Sanctuary (see Lev. xvi.) was cleansed, not from physical uncleanness, but from the stain of Israel.

"And he shall make an agreement for the holy [at first, place, is supplied,] delivery of the most precious of the children of Israel, and lay down their transgression in a sin offering."—Verse 10.

The lowest of all was cleansed once a year, then on one entered it, and even the high priest, till a year had expired, when it needed cleansing again. This is sufficient to show every sinner that the cleansing of the typical, and also the antitypical, Sanctuary is the removal of the sins of God's people from it. This is done in the type and antitype, by the people first confessing their sins, second, the priest makes atonement for their sins and cleanses them on the head of the scapegoat, and third, they are borne away into the land of sepulture. Then the Sanctuary is "cleansed." We have said, agree to examine this subject in a thorough manner, therefore, we refer the reader to the "Advent Review," a pamphlet of 48 pages. Pages 37-44, contain a clear and valuable exposition of the atonement, by O. R. L. Crozier. We would also refer the reader to a divine comment on the law. It is the Apostle Paul's Epistle to the Hebrews, from which we will here give a few ex-

A Few of the things which we have spoken this is the sum: We have said a high price, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in heaven, a minister of the Sanctuary, and of the heavenly things, who is Lord of angels and men. . . For if he were of earth, he should be a priest, as these to positive proof that Christ's priesthood was not fulfilled on earth in the time of the first advent, but that it was to be fulfilled in heaven, after his ascension; proving that there are priests that offer gifts according to the law. Who have said the example and shadow of HEAVENLY THINGS, as Moses was made witness of God when he was about to make the tabernacle; for we (saith he) that make these things after the pattern showed to them in the mount. Hebrews, VIII, 5.

The "pattern" that was shewed to Moses was the "TRUE TABERNACLE," or Sanctuary in heaven, of which Christ is now a "Minister" or Priest. Did Moses ever find, and follow the "pattern?"—he certainly did. Then what overwhelming evidence we have before us that the type is a perfect guide to the substance, a guide to lead us to the true type of the priesthood of Christ in the heavenly Sanctuary.—

[illegible]

These things mentioned by the Apostle were all made according to the pattern showed to Moses while in the Mount. The place for the "candlestick" was in the Holy. John, therefore, had a view of Jesus while ministering in the Holy Place of the heavenly Sanctuary, a mediator for all the world.

"And I turned to see the voice that spoke with me. And being turned, I saw seven golden candlesticks: [And then they make the seven lamps thereof; and they shall light the lamps thereof, &c.—Ex. xxv, 37.] And in the midst of the seven candlesticks, one like unto the Son of man, &c.—Rev. i, 12, 13.

John also saw, while looking down the stream of time, in prophetic vision, to the sounding of the seventh angel, Jesus our Great High Priest move aside the second veil, and pass into the Most Holy, where "was seen the ark containing the ten commandments," or to use Paul's words, "the tables of the covenant."

"and the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament."—Rev. vi, 19.

Will any one try to spiritualize these things? and say that there is no literal Sanctuary, with its Holy, and Most Holy, the Ark containing the ten commandments, the candlestick, &c., in heaven? Such as do this can as well spiritualize the "Son of man," seen by John, and deny his personality. We have seen the sad fruits of the spiritualizing system, and have also seen that it is safer to take the word of God as it reads.

"But Christ being come a high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands." "It was therefore necessary that the pattern of things in the heavens should be purified with these; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these."—Heb. ix, 11, 23.

These extracts from the epistle of Paul to the Hebrews, (who understood the law,) make the subject clear. Moses made the Tabernacle, with its apartments and furniture, according to the pattern showed him in the mount. That pattern was the "true Tabernacle" in heaven, with its apartments and furniture. Man of infirmity ministered in the worldly Sanctuary, but the Son of God in the heavenly. The worldly Sanctuary was cleansed yearly by the blood of beasts, but the heavenly, at the end of the 2300 days, by virtue of the blood of the Son of God.

The following is from "Advent Herald," Sept. 1, 1850:—

"B. R. Year.—We have an new light respecting the connection between the 70 weeks and 2300 days. The only argument against their connection is, the passing of the time. Why that is passed is a mystery in so, which we wait to have revealed. Should we bear any countenance for explaining the discrepancy of, we shall be proud to present them. In the meantime, we can substitute no guess or supposition, which may be wrong, and only mislead. We leave that to others."

As long as the "Herald" holds on to the unscriptural view that the promised land is the Sanctuary, "the passing of the time" will still remain a "mystery." But let the Herald take the plain scripture view of the cleansing of the Sanctuary, and the "mystery" is at once explained, and explained as to be perfectly harmonious with the Advent movement in the past. Certainly their present practice is a "mystery," and must remain such, unless they change their views very much on some points. Well, what can the "Herald" do to explain this "mystery," so as to be able to give satisfactory light, to answer the inquiry that is now being awakened on this subject? Many are saying, "Watchmen what of the night," and they will not be satisfied, by being told that why the time "has passed remains a mystery," &c. Will the "Herald" try to prove that the 2300 days will end at some future date? This we think it will not do; for it has already proved, beyond all controversy, that the days began a. c. 457, and terminated in 1844. And it has, for a few years, been opposed to this perpetual stretching out the 2300 days, from spring to fall, and from fall to spring. All must see that such a course must disgust the people, and destroy the faith of those who are thus flattered on, from one point of time to another, to find the end of the days, and are sudden disappointed. We see no way to explain this "mystery" but by the light of present truth. The belief that the Sanctuary to be cleansed at the end of the 2300 days is the promised land, and that it is to be cleansed at the coming of Christ; and that the 70 weeks commenced a. c. 457, consequently, the 2300 days terminated in 1844, certainly must be a "mystery" to those who live in 1851!

Dear brethren and sisters, we will humbly thank our gracious Father that in the present truth there are no such mysteries, and contradictions, as are seen in the position of those who reject their past experience, and present light. Amen.

W.

THE PARABLE, MATTHEW XXV, 1-12.

"Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom. And five of them were wise, and five were foolish. They that were foolish took their lamps, and took no oil with them; but the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps. While the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept. And at midnight there was a cry made. Hold the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him. Then all these virgins awoke, and trimmed their lamps. And the foolish said unto the wise, Give us of your oil, for our lamps are gone out. But the wise answered saying, No, lest there be not enough for us and you; but buy ye rather to them that sell, and buy for yourselves. And while they went to buy, the bridegroom came, and they that were ready, went in with him to the marriage, and the door was shut. Afterward came also the other virgins, saying, Lord, lord, open to us. But he answered and said, Verily, I say unto you, I know you not."

Many have desired to obtain a correct account of an eastern marriage that they might better understand this parable. But let it be distinctly understood that our Saviour has here given us the desired history, and testifies that the kingdom of heaven shall be likened ["compared," Campbell's translation] unto it. But when shall the kingdom of heaven be likened, or compared to an eastern marriage? Our Saviour says, "Then shall the kingdom." &c., showing beyond all doubt that there is some definite period in the history of the church where the parable may be applied. If the parable applies to a definite period, it is of the utmost importance that we understand what period it does apply to, so as to make a right application.

The twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth chapters of Matthew are one connected discourse. In this discourse our Lord has pointed out the most important events, with which the Christian Church was to be connected, from the time of the First to the Second Advent. Such as the destruction of Jerusalem, and the Papal persecution of 1230 years. Next the special signs of the Second Advent, the darkening of the sun and moon in 1780, and the falling stars in 1833. Our Lord next points out two classes of servants. One class is represented by the "faithful and wise servant" who gave to his master's household "meat in due season." The other class of servants is represented by the "evil servant" who was saying "in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming," was eating and drinking with the drunken, and was smiting "his fellow-servants." Those who have had any experience in the Advent, know that two such classes of servants as are pointed out by Christ have appeared. The wise and faithful servants seeing by the prophetic periods, and the signs of the times, but especially the signs in the sun, moon and stars, that Christ was soon coming, gave the warning to the church and world. This warning message called out and manifested the other class of servants who first said in their heart, "The Lord is not so soon coming, then they began to 'amuse' those who were proclaiming the coming of the Lord, and by this time they were united with every class of wicked men on the earth—eating and drinking with the drunken.

But does not this portion of our Lord's discourse have a still more close application? The "evil servant" smites his "fellow-servants." Does not this show that both classes of servants had previously been united in proclaiming the coming of the Lord until they were disappointed? This seems necessary for them to be called "fellow-servants." One class "hold fast" the Advent, as proclaimed in its purity by all the servants united, and still follow down the track of prophecy, and receive the warning message of the third Angel, while the other class doubt, give up the past, fall into the spirit of the world, and say in their heart, My Lord delayeth his coming, &c. Thus closes the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew. The twenty-fifth chapter commences thus; "THEN shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins," &c. Thus we are brought down into the experience of those who have been connected with the Advent doctrine, and are shown where the parable applies. This conclusion is natural and irresistible.

But what shall we understand by the kingdom of heaven?—Certainly not all the component parts of the kingdom; for in this case the King, [Christ,] the territory, [New Earth,] and the subjects of the kingdom [the children of the resurrection] would all be represented as going forth, tarrying, sleeping, waking, and trimming lamps, &c. It is evident that the kingdom of heaven here can only mean what may be represented by the going forth, tarrying, &c., which must be the people of God who are interested in, and are looking for the coming and kingdom of Christ. The "kingdom of heaven" should be understood here, as it is generally used in the New Testament—then was understood it to mean as taught by Bro. Miller and the Advent teachers, with hardly an exception, and as published in all the Advent papers till the Albany Conference in 1845, that the history or experience of the living people of God is to be likened, or compared, unto an eastern marriage. It has been said that the Second Advent people have literally fulfilled Matt. xiv, 1-12. It is not so. Jesus is there giving the history of an eastern marriage. But Second Advent people were to experience a series of events which were to have a natural application to the events of the eastern marriage rehearsed by Christ. After the signs of Christ's coming should be preached, the two classes of servants should appear, "then" Second Advent history was not only to have a natural application, but was actually to be compared to the history of the eastern marriage found in Matt. xiv.

In order that the two histories may be likened or compared, some things are indispensable. First, both histories must be complete; all the events in both must be in the past. It is not possible to compare past history with what has not taken place. Second, after each event in Advent history has occurred, answering to each point in the history of the marriage, shut door, and knocking not excepted, there must be time to compare the two histories, also those who will compare them. We say that this is a part of the work of the faithful and wise servant who is giving to the household meat in due season. Those who have given up the past Advent movement, as the work of man only, or of unclean spirits, choose to apply the parable to the future, to be fulfilled at the coming of the Lord. But if they would only carry out the natural and true position taken of it by Bro. Miller and the entire Advent host, with hardly an exception, up to 1845, it would lead them to acknowledge the work of God in the past, it would show them their present whereabouts, and give them living faith in the speedy coming of Christ. No one has yet shown how the events, represented by trimming lamps, asking for oil, going to buy, and the knocking of the foolish could be fulfilled at, and after the Second Advent. The cry, "Behold the bridegroom cometh," is made to apply to all classes of Advent believers, then why not let each part of the parable also apply? We ask, Why should the cry, this one point in the parable, be made to cover all time to the resurrection, and the other parts not be suffered to have any application? Consistency becomes us on this subject, as well as on others. Some seem to make every thing of the cry, "Behold the bridegroom cometh," but nothing of the other parts of the parable. By referring to the "Advent Herald" it will be seen that it is the editor's motto. If he is to give this cry till the coming of Christ, and the resurrection, then the other points in the parable that follow must apply after the Second Advent. But no do not hesitate to say that they will not then apply. No one will attempt to apply each event there.

The saints will be raised and the righteous changed "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye," and caught away from the earth. The wicked who remain after the plagues, will be fleeing from the presence of the Lamb. None asking for oil, none knocking then. They will cry, but not "Lord, Lord, open unto us." No, no. They will flee from the burning glory of the Lamb, and their cry will be, "Mountains and rocks, fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne and from the wrath of the Lamb. For the great day of his wrath is come." Rev. vi, 16-17. No one will say that there is anything in this like asking for oil, going to buy, or knocking. Wherever the Bible refers to the position of the lost, after they are apprised of their real condition, they are represented as hiding, fleeing, etc., from the presence of the Lord, instead of saying, "Lord, Lord, open to us." But this will be noticed hereafter. As we are convinced that we now occupy the time when Advent history was to be "likened" to the history of an eastern marriage, we will now compare them.

"Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom."

Let the reader be sure to notice the common error of confounding Advent History, with that of the marriage. Keep both distinct, then they may both be compared. The ten virgins had literal lamps, and literally "went forth." Not so with Adventists, yet they had what is well compared to a lamp. Says David, "Thy Word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path." Ps. cxix, 105. Those looking for the second coming of Christ did not literally go forth, yet the great movement produced by the proclamation that Christ would come in 1843, may well be likened to the ten virgins going forth with their lamps. This movement is also symbolized by the angel of Rev. xiv, 6, 7. But it is said that this movement represented by the going forth of the ten virgins, commenced two hundred years ago.—To this we reply, that our Lord is giving in Matt. xxiv, and Chap. xvi, 1-12, a connected history of the most important events, with which the Christian Church was to be connected, down to the Second Advent. Therefore the special signs of Christ's coming, in the sun, moon, and stars, must first take place, and then be presented to the world, with other reasons, as evidences of the Advent near, before the movement represented by the going forth can take place. As the presentation of the signs, with other evidences, calls out the two classes of servants, and produces the movement, the going forth in the parable must of necessity be applied to a period of time after the fulfillment of the predicted signs. Those who go back two hundred years to commence the "midnight cry," as they call it, the angel with the everlasting gospel, and the going forth, must not only cast aside the Advent movement with which we have been connected, but also the signs in the sun, moon and stars. Therefore it is evident that the parable applies to the Advent movement with which we have been connected. The taking of lamps, and going forth in the parable represents the effect that the imminent hour cry had on the Advent people, as they took to their beds, and with "the blessed hope" and joyful expectation of soon seeing the King of glory, were moved far out from the spirit and interests of this world.

"And five of them were wise, and five were foolish. They that were foolish took their lamps, and went out with them. But the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps."

While the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept."

Real believers, and those in the Advent ranks not having true faith, have been called wise and foolish virgins. This is incorrect. Such terms are confined to the history of the marriage. But that there has been in the Advent movement two classes manifested, whose character and acts well compare, and may be "likened" to the character and acts of the foolish and wise virgins in the parable is evident. Those represented by the wise, fully believed that Christ would come, they desired his coming. The class represented by the foolish who took no oil with them, only thought he was coming, and some of them feared that it might be so, but still loved this world too well to give it up, that they might obtain true faith. The tarrying of the bridegroom is also in the history of the marriage. We now inquire, Has there been anything in Advent history that can be compared to this tarry?

The first published time for the Second Advent was 1843, Jewish time. Can loads of books, written by Drs. Miller, Litch, Fish, Bove, Hale, Bliss, and many others, presenting the evidences that Christ would come in 1843, were scattered far and wide. And we had many reasons for supposing that those men fully believed what they taught. But the Advent people were to meet with a disappointment. The time passed, and they were humbled before the world. Some publicly renounced the doctrine, but the majority followed down the track of prophecy, where they saw a tarrying time. This tarry was taught in all the Advent papers in the land. Here we will give extracts from the "Advent Shield," No. 1, pages 123-126, published in May, 1844. This was a standard work for Advent believers, and presents the unanimous view taken of their true position at that time.

"Having passed the point of the apparent termination of the prophetic periods, we are placed in a position, which God forewarns his children would be placed in, at the end of the season; and for which he made provision, by the prophet Isaiah, (ii, 1-3,) when he says, 'I will stand upon my tower, and will watch to see what he will say unto me; and what I shall answer when I am reproved,' or as it reads in the margin 'argued with.' And the Lord answered me and said, Write the vision, and make it plain upon tables, that he may see that he can't reach it. For this vision is yet for an appointed time,' [the seven times.] 'but at the end [of the prophetic periods] it shall speak and not lie: though it tarry,' [beyond their apparent termination,] 'wait for it: because it will surely come.' [in thefulness of the prophetic times, beyond a kick,] 'it will not tarry.'"

That this admission has reference to the present time is evident from Paul's quotation of it in Hebrews x, 26-29. "For ye have heard of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise. For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry. Now the just shall live by faith: but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him. But we are not of them who draw back unto perdition; but of them that believe to the saving of the soul."

We believe that we are occupying that period spoken of by our Saviour, when the Bridegroom tarries—Matthew xxi, 9, to which the kingdom of heaven should be likened when "that evil servant [there having been an apparent failure in the time] shall say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming, and shall begin to smite his fellow servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken."

That which was positively true, and acknowledged by the Advent body in 1844, has not become untrue by the passing of a few years.—We choose to stand on the "original faith." While the bridegroom is in the parable tarried, the virgins all slumbered and slept. This strikingly represents the state of the Advent body after the first published time passed. It was clearly seen that we were in the tarrying time, but how long it would be we knew not. In this state of uncertainty, without definite time, the Advent people as a body sunk into a dormant state, fully represented by slumbering and sleeping.

"And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him. Then all these virgins arose and trimmed their lamps. And the foolish said unto the wise, Give us of your oil, for our lamps are gone out. But the wise answered, saying, Not so, lest there be not enough for us and you; but go ye rather to them that sell, and buy for yourselves."

Says an objector, "I do not believe that the midnight cry has yet been given." Neither do we believe that the midnight cry has been heard by us, or that it ever will be. The cry of Matt. xxi, 9, "Behold the bridegroom cometh," is in the history of an eastern marriage. But that cry was given, and fully received by the entire Advent body in the autumn of 1844, that compares well with the midnight cry of the parable, should not be denied by those who had an experience in it. It came in the right time. The cry of the parable immediately followed the delay, and the slumbering and sleeping. This followed our delay, having been disappointed, and revealed our error while in a dormant state. That cry awakened up the ten virgins, and led them to trim their lamps. This, attended by the power of the Spirit, awakened the Advent people, and led them to search the Bible to cover before, and to compare themselves and their worldly possessions wholly to the Lord. Those who gave the cry that the Lord would come at the seventh month, 1844, clearly saw that the prophetic periods reached to that time, therefore, the evidence had been presented from the periods to prove that the Advent would be in 1843, proved that it would be in 1844. We then saw an error in that manner of reasoning which terminated the 2300 days in 1843. None of those who wrote against the Advent saw it. The hand of Providence preserved the mistake until the time came for it to be seen. The error was in making 437 full years from the 2300, which left 1843, without making any amount of the fraction of the year 657 a. c., that had passed, when the commencement went forth from which the 70 weeks are reckoned. As it takes 657 full years and 1843, to make 5200, the fraction of the year 657, a. c., that had passed when the 70 weeks commenced, should be added to 1843, which brings the termination of the 5200 days in 1844. This point is made clear in the following testimony from the "Advent Herald" of Nov. 12, 1844.

"Our minds were directed to that point of time, [1843], from the fact that during the several prophetic periods from those years in which the hour chronologists assign the fulfillment of those events which were to mark their commencement, they all agreed to terminate that year. 'It is was, however, only apparent. We date the 'seven times,' or 5200 years, from the captivity of Manassah, which is, with great unanimity, placed by chronologists a. c. 677. This date is the only one we have ever reckoned from, for the commencement of this period; and subtracting a. c. 677 from 5200 years there remained a. c. 1943. We, however, did not observe, that as it would require 677 full years a. c. and 1812 full years a. c. to complete 5200 years, that it would also oblige us to extend this period as far into a. c. 1943, as it might have commenced after the beginning of a. c. 677. The same was also true of the other periods. The great jubilee of 5250 years, commencing with the captivity of Jehoiachin a. c. 607; and the 6300 days, commencing with the 70 weeks a. c. 457, would respectively require 1843 full years after Christ added to so many full years before Christ, as the years in which we have always respectively commenced each period, to complete the number of years in each; and as subtracting from each period the date a. c. of its commencement, there would remain a. c. 1812, no reference whatever was made to the fraction of the year, which in each case, had transpired from its commencement, and which would require that each period should extend as much beyond the expiration of a. c. 1812, as they respectively began after the commencement of the year a. c. from which they are dated.

While this discrepancy was not particularly noticed by us, it was also not noticed by any of our hearers' opponents. Amid all the arguments which were brought to bear against our position, no allusion was made to that point."

The right application of Hab. ii, 2, 3, was also clearly by those who gave the seventh month message. The Advent body then held that the publication of what is called the old chart was a fulfillment of the words of the Prophet, "Write the vision and make it plain upon tables."—Reference to the different Advent papers published in 1844, will settle this point.—As time is reckoned with the visions of Daniel and John, the conclusion seems natural that their prophecies were the subject matter to be made "plain on tables," which was to be for "an appointed time."

"Though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry." Here is a seeming contradiction, which can only be explained by facts in our Advent experience. The period, 1843, was claimed by facts in our Advent experience. The period, 1843, was written upon this chart, as the apparent time of the termination of the 5200 days; but that, as was clearly seen in 1844, was not the real date of their termination. Therefore the vision did not really tarry, but seemed to tarry. "Though it tarry, [beyond the period of expectation,] wait for it," for at the real point of time for the termination of the 5200 days, 1844, the vision "will speak, and not lie." It is said that the message of the 7th month, 1844, was a "lie," because Christ did not then come. True, the vision of 5200 days did not teach that Christ would then come, or that his coming would be at the end of the days; but we have the best of evidence that the days, then said, as we are taught that they would end, by those who gave the message of the seventh month. The types of the law of Moses did not teach us that our Great High Priest would come out of the bosom, on the tenth day of the seventh month, 1844, yet they, in connection with the 5200 days, clearly prove that Christ did then enter upon the work of cleansing the Heavenly Sanctuary, shadowed forth by the tenth day atonement in the law. Such a change in the position of our Great High Priest, represented by the coming of the bridegroom in the parable, was very properly heralded by those who gave the seventh month message. Nevertheless the parable teach that the Lord would come at the point in our history where the midnight cry applied. We now see points in the parable that apply later in our experience, yet before the Second Advent, such as the knocking. When giving the seventh month message the then future season of trial were sealed up to us, and for our lives we could not see any Prophecy to be fulfilled prior to the Advent.

The Advent people anxiously sought, and earnestly pressed, for the "bread" of life in 1843, and we are loath to believe that our heavenly Father gave us a "snare" or that he gave us a "scorpion" in 1844. And we fail to see how "no provision for the Advent body to follow down the track of prophecy, without experiencing such a movement as that of the outpouring of 1844. The claim that had seemed to carry that spoke. Let others call it a "lie." But we fully believe that there was experienced the fulfillment of the words of the Prophet "at the end [of the 5200 days] it shall speak, and NOT LIE." True we were disappointed as to the event to take place, but that is no evidence that the movement was not in the order of the Lord, and a fulfillment of Prophecy. Those that "cast their garments in the way," and cried "Hosanna to the Son of David," as Jesus rode into Jerusalem, entirely mistook the object of the first Advent, yet that display was all necessary to fulfill Zech. ix, 9. The Pharisees said, "Master, rebuke thy disciples." Jesus answered, "I tell you, that if these should hold their peace, the stones would immediately cry out." If such an exhibition should take place at this day, a thousand voices would be raised pronouncing it "Mesmerism." Our "mistake," as it is called, at the seventh month, was of the same nature as that of the disciples. They had an opportunity of learning the object of the first Advent. Adventists have a chance to learn the events that in order precede the Second Advent. No doubt but many who joined in the general shout of "Hosanna to the Son of David," were afterwards ashamed of it, and perhaps made their "confession" to the Pharisees. Adventists should not be ashamed of the very experience that called them from the world and churches, and has made them Adventists. Consistency requires them to own their experience, or give up the Advent name.

Jesus did not rebuke the shouting multitude. He showed the necessity for their giving rest to their joy, yet they were not to realize their expectations. He did not rebuke us for giving the seventh month cry. He blessed us abundantly in proclaiming it, though we were to be disappointed. Here we will give extracts from the "Advent Herald" for Nov. 12, 1844, J. V. Himes, E. Bliss, and A. Hale, Editors, which give the right view of the seventh month movement.

"The alarm was everywhere made; the cry was every where given. And again we can see that God was with us. It was a soul-purifying work; and the children of God bowed themselves in his presence, and received blessings to their souls, unprecedented in the history of the Advent cause. And yet we are disappointed—the day passed away and we were still here."

"And we regard it as another, and a more SEARCHING TEST, than the first proclamation of the time. It has converted Jerusalem as with candles; and it has purged out the old leaven. It has tested the hearts of all who heard it, and awakened a love for the Lord's appearing; or it has called forth a 'sinner, more or less pernicious, but known to God, of his coming.' It has drawn a line, and awakened antipathies, so that those who will examine their own hearts, may know on which side of it they would have been found, had the Lord come—whether they would have exclaimed, 'Lo, this is our God, we have waited for him, and he will save us; or whether they would have called to the rocks and mountains to fall on them to hide them from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb. God, then, as we believe, has tested his people, has tried their faith, has proved them, and seen whether they would shrink, in the hour of trial, from the position in which He might see fit to place them; and whether they would relinquish this world, and rely with implicit confidence in the word of God. And we so much believe that we have done the will of God in thus sounding the alarm, as we believe that Jonah did when he entered into Nineveh a day's journey, and cried, saying, 'yet forty days and Nineveh shall be overthrown. A month was not then overthrown; nor has the Lord yet wrought deliverance in the earth, or the inhabitants of the world fallen. Was Jonah a false prophet when he prophesied the time of Nineveh's destruction? No; he had only pronounced the preaching that God had bid him."

"The preaching of Jonah served as a test to the inhabitants of Nineveh, and accomplished God's purpose, so much so it would have done had the city perished. So we believe that THIS LAST CRY HAS BEEN A TEST; and that with our views of duty, we should so much have aimed against God, had we refrained from giving that message as Jonah did when 'he rose up to his feet. Tarrying from the presence of the Lord; that we should so much have wished, had we turned our eyes back to him, as the Ninevites would, in refusing to repent at his bidding; and that all who are angry that we have preached a time which has not been realized, are as guilty as Jonah was, when he was angry and prayed to the Lord to take his life from him, because God had spared that great city; and they may well ask themselves as God said Jonah, 'Dost thou well to be angry?' We think here as innocent as we could where God has justified the preaching of love, always to have said did not argue as predicted."

"We have, also, in the case of Abraham, when he withheld not his only son, an instance where God alone designed to try the faith of his servant. When he was commanded to get him to Mt. Moriah, and to offer up Isaac as a burnt offering, it was his duty to obey God, to be in accordance with his belief. And Abraham stepped to fulfill it."

might not after all be mistaken, he would have sinned; but, believing God, and knowing that he was able to raise him even from the dead, he laid his only son upon the altar and stretched forth the knife in his hand to slay him. God then having "waxed him and proved his faith," spared him the offering: "For," said God, "now I know that thou fearest God, seeing thou hast not withheld thy son, thine only son from me." No one will say that Abraham was mistaken in believing that he was to slay his son; but God chose this very way to test his faith. Even so do we believe that God permitted the preaching of this last time for the same purpose—requiring his children now, to test their faith.

The "Herald" for Oct. 30, says,—"At first the definite time was generally opposed; but there seemed to be an irresistible power attending its proclamation, which precluded all before it. It swept over the land with the velocity of a tornado, and it reached hearts in different and distant places almost simultaneously, and in a manner which can be accounted for only on the supposition that GOD WAS IN IT. It produced everywhere the most deep searching of heart and humiliation of soul before the God of high heaven. It caused a wearing of affections from the things of this world—a healing of controversies and animosities—a confession of sin—a breaking down before God, and gentleness, broken-hearted supplications to him for pardon and acceptance. It caused self abasement and prostration of soul, such as we never before witnessed."

The lectures among the Adventists were the last to embrace the views of the time, and the more prominent ones came later than all. It seemed not to be the work of men, but to be brought about against the will of men. The several Advent papers came into the world only a few days; and this paper was the last to raise its voice in the spread of the cry. For a long time we were determined to take no part in the movement, either in opposition or in the advocacy of it. We afterwards decided to point out what we considered to be a few inaccuracies in the arguments used, but which did not materially affect the result. It was not until within about two weeks of the commencement of the seventh month, that we were particularly impressed with the progress of the movement—when we had such a view of it, that to oppose it, or even to remain silent longer, seemed to us to be opposing the work of the Holy Spirit, and in entering upon the work with all our power, we could but exclaim, "What were we, that we should resist God?" It seemed to us to have been an independent of human agency that we could but regard it as a fulfillment of the "midnight cry," after the tarrying of the bridegroom, and the slumbering and sleeping of the virgins, when they were all to arise and trim their lamps. And this last work seems to have been done; for there has never been a time before when the respective Advent bodies were in so good a state of preparedness for the Lord's coming.

"In view of all the circumstances attending this movement, the blessed effect it has produced on the minds of God's children, and the hatred and malice which comes have displayed, we must still regard it as the true midnight cry. And if we have a few days in which to try our faith, it is still in accordance with the parable of the ten virgins; for when they had all arisen and trimmed their lamps, there was still to be a time when the lamps of the foolish virgins would be gone out. This could not be without a passing by of the fifth day; for till that time their lamps would burn. There must, therefore, be a passing by of that day for the foolish to give up their faith, as there must of 1843, for the tarrying time."

Says the "Voice of Truth," Nov. 7, 1844,—"We cheerfully admit that we have been mistaken in the nature of the event we expected would occur on the tenth day of the seventh month; but we cannot see that our Great High Priest did not, or did very day, ACCOMPLISH ALL THAT THE TYPE WOULD JUSTIFY US TO EXPECT. WE NOW BELIEVE HE DID."

"We think the parable of the ten virgins clearly tells where we are. The proclamation of the tenth day of the seventh month, we believe was the midnight cry, when all, not a part, of the virgins arose and trimmed their lamps. This work continued until the tenth day passed."

Testimonies of this kind can be given to great length from the pens of Miller, Nibbel, Cook, Brown, Mansfield, Farnett, Needham, Porter, Shipman, and others; but what we have given shows the faith of the Advent body in the seventh month cry, a short time after the time passed. We do not, by any means, base our faith on their testimony; we give it only to show that our present position relative to the cry in the parable, is the same as was held by the entire body of Advent believers when God was with them, when they were called, and manifested the spirit of the gospel.

Says the "Herald" for Nov. 8, 1844,—"Let each and all see to it that the lessons we have received be not lost upon us. Let us hold fast that unto which we have attained. Let none go back, nor look back—Remember Lot's wife. Keep low in the valley of humiliation, at the foot of the cross. Let no man draw back upon perdition. Now is the trying season. Persevere a little longer and all will be gained. Go back now, and all is lost."

Such excellent advice as the above, cheered the struggling spirits of the disappointed, yet waiting saints who had converted all for the kingdom. And the "Herald" continued to exhort the brethren to hold fast and not loose the breech received in the seventh month cry, demands, doubtless, would have been kept from the spirits of the world, and would now have living faith in the coming of Christ, who have given up their hope. But when the "Herald," and "Voice of Truth," changed their position, gave up the past work of God, and many of the leaders pronounced the seventh month movement the result of "memoriam," the Advent body was shaken well nigh to pieces. It was said at the Albany Conference in 1848, "The seventh month movement produced memoriam seven feet deep!"

The foolish asking for oil, when the midnight cry was given in the parable, we think represents the inquiries for light made by those who were half-hearted, and were moved with fear only at the proclamation of the seventh month message. But the five wise virgins, in the history of the marriage, had none to spare. They directed the foolish to go and buy. This strikingly illustrates our position, and the nature of our message in giving the cry. The time had then come when one could not depend upon another. Each of those who heard the cry must have a living experience of his own. "Go to God for yourself for light," was a common reply to those who asked for it.

"And while they went to buy the bridegroom came," &c. Here it may be asked if we believe that the bridegroom came in 1844. To this we answer, No, we do not. The coming of the bridegroom was in the history of the eastern marriage, which must be kept distinct from Advent history. But that an event connected with Advent history, which may be likened to the coming of the bridegroom in the parable has taken place, we will show.

The 2300 days was the main pillar of the Advent theory. At their termination the Sanctuary was to be cleansed. It was inferred that the cleansing of the Sanctuary was the burning of the world at the second coming of Christ. And we understood Dan. viii, 14, as though it read into 2300 days, when Christ will come, and at his coming the earth, Sanctuary, will be renovated and made new. That the 2300 days commenced a. d. 457, was made clear in 1842, 1844, and has since been settled in the "Herald" of 1850 and 1851, beyond a doubt. It has been shown that Christ was crucified a. d. 31, in the midst [middle] of the 10th week, therefore the 70 weeks terminated in the autumn of a. d. 34, and the 2300 days consequently terminated in the autumn of 1844. See No. 2 of the "Review and Herald."

But Christ did not come at the end of the days, and the earth remains unchanged. Therefore we shall do well to consider more carefully, and so if the earth, or the land of Canaan is the Sanctuary. Only three texts (Ex. xv, 17; Ps. lxxviii, 54; Isa. lxxiii, 15) have been quoted to prove that the earth, or the land of Canaan is the Sanctuary, and when they are compared with their context, they really disprove the point they are said to prove. See No. 4 of the "Review and Herald."—Also, the articles on the Sanctuary by O. R. L. Crozier, in the pamphlet, "Advent Review," pages 37—48, and No. 10 of the "Review and Herald."

As the 2300 days reach down into the gospel dispensation, we should seek the signification of the Sanctuary to be cleansed at their end, from the New Testament. Paul has written a rebuke upon the typical use, and has shown us clearly the true Sanctuary in heaven that has taken the place of the earthly, the only thing that can properly be called God's Sanctuary in the gospel dispensation. We will here quote from his epistle to the Hebrews.

"Then verily the first covenant had also ordinances of divine service, and a worldly sanctuary. For there was a tabernacle made; the first wherein was the golden altar, and the table, and the shew-bread; which is called the sanctuary. And after the second veil, the tabernacle which is called the holiest of all; which had the golden altar, and the ark of the covenant overlaid round about with gold, wherein was the golden manna, and Aaron's rod that budded, and the tables of the covenant. And over it the cherubims of glory shadowing the mercy-seat; of which we cannot now speak particularly. Now when these things were thus ordained, the priests went always into the first tabernacle, accomplishing the service of God; but into the second went the high priest alone once every year.—Chap. ix, 1—7.

"Now of the things which we have spoken this is the sum: We have such an high priest; who is set on the right hand of the throne of the glory in the heavens; a minister of the Sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched and set up. . . . For if he were on earth, he should not be a priest. (Here is positive proof that Christ's priesthood was not fulfilled on earth at the time of the first advent, but that it was to be fulfilled in heaven, after his ascension,] seeing that there are priests that offer gifts according to the law. Who serve unto the example and shadow of HEAVENLY THINGS, as Moses was admonished of God when he was about to make the tabernacle: for we see (saith he) that thou make all things according to the pattern showed to thee in the mount."—Chapter xiii, 1-5.

The "pattern" that was shown to Moses in the Mount was the "True Tabernacle," or Sanctuary in heaven, of which Christ was to be a Minister or Priest in the gospel dispensation. Did Moses obey God and follow the "pattern"? If he did, then we have overwhelming evidence that the type is a perfect guide to the substance, the heavenly things themselves. It will lead us to a correct view of the priesthood of Christ in the heavenly Sanctuary.

The place for the "candlestick" in the typical Sanctuary was the Holy Place. See Heb. ix, 2. John had a view of Christ as a High Priest in the Holy Place of the heavenly Sanctuary. He says:

"And I turned to see the voice that spake with me. And being turned, I saw seven golden candlesticks; ["] And thou shalt make the seven lamps thereof: and they shall light the lamps thereof, &c."—Ez. i, 12, 13.

The only place for the Ark of the covenant in the typical Sanctuary was in the Most Holy Place, within the second veil. This most sacred place is called the "tabernacle of the testimony." The Most Holy Place of the heavenly Sanctuary was to be opened under the sounding of the seventh angel, just before the Second Advent, and the Ark of the covenant was then to be seen by the church. The eleventh chapter of Revelation gives the events under the sounding of the seventh angel. One is as follows:

"And the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament."—Rev. xi, 19.
"And after that I looked, and behold, the temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in heaven was opened."—Rev. xxi, 3.

Thus we have sufficient proof that the distinct Holies, furniture and holy vessels of the heavenly Sanctuary exist, as really as did those of the earthly. When Moses received instructions how to make even the golden lamps and snuff-dishes, the Lord said to him, "And look that thou make them after their pattern, which was shown thee in the mount."—Ex. xxv, 38-40.

The earthly Sanctuary was cleansed on the tenth day of the seventh month, at the end of 364 days. That cleansing was not because the Sanctuary of itself was unclean, but "because of the uncleanness of the children of Israel, and because of their transgressions in all their sins."—Lev. xvi, 16. The heavenly Sanctuary, for the same reason, was to be cleansed at the end of the 2300 days. Says Paul,

"But Christ being come a high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands." "It was therefore necessary that the pattern of things in the heavens should be purified with these; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these."—Heb. ix, 11, 23.

In the typical law there were two atonements. One was for the forgiveness of sins, while the priests only entered the Holy; and to make it, they could enter that apartment "always," or daily. The other was the yearly atonement for the cleansing of the Sanctuary, while the high priest alone entered the "Holiest of all." It was on the tenth day of the seventh month. On that day a change took place in the service of the Sanctuary. "The tabernacle of the testimony" of the earthly Sanctuary, that had been closed for 364 days, was on that day opened. While speaking of the priests who officiated in the worldly Sanctuary, the Apostle says:

"We serve unto the EXAMPLE, and SHADOW of HEAVENLY THINGS, as Moses was admonished of God when he was about to make the tabernacle: for, See (saith he) that thou make all things according to the pattern showed to thee in the mount."—Heb. viii, 5.

Here let it be clearly understood that the services connected with the two atonements of the law, were an "example and shadow of heavenly things," that is, the heavenly things, or priesthood of Jesus Christ, the substance or body, cast its shadow back into the Jewish age. And to make it still more sure that the service of the earthly Sanctuary, the "shadow," were framed from the three future services of the heavenly Sanctuary, the "good things to come," the Apostle adds, that when Moses was about to make the tabernacle, he was charged to "make ALL THINGS according to the pattern showed" to him "in the mount." Says Paul, "The law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things." It was not possible that the services of the earthly Sanctuary should be the "very image" of those of the heavenly, but as nearly so as a shadow corresponds to the substance. There is this difference. The priests officiated in the daily ministrations in the Holy, for 365 days, then a change took place in the service of the worldly Sanctuary. The high priest entered the Most Holy, on the tenth day of the seventh month, and on that day made an atonement for the cleansing of the Sanctuary. This change was yearly. But on each change was to take place in the service of the heavenly Sanctuary until the end of 2300 prophetic days. "Unto 2300 days, thou shalt the Sanctuary be cleansed," said the angel to Daniel. The laying of hands in the law was repeated daily and yearly; but Christ was slain but once. The daily atonement was continued only 364 days before the service of the earthly Sanctuary changed, and the yearly atonement for the cleansing of the Sanctuary was introduced. But in the priesthood of Jesus Christ, his continual intercessions in the Holy Place of the heavenly Sanctuary, were to continue more than 1800 years, down to the end of the 2300 days, [years,] which was the outcome of 1844, when a change was to take place in his mediation. He could no longer be a "Minister" in the Holy Place for all the world, as he had been for more than 1800 years, for the time had come for the heavenly Sanctuary to be cleansed. Jesus, therefore, on the tenth day of the seventh month 1844, at the end of the 2300 days, having closed his mediation for all the world, must pass into the Most Holy Place, within the second veil, to take that apartment of the "Temple of God in heaven" called the "tabernacle of the testimony." "Testimony" here means the ten commandments, which in the typical Sanctuary were placed in the "Holiest of all." This change in the position of our Great High Priest is illustrated by, and may well be "typical" to the coming of the bridegroom in the parable of the ten virgins. The priesthood of Christ is "unchangeable" in this respect, it does not pass from him to another as did the Levitical priesthood; but that a change was to take place in his position and ministration, at the end of the 2300 days, is clear.

It is said that the view that Adventists have followed the parable of Matt. xvi, 1-13, leads to spiritualism. This may be true; but take notice, this is not our position. The coming of the bridegroom is in the history of the marriage. Our position is, that a change has taken place in the position and work of our literal High Priest in the literal Sanctuary in heaven, which is to be compared to the coming of the bridegroom in the marriage. This view is a perfect safeguard against spiritualism. We not only believe in a literal Jesus, who is a "Minister of the Sanctuary," but we also believe that the Sanctuary is literal. And more, when John says that he saw "one like the Son of man" "in the midst of the seven candlesticks," that is, in the Holy Place, we know not how to make the candlestick spiritual, and the Son of man literal. We therefore believe that both are literal, and that John saw Jesus while a "Minister" in the Holy Place. John also had a view of another part of the Sanctuary, which view applies to the time of the sounding of the seventh angel. He says, "The temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ARK OF HIS TESTAMENT."—Rev. xi, 19. Also, "The tabernacle of the testimony was opened in heaven." Chap. xv, 3. This being an event to take place under the sounding of the seventh angel it could be fulfilled at no other time than at the end of the 2300 days. The Most Holy, containing the Ark of the ten commandments, was then opened for our Great High Priest to enter to make atonement for the cleansing of the Sanctuary. If we take the liberty to say there is not a literal Ark, annulling the ten commandments in heaven, we may go only a step further and deny the literal City, and the literal Son of God. Certainly, Adventists should not choose the spiritual view, rather than the one we have presented. We see no middle ground to be taken.

"And they that were ready, went in with him to the marriage."—The inquiry is often made, How did true believers go in with Christ to the marriage in 1844? To this we reply, the going in, and then door, is in the history of the marriage. The ten virgins had literal lamps, literally walked forth, and the "wise" went in with the bridegroom, and a literal door was shut. Not so in Advent history. Those therefore who claimed that the going in must be literally fulfilled by the saints entering the New Jerusalem, or some other place, should also make the lamps, going forth, and knocking, literal. At the seventh month, 1844, we were called out from the world! At the tenth, our sympathy was wholly with the expected Jesus. Previous to this, we were warning the world with tears to be ready for the Lord's coming; but on that day, or about that time, our labor for unbelievers rolled off from us, and an unseen hand drew us away from the world, and shut us up in sweet communion with Jesus. The thrilling testimonies of traveling brethren, published after the tenth, and the experience of the entire body of Advent brethren establish this point. The church of Christ, since the day of Pentecost, has not experienced an outpouring so great a change in labor and feeling, as Adventists experienced in 1844. A few days before the tenth of the seventh month, thousands were running to and fro, giving the cry, and papers containing the message were scattered everywhere, like the leaves of autumn. But about the tenth, every Advent paper was stopped, and the traveling brethren returned to their homes, feeling that they had given their last message to the world. The state of feeling throughout the entire body of Advent brethren can be accounted for in no other way, than that a change then took place in the position of the "viceroy" (Jesus), and the living "branches" felt it. And as he ceased to plead for the world, and moved within the second veil, the living branches were called away from the world, and their sympathy was with Jesus, and with each other.

This well compares with the wise virgins in the parable going in to the marriage. We might here remark also that on the day of atonement for cleansing the earthly Sanctuary, the high priest bore into the Holiest, upon the breast-plate of judgment, the names of all Israel that could be benefited by the tenth day atonement. Thus our High Priest bore in, on the tenth day of the seventh month, 1844, all that had not rejected light and truth sufficient to be cut off from Israel. In this way the branches were borne in with the vine.

"And the door was shut." This also was a literal door in the marriage, and was designed to illustrate an important event connected with Advent history, which we have already referred to in our remarks upon the coming of the bridegroom, and the going in with him in the marriage. Christ, the "Minister of the Sanctuary, and of the True Tabernacle," was to officiate in the anti-typical daily ministrations, until the termination of the 2300 days. That that work for the world was to cease forever; and he was to pass within the second veil, and enter upon the work of cleansing the Sanctuary. This subject is made very clear by the following, addressed to the church of brotherly love.

"And to the angel of the church in Philadelphia write: These things saith he that is holy, he that is true, he that hath the key of David, he that OPENETH, and no man SHUTTETH; and SHUTTETH, and no man OPENETH: I know thy works; behold, I have SET BEFORE THEE AN OPEN DOOR, AND NO MAN CAN SHUT IT: for thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name."

This language is addressed to only one church of the seven. Adventists have agreed in applying them to seven periods, or states of the church. This language does not apply to the Mardis, [nominal church], neither to the Laodicean church; but to the Philadelphia, the church of Brotherly Love, that came out of the different sectarian bodies, and were united in the Advent faith in 1844. All denominational lines were laid aside, and although the Advent brethren came out from the different sects, yet all were perfectly united on the great subject of Christ's coming. To this church, one door is opened, while another is shut. "Behold, I set before thee an open door." This door Christ opens, while he shuts another. As the Philadelphia church applies to no other period than the time of the termination of the 2300 days, when Christ closed his work for the world in the Holy, and opened the door of the "Holiest of all," the conclusion seems irresistible that the open and shut door of Rev. iii, 7, 8, refers to the change in the position and work of our Great High Priest in the heavenly Sanctuary. He then closed the work or "door" of the daily ministrations in the Holy, and opened the door of the Most Holy. "The tabernacle of the testimony" was then opened; but before this could be done, the "door," or work of Christ's continual mediation in the Holy had to be closed. This may well be "likened" to the shut door in the parable.

The idea that the door of God's mercy is closed, or ever was to be closed to those who do not reject the offer of mercy, is not found in the Bible. No such door is mentioned in Scripture. But that there ever has been a point, beyond which men may go, where, according to the plan of salvation, the intervention of Christ could not benefit them, is evident. The Jewish church, having rejected and condemned Christ, could not be benefited by his mediation in the Holy. The nominal Gentile church, on a holy, having rejected the Second Advent, cannot be benefited by his intercession in the Most Holy.

Says the objector, "I believe that Jesus is still on the mercy-seat." To this we reply, that Jesus never was on the mercy-seat, and never will be. The plan for the mercy-seat is over the Ark containing the ten commandments, in the Most Holy Place. Jesus did not enter that apartment till the end of the 2300 days, much more, take his position upon the mercy-seat. This is one step further than we can possibly go. We do believe, however, that Jesus entered the "tabernacle of the testimony" at the end of the 2300 days, and now stands before the mercy-seat, pleading his blood before the Father, in our behalf. There he stands as intercessor between the Father and the scattered members of his body, ready to pour salvation and mercy on those who meekly repent of their backslidings, turn to God with the whole heart, and receive the precious truth. Oh, may God wake up the Laodiceans, and lead them by the power of his Spirit and truth to the open door, which presents to our view Jesus in the Holiest, standing beside the Ark of the ten commandments. Amen.

"Afterward commingle the other virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open to us." But he answered and said, Verily, I say you, I know you not."

The wise virgins in the history of the marriage, entered in, and a literal door was shut, and the foolish came to that shut door, fully expecting to enter. Our Saviour has shown us the application of this portion of the parable in the following text.

"When once the Master of the house is risen up and hath shut to the door, and ye begin to stand without and to knock at the door, saying, Lord, Lord, open unto us; and he shall answer and say unto you, I know you not whence ye are."—Luke xiii, 25.

The foolish, in the parable, knocked at a literal door. Christ has shown us that the cry "Lord, Lord," after the Master of the house (Jesus) should rise up [from his mediation for the world in the Holy] in the event connected with Advent history, that may be "likened" unto it. It is evident that the five foolish, in the parable, fully expected to enter. If not, they were indeed foolish to come and seek admission when they knew they could not enter. Those who say "Lord, Lord," and seek the presence and favor of God, after Jesus rises up from his mediation in the Holy Place, are laboring under a similar deception. This leads us to a brief examination of the nature of the knocking.—Said Jesus.—

"Ask, and it shall be given you, seek, and ye shall find, KNOCK, and it shall be opened unto you."—Mat. vii, 7.

The word knock, in this text represents earnest and urgent cries and entreaties for the presence and favor of God, such as ever have been necessary in the conversion of men from sin to holiness. It is evident that the knocking, after Jesus has risen up from his mediation in the Holy, is of the same nature. But those who thus "knock" and say, "Lord, Lord," and seek the favor of God, are evidently under a similar deception to that of the five foolish, who expected admission after the door was shut not to be opened. If this position is correct, then the knocking will appear very much like the work of God in past times; therefore, we may expect to see what the churches and Adventists who have gone back with them, call reformation. This is strikingly taught in the following testimony from the Prophet:

"They shall go with their sheels and with their herds to seek the Lord; [a mediator for all the world, in the Holy:] but they shall not find him; he hath withdrawn himself [in the Most Holy] from them.—They have dealt treacherously against the Lord, for they have hearkened unto carnal counsel; [apparent converts.] now shall a month devour them with their portions."—Isaiah v, 6, 7.

Those who refuse to follow down the track of Prophecy, as to learn the present position and work of our Great High Priest, will "knock," or seek the Lord as a Minister in the Holy, where he is not. Therefore they will not find him, and his present intercession in the Most Holy Place will not benefit them, any more than the blood of Isaac, and the services of the priests in the worldly Sanctuary benefited the Jewish nation, after Christ ascended on high, a Minister of the "True Tabernacle" in heaven. Had the Jews believed John and Christ, and then followed down the track of Prophecy to the day of Pentecost, they would have received the Holy Ghost, that was then poured out, which signified that the way of the heavenly Sanctuary was then opened.

But it may be said that those represented by the foolish virgins will not knock until Christ comes, or not until they know that the door is shut against them. To this we reply, that as the foolish in the parable expected admission, so will those who knock after the Master of the house is risen up. This seems very necessary that we should be "compared" with the other. Also, the Bible teaches that men will not say, "Lord, Lord, open unto us," when Christ comes, or when they know that the door is shut. Their only desire and object will then be to see and hide from his presence. Those who knock say, "Lord, Lord, OPEN UNTO US." They desire his presence. But when they are apprized of their real condition, their cry will be, "Mountains and rocks fall on us, and HIDE US FROM the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb." Those who can make the words, "Hide us from," &c. mean "open unto us," will probably still apply the knocking to the future, after men know that they are lost.—But Scripture and reason teach that the knocking should be applied to the period of time beginning at the end of the 2300 days, in 1844, and closing in the great day of wrath, at the point of time when men will be made to know that the door is shut.

We have now gone through with the history of the marriage, and have seen that it compares well with Advent history. And that all the events in Advent history, that were to be "fulfilled" in the corresponding events in the marriage, are in the past, excepting the knocking, which applies not only in the past and present, but more especially to Christ's last hour of desolation and triumph, that is just before us. We say, therefore, that the time has come for the fulfillment of our Saviour's words, "THEN shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom," &c. Now they can be compared, for the events of both are history.—May the servants of the Lord be endowed with meekness and heavenly wisdom, so as to compare the two in such a manner that the scattered flock may see their present position, and be ready to hail with joy the King of glory, "when he shall return from the wedding."

But it may be asserted that the church is the bride of Christ, and that the marriage cannot take place till Christ comes to earth to take his people to himself. We have not space to take up the subject of the bride at this time as we should be glad to, and answer every objection, but will present a very few ideas. Said the Angel to John, "Come hither, I will show thee the bride, the Lamb's wife." Well, this is the very thing we wish to understand. The angel promised to show John the bride, and if he showed him the church, then it is forever settled that the church is the bride of Christ. Our positive testimony is worth more on this point, or any other, than a hundred inferences. But what did the angel show to John in fulfillment of his promise that he would show him the bride? Let John answer.

"And he carried me away in the Spirit to a great and high mountain, and showed me that Great City, the Holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God." Rev. xxi 9, 10.

Then inquired of the bride being the church, it is the "Great City, the Holy Jerusalem." But, says an objector, "It will take a great deal to make me believe that a City, made of different kinds of stone is the bride of Christ. Let me say, my brother, your objection is against the plain testimony of the Bible. If you object to that, we can say nothing to help you. Do be reconciled with the word of God. But, really, it is not so easy to credit the testimony of the holy disciples, when he testifies that the Holy Jerusalem is the bride of Christ, as that of Paul that the New Jerusalem is the mother of the church? Says Paul; "But Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all." Gal. iv, 26. It may also be said, that it is hard to believe that a literal city of stones is the mother of the church. But Adventists should not be "slaves of fears" to believe Bible testimony.

The principle Scriptures brought to prove that the church is the bride of Christ, is Eph. v, 22-32. But it should first be particularly noticed, that Paul's subject is the duty of husband and wife. The union that should exist between them is strikingly illustrated by the union that exists between Christ and the church. But the Apostle does not intend to prove that the church is the bride of Christ. Those who see this text to prove that the church is the bride, infer that it is so, merely because Paul chose the union existing between Christ and the church, to show the duty of man and wife. Those who have had much to say upon the insufficiency of inferential reasoning should not rest their faith relative to the bride, on such a weak inference, which contradicts the plain testimony of John. Rev. xxi, 9, 10.

Christ is the "everlasting Father" of his people, [Isa. lxiv, 6.] the New Jerusalem the mother, [Gal. iv, 26.] and the members of the church of Christ are the children. Soon the whole family is heaven, and in earth will be gathered. The view that the church is the bride of Christ, not only unites by marriage, the father with the children, but the bridegroom with the guests. It should here be understood that the virgins in the parable were not the bride. They represent the church, while the bride represents the New Jerusalem, the Lamb's wife. This fact being understood, we may now see that the marriage of the Lamb takes place in heaven, where the bride is, before he comes to call forth the sleeping saints, and to change the living righteous. For when he comes, he does not come to the wedding, but returns from the wedding. Says Jesus:

"Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning, and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord, when he will RETURN FROM THE WEDDING." Luke xii, 35, 36.

The marriage of the king's son [Matt. xxii, 1-14.] was designed to illustrate the same as the parable of the ten virgins, though its application may embrace more. There was a period in the marriage of the king's son, when the king came in to examine the guests. He found one destitute of a wedding garment, who was bound hand and foot, and cast out. Now this is an important portion of the parable, and has a direct application, as well as the other parts of it. But it is perfectly impossible to make any application of it to the view of the marriage, that the church is the bride, and that the marriage takes place at, or after the Second Advent. For it cannot be supposed that Christ, at his second coming, would take any in himself, into the air, or into the City, who were unprepared, and upon examination would be found destitute of what may be represented by a wedding garment, and have to be cast out into the earth again! But apply the marriage where it should be applied, to the preparatory scenes of the coming of the Son of man, and all is clearly understood.

As we are now in the time of the marriage, we may expect a message to be given, that will test and try those who have been called out from the world and churches, by those messages that brought them to the time of the marriage in 1844. The work of this message will compare with the examination of the guests in the marriage. And we believe that the third angel's message is just such a test, by which the guests are now being examined. If there had been no danger of some losing their garments in this trying time, in which the saints were to wait for the return of the Lord from the wedding, then there would have been no need of the message. "Blessed is he that washeth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame." Rev. xv, 13. Those who have drawn "back," we fear "to perdition," have been improperly called foolish virgins. It seems evident that those who really believed the Lord's coming in 1844, and acted out their faith, are represented by the wise virgins. Such had their names borne in with Christ to the marriage. But their state is represented by the man destitute of a wedding garment. We must now leave this interesting subject for the present, and may God add his blessing.

We have hastily written out this subject, and doubtless our readers will discover many defects, we shall, however, be happy to answer all reasonable objections and inquiries relative to it. W.

The Work of Grace.

The present work of grace that is now progressing among those who observe the Sabbath according to the commandment is no small evidence that we have the truth. We believe that it is the design of Heaven that the Sabbath should be especially proclaimed now, in the time of the patience of the saints; and God is setting his seal to the work.

Hundreds can testify that the message of the third angel has been the means of reclaiming them from a lukewarm backslidden state. In many families, where the family altar had been broken down, and no morning and evening prayers had been heard for some years, now the whole family join in the worship of God. Where the parents embrace the Sabbath, the children generally seek the Lord. Within the last two years we have baptized quite a number of the children of believing parents.

It is worthy of notice that the Ark of the Lord continued in the house of Obadiah the Gittite three months, and he and all his house was blessed of God. See 2 Samuel vi, 11. When the parents observe the fourth commandment, with the other nine, it seems like taking the Ark of the Lord into their houses, and the blessing of God is sure to follow.

There are some with us who formerly ran into the deceptive fogg of spiritualism, and gave up the literal Jesus, and made his glorious appearing only spiritual. It is evident that they never would have been delivered from that snare of the devil, had they not heard our views of present truth. Nothing can be so well calculated to dispel the intellectual mist of spiritualism, as the clear, literal view of the Heavenly Sanctuary.

Many of the dear Advent brethren have felt much like the followers of Jesus who said, "they have taken away the Lord," "and we know not where they have laid him." But the present truth has found him, to the joy of their hearts. We have witnessed the flowing tears of some such, as the literal Sanctuary in heaven has been pointed out, and the literal Jesus shown to be standing before the mercy-seat (that is over the Ark of the ten commandments) still pleading his blood for the errors of his people. And we have heard them express great joy that they had found Jesus. In a number of such cases where prayer had been nearly or entirely dispensed with for four or five years, now the family altar is erected and the whole family join in vocal prayer. A man must have a heart hard like adamant, and as cold as the rocks in the bottom of the ocean, not to be affected by such a work of divine grace, or that can call it falling from grace.

This blessed cause is destined to triumph gloriously. All the opposition of those who oppose will only help in its advancement. If the people of God are humble and obedient, God will work for them mightily.

Call of the Harbinger Comes.

We see by the "Harbinger" of Jan. 31st, that the editor is noticed our recent call at his office. Our object in going to the office was to obtain some of his books, also to obtain the name of his free list that he has recently dropped, and as for controversy. We fail to see anything of the noble spirit of the Christian that seeks fair investigation, in the remarks of M., but rather a disposition to repudiate the truth and misrepresent those who advocate it. We are sorry to be compelled to thus speak; but we will let his remarks show the spirit of the man. He says:

"James White, a prominent leader among those of the Shut-Door (Note 1) and Seventh day Sabbath theory, and one of their paper, recently called on us. During our friendly conversation he stated, as near as we can recollect, that he was sure that the seventh day was the Sabbath, binding on Christians to keep. [Note 2.] We told him that we were from the plain word of the Lord that he was in error in this respect. But we would yield the point and become a convert to his views on the Sabbath if he would give one ounce of scripture, without comment, inference or assumption, that plainly and unequivocally proves that it is the day of Christians to keep the seventh day as the Sabbath. He could give no such proof for none exists in the Bible. Hence the seventh day Sabbath is not binding on Christians."

Faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of the Lord. The word of the Lord furnishes no evidence that the seventh day Sabbath is binding on Christians; hence no one can have real faith in it. If Mr. White had any Bible evidence to sustain his theory, why did he not present it? and answer, Why?

Christians, beware how you listen to the vain, metaphysical and bewildering reasonings of these Shut-Door enthusiasts. No such ramblings as they present are needed to sustain a good cause.—The plain word of the Lord is always a hand to defend the truth. Remember this, and you will not be caught in any of the snares of these misguided ones. Let no man deceive you."

Note 1. What does M. understand by the shut door theory? If he means what is ignorantly called the "door of mercy," we reply that we know of no such door. The Bible mentions no such door. The parable of the ten virgins [Matt. xxv] mentions a shut door, but that shut door was literal, in the eastern marriage. It however represents an important event with which the church is connected, but was to occur prior to our Lord's return from the wedding. That event shuts out none of the honest children of God, neither those who have not wickedly rejected the light of truth, and the influence of the Holy Spirit.

It is declared by some that Jesus is still on the mercy seat, and this expression is often used in preaching, praying and singing. But because we teach that Jesus now stands before the mercy seat in the most holy place of the Heavenly sanctuary, we are represented as being one of the leaders of the shut door theory. We say that Jesus is not on the mercy seat. He never was there, and never will be there. The place for the mercy seat is over the Ark of the covenant, within the second veil, in the holiest of all. Over the mercy seat is the cherubim of glory. They overshadow, or cover the mercy seat. No place for the priest on the mercy seat.

We teach that Jesus our Great High Priest in the Heavenly Sanctuary, has fulfilled the following texts:

"And the key of the house of David will I lay upon his shoulder; so he shall open, and none shall shut; and he shall shut, and none shall open." Isa. xlii, 22. "And to the angel of the church in Philadelphia write: those things which he that is holy, he that is true, he that hath the key of David, he that openeth, and no man shutteth; and shutteth, and no man openeth. I know thy works; behold I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it." Rev. iii, 7, 8.

This OPEN DOOR we teach, and invite those who have an ear to hear, to come to it and find salvation through Jesus Christ. There is an exceeding glory in the view that Jesus has OPENED THIS DOOR into the holiest of all, or has passed within the second veil, and now stands before the Ark containing the ten commandments. "And the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament." Rev. xi, 19. If it be said that we are of the OPEN DOOR and seventh day Sabbath theory, we shall not object; for this is our faith.

Will those who are forward to speak evil of these things that they understand not, give an exposition of Isa. xlii, 22; Rev. iii, 7, 8?

Note 2. We are here represented as first introducing the Sabbath question and asserting that we "knew" that our views were right. This was not so. We asked M. if he would let us have three names of his free list that he had dropped, and stated that we had offered to send the "Review and Herald," to those poor persons free, and if they were not able to pay the postage we would pay it for them. This he was not willing to do. He asked us if we would let him have our list. We stated that we should first wish to know his object in obtaining our list. We also stated that if we were in his place we could not object.

Mark this: We did not ask M. for the list that he uses, but merely those names he had dropped. The names of the poor of the flock, that he withheld the "Harbinger" from. He then stated that he knew that we were wrong relative to the Sabbath. We replied that there was then no room for controversy, as the matter was settled on his part; and that we might say that we knew that we were right.—This we had better not have said, as it gave a chance for misrepresentation; but our object was to show that assertions were not proof.

We were then requested to open the Bible and read one text where the Christian church was commanded to keep the seventh day. We then asked M. if he did not remember when he taught the coming of the Lord in 1843 that scoffers of every grade required him to read from the Bible that the Lord was coming in 1813. To this M. replied, "AND THEY WOULD SAY IT JUSTLY TOO."

At this admission of M. we were astonished. If scoffers justly required M. to read from the Bible that the Lord was coming in 1813, before they would believe, then he unjustly urged them to believe on the evidence then presented. Therefore, according to this admission, they were the just, the wise that understood, while M. was with the unjust or those that did not understand, but were doing wickedly!! Bro Nan. xii. This admission not only destroys the advent movement, and places its proclaimers in a sad position, but if this principle were carried out, it would render every prophetic period in God's word entirely useless. Would it not also charge God with injustice and folly in giving the prophetic periods in the manner that he has?

We then stated that our position on the Sabbath did not require that we should read from the New Testament the commandment to observe the Sabbath. That the Bible mentioned but one weekly Sabbath and that Christians were certainly bound to observe it unless it could be shown that it was abolished.

Now let it be distinctly understood that God has given but one weekly Sabbath, and has enforced it by dreadful punishments. Both Testaments recognize the seventh day as the Sabbath. Therefore our position does not require that the fourth commandment should be repealed in the New Testament. It is enough for Christians to know that the commandment is given in God's word.

Brethren, let the "laboring oar" be placed where it belongs, in the hand of those who reject the Sabbath. The commandment to keep the seventh day is given in the most plain and positive terms, and when our opponents will produce as plain and positive testimony for its abolition as is employed in the fourth commandment, then, and not till then, will we yield our position.

The fact that the commandments of God are taught and enforced in the New Testament is sufficient evidence for the honest Christian, that wishes to believe the whole truth that it is a Christian duty to observe the fourth. Unbelief can always find a handle to take hold of when it wishes one. Those who wish to doubt, may find a wide field to doubt, and a broad road to death; while those who wish to believe the truth, as plainly revealed, can find abundant reason to believe.

THE ARK AND THE MERCY-SEAT.

In the Sanctuary of the first covenant the ark and the mercy-seat were placed in the holiest of all, and were connected, the mercy-seat being placed on the ark. [Heb. ix, 1-5; Ex. xxv, 10-21; xxvi, 33, 34. And if one exists in the heavenly Sanctuary, of which Christ is a minister, [Heb. viii, 1, 2,] most certainly both exist there. How natural and reasonable the view that the ark containing the commandments of God the Father, which are the rule of man's life, should be closely connected with the mercy-seat where mercy and pardon may be found through the blood of the Son of God for the transgression of that holy law.

Christians have had much to say relative to the mercy-seat, as really existing in the present dispensation; but they have been almost silent about the ark on which it rests. The mercy-seat has been dwelt upon with pleasure. The servants of the Lord have pointed to it as existing in heaven as really as God and Christ, and unite here, in their prayers and songs of praise, mentioned the mercy-seat with great delight. And why not preach, pray and sing about the ark containing the ten commandments as well as the mercy-seat which rests upon it? Those who will examine the subject will find as much evidence for the existence of the ark in this dispensation as the mercy-seat.

The apostle Paul in speaking of the first covenant Sanctuary [Heb. ix, 1-5] mentions the first tabernacle, or holy place, and its furniture, also "the tabernacle which is called the holiest of all," where the ark and mercy-seat were placed. An account of the typical Sanctuary, its two holies and furniture is given in Exodus.

The idea of a mercy-seat in heaven, in this dispensation, is obtained from the law of types and Paul's commentary upon that law, contained in his epistle to the Hebrews. The Apostle declares that the priests of the law served "unto the example and shadow of heavenly things." Speaking of the cleansing of the typical Sanctuary, also the cleansing of that Sanctuary in heaven of which Christ is a minister, Paul says: "It was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these, but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these. For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us." Heb. ix, 23, 24.

In this manner the Apostle shows that the earthly Sanctuary, its holies and furniture were patterns of the true in heaven, consequently, the mercy-seat must be there. Hence it has been dwelt upon with great delight as really existing in heaven as much as the literal person of Jesus. And thus they have sung:

"There is a place where Jesus sheds
The oil of gladness on our heads;
A place than all besides more sweet,
It is the blood-bought mercy-seat.

Ah! whither should we flee for aid
When tempted, dandled, dismayed?
Or how the hosts of hell defeat,
Had suffering saints no mercy-seat?"

Now, there is precisely the same evidence in the law of types, and the epistle to the Hebrews, for the existence of the ark of the ten commandments in this dispensation, that there is for the mercy-seat. Let those who doubt, search and see.—It would be considered infidelity to doubt the existence of the mercy-seat, and fannish in believe that the ark of God is in the heavenly Sanctuary. Let one dare teach that the mercy-seat has the ark still in rest upon, and he will be called a fanatic, and represented as fallen from grace if he keeps all the holy precepts contained in that ark.

It would be unreasonable to believe that the mercy-seat exists, and reject the ark, if there were as much evidence for one as the other; but it is a fact that there is more evidence that the ark of the ten commandments exists in heaven, than that there is a mercy-seat there.

"And the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament." Rev. xi, 19.

"And after that I looked, and behold, the temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in heaven was opened." Rev. xv, 5.

In the ark, mentioned here by John, empty? If it is, how can it be said to be "the ark of his testament"? Is not the testimony, the ten commandments uttered by Jehovah, in the Heavenly Sanctuary? If it is not, why does John mention the "tabernacle of the testimony in heaven?" Let it be here understood that John had this view of the Heavenly Sanctuary, A. D. 96, about 26 years after the typical Sanctuary was destroyed.

We have given two texts of plain bible testimony that prove the existence of "the ark of the testimony." And it is a fact that there is not one such text in the New Testament to prove that there is a mercy-seat. Let those who have much to say relative to the mercy-seat, and think so fanatical for believing that the ark exists, pause a moment and look at these facts.

With great delight we make mention of the ark of God, as well as of the mercy-seat, and believe that both exist in this dispensation. We love the mercy-seat, before which our merciful High Priest now stands ready to plead the case of those who come to him in sincerity and truth, and why not love the ark of God also beneath it? Those who do, may with propriety sing:

"From every stormy wind that blows,
From every swelling tide of woe,
There is a calm, a sure retreat,
'Tis found beneath the mercy-seat."

THE SANCTUARY AND 2300 DAYS.

No subject has greater claims on the attention of the Advent people than the Sanctuary and 2300 days of Dan. viii. This has been considered the most important pillar of our faith, and we think that those who will again carefully investigate this subject, will see that it still remains the main pillar in the faith of those who are waiting for the Lord, and are expecting him soon.

According to our best light on chronology, the 2300 days have ended. But if our former view that the Sanctuary is this earth, or a portion of it, and that it is to be cleansed by fire at the coming of Christ, then the days have not ended. One of two things is certain. We have either been in error in dating the 70 weeks from the seventh of Artaxerxes, B. C. 457, or in applying the Sanctuary to the earth, and its cleansing to be accomplished by fire at Christ's coming. If the 2300 days date from B. C. 457, then they terminated in 1844. If they ended there, then we have not formerly fully understood this subject; for no part of this earth was cleansed by fire and restored in 1844. If our former view is correct, that the 2300 days reach to the Second Advent, then they did not commence until more than eight years later than B. C. 457.

Some date the 70 weeks from the twentieth of Artaxerxes. In this case they would terminate thirteen years later than if dated from the seventh. If dated from the seventh, they terminated A. D. 34. If dated from the twentieth, they terminated A. D. 47. But as there was no event that occurred near that time to mark the termination of the seventy weeks, it is useless to urge that they commenced at the twentieth of Artaxerxes.

In the midst [middle] of the 70th week, the "sacrifice and oblation" of the Jews was to cease. This ceased to be of any virtue, when Christ, the antitypical sacrifice, was nailed to the cross. Here is the great way-mark that makes the prophecy sure. Dating from the seventh of Artaxerxes, the middle of the 70th week, (when Christ was crucified,) would fall on the Spring of A. D. 31. In one week there are seven years. From the middle of the 70th week to its close, was three and a half years, which being added to the Spring of A. D. 31, brings us to the Autumn of A. D. 34 for the close of the 70 weeks. Seventy weeks, or 490 years taken from the 2300, leaves 1810, which being added to the Autumn of A. D. 34, the end of the 2300 years is shown to have been in the Autumn of 1844.

The connection of the eighth and ninth chapters of Daniel, or that the 70 weeks are the first 490 of the 2300 days, never looked clearer than at the present time. We will here state some evidence of their connection.

After Daniel had seen the vision relative to the ram, he-goat, little horn and 2300 days, and sought for its meaning, [Dan. viii, 7-15.] he heard a voice from between the banks of Ulai, which said, "Gabriel, make this man to understand the vision." Verse 17. All will agree that the angel obeyed this voice, and made Daniel understand the vision. Gabriel then explained to Daniel the ram, goat and little horn; but gave him no instruction relative to the 2300 days, where to commence them, and whether they were literal or prophetic. And at the close of this chapter, Daniel says: "I was astonished at the vision, but none understood it." He certainly understood the symbols of the three universal kingdoms; for Gabriel fully explained each of them in verses 16-25. Then what was it that "none understood," at the close of this visit from Gabriel? Answer, the time. The angel in this chapter gives no starting point for the 2300 days. Now pass over the ninth chapter, and read the first verse of the tenth. "In the third year of Cyrus king of Persia, a thing was revealed unto Daniel, whose name was called Belteshazzar; and the thing was true, but the time appointed was long; and he understood the thing, and had understanding of the vision." Now Daniel understands the vision, which the last verse of the eighth chapter states that "none understood." He must have received this "understanding of the vision" in the ninth chapter. The first nineteen verses of the ninth chapter record Daniel's prayer.

The Prophet then says: "Yea while I was speaking in prayer, even the man Gabriel, whom I had seen in the vision at the beginning, being caused to fly swiftly, touched me about the time of the evening oblation. And he informed me and talked with me, and said, O Daniel, I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding. . . . understand the matter, and consider the vision." Verses 20-23.

Now the angel has come to finish what the voice from between the banks of Ulai, commanded him to do, [Chap. ix, 16,] viz: "Gabriel, make this man to understand the vision." Here the Prophet's attention is called to a former vision. He has come to give him "skill and understanding," relative to his vision of 2300 days, for he says: "Understand the matter, and consider the vision." And what are the first words he utters to the Prophet, as he gives him "understanding of the vision," which he declares at the close of the eighth chapter "none understood"? "Seventy weeks are determined [cut off] upon thy people," &c. These weeks, all agree, are 490 years. Cut off from what? Time can only be cut off from time; therefore the 70 weeks are cut off from the 2300 days. Can they be cut off from the 2300 literal days? They cannot. Therefore the days are prophetic, each day for a year.

The angel continues: "Know therefore and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem, unto the Messiah the Prince shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks," &c. Here the event from which to date the period is given.

Mark the expression: "Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people." "Thy people" here refers to the Jews. Hence, only 490 of the 2300 years belonged to the Jews, and to their Sanctuary. What was left, after the seventy weeks were cut off, for the Jews, must belong to another people, or church, and to the Sanctuary of that other church. It is evident that it belongs to the new covenant, or gospel church, and the new covenant Sanctuary in heaven, of which Christ is the minister.

Now Gabriel has obeyed the command to make Daniel "understand the vision." He did this in part in the eighth chapter. He there explained the symbols of Media-Persia, Grecia and Rome, yet none understood the vision. But in his visit to the Prophet in chapter nine, he gives a rule by which the days might be known to be years, and also names the event from which the period should be dated. Now the Prophet can say in the first verse of chapter ten: "The time appointed was long, and he understood the thing, and had understanding of the vision." The 70 weeks, then, is the key to unlock the vision of 2300 days, and give us understanding of the matter.

We copy the following from the Journal of Eld. J. V. Himes, published in the Advent Herald of Feb. 26th, 1853. In speaking of his visit to Exeter, N. H., he says:

"While in this place some touching recollections were recalled in reference to my first introduction and acquaintance with Father Miller. It was in this place that I first heard him preach, and was introduced to him. He preached on Dan. viii, 13, 14: 'Then I heard one saint speaking, and another saint said unto that certain saint which spake, How long shall be the vision concerning the daily sacrifice, and the transgression of desolation, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot? And he said unto me, Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed.' Although I had read his written discourse on this subject, I was not impressed with its humanity and strength until now. He poured forth a flood of light from other scriptures upon every part of his subject, and fully shut me up to the faith, both as to the manner and time of our Saviour's Second Advent. And although the time has passed without the event being realized, I have never been able to solve the mystery. The connection of the seventy weeks with the 2300 days vision still looks clear, but it cannot be harmonized with the light we now have on chronology; but having done our duty, we wait patiently for the clear light of heaven upon the subject, in expectation of the full and speedy realization of all we ever hoped for in the fulfillment of prophecy, both as to the nature of the events, and the time of their realization, at the end of the days. And we are exhorted in view of this, not to 'cast away our confidence which hath great recompense of reward, for we have need of patience, that after we have done the will of God, we might receive the promise.' So we watch and wait and hope."

We are glad that Eld. H. seen and here acknowledges the connection of the 70 weeks with the 2300 days vision. It is a matter of much regret that the Herald of May 23, 1852, should admit that these two periods have different starting points. One object in giving the above extract is to show the present position of the Editor of the Herald on this subject.

But what of the "mystery" of which Eld. H. speaks? Can it not be "solved"? May we not understand our present position? Watchman, what of the night? Shall the watchman reply, We are not "able to solve the mystery" relative to the time of night? "The watchman saith, the morning cometh, and also the night: if ye will inquire, inquire ye; return come." Isa. xxi, 12.

But what is this "mystery"? Why, Christ did not come, and the land of Palestine was not cleansed by fire in 1841, where the 2300 days ended, according to our present light on chronology. But did the angel say, Unto 2300 days; then Christ shall come, &c.? Never. "Then shall the Sanctuary be cleansed," are the words of the angel.

Those who taught that Christ would come at the end of the 2300 days, in 1841, inferred that the Sanctuary to be cleansed at the end of the days was the earth, or the land of Palestine. We say "inferred," for we were never able to give one text of plain testimony on the point. It is true that Ex. xv, 17; Ps. lxxviii, 54; Isa. lxiii, 18, are quoted as proof; but they afford none. When read with their connection, they will be seen to refer to the Jewish Sanctuary.—See Bro. Andrews' remarks on these texts in No. 17 of the Review, or his Pamphlet, pages 25-27. But we confess that it is a "mystery" that some of our Advent brethren should still hold fast the former view, that the Sanctuary is this earth, or Palestine, and that it is to be cleansed by fire at the coming of Christ, when there is not one text of scripture that favors such a view.

But two things are recognized in the scriptures as God's Sanctuary. 1. The typical Sanctuary of the Jews, or first covenant. 2. The heavenly Sanctuary of which Christ is a minister. "This is the new covenant Sanctuary." Now of the things which we have spoken this is the sum; we have such an high priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens; a minister of the Sanctuary and of the True Tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man." Heb. viii, 1, 2. Here the two are brought to view, and held in contrast. One, the type, earthly, pitched by man; the other, the antitype, heavenly, "which the Lord pitched." The one was God's Sanctuary, or dwelling place, [Ex. xxv, 8.] during the first covenant, and was cleansed at the close of each year. The other is the greater and more perfect Tabernacle where Christ ministers at "the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens." This latter Sanctuary is to be cleansed at the termination of the 2300 days.

Here an objection at once arises in the minds of those who have not investigated this subject. They are sometimes apparently disgusted with the idea that there is anything in heaven that needs cleansing. But it may be seen that their difficulty arises from want of knowledge on the point. May we not correctly determine the nature of the cleansing of the antitype in heaven, from the type on earth? Most certainly. The type was cleansed yearly "because of the uncleanness of the children of Israel, and because of their transgressions in all their sins." Lev. xvi, 16. The type, then, was cleansed, not as we would cleanse a room or garment, but from sin. Now hear Paul:—"It was therefore necessary that the patterns [the two holies of the earthly Sanctuary] of things in the heavens should be purified [cleansed] with these; [blood of beasts:] but the heavenly things themselves [heavenly holy places] with better sacrifices than these." Heb. ix, 23.

Here then is a plain statement that the heavenly Sanctuary was to be purified or cleansed. This can be done only by virtue of the blood of the Son of God, the minister of the True Tabernacle.

We present the plain statement of Heb. ix, 23, and say to those who object on the ground that there can be nothing in heaven to be cleansed, that they must settle the matter with the Apostle. He teaches (1) that the two holy places of the earthly Sanctuary were "patterns" and "figures" of heavenly things, the true holy places of that Sanctuary of which Christ is the minister, and (2) that this heavenly Sanctuary was to be purified or cleansed. The cleansing is of the same nature as that of the earthly, the removal of the sins of God's people.

We say that the subject of the Sanctuary and 2300 days claims the attention of the Advent body at this time, more than any other. The clear light of chronology terminates the days in 1844; but no part of the earth was cleansed then, or since that time. Says J. H. Cook, "I acknowledge that we were mistaken in the time, and I also acknowledge that I do not know how to mend the matter." "Watchman, what of the night?" The watchman saith, I do not know. I thought I once knew the time of night, but was mistaken, and "cannot mend the matter."

The "mystery" lies here: The time was right; but there was a mistake in the event to occur at the end of the days. The mystery is in making the words, "Then shall the Sanctuary be cleansed," mean; Then Christ shall come, and burn up the old earth, and give the new heavens and earth. Now just as long as men look to this earth for the Sanctuary, just so long will this glorious theme remain to them a mystery.— And the only way that it can be solved, is by the present light on the Sanctuary, which harmonizes the past Advent movement, and shows our present position. For a thorough exposition of this subject, read Bro. Andrews' Pamphlet on the Sanctuary and 2300 days.

THE SANCTUARY.

The Harbinger of March 5th has some inquiries relating to the Sanctuary by J. B. Fridge, and answers by O. R. C. Crozier. "My views," says C., "have been somewhat changed on the subject of the 'sanctuary' since 1845, when I wrote the article on the law of Moses, from which Sabbatarian Adventists quote so often." We have quoted from C's article, for no other reason than this, it contained precious truth, which we wished to spread before the flock of Christ. And God has blessed it to the good of many. One man backsliding from the truth, does not affect that truth, any more than to renounce the religion of Christ, destroys Christianity.

But C. says: "The above named persons appear to me mistaken in quoting from that article, (1) because they know that it was written for the express purpose of explaining and proving the doctrine of the 'shut door,' which they now, I understand, disclaim."

On the above we will first remark, that as C. has informed the readers of the Harbinger that we disclaim the doctrine of the shut door, that paper should no longer reproachfully call us "shut-door Sabbatarians." But we say that C's article on the law of Moses, no more goes to prove a shut door than it does an open door. It is in harmony with the Bible doctrine which we hold, that at the termination of the 2300 days, in 1844, there was a change in the work of our High Priest—a door was then opened into the Most Holy, while another was shut.

C continues: "I think we have no means of knowing the precise time when the antitype of the ancient 10th day of the 7th month service did or will begin; but we have evidence that it will not close the 'door of mercy' against all the previously impenitent."

As to the "door of mercy" of which C. speaks, we read of no such door, only in the writings of uninspired men. But the truth that C. wished to state here, for truth it is, is this, that there would be those who might come to God through the mediation of Jesus Christ, and find pardon of their sins, after the work of the antitype of the tenth day of the seventh month service should commence. This, to us who believe that this is the period of the antitypical tenth day service, is an important truth. While the great work of saving men closed with the 2300 days, a few are now coming to Christ, who find salvation. The "precious time" for the antitype of the ancient tenth day service to cleanse the sanctuary is given: "Unto 2300 days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." Amen.

The following paragraph from C. states important facts, and such facts as his brethren generally reject. Notice them with care.

"I think the terms 'the most holy place' and 'heaven itself,' as they occur in Heb. ix, are not convertible. The contrast, you will see by verse 24, is between 'the holy places made with hands' and 'heaven itself.' In my opinion, we fail to see much of the instruction contained in the type, if we confound the services of the 'holy place' with those of 'the most holy place.' They had distinct apartments in the sanctuary, services were performed at different times, and under different circumstances. These differences are recognized in the New Testament explication."

Speaking of the services of the most holy place, or the antitype of the service of the ancient tenth day of the seventh month, C. says: "According to the best light I can obtain from the Scriptures, I conclude that that service will occupy the next age." He speaks of the distinction between the services of the holy place and the most holy place, and states that the service of the most holy will occupy "the next age." If it occupies the next age, there can be no room in that age for another distinct service. Therefore we are led to conclude that his position is, that Christ performs the service of the holy place in the heavenly Sanctuary, in this age, and the service of the most holy place in the next age, in a Sanctuary yet to be built with hands!! With such a position satisfy the readers of the Harbinger? If this is not his position, we do not understand him, and shall be glad to be corrected. If they are his views, we acknowledge that they have undergone a radical change since 1845.

Speaking of the Sabbath, C. says: "How often have I heard Sabbatarians say, 'We can't keep it: we do the best we can; yet we can't keep it according to the Bible.' The reason is, it was never designed for Christians to keep," &c.

We venture to say that no Sabbath-keeper ever made this statement, unless on the point of giving it up, as C. and some others did a few years since. We never heard such a remark from the mouth of any Sabbath-keeper. But why cannot the Christian rest on the Sabbath day according to the commandment, as well as the Jew? Do tell us why. Heaven. Will any dare say that God gave the Jews a Sabbath that he could not keep? Such make the Great Law-giver a tyrant. The Jew could keep the Sabbath, and so may the Christian. Amen.

THE REVIEW AND HERALD.

"Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth."

ROCHESTER, THURSDAY, MARCH 31, 1883.

THE SANCTUARY.

THREE texts of scripture have been quoted by those who have taught that the Sanctuary of Dan. viii was to be cleansed by fire, to prove that the land of Canaan is that Sanctuary. We will here quote from the Second Advent Manual of 1843, by Apollon Hado.—This was a standard work, and gives the view then taken by the Advent body.

"The word Sanctuary is used by the inspired writers in the following significations. 1. It is the name of a particular part of the temple. Heb. ix, 2. 2. The different apartments of the temple. Jer. ii, 26. 3. The temple itself. 1 Chron. xxi, 15; xxi, 10. 4. Places of worship generally, true or false. Amos vii, 9; Eze. xlii, 15; Dan. viii, 11. 5. Heaven is called the Sanctuary. Ps. cii, 19. 6. The promised land.—Ex. xv, 17; Ps. lxxviii, 54; Isa. lxi, 18. 7. The tabernacle of God in the heavenly state. Eze. xlii, 26, 28. These are the principal significations of the word sanctuary, in the word of God. According to which of these significations is the word to be understood in the text before us? I think the most obvious sense is that which points out the promised land; for it must be evident to every one that the Sanctuary here spoken of must be capable of being 'trodden under foot,' and of being 'cleansed,' and as I think we shall see, of being cleansed at the coming of Christ and the resurrection of the righteous dead."

With the first four, and the seventh and last, significations of the word Sanctuary, as given above, we agree. The texts are plain and afford positive testimony; but with the fifth and sixth we widely differ. There is no positive testimony that heaven is called the Sanctuary. That God's Sanctuary, the "true Tabernacle which the Lord pitched, and not man," the "greater and more perfect Tabernacle" of which Christ is a minister, is in heaven, we have abundance of plain scripture testimony. See Heb. viii, 1-4; ix, 11, 23, 24; Rev. i, 12, 13; xi, 19; xv, 5. The text referred to above, to prove that heaven is called the Sanctuary, is as follows: "For he hath looked down from the height of his sanctuary: from heaven did the Lord behold the earth." Ps. cii, 19.

The most natural, and obvious meaning of this text is, that the Sanctuary, from the "height" of which the Lord "looked down" to "behold the earth," is the "Temple of God in heaven" in which "was seen" the "ark of his testament." This view is sustained by a mass of plain scripture testimony, while the other view has only an inference from Ps. cii, 19, to sustain it.

We object to the sixth definition of the word Sanctuary, that it is "the promised land" because that view has no other foundation than unwarrantable inferences from only three texts of scripture. These we will now examine.

The first is Ex. xv, 17, "Thou shalt bring them in, and plant them in the mountain of thine inheritance, in the place, O Lord, which thou hast made for thee to dwell in; in the sanctuary, O Lord, which thy hands have established." This is a part of the prophetic song of Moses sung by Israel upon the banks of the Red Sea, in praise to God for their deliverance, and in prospect of their settlement in Canaan. Its fulfillment is declared in Ps. lxxviii, 54, which is the second text claimed as proof that the promised land is the Sanctuary. "And he brought them to the border of his sanctuary, even to this mountain, which his right hand had purchased." Cruden says, "By Sanctuary, here, [Ex. xv, 17,] may he be understood the temple on Mount Moriah, which God would certainly cause to be built and established."

This view is shown to be correct from the context of Ps. lxxviii, 54. After declaring in verse 54, that God brought his people to the border of his Sanctuary, the Psalmist in verses 68, 69 tells us what the Sanctuary was which his hands established, as follows. "But chose the tribe of Judah, the Mount Zion which he loved. And he built his Sanctuary like high palaces." The border, or place of the Sanctuary, where God planted his people, was one thing, and the Sanctuary itself, which he caused to be built like high palaces, was entirely another thing. The people were planted, and dwelt in the former, but God dwelt in the latter, among his people. "The Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel: . . . Lot them make me a sanctuary, that I may dwell among them." That Sanctuary was a sacred place. There the Lord placed his name, and manifested his glory.

Why should we confound the border, or place of the Sanctuary, which was the promised land, with the Sanctuary itself? Certainly there is no necessity for so doing. And there is no more propriety in such a course, than there would be in asserting that a house and the yard or farm around it were one and the same thing. And to say that Ex. xv, 17; Ps. lxxviii, 54, which speak of the "place," and "the border" of the Sanctuary, as well as the Sanctuary itself, prove that the promised land is the Sanctuary, is equal to asserting that a farm and a house situated upon it are only a house. We use this simple figure to make the error appear in its true light.

The other text quoted to sustain this position, is Isa. lxi, 18. "The people of thy holiness have possessed it [the promised land, or the inheritance] but a little while: our adversaries have trodden down thy sanctuary." The history of the Jews shows a perfect fulfillment of this text, therefore, the Sanctuary mentioned in the text refers to the typical Sanctuary. There is no more necessity or propriety in confounding the inheritance, with the Sanctuary in this text, than in Ex. xv, 17, and Ps. lxxviii, 54. It is true that the tribes of Israel possessed the promised land "but a little while," and it is also true that their adversaries did tread down their Sanctuary, by desecrating and desolating their Temple.

No one believes that the words, "trodden under foot," and "trodden down," mean that the entire land of Canaan has been literally trampled down by the feet of wicked men, any more than the text, "I will tread down the people in mine anger," [Isa. lxi, 6,] means that the Almighty is to literally trample on men. Those that teach that the promised land is the Sanctuary, must, therefore, admit that the words "trodden under foot," and "trodden down," are figurative expressions, and mean that the promised land has been overrun with the wicked agents of its desolation. Then they should not object to our using the expressions figuratively, in applying the words, trodden down [Isa. lxi, 18] to the typical Sanctuary, and the words, trodden under foot, [Dan. viii, 13,] to the true Tabernacle or Sanctuary in heaven.

It may be said that the heavenly Sanctuary is not capable of being trodden under foot. But we ask, is it not as capable of being trodden under foot as the Son of God, who is the Minister of the same Sanctuary? Says Paul: "Of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace." Heb. x, 29.

THE SHUT DOOR.

The idea of the shut door has been received mainly from the following texts of scripture.

"And while they went to buy, the bridegroom came, and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage; and the door was shut." Matt. xxv, 10.

"When once the Master of the house is risen up, and hath shut to the door, and ye begin to stand without, and to knock at the door, saying, Lord, Lord, open unto us; and he shall answer and say unto you, I know you not whence ye are: Then shall ye begin to say, we have eaten and drunk in thy presence, and thou hast taught in our streets. But he shall say, I tell you, I know you not whence ye are." Luke xiii, 25-27.

The phrase "door of mercy" is much used; yet it is not found in the above texts, or elsewhere in the scriptures. It has been handed down to the Advent people by those who have not closely studied the Bible, and it is to be regretted that they should so freely use it. The impression has been made upon most minds, that this so called "door of mercy" would be closed when Christ is revealed from heaven. But the Lord's mercy, strictly, will never close. "His mercy endureth for ever." In all past time, the mercy of the Lord has ceased to men, and to nations, when they have rejected all the means of salvation which the all-wise Creator could, according to his plan of saving men, set before them. The Lord can do no more than this at the period of his Second Advent.

But neither of the above texts of scripture apply to the Second Advent of Christ. The first, [Matt. xxv, 10,] is a portion of our Lord's statement respecting an Eastern Marriage.

The coming of the bridegroom, mentioned in this text, is not the coming of Christ. It was an event in the marriage, which only represents an event in the kingdom of heaven.

"And they that were ready went in with him to the marriage; and the door was shut." This was, also, a literal transaction in the marriage, mentioned by our Lord, and only represents an event in the kingdom of heaven. What is that event? Is it the second appearing of Christ? We answer, that such an application destroys all the harmony of the parable.

If these events in the parable be applied to Christ's second coming, then the going in with him to the marriage, must apply to the resurrected and changed saints being caught up to meet the Lord in the air, and entering, with their Lord, the New Jerusalem, or some other place where a door will be closed after they enter.

But we would ask, what door will be closed after the Lord has come, and after the saints are made immortal, and enter the New Jerusalem with their Lord? Is it replied that this is the "door of mercy," or "door of salvation for sinners," we answer, that those who apply these points in the marriage to the Second Advent, believe that such a door will be closed at the moment the Son leaves the right hand of the Father; and for this portion of the parable to harmonize with their views, it should read as follows: And while they went to buy, the door was shut, and the bridegroom came, and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage. One difficulty in applying these events to the Second Advent is that the shut door does not come until after the Lord descends from heaven, raises and changes his saints, and they go into the New Jerusalem, or some other place, then the door is shut. But look again. The "man of sin" is to be destroyed by the brightness of Christ's coming 2 Thess. ii, 8. The Lord Jesus is to be revealed from heaven "in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power; when he shall come to be glorified in his saints." 2 Thess. i, 8, 9. This destruction of the entire wicked takes place at Christ's coming, before he enters the New Jerusalem with the immortal saints. Then how absurd is the application of this part of the parable that naturally leads to the position, that after the Lord has destroyed all the wicked, and takes his saints away from the earth, and goes in with them to the marriage, then the door is shut against the wicked although not one of them is in existence!

But what follows this going in to the marriage, and the shut door? Answer: "Afterwards came also the other virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open to us."—Matt. xxv, 11. Now if the coming of the bridegroom represents the Second Advent, and if the going in with him to the marriage, and the shut door, is after the saints are made immortal and all the wicked are destroyed, do tell us, who are these represented by those who "afterwards came," "saying, Lord, Lord"?—There is perfect harmony with every part of this parable when correctly applied. And it must all be applied to events that take place prior to the Second Advent, in order for this harmony to be seen. The last events in the parable are, the foolish "saying, Lord, Lord, open to us," and the answer, "I know you not." These must be applied to a period prior to the Second Advent. They cannot be applied to a period after the wicked are destroyed by the brightness of Christ's coming.

Those who oppose the Advent faith, dispose of the parable in this way. Say they, "it has no particular application anywhere, only that we should be ready to die!" And some of the Advent brethren dispose of it as easily. Say they, "the object of the parable of the ten virgins is to teach us the importance of being ready for the coming of the Lord. That is, the different parts of the parable spoken by our Lord mean nothing in particular. Such a position really seems to be an insult on the Lord Jesus Christ."

When we take the view of this parable that has been taken by the Advent body, a harmony will be seen. The ten virgins represent those who participated, more or less, in the Advent movement. The going forth with lamps, represents the movement of 1843, occasioned by the study and proclamation of the Word. "Thy word is a lamp." Ps. cxix, 105. The larrying followed, with the slumbering time. The midnight cry in the parable, represents the powerful and glorious movement, and work of God on the hearts of his people, in the Autumn of 1844. And here we would say that Advent papers, and preachers taught the position we here take, up to the great disappointment in 1844. And probably no Advent brother would now object to this application, were it not for difficulties they find with the remaining portion of the parable. And many throw the whole away, as having little or no meaning. But what are these difficulties? We will look at them.

1. If the parable all applies prior to the Second Advent, it makes the coming of the Lord spiritual.—Not so. The bridegroom in the parable literally came, and that merely represents the event that took place with our High Priest, at the end of the 2300 days, as he entered upon the antitypical tenth day atonement. This event is also symbolized in Dan. viii, 13, 14. Mark this: The Son of man coming to the Ancient of days, and brought near before him, does not mean his leaving the right hand of the Father, and coming into this world.

2. A second objection to applying the parable to a period prior to the Second Advent, is, that none have gone in with the Lord, and cannot, till made immortal. To this we reply, that in the marriage, they that were ready went in with the bridegroom, and a literal door was shut. Who believes that our Lord is to bolt or bar a literal door? No one. In the marriage, ten virgins walked forth with literal lamps, had literal oil, literally slept, and woke, and five of them walked in with the bridegroom, and a literal door was shut. Not so in the kingdom of heaven. And when it can be shown that this parable designs to teach that a body of Christians are to take literal lamps and oil, walk forth, literally sleep and wake, then, and not till then, will we agree, that the going in with the bridegroom must represent immortal saints entering the New Jerusalem with their Lord. But if the lamp represents the Word, and if the going forth of the virgins, represents merely a movement on the manner and time of the Lord's Advent, why may not the going in of the five, be applied in a similar manner, to the faith and feelings of the real Advent believer at the seventh month, 1844? Where were we as a people? Answer: Entirely separate from the world, and all its interests. An unseen hand had moved us away from the world, and our sympathy was with the Lord, and with his waiting saints.

Then where are we? What is our real position? Answer: "Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh." Matt. xxv, 13. "Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning; and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord, when he will return from the wedding." Luke xii, 35, 36. It is emphatically the waiting, watching time. Mark this: When our Lord comes to earth the second time, he returns from the wedding. This places the wedding prior to the Second Advent, and confirms the view that the eastern marriage was designed to represent a series of events to take place before Christ comes.

The event represented by the five foolish afterwards coming, and saying, "Lord, Lord, open to us," we think, is in the future, and will be seen at the commencement of the day of the Lord, when the last plagues begin to be poured out.

The ten virgins represent only those who participated in the Advent movement. Those who were not in the movement, and did not reject its light, stand on the same ground for salvation, as though such a movement had never taken place. Those, therefore, who are now looking for the Lord, and are obeying the present truth, may now rejoice in the true application of the parable of the ten virgins, as well as those who shared in the past great and glorious movement.

But what is represented by the shut door in the parable? We have shown the absurdity of applying it to the Second Advent. We can see no other application of the shut door, that will harmonize with other parts of the parable, and with other scriptures, than to our High Priest entering upon the antitype of the ancient tenth day of the seventh month atonement, at the end of the 2300 days, in the Autumn of 1844. His work, performing the antitype of the daily ministration, then must cease in the Holy place of the True Tabernacle, in order for him to enter the Most Holy place to cleanse the Sanctuary. And as his work closed in the Holy, it commenced in the Most Holy. We think the following, addressed to the Philadelphia church, applies to this subject. "These things saith he that is holy, he that is true, he that hath the key of David, he that openeth, and no man shutteth; and shutteth, and no man openeth; I know thy works; behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it; for thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name."

Although there is a shut door which excluded those represented by the foolish virgins, (those moved by the proclamation of the Advent, who had none of the grace of God, no real faith,) and also those who were foolish and wicked enough to reject, and fight against the glorious news of a soon coming Saviour, yet we rejoice to publish to those that have an ear to hear, that there is an Open Door. "Behold," says the True Witness, "I set before thee an open door." O, that precious souls would come to this open door, and share the Saviour's pardoning love.

Reader, come along with us to this open door, and see what we will show you. You recollect that the ark containing the ten commandments was placed in the Holiest of the earthly Sanctuary, and was not seen only when the high priest entered to cleanse it. And what does John see, down the stream of time, amid the scenes of the seventh angel? "And the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament." Rev. xi, 19. Do you see it? God help you to see this open door, and by faith, view the ark, and see the law of God in all its strength and glory.

In our next, we will notice the shut door spoken of in Luke xiii, 25-27.

QUESTIONS BY DR. O. FRIGGIE.

1. I want to know how you reconcile the 70 years captivity, prophesied of by Jeremiah, [chap. xvi, 12,] which Daniel [chap. ix, 2] ascribed to be 70 years of desolation of Jerusalem, when the beginning was B.C. 606, [2 Kings xviii, 1,] and the end was B.C. 536, [Ezra i, 1,] the 70 years of Cyrus' [Jer. xxi, 12, margin.] Now we are told that the commandment did not go forth until the seventh year of Artaxerxes, a.c. 457. This was 79 years longer, which is all made 149 years desolation, or captivity, instead of 70. This does not appear to agree with Dan. ix, 23, "at the beginning of thy supplications the commandment came forth," &c. This appears to have been the first year of Darius's a.c. 538. Dan. ix, 1, margin. And this vision appears to reach from the building of the city until the destruction by the Romans. Dan. ix, 24, 27. I do not know but it is all straight enough, when it is explained. But I have never seen any thing about this 79 years crisis, and this vision reaching to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans. I do not throw this out as a puzzle, but as a real difficulty in my own mind. I do not know but I am alone in this.

2. How do you know that the Sanctuary in Dan. viii, 14 is the one in heaven to be cleansed at the end of the 2300 days?

3. As you believe in type and antitype, how do you account for Jesus' stay in the most holy place (if he went in there in 1844) more than one year, answering to the day in the type? Chilens, Mich., March 20, 1853. J. D. FAIRBANKS.

ANSWER:

1. The following extract from Litch's Prophetic Expositions, will meet the leading points in the first question:

"It is obvious, from the last verse of the eighth chapter, that Daniel felt the most intense anxiety in respect to the vision, and yet had no light. But, according to the ninth chapter, he learned, immediately after the death of Belshazzar, [see Dan. v. 28, and onward,] in the first year of Darius the Mede, that Jeremiah had foretold 70 years captivity of the Jews in Babylon, and the same period of desolation of the land by the hand of the king of Babylon. From the beginning of Daniel's captivity, in the third year of Jehoiakim, and the first of Nebuchadnezzar, there had been seventy years accomplished. Daniel, knowing this fact, and also misunderstanding the real import of Jeremiah's prophecy, as well as his own vision, supposed the time for cleansing or justifying the sanctuary had arrived. But the prediction of Jeremiah [chap. xxi, 6-11] was, that God would bring Nebuchadnezzar against that land and nation, and 'utterly destroy them, and make them an astonishment, and a hissing, and perpetual desolations.' 'This whole land shall be a desolation and an astonishment; and these nations shall serve the king of Babylon 70 years.' The Babylonian captivity was to be 70 years, but the land was to be 'perpetual desolations.' And it shall come to pass when 70 years are accomplished,—not that the desolation of the holy land and oppression and bondage of the church cease, but—I will punish the king of Babylon, and that nation, and the land of the Chaldees, and will make it perpetual desolations.' The 70 years ended, and God sent the hand-writing on the palace wall of Babylon, 'Mene, 'Mene, 'Mene,' signifying THE KINGDOM AND FINISHED IT. That night Belshazzar was slain, and Darius took the kingdom. But the desolations, both of Judea and Chaldaea, yet continue." Vol. I, page 128, 129.

We think that these remarks present the subject to the true light. It is not predicted that the desolation of Judea should terminate with the 70 years, but that the Babylonian servitude should continue that number of years. Jer. xlv, 9-11. The event which marks the termination of the 70 years is the punishment of the king of Babylon. Compare verse 12 with chap. xlvii, 7; Dan. v. 25-31. About two years after the punishment of the king of Babylon, God visited his people in that city, by stirring up the spirit of Cyrus king of Persia, to cause them to return to their own land. Jer. xlix, 10; Ezra i. 1-3.

The commandment, which Gabriel says came forth at the beginning of Daniel's supplication, was, doubtless, the divine mandate to Gabriel requiring him to visit and expiate to Daniel those things which he had omitted to explain in chapter viii. For he says, "At the beginning of thy supplications the commandment came forth, and I am come to show thee" Ac. Dan. ix, 23. It was in obedience to that commandment, that Gabriel had then come.

It is certain that the Joerno from which the 70 weeks are dated [Dan. ix, 25] could not have gone forth at the end of the 70 years of Babylonian servitude, which was more than 530 years before Christ. For in that case the entire period of 70 weeks or 490 prophetic days, would not reach even to the birth of Christ, by a space of more than 40 years! WILKINS 69 of the 70 weeks were to extend to the Messiah the Prince. But the decree of the seventh year of Artaxerxes answers all the conditions of the prophecy; and, reckoning from that decree, the 70 weeks were exactly fulfilled in all particulars. The seventh of Artaxerxes was a. c. 457. At the end of 69 weeks or 483 prophetic days from that point the Messiah began to preach in a. d. 27, saying "The time is fulfilled. Mark i, 15, 16.

It is true that Gabriel in this interview with Daniel predicted the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans; but he does not state that the 70 weeks extend to that event. He testifies that 69 of them extend only to Messiah the Prince. It is certain, therefore, that the remaining week, or period of 7 years, could not be extended to the destruction of Jerusalem, as that event did not occur for almost 40 years. And if the 70 weeks began with the termination of the Babylonian captivity they could not extend to the destruction of Jerusalem by a period of almost 120 years.

2. The evidence is perfectly conclusive that the Sanctuary of the Bible is the tabernacle of God, and not the earth, the land of Palestine, or the church. Ex. xxv, 8; Heb. ix, 1-5. The fact is clearly stated in the Scriptures that the earthly Sanctuary, or tabernacle, was made as a pattern or a representation of the true Sanctuary or tabernacle in heaven. Ex. xxv, 9, 40; Heb. viii, 1-5. It is plainly stated, in Heb. ix, that the earthly Sanctuary was a figure of the true tabernacle, designed for the time then present, that is, for that dispensation, and that since the Lord Jesus became an High Priest, the greater and more perfect tabernacle has taken the place of that "figure," "example" or "pattern." The ninth chapter of Daniel, which is the inspired commentary on the vision of the Sanctuary and 2300 days in the eighth chapter, shows how large a portion of the 2300 days belongs to the earthly Sanctuary. "Seventy weeks (490 days) are determined [literally cut off] upon thy people and upon thy holy city." Verse 24. This shows that the whole period of 2300 days does not belong to Jerusalem and the Jews. It is an important fact, that this period of 70 weeks terminates at the time where the New Testament places the transfer from the earthly Sanctuary to the real one in heaven. And it is to be noticed that Gabriel introduces the heavenly Sanctuary to the view of Daniel. For the last event in the 70 weeks, as given by him, is the anointing of the "most holy," literally, as rendered by Clark and other eminent scholars, the "Holy of holies." This can refer to nothing else than the true tabernacle in which our High Priest was to minister for us. The act of anointing the earthly tabernacle, preceded the ministration of the Levitical priests; and the anointing of the heavenly Sanctuary precedes our Lord's ministration therein.

These facts, I think, are conclusive proof that the heavenly Sanctuary is the subject of that part of Daniel's vision that relates to the gospel dispensation. The cleansing of the earthly Sanctuary is distinctly stated in Lev. xvi. This was a part of the shadow of good things to come; of which good things, Christ is a minister in the greater and more perfect tabernacle. And the fact that the heavenly Sanctuary is to be cleansed for the same reason that the earthly was cleansed, is plainly stated in Heb. ix, 22-24.

3. The fulfillment of the prophetic periods in the symbolic prophecy, has ever been a day for a year. But the fulfillment of the type has never been thus marked. We understand that the Saviour ministered in the first apartment until the end of the 2300 days, and that the termination of that period marked the commencement of his ministration in the holiest of all. If the ministration of the Saviour in the first apartment had been on the principle of a day in the type answering to a year in the antitype, then it would have occupied only 364 years instead of more than 1800. We know of no means of marking the precise length of Christ's ministration in the most holy place; but regard it as the brief period which will terminate human probation, and end in the pouring out of God's wrath in the seven last plagues.

The Seventy Weeks.

The following is from a leaf entitled, Word of Warning, No. 1. It was published in 1843 by J. V. Himes.

"We claim that the ninth of Daniel is an appendix to the eighth, and that the seventy weeks and the 2300 days or years commence together. Our opponents deny this.

Again the writer says in No. 2:—

"THE SEVENTY WEEKS. This was given to Daniel, as recorded in Dan. ix, as an explanation of the 2300 days, from which they were cut off. Sixty-nine of these weeks, 7 multiplied by 69, equal to 483 years, were to reach to the Messiah, and to begin with the going forth of the decree to rebuild Jerusalem. This decree, according to Ezra vii, was given in the 7th year of Artaxerxes Longimanus, a. c. 457."

If the beginning of the 2300 days is not given in Dan. ix, is it any where given? If not given at all, then of what profit are the 2300 days? If they reach to the second coming of Christ, and no starting point given in the Bible to reckon them from, shall we not have to wait till Christ comes before we can understand them?—then count back 2300 years to find their beginning?!!

"All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable;" and was given for our profit before (not after) Christ comes. And in order for the prophecy of the 2300 days to profit, their beginning must be revealed.

The arguments in favor of the 70 weeks being the first 490 years of the 2300, and that they commenced a. c. 457, are unanswerable. This brings the end of the 2300 prophetic days in 1844. Christ did not then come as expected; but this does not prove that the days did not there end. The cleansing of the Sanctuary is the event to occur at the end of the days. This event is not the Second Advent, but an event preceding it.

THE 2300 DAYS.

THE position of the Advent Herald, relative to the 2300 days of Dan. viii, is certainly very unpleasant. The conductors of that paper have formerly maintained the connection between the 70 weeks and 2300 days, and those who disconnected the two periods have been considered by them, as departing from the "original Advent faith." The Herald has also ably and fully defended a. c. 457 as the period from which to date the 70 weeks. If both of these positions maintained by the Herald are correct, then the 2300 days terminated in 1844, as taught by the Review. But the Herald objects to this view of the subject, on the ground that the event placed at the end of the 2300 days did not occur. What is that event? Answer: "Then shall the Sanctuary be cleansed." Now is there scripture proof that the cleansing of the Sanctuary is the coming of Christ and the burning of the world? We can find none. If others can, we invite them to present it, and if they wish, we will publish it in the Review.

BRO J. N. ANDREWS, in his work on the Sanctuary and 2300 days, has given the scriptural view of the cleansing of the Sanctuary, which is in perfect harmony with the "original Advent faith." If the Herald would take this view of the subject, it would not be driven to the necessity of denying the connection between the 70 weeks and 2300 days. It would not now be tearing down what it once labored to build up. But while it rejects the harmonious view of this important question, it is poorly prepared to meet existing errors on definite time.

We give the following from the Herald of Nov. 20th, which gives some idea of the unpleasant position of the Herald, also the position of Edwin Burnham, one of the most influential Herald men.

Reply to "Remarks on the 2300 Years."

[THERE being in the following, an expression of dissatisfaction at our remarks respecting a former article, we shall refrain from any comments on it.—When there is manifested by any an unwillingness to the correction of historical, chronological or other inaccuracies, or to be met by arguments as terse and pointed as their own, we forbear any effort to enlighten them, however wide from the mark they may wander.—Ed.]

BRO. BLISS:—1. You say "we expected to make no comments" on the article I wrote on the 2300 days. Well, as I made no one responsible for it but myself, I did not expect it to be treated as it was.

2. You say "we learn that it is preached in connection with Berick's time." No, not exactly; Berick preaches Christ will come in 1854; I preach that I believe he will come before the summer of 1856.

3. You tell us that the time between the vision of the eighth and ninth chapters of Daniel is 16 years. I have never yet found any vision, or "appearances," in the ninth chapter of Daniel, unless you make Gabriel himself a vision. And certainly he needed not to be explained! What if the visit in the ninth chapter was 16 years after that in the eighth? it matters not if it was 40 years. In the eighth chapter Gabriel explains the events of the vision, but where in the eighth chapter, or any where else, except in the ninth, is there any date given for the 2300 days? And what was the use of giving the length of the vision without giving any date? After Gabriel had given the explanation of the events of the vision in the eighth chapter, he told Daniel to "shut thou up the vision." I conclude Daniel did as he was told to. Thus he was left 16 years with only an understanding of the events of the vision, without an understanding of the date of it; in this time, among other things, he read "books." He, at length, set himself to fast and pray: while thus engaged Gabriel came to him about the time of the evening oblation. What did he say? Ans. "I am now come to give thee skill and understanding."

Understanding about what? Ans. THE VISION.—What vision? Ans. The one in which he had seen him at the beginning 16 years before. Why should we rend apart what God hath joined together? Some of our brethren in New York think you are "throwing away" "Father Miller's key"!!

4. You say Daniel, when he said none understood it, meant none but himself. He does not say none but himself. Why infer? If he did understand all of it why did Gabriel come for his words to make him understand the vision? He had never at this time had but two visions, that the Bible speaks of. Well, it could not have been the first one, recorded in the seventh chapter, because that he did understand (see Dan. vii, 10), so then it must have been the date of the eighth chapter vision.

5. You say that a man cannot be astonished at what he does not understand. A little to fast! Were not Belshazzar's lords astonished at the writing on the wall before they understood it? (See Dan. v.)

6. You labor to separate the seventy weeks from the 2300 days; how many more "strong points" of "the original Advent faith" are yet to be overturned? You did not object, a few days since, at the office, that they were connected, but said you thought they were 2400 years. Do you still think we have yet got to wait 100 years longer?

THE REVIEW AND HERALD.

"Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth."

ROCHESTER, THIRD-DAY, APR. 4, 1854

THE SEVENTY WEEKS.

A good brother in New Hampshire says that he cannot find the "commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem," in Ezra vii. s. c. 457, and requests others to point it out to him, if they can find it there.

This is an important question to be settled, and one which we think can be satisfactorily established. And, not only for the benefit of our New Hampshire brother, but, to establish the faith of all our readers, we will point out the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem, from Ezra vii, in the seventh year of king Artaxerxes' reign, s. c. 457.

Said the angel to Daniel, "Know therefore and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem, &c. Now turn and read the copy of the decree of Artaxerxes unto Ezra the priest," found in Ezra vii, 12-20.

Any impartial reader must see that Jerusalem is restored when the people go back there, re-establish their city polity, and re-commence the regular offering of their sacrifices, and the observance of their daily worship. For this restoration of Jerusalem, the decree made provision when it said:—"And thou Ezra, after the wisdom of thy God, that is in thine hand, set magistrates and judges, which may judge all the people that are beyond the river, all such as know the laws of thy God; and teach ye them that know them not. And whosoever will not do the law of thy God, and the law of the king, let judgment be executed speedily upon him, whether it be unto death, or to banishment, or to confiscation of goods, or to imprisonment." Verses 25, 26. Here is the restoration of Jerusalem by the establishment of judges, and law.

But did the decree to Ezra also authorize the rebuilding of Jerusalem? It most certainly did. Mark well the unlimited power given to Ezra by this decree: He was empowered, as he understood in his prayer, to proceed at any time with its construction. Here is a quotation from Ezra's prayer, which he offered s. c. 457:—

"For we were bond-men; yet our God hath not forsaken us in our bondage, but hath extended mercy unto us in the sight of the kings of Persia, to give us a reviving, to set up the house of our God, and to repair the desolations thereof. AND TO GIVE US A WALL in Judah and Jerusalem." Ezra ix, 9.

The Angel did not say that "the street shall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times," as soon as the decree should be given authorizing their construction. All that is affirmed is, that there should be troublous times when they were built.

Now if Ezra understood that the king's decree authorized him to build the wall, and he most certainly did so understand it, as seen in his prayer, then we should understand it thus also, and the point is clearly and satisfactorily settled forever.

Was any decree given to Nehemiah, thirteen years later, in the twentieth year of Artaxerxes?

We can find none, Nehemiah says, [chap. ii, 6,] "It pleased the king to send me," &c. There is no evidence that such permission was anything but verbal. When he had obtained the king's consent, he next requested letters from him to "the governors beyond the river," for means of conveyance to Jerusalem, and one to Asaph, the keeper of the king's forest, for timber. These "letters" were not addressed to Nehemiah, as a decree would have been, and as the decree was to Ezra; but they were directed to the king's subordinates, and Nehemiah was only the bearer of them.

These letters are nowhere called decrees. But if they were, and if the seventy weeks date from the time that Nehemiah went up to Jerusalem with them in the twentieth year of the reign of Artaxerxes, then the Angel should have said to the prophet Daniel, "Know therefore and understand, that from the going forth of the commandments," &c., or the decrees; for there was a plurality of them. These letters were considered of so little importance that the inspired penman has given us no copy of them.

Not so with the decree to Ezra. That is expressly called a decree and was addressed to Ezra, instead of the king's subordinates, and a full copy of it was entered upon the page of inspiration, and it has come down to the present time. It begins thus:—

"Artaxerxes, king of kings, unto Ezra the priest. . . I make a decree," &c.

No one will attempt to show that any such decree was addressed to Nehemiah, in the permission given to him. The decree of such unlimited power having been given to Ezra, covering the whole ground of restoring and building Jerusalem, all that Nehemiah needed was simply permission from the king to go up and complete what Ezra had begun, and letters to the king's subordinates for such assistance as he should need. If any one still thinks there was a decree "to restore and to build Jerusalem," given to Nehemiah thirteen years after Ezra went up, let him produce it.

Let this subject be carefully examined, brethren, that you may be able to defend the truth in regard to it. And if any of our readers still remain in doubt relative to the date of the commencement of the seventy weeks, let them state their objections immediately, and we will answer them.

But there are distinct bounds at each end of this important prophetic period. Dating its commencement s. c. 457, in the seventh year of Artaxerxes, there is a beautiful harmony with the prophecy of the seventy weeks, and the events which mark their termination.

"Know therefore and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem, unto the Messiah the Prince shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks." Sixty-nine of the seventy weeks reached to the Messiah. Now at what point do we find the Messiah?

Messiah is the "Anointed, the Christ, the Saviour of the world, the Prince of peace." "John saith Jesus coming unto him, and saith, Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." Andrew said, "We have found the Messiah." Nathaniel said unto Christ "Rabbi, thou art the Son of God: thou art the King of Israel." The woman at Jacob's well said, "I know that Messiah cometh, which is called Christ; when he is come he will tell us all things. Jesus saith unto her, I that speak unto thee can he." And many of the Samaritans said, we "know that this is indeed the Christ, the Saviour of the world." "Peter said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. Jesus said, Flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." At Christ's baptism the Holy Ghost descended in a bodily shape like a dove upon him; and a voice came from heaven, and testified, saying, "Thou art my Beloved Son; in thee I am well pleased." All this and much more might be added to this clear testimony, that the Messiah was manifested at the commencement of his ministry. This settles the termination of the 69 weeks. After Jesus was baptized, he preached, saying, "The time is fulfilled." (Accomplished—Campbell.) Mark i, 15. What time? No time can be found to be fulfilled, but the 69 weeks, which are accomplished at "the Messiah the Prince," when he was baptized. This, according to Usher, was A. D. 26. Here is fixed the termination of the 69 weeks.

"And after three score and two weeks (from the end of 7 weeks, allowed to build Jerusalem) shall Messiah be cut off, but not for himself." Dan. ix, 26. How long after 69 weeks, or Christ's baptism, before Messiah was cut off, or crucified? This may easily be determined, by ascertaining the length of Christ's ministry, from his baptism to his cross where he was cut off. This may be determined by the number of yearly passovers he attended. We find that but four passovers occurred during his ministry, which he attended; [John ii, 13; v, 1; vi, 4; xiii, 1;] and at the fourth he was crucified. These four passovers could not cover more than three and a half years. These three and a half years added to Usher's chronology of Christ's baptism, A. D. 26-7, could not extend beyond A. D. 31; where must stand the cross. Clear it is, that as at his baptism the 69 weeks ended, so at his cross, the end of the three and a half years more, must be the midst of the week where Christ caused the sacrifice and oblation to cease by becoming our passover, sacrificed for us. Christ said, "Sacrifice and offering and burnt-offerings and offering for sin thou wouldest not, neither hadst pleasure therein; which are offered by the law; then said he, Lo, I come to do thy will, O God. He taketh away the first that he may establish the second." "By the which will we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all." Heb. x, 8-10.

The cross plainly stands according to the Scriptures, in the midst [middle] of the one week, the seventieth, during which he was to confirm the covenant with many. Dan. ix, 27. This fact shows that the apostles had but half of one week, three and a half years, left them in which to confirm the covenant. Now as the cross stood in the Spring, A. D. 31, the middle of the seventieth week, three and a half years more, the confirming, by them that heard him, [Heb. ii, 3,] must bring us to the Autumn of A. D. 34, where ended the seventy weeks, or 490 years of the 2300, [Dan. viii, 14,] which leaves 1810 years to transpire after the Fall of A. D. 34, which ended A. D. 1844.

THE REVIEW AND HERALD.

"Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth."

ROCHESTER, THIRD-DAY, APR. 18, 1884.

The Twenty-three Hundred Days.

The 2300 days, the seventy weeks forming the first 490 of those days, was the main pillar of the Advent faith. Here was the great point of difference between Wm. Miller and his opponents. But the Advent Herald which professes to be the only true defender of the doctrines held by Wm. Miller, denies the connexion of the two periods. In doing this, instead of defending the views of Wm. Miller, it tears down the main pillar of his prophetic expositions. Wm. Miller and thousands of others rejoiced that the visions of Daniel were unscaled. They held forth to the world that the seventy weeks was the key that unlocked the vision. This key is now virtually thrown away by the Herald, professedly the defender of Wm. Miller's sentiments!!

And why is the key thrown away? Answer:—Because if the 70 weeks be a part of the 2300 days, then the whole period ended in 1844. And as Christ did not then come, and cleanse the earth by fire, (which was supposed would be the cleansing of the Sanctuary, but for which there is not a particle of evidence,) it is concluded that the 2300 days have not yet ended, therefore, could not commence with the 70 weeks, s. c. 457.

But with the scriptural view of the Sanctuary, there is no necessity of throwing away the key. That the 70 weeks are the first 490 of the 2300 prophetic days is one of the plainest truths of revelation; and that the days have ended is evident. The book of Hobbrows contains an inspired commentary on the law of types, and teaches in the plainest terms what God's Sanctuary is, and the nature of its cleansing. Christ, our High Priest, hath entered the Most Holy to complete the great work of atonement and cleanse the Sanctuary.

Wm. Miller gave the best light he then had on the Sanctuary and its cleansing. In one of his discourses on this subject he says:—"Sanctuary, in the scriptures, generally means the place where God is worshiped and adored, and where he or his glory dwells, when it has reference to God or holy things; but when it has reference to man, it means his house, or dwelling place, city, or defence." He then states, that Jesus Christ, Heaven, Judah, the Temple at Jerusalem, Holy of Holies, the earth and the saints are called a Sanctuary, and adds:—

"The question now arises, Which of these Sanctuaries does Daniel mean, or the saint who talked with Daniel, when he said, Then shall the Sanctuary be cleansed? I answer, Not the first, Christ, for he is not impure. Not the second, Heaven, for that is not unclean. Not the third, in Judah, for literal Judah is cut off, and is no more a people. . . . Not the fourth, the Temple, for that is destroyed. . . . Neither the Holy of Holies in the Temple at Jerusalem, for that too was destroyed with the temple. . . . Then there are but two things more, which may be called the Sanctuary, which may, or ever will need cleansing; and those are the earth and the church."

It really seems strange that no thorough a Bible student as Wm. Miller should not comprehend the following testimony which plainly shows that a Sanctuary to be purified or cleansed is in HEAVEN. "And almost all things are by the law purged with blood; and without shedding of blood is no remission. It was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these." Heb. ix, 22, 23.

This he overlooked, and not seeing that the Sanctuary of which Christ is a minister is to be purified with blood, he was driven to the conclusion that the earth and church is the Sanctuary. All will see at once the impropriety of calling the church the Sanctuary of Dan. viii, for the church is there represented by the "host." The Sanctuary is one thing, and the host another. There are three texts of scripture where it is claimed that the word Sanctuary is applied to the earth; these we have repeatedly shown do not apply to the earth, or any part of it.

Now if the 70 weeks are the first 490 of the 2300 prophetic days, and if they commenced s. c. 457, then the days have ended, and therefore, Wm. Miller did not see all the light on the Sanctuary question. It is well known that he held to the opinion that the two periods were connected up to the time of his death, Dec. 23d, 1849. In the Memoirs of Wm. Miller by Sylvester Bliss, published in 1853, by J. V. Himes, Boston, the evidence of the connexion of the two periods is given as one of the strong points of Wm. Miller's faith, and that evidence is conclusive. Now would it not be a much wiser course for the professed defenders of Wm. Miller's views, to correct their error in regard to the Sanctuary, to give up the view that it is the earth or a part of it, for which they cannot produce one plain text, rather than to discontinue the two periods, and tear down the main pillar of his faith?

We have no idea that Wm. Miller had all the light on every point. The path of the just was to abide more and more till the perfect day should come. He shed a flood of light on the prophecies; but the subject of the Sanctuary was to be opened to the waiting flock, in the period of the third message. Rev. xiv, 9-12. We closely adhere to the fundamental doctrines taught by Wm. Miller, because we believe them to be sound; yet we are willing that the march of Time, and the increase of light should convict all the errors in that theory. And we do protest against this profession of standing on the original Advent faith, and in defense of the distinctive views of Wm. Miller, while, at the same time, pulling down one after another of the pillars on which Wm. Miller's faith rested.

EXPOSITION OF DANIEL VII:
Of the Vision of the Four Beasts.

In hastily preparing the articles on Daniel ii and vii, we have followed the excellent arrangement of Geo. Storm, in his work published in 1843, and, in regard to the four kingdoms, we have more or less copied his language.

In communicating instruction to the children of men, God is pleased to give "line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little, and there a little." The Saviour saith, [John xvi, 12,] "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now." Revelation has not only been progressive, but the same truths have been repeated again and again, under different figures, emblems, and forms of speech. As a kind parent enforces important truths upon the minds of his offspring, illustrating and repeating, to make the deeper impression, so our Heavenly Father labors to impress our minds with truths connected with, and having a bearing on, our eternal destiny, and necessary to establish the faith of his people, and inspire in them confidence in his Word. He has given them way-marks to determine the truth of his Word, and to mark the period of the world in which they are living.

To illustrate: Suppose you were traveling a road with which you were unacquainted. You inquire of a stranger—he tells you that road leads to a glorious city, filled with every good thing, governed by the most lovely, mild and benevolent Prince that the world ever saw; that in that city there was neither sickness, sorrow, pain nor death. He then proceeds to tell you what you may expect to pass on the road, by which you may know he has told you the truth, and which will mark the progress you have made. First, then, he tells you, after leaving him, and traveling awhile, you will come to a monument that can be seen at a great distance; on the top of it you will see "a lion" having "eagle's wings." At a distance beyond that, you will come to another monument, having on it "a bear" with "three ribs in his mouth;" passing on still, you will at length arrive at a third monument, on the top of which you will behold a "leopard" having "four wings of a fowl" and "four heads." After that, you will come to a fourth, on which is a beast "dreadful and terrible," with "great iron teeth" and "ten horns." And lastly, you will come to another place, where you will see the same beast, with this difference; three of its first horns have been plucked up, and in the place of them has come up a peculiar horn, having "eyes like the eyes of man, and a mouth." The next thing you will look for, after passing the last-mentioned sign, is the city of which I have told you.

With these directions you commence your journey. What do you look for first? The lion. At length you see it. That inspires in you some faith in the person's knowledge and truth who had directed you. Having passed that sign, the next thing you expect to see, as marked in the directions, is the bear. At length you come in sight of that. There, say you, is the second sign he gave me. He must have been perfectly acquainted with this road, and has told me the truth. Your faith increases as you travel on. What next do you look for? Not the city, certainly. No, you look for the leopard! Well, by and by you behold that, in the distance. There it is, you cry; now I know he has told me the truth, and it will come out just as he said. Is the next thing you look for the city? No, you look for that terrible beast with ten horns. You pass that, and say as you pass, how exactly the man who directed me described everything. Now your faith is so confirmed that you almost see the city; but, say you, there is one more sign to pass; viz, the horn with eyes, then the city comes next. Now hope is high, and your anxious eyes gaze with intense interest for the last sign. That comes in view, and you exclaim in rapture, There it is! All doubt is now removed; you look for no more signs; your longing eyes are fixed to gaze on the glorious city next, and probably no man now, however wise he might profess himself, could make you discredit what your director has told you. The city—the city, is fixed in your eye, and onward you go, hastening to your rest.

Now, if we stud, on examination, that all the events or signs that God has given us, which were to precede the judgment day and the setting up of his everlasting kingdom, have actually transpired, or come to view, what are we to look for next? Most clearly, the judgment of the great day! Let us, then, examine the chapter before us.

Verses 1-3. "In the first year of Belshazzar, king of Babylon, Daniel had a dream, and visions of his head upon his bed: then he wrote the dream, and told the sum of the matter. Daniel spake and said, I saw in my vision by night, and behold the four winds [denoting commotions] of the heaven strove upon the great sea, [waters, denoting people, see Rev. xvii, 15,] and four great beasts came up from the sea, diverse one from another."

These four beasts are explained by the angel to be four kings. Verse 17. In verse 23, they are said to be four kingdoms, which shows that the word king, in these visions, signifies kingdom.

Verses 4. "The first was like a lion, and had eagle's wings: I beheld till the wings thereof were plucked, and it was lifted up from the earth, and made stand upon the feet as a man, and a man's heart was given it."

Babylon, as described in this vision, is here fitly represented by a lion, the king of beasts, denoting the glory of that kingdom, and corresponds with the head of gold in Chap. ii. The eagle's wings represent the rapidity of its conquests, and the soaring pride of its monarchs. "For lo, I raise up the Chaldeans, . . . [Babylon,] they shall fly as the eagle that heateth to eat." Hab. i, 8-9. The plucking of his wings may refer to the humiliation of the proud monarch of Babylon, [Chap. iv, 31-37,] or to the cowardice of Belshazzar, who, instead of driving away his foes like a lion, shut himself up in the city, feasting and drinking with his lords, till he was killed, and the kingdom given to the Medes and Persians.

Verses 5. "And behold, another beast, a second, like to a bear, and it raised up itself on one side, [representing two lines of kings, one much longer than the other,] and it had three ribs in the mouth of it, between the teeth of it; and they said thus unto it, Arise, devour much flesh."

We have already seen that the Medo-Persian kingdom succeeded Babylon. It is clearly the kingdom here described. It was noted for cruelty and thirst of blood. The ribs in its mouth may denote the union of Media, Persia and Chaldea. It subdued many and populous kingdoms. Ahasuerus, or Artaxerxes, reigned over one hundred and twenty-seven provinces. See Esther i, 1.

Verse 6. "After this I behold, and lo, another, like a leopard, which had upon the back of it four wings of a fowl; the beast had also four heads, and dominion was given to it."

There can be no dispute with respect to this being Grecia; four wings denoting the rapidity of its conquest under Alexander; the four heads, its division into four parts after Alexander died and his posterity were murdered.

Verse 7. "After this I saw in the night visions, and behold a fourth beast, dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly; and it had great iron teeth: it devoured and brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with the feet of it; and it was diverse from all the beasts that were before it; and it had ten horns."

Verse 8. "I considered the horns, and behold there came up among them another little horn, before whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots: and behold, in this horn were eyes like the eyes of man, and a mouth speaking great things."

These verses will properly claim our attention, when we come to consider the angel's explanation.

Verses 9, 10. "I beheld till the thrones were cast down, and the Ancient of days did sit, whose garment was white as snow, and the hair of his head like the pure wool; his throne was like the fiery flame, and his wheels as burning fire. A fiery stream issued and came forth from before him; thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him: the judgment was set, and the books were opened."

We have here a most vivid description of scenes connected with the judgment. If not, it cannot be found in the Scriptures of truth.

Verse 11. "I beheld then, because of the voice of the great words which the horn spake; I beheld; even till the beast was slain, and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flame."

Nothing is said of "the dominion" of this beast being "taken away," as is said of the others. The others lost their dominion after a time, but their subjects survived and were transferred to the succeeding governments, but the very body [subjects] of this fourth kingdom is destroyed, and given to the burning flame.

Verse 12. "As concerning the rest of the beasts, they had their dominion taken away: yet their lives were prolonged for a season and time."

Babylon, Media and Persia, and Grecia, successively lost the dominion, but the lives of the respective nations were prolonged, being merged in the succeeding governments.

Verses 13, 14. "I saw in the night visions, and behold one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed."

Thus we see the kingdom of God is not set up till the judgment; hence no room for a temporal millennium before the judgment, and before the kingdoms of this world are destroyed.

Verses 15-18. "I Daniel was grieved in my spirit in the midst of my body, and the visions of my soul troubled me. I came near unto one of them that stood by, and asked him the truth of all this. So he told me, and made me know the interpretation of the things. These great beasts, which are four, are four kings, which shall rise out of the earth. But the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom forever, even forever and ever.

Mark well the fate of the fourth beast. He is utterly destroyed. And the saints of the Most High take the kingdom, and possess it, not a thousand years only, but forever, even forever and ever.

Verses 19-25. "Then I would know the truth of the fourth beast, which was diverse from all the others, exceeding dreadful, whose teeth were of iron, and his nails of brass; which devoured, brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with his feet; and of the ten horns that were in his head, and of the other which came up, and before whom three fell; even of that horn that had eyes, and a mouth that spake very great things, whose look was more stout than his fellows. I beheld, and the same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them; until the Ancient of days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High; and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom. Thus he said, The fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon earth, which shall be diverse from all kingdoms, and shall devour the whole earth, and shall tread it down, and break it in pieces. And the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise; and another shall arise after them; and he shall be diverse from the first, and he shall subdue three kings. And he shall speak great words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws; and they shall be given into his hand until a time and times and the dividing of time."

1. The fourth beast, or fourth kingdom. There is but little dispute about what is here meant by the fourth kingdom. No kingdom that has ever existed on earth will answer to it, except the Roman kingdom. That has been truly diverse from all kingdoms, especially in its form of government, which was not less than seven—being, at different times, Republic, Consul, Tribune, Decemvirate, Dictatorial, Imperial, and Kingly. It was at length divided into the Eastern and Western empires; Rome proper being in the Western empire.

2. The ten horns. Between the years A. D. 336 and 403, it was divided into ten kingdoms as noticed in remarks on chapter ii; thus the "ten horns are ten kings" [kingdoms] that arose out of this empire.

3. The little horn. What is the character of the horn here spoken of? First, it speaks great words against the Most High; and, second, it makes war with, and wears out the saints. The same character is elsewhere described. See Rev. xiii, 6, 7. "And he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme his name and his tabernacle, and them that dwell in heaven. And it was given unto him to make war with the saints and to overcome them." Daniel says, "he prevailed against them." Now see 2 Thess. ii, 3, 4. "That day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition; who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, shewing himself that he is God." Daniel's "little horn," Paul's "man of sin," and John's blasphemous beast, are clearly identical.

It must be admitted that such a power has arisen, and that it is Papacy. The titles the Popes have assumed, of "Most Holy Lord," and their pretensions to pardon sin, even before its commission, if we had nothing else, sufficiently establish the blasphemous character of that power. Pope Innocent III, writes—"He [Christ] hath not one man over the world, him whom he hath appointed his vicar on earth; and as to Christ in heaven every knee in heaven, in earth, and under the earth; so shall obedience and service be paid to his vicar by all, that there may be one fold and one shepherd." Again, Pope Gregory VII, says, "The Roman Pontiff alone is by right universal. In him alone is the right of making laws. Let all kings kiss the feet of the Pope. His name alone shall be heard in the churches. It is the only name in the world. It is his right to depose kings. His word is not to be repented by any one. It is to be repeated by himself alone. He is to be judged by none. The church of Rome has never erred; and the Scriptures testify it never shall err." Surely here is a power diverse from all others, and proud and blasphemous enough to answer the character of the little horn.

It is said of this horn that he shall "think to change times and laws." It is evident that the laws here spoken of are the laws of the Most High; for his work is to oppose God. The changing of human laws would not be here noted as a distinguishing characteristic of the man of sin. No: his distinguishing acts are against God and his saints. In fulfillment of this part of the prophecy, the Roman apostasy has removed the second commandment from the Decalogue, has changed the Sabbath of the fourth, from the seventh to the first day of the week, and has divided the tenth, to make up the number of ten commandments. See Catholic Catechism.

4. The time when the little horn, or Papacy, arose. It did not arise before the ten horns; hence, it did not arise prior to 403, when the tenth horn came up. Three of the first horns must be plucked up before it in its rise. It came up among the ten horns, and three of those horns fell before it. It must have been established at the very point where the third horn fell.

In the year of our Lord 403, the Herali in Rome and Italy were conquered by the Ostrogoths. In 534, the Vandals, who were under Arian influence, were conquered by the Greeks, for the purpose of establishing the supremacy of the Catholics. The Ostrogoths, who held possession of Rome, were under an Arian monarch, who was an enemy to the supremacy of the Bishop of Rome; hence, before the decree of Justinian, (a Greek emperor at Constantinople,) could be carried into effect, by which he had constituted the Bishop of Rome head of all the churches, the Ostrogoths must be plucked up. This conquest was effected by Justinian's army in the month of March, 536; at which time, the Ostrogoths, who had retired without the city, and besieged it in their turn, raised the siege and retired, leaving the Greeks in possession of the city; thus the third horn was plucked before Papacy, and for the express purpose too of establishing that power. [See Gibbon's Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire.]

The facts answer well to the prophecy. Here is the letter of Justinian to the Bishop of Rome, A. D. 533:—

"Justinian, pious, fortunate, renowned, triumphant, emperor consul, &c., to John, the Most Holy Archbishop of our city of Rome, and Patriarch.

"Rendering honor to the apostolic see, and to your holiness, (as always was and is our desire,) and, as it becomes us, honoring your blessedness as a father, we have laid without delay before the notice of your holiness all things pertaining to the state of the church. Since it has always been our earnest study to preserve the unity of your holy see, and the state of the holy churches of God, which has hitherto obtained, and will remain, without any interfering opposition; therefore we hasten to submit, and to submit to your holiness, all the priests of the whole East. As to the matters which are presently agitated, although clear and unclouded, and, according to the doctrine of your apostolic see, held unwaveringly resolved and decided by all priests, we have yet deemed it necessary to lay them before your holiness. Nor do we suffer anything which belongs to the state of the church, however manifest and undoubted, that is agitated, to pass without the knowledge of your holiness, who are the head of all the holy churches. For in all things (as had been said or resolved) we are prompt to increase the honor and authority of your see."

"The authenticity of the title," says Mr. Croley, "receives unanswerable proof from the edicts of the 'Novellæ' of the Justinian code. The preamble of the 9th, states, 'that as the elder Rome was the founder of the laws; so was it not to be questioned, that in her was the supremacy of the pontificate.' The 13th, on the Ecclesiastical Titles and privileges, chapter ii, states: 'We therefore decree that the most holy Pope of the elder Rome is the first of all the priesthood, and that the most blessed archbishop of Constantinople, the new Rome, shall hold the second rank, after the holy apostolic chair of the elder Rome.'—Croley, pp. 114, 115.

Imperial Rome fell about A. D. 475, and was in the hands of the barbarians. Thence it continued till the conquest of Rome by Belisarius, Justinian's general, 530 to 538, when the Ostrogoths left it in possession of the Greek emperor, March, 538. Thus the way was open for the dragon to give the beast his power, and his seat, and great authority. Rev. xiii, 2.

5. The length of time this power was to continue. Daniel says, "a time, times, and the dividing of time." John says, [Rev. xiii, 5,] "Power was given unto him to continue forty and two months." He was to make war upon the saints—the church; and in Rev. xii, 6, we are told, the woman, the church, fled into the wilderness 1260 days; and at the 14th verse, that it was for "a time, and times, and half a time." Here then we have the period of the continuance of this power given us in three forms of expression, which settles the point that the time, times, and dividing of time is 42 months, or 1260 prophetic days or years.

6. Did the continuance of the Papal Dominion, as a horn of the beast, cease at the end of that period? From 538, 1260 years would extend to 1798. Did any thing transpire that year to justify the belief that the Dominion of Papacy was taken away that year? It is a historical fact, that, on Feb. 10th, 1798, Berthier, a French general, entered the city of Rome and took it. On the 16th of the same month the Pope was taken prisoner and shut up in the Vatican. The Papal governments, which had continued from the time of Justinian, was abolished, and a republican form of government given to Rome. The Pope was carried captive to France, where he died in 1799. Thus, he that led others into captivity, went into captivity; and he who killed with the sword, those he was pleased to call heretics, was himself killed (subdued) with the sword; i. e., his dominion was taken away by war. See Rev. xiii, 10. Verse 26. "But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion, to consume and destroy it unto the end." See 3 Thes. ii, 8. "Whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming."

That the Pope was restored, or a new one chosen, is admitted. But that he has power to depose kings and put to death the saints now, is denied. When he was a horn on the beast, he deplored kings at pleasure, for centuries, and silenced heretics by the flame, the rack, prison, and the sword. Can he do it now? No. Nor has he been able to do it since 1798. Papacy is compelled to tolerate Protestantism. Hear the Pope himself on that subject. Here is his letter, dated Sept., 1840, at Rome.

"ENCYCLICAL LETTER OF OUR MOST HOLY FATHER GREGORY XVI., by Divine Providence Pope, to all Patriarchs, Primates, Archbishops, and Bishops."

GREGORY XVI. PONT.

"Venerable Brethren,—Health and the apostolic benediction."

"You well know, Venerable Brethren, how great are the calamities with which the Catholic Church is beset on all sides in this most sorrowful age, and how pitifully she is afflicted. You know by what a deluge of errors of every kind, and with what unbridled audacity of the enormous, our Holy Religion is attacked, and how cunningly and by what frauds, heretics and infidels are endeavoring to pervert the hearts and minds of the faithful. In a word, you know there is almost no kind of effort or machination which is not employed to overthrow, from its deepest foundations, if it were possible, the immovable edifice of the Holy City."

"Indeed, are we not (Oh, how shameful!) compelled to see the most crafty enemies of the truth, ranging far and wide with impunity; not only attacking religion with ridicule, the church with contumely, and Catholics with insults and slander, but even entering into cities and towns, establishing schools of error and impiety, publishing in print the poison of their doctrines, skillfully concealed under the deceitful veil of the natural sciences and new discoveries, and even penetrating into the cottages of the poor, travelling through rural districts, and insinuating themselves into familiar acquaintance with the lowest of the people and with the farmers! Thus they leave no means unattempted, whether by corrupt Bibles in the language of the people, or pestiferous newspapers and other little publications, or cavilling conversation, or pretended charity, or, finally, by the gift of money, to allure ignorant people, and especially youth, into their nets, and induce them to desert the Catholic faith."

"We refer to facts, Venerable Brethren, which not only are known to you, but of which you are witnesses; even you, who, though you mourn, and, as your pastoral duty requires, are by no means silent, are yet compelled to tolerate in your dioceses these infamous propagators of heresy and infidelity; these shameless preachers, who, while they walk in sheep's clothing, but inwardly are ravenous wolves, cease not to lay in wait for the flock and tear it in pieces. Why should we say more? There is now scarcely a barbarous region in the universal world, to which the well known Central Boards of the heretics and unbelievers have not, regardless of expense, sent out their explorers and emissaries, who either insidiously, or openly and in concert, making war upon the Catholic religion, its pastors and its ministers, tear the faithful out of the bosom of the church, and intercept her approach to the infidels."

"Hence it is easy to conceive the state of anguish into which our soul is plunged day and night, as we, being charged with the superintendence of the whole fold of Jesus Christ, and the care of all the churches, must give account for his sheep to the Divine Prince of Pastors. And we have thought fit, Venerable Brethren, to recall to your minds by our present letter the causes of those troubles which are common to us and you, that you may more attentively consider how important it is to the church, that all holy priests should endeavor, with redoubled zeal, and with united labors, and with every kind of efforts, to repel the attacks of the raging foes of religion, to turn back their weapons, and to fire and fortify the subtle blandishments which they often use. This, as you know, we have been careful to do at every opportunity; nor shall we cease to do it; as we also are not ignorant that you have always done it hitherto, and confidently trust that you will do hereafter with still more earnest zeal."

"Given at Rome, at St. Mary the Greater, on the 18th of the Kalends of September, of the year 1840, the tenth of our pontificate. GREGORY XVI. PONT."

Now let us see whereabouts we are in the prophetic chain. Have we passed the Lion—Babylon? Yes. Have we gone by the Bear with three ribs in his mouth? Yes. Has the sign of the Leopard with four wings of a fowl and four heads been passed? It has. The dreadful and terrible beast, with ten horns,—has he been seen? Yes. Have we got past the little horn having eyes like the eyes of a man? That is among the things numbered with the past. What comes next? The Judgment, and God's everlasting kingdom.

DANIEL CHAPTERS VIII AND IX.

In remarking on these chapters, the ram, goat, little horn, 2300 days and 70 weeks will be briefly noticed.

1. THE RAM. Verses 3, 3. "Then I lifted up mine eyes, and saw, and behold, there stood before the river, a ram which had two horns; and the two horns were high; but one was higher than the other, and the higher came up last. I saw the ram pushing westward, and northward, and southward; so that no beasts might stand before him, neither was there any that could deliver out of his hand; but he did according to his will, and became great."

This symbol is explained by the angel in verse 20. "The ram which thou sawest, having two horns are the kings [kingdoms] of Media and Persia." It represents the same as the breast and arms of silver of Chap. ii, and the bear of Chap. vii. This vision does not begin with the empire of Babylon, as do those of the second and seventh chapters, but it commences with Media and Persia, at the height of its power.

2. THE GOAT. Verses 5-8. "And as I was considering, behold an he goat came from the west on the face of the whole earth, and touched not the ground; and the goat had a notable horn between his eyes. And he came to the ram that had two horns, which I had seen standing before the river, and ran unto him in the fury of his power. And I saw him come close unto the ram, and he was moved with choler against him, and smote the ram, and brake his two horns; and there was no power in the ram to stand before him, but he cast him down to the ground, and stamped upon him; and there was none that could deliver the ram out of his hand. Therefore, the he goat waxed very great; and when he was strong, the great horn was broken; and for it, came up four notable ones toward the four winds of heaven."

The angel explains this symbol in verses 21, 22. "And the rough goat is the king of Grecia: and the great horn that is between his eyes is the first king. Now that being broken, whereas four stood up for it, four kingdoms shall stand up out of the nation, but not in his power." The goat, then, represents Grecia, the same as the brass of the image of chapter ii, and the leopard of chapter vii. Greece succeeded Persia in the dominion of the world, B. C. 331. The great horn is here explained to be the first king. The four horns that arose when this horn was broken, denote the four kingdoms into which the empire of Alexander was divided after his death. The same is represented by the four heads and four wings of the leopard of Dan. vii. See Chap. xi, 3, 4.

3. THE LITTLE HORN. Verses 9-12. "And out of one of them came forth a little horn, which waxed exceeding great, toward the south, and toward the east, and toward the pleasant land. And it waxed great, even to the host of heaven; and it cast down some of the host and of the stars to the ground, and stamped upon them. Yea, he magnified himself even to the Prince of the host, and by him the daily sacrifice was taken away, and the place of his sanctuary was cast down. And an host was given him against the daily sacrifice by reason of transgression, and it cast down the truth to the ground; and it practised, and prospered."

This symbol is explained by the angel in verses 23-25. "And in the latter time of their kingdom, when the transgressors are come to the full, a king of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences, shall stand up. And his power shall be mighty, but not by his own power: and he shall destroy wonderfully, and shall prosper, and practice, and shall destroy the mighty and the holy people. And through his policy also he shall cause craft to prosper in his hand; and he shall magnify himself in his heart, and by peace shall destroy many: he shall also stand up against the Prince of princes; but he shall be broken without hand."

To avoid the application of this prophecy to the Roman Power, Pagan and Papal, Papiasts have shifted it from Rome to Antiochus Epiphanes, a Syrian king who could not resist the mandates of Rome. See notes of the Douay [Roman] Bible on Dan. vii; viii; xi. This application is made by the Papiasts, to save their church from any share in the fulfillment of the prophecy; and in this, they have been followed by the mass of opposers to the Advent faith. The following facts show that

THE LITTLE HORN WAS NOT ANTIOCHUS.

1st. The four kingdoms into which the dominion of Alexander was divided, are symbolized by the four horns of the goat. Now this Antiochus was but one of the twenty-five kings that constituted the Syrian horn. How, then, could he, at the same time, be another remarkable horn?

2d. The ram, according to this vision, became great; but the little horn became exceeding great. How absurd and ludicrous is the following application of this comparison:

Great.	Very Great.	Exceeding Great.
Persia.	ORSCIA.	ANTIOCHUS.
How easy and natural is the following:
Great.	Very Great.	Exceeding Great.
Persia.	ORSCIA.	ROME.

3d. The Medo-Persian empire is simply called great. Verse 4. The Bible informs us that it extended "from India even unto Ethiopia, over an hundred seven and twenty provinces." Esther i, 1. This was succeeded by the Grecian power, which is called VERY GREAT. Verse 8. Then comes the power in question which is called EXCEEDING GREAT. Verse 9. Was Antiochus exceeding great when compared with Alexander, the conqueror of the world? Let an item from the Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge answer:

"Finding his resources exhausted, he resolved to go into Persia, to levy tributes and collect large sums which he had agreed to pay to the Romans."

Surely we need not question which was exceeding great, the Roman power which exacted the tribute, or Antiochus who was compelled to pay it.

4th. The power in question was "little" at first, but it waxed or grew "exceeding great toward the south, and toward the east, and toward the pleasant land." What can this describe but the conquering marches of a mighty power? Rome was almost directly northwest from Jerusalem, and its conquests in Asia and Africa were, of course, towards the east and south; but where were Antiochus' conquests? He came into possession of a kingdom already established, and Sir Isaac Newton says, "He did not enlarge it."

5th. Out of many reasons that might be added to the above, we name but one. This power was to stand up against the Prince of princes. Verse 25. The Prince of princes is Jesus Christ. Rev. i, 5; xvii, 14; xix, 10. But Antiochus died 184 years before our Lord was born. It is settled, therefore, that another power is the subject of this prophecy. The following facts demonstrate that

ROME IS THE POWER IN QUESTION.

1st. This power was to come forth from one of the four kingdoms of Alexander's empire. Let us remember that nations are not brought into prophecy, till somehow connected with the people of God. Rome had been in existence many years before it was noticed in prophecy; and Rome had made Macedon, one of the four horns of the Grecian goat, a part of itself A. C. 168, about ten years before its first connection with the people of God. 1 Mac. viii. So that Rome could not truly be said to be out of "one of them," as the ten horns of the fourth beast in Chap. vii, could be said to come out of that beast, when they were ten kingdoms set up by the conquerors of Rome.

2d. It was to wax exceeding great toward the south, and toward the east, and toward the pleasant land. [Palestine. Ps. cvi, 24; Zech. vii, 14.] This was true of Rome in every particular. Witness its conquests in Africa and Asia, its overthrow of the place and nation of the Jews. John xi, 48.

3d. It was to cast down the host and of the stars. This is predicted respecting the dragon. Rev. xii, 3, 4. All admit that the dragon was Rome. Who can fail to see their identity?

4th. Rome was emphatically a king of fierce countenance, and one that did understand dark sentences. Moses used similar language when he evidently predicted the Roman power. Deut. xxviii, 49, 50.

5th. Rome did destroy wonderfully. Witness its overthrow of all opposing powers.

6th. Rome has destroyed more of the "mighty and holy people," than all other persecuting powers. From fifty to one hundred millions of the church have been slain by it.

7th. Rome has stood up against the Prince of princes. The Roman power nailed Christ to the cross. Acts iv, 26, 27; Matt. xxvii, 2; Rev. ii, 4.

8th. This power is to be broken without hand. Compare with Chap. ii, 34, 45, where it is said that the stone "cut out without hands," smote the image, &c. Its destruction then takes place at the final overthrow of all earthly powers.

4. THE 2300 DAYS.—The field of vision, as we have seen, is the empires of Persia, Grecia and Rome. We will here introduce the inquiry of one saint, [angel,] and the answer by another.

Verses 13, 14. "Then I heard one saint speaking, and another saint said unto that certain saint which spake, How long shall be the vision concerning the daily sacrifice, and the transgression of desolation, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot? And he said unto me, Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed."

It is a fact that 2300 literal days (not quite seven years) would not cover the duration of a single power in this prophecy, much less extend over them all; therefore the days must be symbols, even as the beasts and horns are shown to be symbols. It is also a fact that a symbolic or prophetic day is one year. Eze. iv, 6, 13; Num. xiv, 34. Hence, the period is 2300 years.

In regard to the date of the 2300 prophetic days, they evidently commence with the vision, at the height of the Medo-Persian empire. Anything more definite, this chapter does not furnish, we must therefore look elsewhere for the definite explanation of this matter.

5. THE 70 WEEKS. We regard this period of Chap. ix, as the only key to the time of the vision of Chap. viii. Notice as follows:—

1st. The command to Gabriel, [Chap. viii, 16,] "Make this man (Daniel) to understand the vision."

2d. Gabriel did make the Prophet to understand what the ram, goat and little horn meant, yet,

3d. Daniel says, at the close of this interview with the angel, "I was astonished at the vision, but none understood it." None understood the time—where to commence the 2300 days, and "what manner of time" they were.

4th. The ninth chapter of Daniel records another visit of Gabriel. The Prophet is praying when the angel touches him, and says, "I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding." It was on time that the Prophet needed "understanding," as the other symbols had been explained and mark the heavenly messenger's first declaration, after telling Daniel to "consider the vision:" "Seventy weeks are determined [cut off] upon thy people," &c. Cut off from what? Most certainly cut off from the 2300 days, as a period of time can only be cut off from time.

The "going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem" is mentioned in verse 23 as the event to mark the commencement of the 70 weeks. As the 70 weeks are cut off from the 2300 days, it follows that they form the first 490 of those days, and both periods begin at the same date. Here we take leave of this subject, and refer the reader to our works on the 2300 days and the Sanctuary, where it is shown that the 2300 prophetic days began a. c. 457, and terminated A. D. 1844.

THE SANCTUARY.

It has been supposed that the earth, or a portion of it, was the Sanctuary of Dan. viii. This is an error that has stood in the way of the reception of the "present truth," and out of which has grown the recent fanaticisms on the definite time of the Second Advent. The definition of the word sanctuary, is a "sacred place," a "dwelling place of the Most High." This earth, or any portion of it, has not been such a place since man left Eden 6000 years since.

As the typical sanctuary of the Jews was the center of their religious system, so the "greater and more perfect Tabernacle" above, of which Jesus Christ is a High Priest, forms the center of all gospel truth. There is God the Father, there is Jesus Christ, a merciful High Priest, and there is the mercy seat, the ark, the law of God, [Rev. xi, 19,] and the holy angels. We are indeed, introducing a glorious theme. It would be far better for the spiritual interests of the people of God if they would more constantly look upward, and by faith view the glories of the heavenly Sanctuary. We recommend the reading of the book of Hebrews as an excellent commentary on this subject. We invite the especial attention of the reader to those works where a scriptural view of the Sanctuary to be cleansed at the termination of the 2300 days, is given, with the nature of its cleansing.

Events immediately preceding the second coming of Christ are mentioned in Dan. viii, yet that event is not brought to view in that chapter. It is true that it is said in verse 25, when speaking of the little horn, "he shall be broken without hand;" but the wrath of God in the seven last plagues will, at least, commence to break earthly governments, prior to the Second Advent. Read their dreadful description in Rev. xvi. After the sixth vial is poured out it is said, "Behold, I come as a thief;" his coming is then still future.

The event to transpire at the end of the 2300 days, is the cleansing of the Sanctuary. That the tabernacle of God is the Sanctuary of the Bible, a multitude of texts directly testify. Ex. xxvi, 1-6; Lev. iv, 6; xvi, 33; Num. iv, 15; Ps. lxxviii, 54, 69; Heb. viii, 1, 2. That the cleansing of the Sanctuary is the work of a high priest, performed by blood, and not with fire, is also a matter of certainty. Lev. xvi; Heb. ix. The work of cleansing the Sanctuary is not that of a king taking vengeance on his adversaries, but that of a priest concluding his work in the tabernacle of God. Hence, this work must precede the Second Advent, and be accomplished ere the priestly work of our Lord is closed in the Sanctuary of God. Until that point of time, the wrath of God is stayed by the intercession of our great High Priest. When that point is reached, the sins of the host or church, having been transferred from the Sanctuary to the anti-typical scape-goat, and the saints of God being all sealed, the wrath of God without mixture of mercy is poured out, and the adversaries of the Lord are destroyed with an utter destruction. The period of time in which the Sanctuary is being cleansed, we understand to be what the angel denominates "the last end of the indignation." Dan. viii, 19. That it occupies a space of time is evident from the form of expression used by Gabriel: "I will make thee know what shall be in the last end of the indignation."

THE JUDGMENT.

For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God, and if it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God? And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear? 1 Pet. iv, 17, 18.

This text we must regard as prophetic. That it applies to the last period of the church of Christ, seems evident from verses 5-7, 12, 13. In the judgment of the race of man, but two great classes are recognized—the righteous and the sinner, or ungodly. Each class has its time of judgment; and, according to the text, the judgment of the house, or church, of God comes first in order.

Both classes will be judged before they are raised from the dead. The investigative judgment of the house, or church, of God will take place before the first resurrection; so will the judgment of the wicked take place during the 1000 years of Rev. xx, and they will be raised at the close of that period.

It is said of all the just, "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection," therefore all their cases are decided before Jesus comes to raise them from the dead. The judgment of the righteous is while Jesus offers his blood for the blotting out of sins. Immortal saints will reign with Christ 1000 years in the judgment of the wicked. Rev. xx, 4; 1 Cor. vi, 2, 3. The saints will not only participate in the judgment of the world, but in judging fallen angels. See Jude 6.

"Some men's sins [the righteous] are open before hand, going before to judgment, and some men [the wicked] they follow after." 1 Tim. v, 24. That is, some men lay open, or confess their sins, and they go to judgment while Jesus' blood can blot them out, and the sins be remembered no more; while sins unconfessed, and unrepented of, will follow, and will stand against the sinner in that great day of judgment of 1000 years.

That the investigative judgment of the saints, dead and living, takes place prior to the second coming of Christ, seems evident from the testimony of Peter, "Who shall give account to him that is ready to judge the quick [living] and the dead." For, for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according [in like manner] to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit. But the end of all things is at hand: be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer." 1 Pet. iv, 5-7.

It appears that the saints are judged while some are living, and others are dead. To place the investigative judgment of the saints after the resurrection of the just, supposes the possibility of a mistake in the resurrection, hence the necessity of an investigation to see if all who were raised were really worthy of the first resurrection. But the fact that all who have part in that resurrection are "blessed and holy," shows that decision is passed on all the saints before the second coming of Christ.

The judgment of the house of God is evidently shadowed forth by the events of the tenth-day atonement of the house of Israel. That, in a certain sense, was a day of judgment. The high priest wore the breast-plate of judgment on which was represented the tribes of Israel. Ex. xxxix, 8-21. "For whatsoever soul it be that shall not be afflicted in that day, he shall be cut off from among his people. Lev. xxiii, 29.

The 2300 days [Dan. viii, 14] reached to the cleansing of the Sanctuary, or to the great day of atonement in which the sins of all who shall have part in the first resurrection will be blotted out. Those days terminated in 1844. We think the evidence clear, that since that time the judgment of those who died subjects of the grace of God has been going on, while Jesus has been offering his blood for the blotting out of their sins.

THE BLOTTING-OUT TIME.

When are sins blotted out? Is it at the time when they are forgiven? We think not. We must look to the great day of atonement as the time when Jesus offers his blood for the blotting out of sins. It is at the time of the cleansing of the Sanctuary. Said Peter to the wondering multitude who witnessed the lame man healed, "Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you: whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." Acts iii, 19-21.

Here the time for blotting out of sins is placed forward just prior to the second appearing of Jesus. It is evidently the last great work in the ministry of Christ in the heavenly Sanctuary.

ARE SINS WRITTEN IN HEAVEN?

We think the Scriptures fully warrant the view that a record of the acts of all accountable men are written in heaven. "And I saw the Dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works." Rev. xx, 12; Dan. vii, 10. "Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another: and the Lord hearkened, and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name." Mal. iii, 16.

The book of life contains the names of all who become the special subjects of divine favor. See Dan. xii, 1; Rev. iii, 5; Phil. iv, 3. In the other books are recorded sins, also the pardon of sins repented of, and forgiven with those good works necessary to secure the favor of God. This whole account stands, as written during the probation of every subject of special divine favor since the fall of man, till the time of the judgment of the house of God; till Jesus enters the Most Holy to offer his blood for the blotting out of the forgiven sins of all the just.

CHRIST OFFERS HIS BLOOD IN THE MOST HOLY FOR THE BLOTING OUT OF THE SINS OF THE WHOLE ISRAEL OF GOD.

Christ is the only Saviour offered to the race of man. All who are saved will be saved through him. All, of every age, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation, who shall be redeemed, will be redeemed to God by the blood of Jesus Christ. His blood was shed for all. At the right hand of the Majesty in the heavens, he is ready to plead the cause of every repenting sinner, and through him sinners may find pardon. He also offers his blood in the most Holy for the blotting out of the sins of all the just of every age.

"For if the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of a heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh; how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God? And for this cause he is the mediator of the new testament, that by means of death, for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first testament, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance." Heb. ix, 13-16.

In the great day of atonement for the blotting out of the sins of all of every age, the cases of patriarchs and prophets, and sleeping saints of all past ages will come up in judgment, the books will be opened, and they will be judged according to the things written in the books. It is thus, at the end of the 1335 days, [Dan. xii, 13,] that

DANIEL STANDS IN HIS LOT.

The first and second definitions of the word lot, as given by Webster, are, 1. "That which in human speech, is called chance, hazard, fortune, but, in strictness of language, is the determination of Providence; as, the land shall be divided by lot. 2. That by which the fate or portion of one is determined; that by which an event is committed to chance, that is, to the determination of Providence; as, to cast lots; to draw lots."

By reference to the Englishman's Hebrew Concordance, we find that the Hebrew word from which lot in Dan. xii, 13 is translated, is "gah-rab" This word occurs, and is translated lot, seventy-five times in the Old Testament, besides Dan. xii, 13. That the reader may be able to determine the signification of the word, we will give the seventy-six instances of its use.

- "Lev. xvi, 8. Aaron shall cast lots.
one lot for the Lord, and the other lot for the scape-goat.
- 9. upon which the Lord's lot fell.
- 10. on which the lot fell.
- Num. xvi 55. the land shall be divided by lot.
- 56. according to the lot shall the.

See also Num. xxxiii, 54; xxxiv, 13; xxxvi, 2, 3; Josh. xiv, 2; xv, 1; xvi, 1; xvii, 1, 14, 17; xviii, 6, 8, 10, 11; xix, 1, 10, 17, 21, 32, 40, 51; xxi, 4, 6, 8, 10, 20, 40; Jud. i, 3; xx, 9; 1 Chron. vi, 54, 61, 63, 65; xxiv, 5, 7, 31; xxv, 8, 9; xxvi, 13, 14; Neh.

x, 34; xi, 1; Est. iii, 7; ix, 24; Ps. xvi, 5; xxii, 18; xxxv, 3; Prov. i, 14; xvi, 33; xviii, 18; Isa. xlvii, 14; xxxiv, 17; lvi, 6; Jer. xii, 25; Eze. xxiv, 6; Dan. xii, 13; Joel iii, 3; Obad. 11; Jonah i, 7; Micah ii, 5; Nah. iii, 10.

There is another word [gheh-nel] which is translated "region," "country," "lot of inheritance," &c., as in Deut. iii, 4, 13, 14; xxxii, 9; Josh. xvii, 5, 14; xix, 9, 29.

It will now be seen that Daniel does not stand in the "lot of his inheritance," as it has been expressed, at the end of the 1335 days, but he stands in his lot in the decisions of the judgment of the righteous dead.

When did those days end? Evidences are conclusive that the 1335 days ended with the 2300, with the Midnight Cry in 1844. Then the angel [Rev. x, 1-6] swore that time should be no longer. Time here cannot mean duration, as measured in months and years, for 1000 years are measured after this; but it must refer to prophetic time, which was the burden of the angel's message. As Daniel was to stand in his lot at the end of the days, we must conclude that the judgment of the righteous dead commenced at that time, and has been progressing more than twelve years.

When will the cases of the living saints pass in review in the investigative judgment of the house of God? This is a question worthy the candid and most solemn consideration of all who have a case pending in the court of heaven, and hope to overcome. In the order of heaven, we must look for their judgment to follow that of the dead, and to occur near the close of their probation.

It is most reasonable to conclude that there is a special call to the remnant, and a special work to be performed by them, and for them, preparatory to the decisions of the judgment in regard to them, and that their salvation depends upon fully obeying the calls and counsel to them. And we most solemnly believe that this preparatory call and work is brought to view in the testimony to the Laodiceans, and parallel portions of the word of God.

The judgment call and counsel to the Laodiceans finds them lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot. It finds them in a state where it is necessary for them to be zealous in the work of repentance, that they may find pardon, and obtain that preparation necessary to stand in the judgment. Those who do not fully receive and obey this testimony, but remain lukewarm, Christ will spue out of his mouth, or cast them from his favor, and blot their names out of the book of life. The decisive hour is at hand. In this awful hour either sins or names will be blotted out. Those who are zealous and repent of all their sins, buy the gold tried in the fire, (true faith,) the white raiment, (the same as the wedding garment, or white linen, which is the righteousness of Jesus Christ that saints will be clothed with—but one place to buy it—Jesus says, buy of me,) and have their eyes anointed with eye salve, (the anointing of the Holy Ghost,) will have their sins blotted out, while those who remain careless, disobedient and lukewarm, will have their names blotted out of the book of life. Life and death are in this judgment call of the dear Saviour. It is life to fully receive it; death to be careless and neglect it. Now is the time to fully understand what it is to OVERCOME.

"He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment, and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels." Rev. iii, 5.

The white raiment in this text is the same as that offered by the true Witness. Hence we conclude that the overcoming, which is necessary in order to have the names of the people of God retained in, and not blotted out of, the book of life, consists in obeying the testimony to the Laodiceans.

Dear brethren, perfect faith by works, be clothed with the righteousness of Jesus Christ, and get the anointing of the Holy Ghost, which will enable you to see sin in its sinfulness, holiness in its beauty, and the path to life as straight and as narrow as it really is, and retain those priceless treasures, for in this you overcome. And your names will be retained in the book of life, and Jesus, in the judgment of the living just, will confess your names before the Father, and your sins will be blotted out.

We feel confident that but very few realize the consecration necessary to stand the judgment. Behold that dying saint. He first gives up the world and all its hopes. How carefully he reviews his past life, and confesses from the heart every wrong act and feeling. He then commits his family to the Lord, and himself he throws upon the mercy of God. O what a struggle! But when this work is done, Jesus smiles; and leaning upon the bosom of his Saviour, the saint breathes his life out sweetly there. His probation is closed, and his case rests till the record of his life is opened, and his case passes in review in the judgment. His sins were all repented of, therefore, in the great day of atonement, the blood of Jesus Christ can blot them out.

A consecration every way as complete as this will be necessary in order for the names of the living saints to be retained in the book of life, and their sins blotted out. What a struggle to die to this world while in full strength! We feel confident that many will go with the people of God who will fail in their feeble efforts to overcome. But very few realize what a real Bible death to this world is. O church of Christ awake! arise! The judgment is passing! Very soon will your names either be confessed by Jesus Christ before his Father, or they will be blotted out of the book of life. Consecrate all to God, then you will be prepared to act your part in saving others from ruin. The great work of consecration now required is set forth in the following scriptures:

"Seek ye the Lord, all ye meek of the earth, which have wrought his judgment; seek righteousness, seek meekness: it may be ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger." Zeph. ii, 3.

"Therefore also now, saith the Lord, turn ye even to me with all your heart, and with fasting, and with weeping, and with mourning: and rend your heart and not your garments, and turn unto the Lord your God." Joel ii, 12, 13.

"Wherefore he saith, God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble. Submit yourselves therefore to God. Resist the devil, and he will flee from you. Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you. Cleanse your hands, ye sinners; and purify your hearts, ye double-minded. Be afflicted, and mourn, and weep: let your laughter be turned to mourning, and your joy to heaviness. Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up." James iv, 6-10.

"As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten; be zealous therefore and repent."

We leave this subject for the present and give room for the pointed communications from Bro. Ingraham and Stone.

J. W.

THE SANCTUARY.

While holding meetings in connection with Bro. Loughborough in Portland, Me., in November, it was proposed by some of the Advent friends in that city, who do not see as we do on all points, that we have a Bible class, if agreeable to us. Most cheerfully we accepted the proposition. When our lectures closed in the city hall, the Advent friends let us have the use of their hall free for two evenings, and on the third we met for Bible class.

Bro. Stiles calls for a report of the Bible class. We have been waiting for Bro. L. to report; but as he is from home we will notice a few points only from memory, having no notes. Bro. L. was chosen class-leader. And, we confess that it appeared to us a singular Bible class. Bro. L., consenting to stand in the desk two hours and answer all the questions which that part of the congregation that differed with him on the subject might ask.

One sister thought the church was the Sanctuary; and on being asked for her Bible proof, said it was somewhere in the Bible, but she could not cite the passage. She has probably searched since, and learned her mistake. The Bible mentions the Sanctuary and host in Dan. viii, 13; but the host being the church, the Sanctuary must be something else.

During the evening the following texts were presented as proof that Christ entered the Most Holy place and commenced his ministry there at the time of his ascension to heaven:

Heb. ix, 8. "The Holy Ghost thus signifying, that the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while as the first tabernacle was yet standing."

Chap. x, 19. "Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus."

It was then suggested that the word rendered "holiest," is hagion, "holies," and is correctly translated by Macknight, "holy places." Here are the passages as given by him.

Heb. ix, 8. "The Holy Ghost signifying this, that the way of the holy places was not yet laid open, while the first tabernacle still standeth."

Chap. x, 19. "Well then, brethren, having boldness in the entrance of the holy places, by the blood of Jesus."

Chap. ix, 23, 24, was also read. "There was a necessity, therefore, that the representations indeed of the holy places in the heavens, should be cleansed by these sacrifices; but the heavenly holy places themselves, by sacrifices better than these. Therefore Christ hath not entered into the holy places made with hands, the images of the true holy places; but into heaven itself, now to appear before the face of God, on our account."

But this translation was rejected, with the singular and uncalled-for assertion, "I shall not give up my Bible."

Heb. vi, 19, 20, was also presented as proof that Christ entered the holiest at his ascension. "Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the vail; whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus, made an High Priest forever after the order of Melchisedec." It was claimed that as Christ entered within the vail at his ascension, he then entered the Most Holy Place.

Bro. L. called attention to Heb. ix, 3. "And after the second vail, the tabernacle which is called the holiest of all." As a second implies a first, Paul understood that there were two vails. Christ entered within the first of these vails when he ascended.

Proof was called for that there were two vails, when Heb. ix, 3 was presented again. And judge of our surprise when the very persons who a few moments before had rejected Macknight's translation, saying "I shall not give up my Bible," now suggested that Paul's statement concerning the second vail, must be a misprint, or wrong translation!!! The wrong side of a question is generally the hard side; and those who are on that side, and are determined to maintain their position, are sometimes driven to say things which contradict themselves.

Old Testament testimony was then called for that there were two vails. It was past nine, and too late to search the Old Testament on the point. And as the meeting was about to close, we stated that Bro. L. had set before them his views of what constituted the two holies of the new covenant Sanctuary, both in his lecture, and in answering questions that evening; and it would be a pleasure to us to know their views of what these two holies were. They refused, stating that a Bible class was not a place to arouse sentiments, but to investigate. Much truth in the remark! But such remarks come with best grace where the principle is carried out.

We were left to conclude that their position, if indeed they had a position, was that the earth is the holy place; heaven the most holy, and the ethereal blue was the vail between!! This we know is the vague view which many take of the subject. Besides this, we will put the plain and definite expressions of Paul to the Hebrews.

Heb. ix, 1-5. "Now of the things which we have spoken this is the sum: We have such an High Priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens; a minister of the Sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not men. For every high priest is ordained to offer gifts and sacrifices: wherefore it is of necessity that this man have somewhat also to offer. For if he were on earth he should not be a priest seeing that there are priests that offer gifts according to the law; who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things, as Moses was admonished of God when he was about to make the tabernacle: for, say, with him, that thou make all things according to the pattern showed to thee in the mount."

Chap. ix, 23-24. "And almost all things are by the law purged with blood; and without shedding of blood is no remission. It was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these. For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us."

Mark well the words used in these passages to prove that there is a Sanctuary in heaven, in the form, at least, of that sanctuary which was on earth. First, "examples;" second, "shadow;" third, "PATTERNS;" fourth, "FIGURES." Apply these definite terms to the view that this earth is the holy place, and heaven the most holy, and the words at once become vague and senseless. More on the two vails next week.

J. W.

THE SANCTUARY AGAIN.

LAST week we promised more on the two vails this week. Says Paul, "And after the second vail, the tabernacle which is called the holiest of all." Heb. ix, 8. Certainly, Paul understood that there were two vails, and that the second was between the holy place, and the most holy. The first is called a "hanging for the door of the tent." Ex. xxvi, 36. "Hanging for the tabernacle door." Chap. xxxvi, 37. "Hanging at the door of the tabernacle." Chap. xl, 28.

Paul regarded this as the first vail, and so may we. When we compare these two vails we find them very nearly alike.

FIRST VAIL.

Ex. xxvi, 36, 37. "And thou shalt make a hanging for the door of the tent, of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen, wrought with needlework. And thou shalt make for the hanging five pillars of shittim wood, and overlay them with gold, and their hooks shall be of gold: and thou shalt cast five sockets of brass for them."

Chap. xxxvi, 37, 38. "And he made a hanging for the tabernacle door of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen, of needlework; and the five pillars of it with their hooks; and he overlaid their chapters and their fillets with gold: but their five sockets were of brass."

SECOND VAIL.

Ex. xxvi, 31-33. "And thou shalt make a vail of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen of cunning work: with cherubim shall it be made. And thou shalt hang it upon four pillars of shittim wood overlaid with gold: their hooks shall be of gold upon the four sockets of silver. And thou shalt hang up the vail under the taches, that thou mayest bring in thither within the vail the ark of the testimony: and the vail shall divide unto you between the holy place and the most holy."

Chap. xxxvi, 35, 36. "And he made a vail of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen: with cherubim made he it of cunning work. And he made thereunto four pillars of shittim wood, and overlaid them with gold: their hooks were of gold: and he cast for them four sockets of silver."

The two vails were made of the same material, same colors, and in the same style. There was this difference; there were five pillars at the first vail, and four at the second. And the sockets of the first were of brass, while those of the second were of silver.

THOUGHTS ON THE REVELATION.

CHAPTER IV.

The Heavenly Sanctuary.

Verse 1. After this I looked, and behold, a door was opened in heaven; and the first voice which I heard was as it were of a trumpet talking with me; which said, Come up hither, and I will show thee things which must be hereafter.

In the first three chapters we have the vision of the Son of man. John gives a description of his person, and writes the words he heard from him. But this chapter opens with a new scene which has reference to the heavenly sanctuary. A door is opened in heaven, and John hears a trumpet-voice saying, Come up hither, and I will show thee things which must be hereafter. Compare with chap. 1, 1. The presentation of future events is the great object of the book of Revelation.

Verse 2-5. And immediately I was in the Spirit; and behold, a throne was set in heaven, and one sat on the throne. And he that sat was to look upon like a jasper and a sardine stone: and there was a rainbow round about the throne, in sight like unto an emerald. And round about the throne were four and twenty seats: and upon the seats I saw four and twenty elders sitting, clothed in white raiment; and they had on their heads crowns of gold. And out of the throne proceeded lightnings, and thunders, and voices: and there were seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, which are the seven Spirits of God.

In chap. 1, 10, John says, I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day. He was in vision on that day. Again he says, chap. iv, 2. And immediately I was in the Spirit. Hence we conclude that chap. iv commences a second vision. The illuminating influence of the Holy Spirit came upon John gradually. He first sees a door opened in heaven, then hears a trumpet voice, then immediately, in close connection, is lost to all earthly things, being wrapped in a vision of things in heaven. He entered the first apartment of the heavenly sanctuary, and saw the throne of God, and describes the appearance of him that sat upon it. Before the throne of God were seven burning lamps of fire.

The candlestick, with its seven burning lamps, was in the first apartment of the earthly sanctuary. Ex. xxv, 31; xxxi, 85; xxxvii, 17-28; xl, 24; Lev. xlii, 4; Num. iv, 9; viii, 2; 1 Chron. xxviii, 15; 2 Chron. iv, 20; xlii, 11. These burning lamps in the earthly and in the heavenly sanctuaries, during both dispensations, represent the Holy Spirit in all its operations, here called the seven Spirits of God.

The four and twenty elders, we conclude, were selected from the multitude of captives, of the good and holy of past ages held captives by death, but raised from the dead at the resurrection of Christ, Matt. xxvii, 52, 53, and taken up to heaven at his ascension. Eph. iv, 8, margin. This multitude were raised for some wise purpose, and they doubtless have an important part to act. And the fact that the four and twenty elders are represented in chap. v, 8, as every one of them having golden vials full of odors, which are the prayers of saints, may justify the conclusion that they are assistants in the priesthood of Jesus Christ.

Wesley, speaking of the four and twenty elders, says:

"(Clothed in white raiment) This, and their golden crowns, show that they had already finished their course, and taken their places among the citizens of heaven. They are never termed souls, and hence it is probable that they had glorified bodies already. Compare Matt. xxvii, 52."

Verse 7-11. And before the throne there was a sea of glass like unto crystal: and in the midst of the throne, and round about the throne, were four beasts full of eyes before and behind. And the first beast was like a lion; and the second beast like a calf, and the third beast had a face as a man, and the fourth beast was like a flying eagle. And the four beasts had each of them six wings about him; and they were full of eyes within: and they rest not day and night, saying, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come. And when these beasts give glory and honour and thanks to him that sat on the throne, who liveth forever and ever, the four and twenty elders fell down before him that sat on the throne, and worship him that liveth forever and ever, and cast their crowns before the throne, saying, Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honour and power: for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created.

In reference to the word beasts, A. Barnes says:

"This is a very unhappy translation, as the word beasts by no means conveys a correct idea of the original word. The Greek word—ζῷον—means properly a living thing; and it is thus indeed applied to animals, or to the living creation; but the notion of their being living things, or living creatures, should be retained in the translation. Prof. Steward renders it living creatures."—Barnes' Notes.

Scott, in the Comprehensive Commentary, says:

"It is indisputably manifest that the four living creatures join in, or rather lead, the worship of the Lamb, as having redeemed them to God; and this proves beyond controversy, that part of the redeemed church is meant by this emblem; and not angels, whose worship is next described, but in language evidently different."

The four living creatures, with the four and twenty elders, probably embrace all those who rose with Christ, and ascended up to heaven with him. These resurrected saints were upon the sea of glass. And we see no reason why the sea of glass should not be as literal and tangible as the redeemed beings upon it. This may be the very foundation of the Sanctuary and City, and may even extend as a border round about the City.

It is here called a sea of glass like unto crystal. Chap. xv, 2. And I saw a sea of glass mingled with fire. Chap. xxi, 21. And the street of the city was pure gold, as it were transparent glass. Those are the beautiful figures which represent the foundation of the Sanctuary and the City, where beings redeemed from the grave stand, and where the overcomers of chap. xv, 2, will soon stand, having the harps of God.

THOUGHTS ON THE REVELATION.

CHAPTER V.

The Heavenly Sanctuary—Continued.

Verse 1. And I saw in the right hand of him that sat on the throne a book written within and on the backside, sealed with seven seals.

The one holding the sealed book is evidently the Father, as the Son, under the figure of a lamb, verse 7, takes the book from his right hand. The book contained an important chain of prophetic history of the Christian church.

Of this book Benson says:

"In short, we should consider this book as being such as one as the ancients used, whose books were not like ours, but volumes, or long pieces of parchment, rolled upon a stick, as we frequently roll silks. Such was this volume or roll, consisting of seven volumes all sealed. Not as if the apostle saw all the seals at once, there being seven volumes wrapped up one within another, each of which was sealed; so that upon opening and unrolling the first, the contents only of one volume were laid open, and the second appeared to be sealed up till that was opened, and so on to the seventh."

Scott, in the Comprehensive Commentary, says:

"It appeared as a roll, consisting of several parchments, according to the custom of those times; and though it was supposed to be written within, yet nothing could be read till the seals were loosed. It was afterward found to contain seven parchments or small volumes, each of which was separately sealed; but if all the seals had been on the outside, nothing could have been read till they had all been loosed; whereas the loosing of each seal was followed by some discovery of the contents of the roll; yet the appearance on the outside seems to have indicated that it consisted of seven, or at least of several, parts."

Verse 2. And I saw a strong angel proclaiming with a loud voice, Who is worthy to open the book, and to loose the seals thereof?

This angel is doubtless one of great eminence. With a loud voice he comes out as a orator, and seems to challenge all creatures in the universe to try the strength of their wisdom in opening the counsels of God.

Verse 3, 4. And no man in heaven, nor in earth, neither under the earth, was able to open the book, neither to look thereon. And I wept much, because no man was found worthy to open and to read the book, neither to look thereon.

No being, heavenly, earthly, or infernal, was able to open the book, neither to look upon it. Clarke says:

"[And no man] oidik—No person or being."

Benson says:

"[In Heaven, nor in earth, neither under the earth] That is, none in the universe; for these are the three great regions into which the whole creation is divided."

Upon the phrase, "and I wept much," the same writer gives the following beautiful remarks:

"Being greatly affected with the thought that no being whatsoever was to be found able to understand, reveal, and accomplish the divine counsels, fearing they would still remain concealed from the church. This weeping of the apostle sprang from greatness of mind. The tenderness of heart which he always had, appeared more clearly now he was out of his own power. The Revelation was not written without tears, neither without tears will it be understood."

Verse 5. And one of the elders saith unto me, Weep not: behold, the Lion of the tribe of Juda, the Root of David, hath prevailed to open the book, and to loose the seven seals thereof.

Christ is here presented under the figure of a Lion, representing his power. He is also called the Root of David. God created all things by Jesus Christ. Heb. 1, 2; John 1, 3; 1 Cor. viii, 6; Col. 1, 16, 17; Eph. iii, 9. In this sense Christ is the root of David, as to him David owed his existence. He had undertaken to save man, and in the contest with Satan, who opposed the work of Jesus Christ in laying the foundation of man's redemption, he had prevailed. He had endured Satan's temptations, the agonies of the cross, and had arisen in triumph over death and the grave, hence was worthy to open the book and to loose the seals thereof.

Verses 6, 7. And I beheld, and lo, in the midst of the throne, and of the four beasts, and in the midst of the elders, stood a Lamb as it had been slain, having seven horns, and seven eyes, which are the seven Spirits of God sent forth into all the earth. And he came and took the book out of the right hand of him that sat upon the throne.

Here Christ is represented under the figure of a lamb. Doddridge translates, "And I beheld, in the middle space between the throne and the four living creatures, and in the midst of the elders, there stood a Lamb," &c. In the center was the throne of the Father, and by it, in the open space about it, was the Son, represented by the slain lamb. Around these were the redeemed saints, represented by the four living creatures, forming the first circle; then the elders formed a second circle; and the angels, verse 11, formed a third circle. The worthiness of Christ, as he stands in the figure of a slain lamb, is the admiration of all the holy beings in heaven.

Woodhouse, in the Comprehensive Commentary, says:

"The Greek implies that the lamb appeared with a wounded neck and throat, as if smitten at the altar as a victim."

Dr. Clarke, on the phrase, "as it had been slain," says:

"As if now in the act of being offered. This is very remarkable; so important is the sacrificial offering of Christ in the sight of God, that he is still represented as being in the very act of pouring out his blood for the offences of man. This gives great advantage to faith; when any soul comes to the throne of grace he finds a sacrifice there provided for him to offer to God."

The seven horns of the lamb represent perfection of strength—horn is a symbol of power—and the seven eyes represent that in him is perfection of wisdom; hence the heavenly host, verse 12, are heard saying with a loud voice, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing."

Verses 8-10. And when he had taken the book, the four beasts and four and twenty elders fell down before the Lamb, having every one of them harps, and golden vials full of odors, which are the prayers of saints. And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth.

We have before suggested that those represented by the four living creatures, and the four and twenty elders, embrace the "many" who rose from the dead with Christ, Matt. xxvii, 52, 53, and the "multitude" who ascended to heaven with him, and that these were assistants in the heavenly priesthood. This last idea seems very much strengthened by the statement that every one of them had golden vials full of odors, which are the prayers of saints. On this point A. Barnes says:

"The idea here is, therefore, that the representatives of the church in heaven—the elders—spoken of as 'priests,' are described as officiating in the temple above in behalf of the church still below, and as offering incense while the church is engaged in prayer."

The song, "Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof, for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood," is called new in respect to the occasion and the composition. They were the first that could sing it. They were the good and the holy from every kindred, tongue, people, and nation of those who lived and died before the first advent of Christ. They are kings and priests, probably, in the sense that they are overcomers, are redeemed, and have a part to act in connection with the government of heaven, in reference to this world. And, notwithstanding, they are redeemed, and surround the throne of God, are in the presence of the Lamb that redeemed them, and are surrounded with the angelic hosts of heaven, where all is glory ineffable, yet their song contemplates a still higher state, when the great work of redemption shall be completed, and they, with the whole redeemed family of God of every age, shall reign on the earth, which is the promised inheritance of the saints. Gen. xii, 7; Gal. iii, 10; Rom. iv, 13; Gal. iii, 29; Matt. v, 6; 2 Pet. iii, 13; Isa. lxxv, 17-25; Rev. xii, 1-6.

Verbes 11-14. "And I beheld, and I heard the voice of many angels round about the throne and the beasts and the elders; and the number of them was ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands; saying with a loud voice, Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing. And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever. And the four beasts said, Amen. And the four and twenty elders fell down and worshiped him that liveth for ever and ever."

We have seen that the new song contemplates redemption completed, when the saints will reign upon the earth, at the close of the 1000 years of chap. xi. Verse 11 commences a new scene. This is indicated by the phrase, "And I beheld." It is the new earth state introduced by the new song of verse 10. This scene is most sublime. It presents the whole universe engaged in the worship of the Lamb, in four divisions.

1. The angels, forming a third circle round about the throne, in number "ten thousand times ten thousand and thousands of thousands." The first computation makes one hundred million; then add the second—"thousands of thousands"—and we have what Paul calls "an innumerable company of angels." Heb. xii, 22. These all with a strong voice strike the song:

"Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing."

2. Every creature in heaven, on the earth, under the earth, and in the sea, sung praises to God and the Lamb. Wakefield translates, "The whole creation." The Syriac reads, "Every created thing." All of God's creatures throughout the universe join in this song. Its melody is not marred by the shrieks of the damned in some corner of the universe—some say is the center of the earth, others in the moon—weeping and wailing and gnashing their teeth to all eternity. No! no!! Before this, the Devil, his angels, and all wicked men, are "devoured" by the fire from God out of heaven, chap. xii, 9, and now there is spread out before the Prophet a clean universe, from which arises from every created being,

"Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever."

3. "And the four beasts said, Amen."

4. "And the four and twenty elders fell down and worshiped him that liveth for ever and ever."

Thoughts on the Revelation.

CHAPTER XI.

Verses 1, 2. And there was given me a reed like unto a rod; and the angel stood, saying, Rise and measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein. But the court which is without the temple, leave out, and measure it not; for it is given unto the Gentiles; and the holy city shall they tread under foot forty and two months.

We here have a continuation of the instruction which the angel commenced giving to John in the preceding chapter; hence these verses properly belong to that chapter, and should not be separated by the present division. In the last verse of chap. x, the angel gave to John; as a representative of the church, a new commission. In other words, as shown last week, we have in that verse a prophecy of the third angel's message. Now follows testimony showing what the nature of that message is to be. It is connected with the temple of God in heaven, and is designed to fit up a class of people as worshipers therein. The temple here cannot mean the church; for the church is brought to view in connection with this temple as "them that worship therein." The temple is therefore the literal temple in heaven, and the worshipers the true church on earth. But these worshipers are not of course to be measured in the sense of ascertaining the height and circumference of each one in feet and inches; they are to be measured as worshipers; hence the measurement has to do with character; and character can be measured only by some standard of right, namely, a law or rule of action. We are thus brought to the conclusion that the ten commandments, the standard which God has given by which to measure "the whole duty of man," are embraced in the measuring rod put by the angel into the hands of John; and this is the very thing which, in fulfillment of this, has been put, under the third message, into the hands of the church. This is the standard by which the worshipers of God are now to be tested.

Having seen what it is to measure those who worship at the temple, another inquiry arises, namely, What is meant by measuring the temple? To measure any object here, requires that we give especial attention to that object. So dubious the call to rise and measure the temple of God, is a prophetic command to the church to give the subject of the temple or sanctuary a special examination. But how is it to be measured with the measuring rod given to the church? With the ten commandments alone we could not do it. We do do it with the message. Hence we conclude that the measuring rod is the special message now given to the church, which embraces all the truths peculiar to this time, including the ten commandments. By this message our attention has been called to the temple above, and through it the light and truth on this subject has come out. Thus we measure the temple and the altar, or the ministration connected with that temple, the work and position of our great High Priest; and we measure the worshipers with that portion of the rod which relates to character, namely, the ten commandments.

"But the court which is without the temple, leave out." As much as to say, The attention of the church is now directed to the inner temple, and the service there. Nothing pertaining to the court are of less consequence now. It is given to the Gentiles. Having thus introduced the Gentiles, the attention of the prophet is directed to the great feature of Gentile apostasy, namely, the treading down of the holy city forty and two months, during the period of papal supremacy. He is then directed to the condition of the word of God, the truth and the church during that time. Thus by an easy and natural transition, we are carried back into the past, and our attention called to a new series of events.

Verse 3. And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and three score days, clothed in sackcloth.

These days are the same as the forty-two months of the preceding verse, and refer to the period of papal triumph. During this time the witnesses are in a state of sackcloth, or obscurity, and God gives them power to endure and maintain their testimony through that dark and dismal period. But who or what are these witnesses?

Verse 4. These are the two olive trees, and the two candlesticks standing before the God of the earth."

Evident allusion is here made to Zech. iv, 3-6, where it is explained that the two olive trees are taken to represent the word of God; and David testifies, "The entrance of thy words giveth light," and, "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path." Written testimony is stronger than oral. Jesus declares of the Old-Testament scriptures, "They are they which testify of me." In this dispensation he says that his works bear witness of him. By what means do they bear witness of him? Ever since those disciples of his who were personally associated with him while on earth, passed off the stage of life, his works have borne witness of him only through the medium of the New Testament, where alone we find them recorded. This gospel of the kingdom, it was once declared, shall be preached in all the world for a witness to all nations, &c.

These declarations and considerations are sufficient to sustain the conclusion that the Old and New Testaments, one given in one dispensation, and the other in the other, are Christ's two witnesses.

Verse 5. And if any man will hurt them, fire shall proceed out of their mouth, and devoureth their enemies; and if any man will hurt them, he must in this manner be killed.

To hurt the word of God is to oppress, corrupt, or pervert its testimony, and turn people away from it. Against those who do this work, fire proceedeth out of their mouth to devour them; that is, judgment of fire is denounced in that word against such. It declares that they will have their portion at last in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone. Mal. iv, 1; Rev. xx, 15; xiii, 18, 19, &c.

Verse 6. These have power to shut heaven, that it rain not in the days of their prophecy; and have power over waters to turn them to blood, and to smite the earth with all plagues as often as they will.

In what sense have these witnesses power to shut heaven, turn waters to blood, and bring plagues on the earth? Elijah shut heaven that it rained not for three years and a half; but he did it by the word of the Lord. Moses by the word of the Lord turned the waters of Egypt to blood. And just as these judgments, recorded in their testimony, have been fulfilled, so will every threatening and judgment denounced by them against any people, surely be accomplished. "As often as they will:" as often as judgments are recorded on their pages to transpire, so often they will come to pass. An instance of this the world is yet to experience in the infliction of the seven last plagues.

Verses 7, 8. And when they shall have finished their testimony, the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them, and shall overcome them, and kill them. And their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified.

When they shall have finished their testimony, in their sackcloth state—at about the expiration of the 1260 years—the beast makes war upon them. The following historical facts fulfill this scripture; Between the years 1793 and 1798 the word of God was suppressed by national authority in infidel France. The Bible was made a dead letter by that power which was guilty of all the sins of Sodom and Egypt, and also of spiritually crucifying the Lord of glory.

Verses 9, 10. And they of the people and kindreds and tongues and nations, shall see their dead bodies three days and a half, and shall not suffer their dead bodies to be put into graves. And they that dwell upon the earth shall rejoice over them, and make merry, and shall send gifts one to another; because these two prophets tormented them that dwell on the earth.

The nations adjacent to France beheld the delictual work that was carried on in that country during the revolution, but would not join with it in the crusade against the Bible; hence it was not suffered to be put into the grave; that is, was not wholly extirpated from the earth. The merriment and congratulatory gifts among the French people at that time when they thought they had abolished Christianity, is expressed in verse 10.

Verses 11, 12. And after three days and a half, the spirit of life from God entered into them, and they stood upon their feet; and great fear fell upon them which saw them. And they heard a great voice from heaven, saying unto them, Come up hither. And they ascended up to heaven in a cloud; and their enemies beheld them.

Fulfillment. In just three years from the time the decree was passed suppressing the Bible, a resolution was offered in the national assembly for its restoration. That resolution lay upon the table just six months, when it was taken up and passed without a dissenting voice. France had become tired of the horrid state of anarchy and blood, in which no God, no Bible, and no Christianity were recognized, and with her own hands, after three years and a half (three and a half prophetic days), raised up the dead bodies of the witnesses, and set them upon their feet. About this time was commenced the formation of Bible societies; and the Bible, in fulfillment of verse 12, has since then enjoyed a state of exaltation never before attained.

Verse 13. And the same hour was there a great earthquake, and the tenth part of the city fell, and in the earthquake were slain of men seven thousand; and the remnant were affrighted, and gave glory to the God of heaven.

Earthquake: revolution. A tenth part of the city fell: France, a tenth division of the great papal city. And there were slain of men seven thousand; margin, names of men; titles of aristocracy and nobility.

"Down with the aristocrats!" was the cry of the Republican mob, as they leveled to the ground all titles of distinction. About seven thousand of these titles were abolished in that movement.

Verse 14. The second woe is past; and behold, the third woe cometh quickly.

The series of seven trumpets is here again resumed. The second woe ended with the sixth trumpet, Aug. 11, 1840; and the third woe occurs under the sounding of the seventh trumpet, which commenced in 1844; and "quickly" is the adverb that is used to warn us of its coming.

Verses 15-17. And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever. And the four and twenty elders, which sat before God on their seats, fell upon their faces and worshipped God, saying, We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, which art, and wast, and art to come; because thou hast taken to thee thy great power, and hast reigned.

From the 15th verse to the end of the chapter we seem to be carried over the ground from the sounding of the seventh angel to the end, three distinct times. Once in the verses last quoted. Here we are taken down from the commencement of the trumpet to the full establishment of the kingdom of God. In the next verses the prophet goes back and takes up other features of the scene as follows:

Verse 18. And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead that they should be judged, and that thou shouldst give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great: and shouldst destroy them which destroy the earth.

"The nations were angry:" Commencing with the wonderful revolution in Europe in 1848; and from that outburst of passion among the nations, their anger has been daily increasing ever since. Almost every paper of to-day shows the fearful degree to which it is now exalted.

"And thy wrath is come:" the wrath of God for the present generation, is filled up in the seven last plagues, chap. xv, 1, which consequently must here be referred to, and which are soon to be poured out upon the earth.

"And the time of the dead that they should be judged." The great mass of the dead, the wicked dead, are still in their graves after the visitation of the plagues, and the close of this dispensation. A work of judgment—of allotting to each one the punishment due—is carried on in reference to them by the saints in conjunction with Christ, during the one thousand years following the first resurrection. 1 Cor. vi, 2; Rev. xx, 4. It seems most natural to conclude that these are the ones, and this the time to which this scripture applies.

"And that thou shouldst give reward unto thy servants the prophets;" Full reward will be given the saints when they enter upon the possession of the new earth, but not before.

"And shouldst destroy them which destroy the earth:" Referring to the time when all the wicked will be forever devoured by those purifying fires which come down from God out of heaven upon them, and which melt and renovate the earth. 2 Pet. iii, 7: Rev. xx, 9. By this we learn that the seventh trumpet reaches over to the end of the one thousand years.

Momentous, startling, but yet joyous thought! that the trumpet is now sounding which is to see the final destruction of the wicked, and behold the saints clothed in a glorious immortality, safely insolated on the earth made new.

Once more the prophet carries us back to the commencement of the trumpet, in the following language;

Verse 19. And the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament: and there were lightnings, and voices, and thunderings, and an earthquake, and great hail.

Having introduced the seventh trumpet, the first great event that strikes the mind of the seer, is the transfer of the kingdom from earthly to heavenly rule. God takes to him his great power, and forever crushes the rebellion of this revolted earth, a work seemingly delayed, establishes Christ upon his appropriate throne, and remains himself supreme over all. This picture being completed, we are pointed back to the state of the nations, the judgments to fall upon them, and the final destiny of both saints and sinners. This field of vision being scanned, we are taken back once more, and our attention called to the close of the ministration of Christ, the last scene in the work of mercy for a guilty world. The temple is opened: the second apartment of the sanctuary is entered. We know it is the holy of holies that is here opened; for the ark is seen, and in that apartment alone the ark was deposited. This took place at the end of the 2300 days, when the sanctuary was to be cleansed, the time when the prophetic periods expired, and the seventh angel commenced to sound. Since then the people of God have seen by faith the open door in heaven, and the ark of God's testament there. They are endeavoring to keep every precept of the holy law written upon the tables therein deposited. They have received the reed, and are measuring the temple, the altar, and them that worship therein. They are uttering their last prophecy, before nations, peoples, and tongues. And the drama will soon close with lightnings, thunderings, voices, an earthquake, and great hail.

The Sanctuary.

"Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." Dan. viii, 14.

Impossession in the very midst of a prophecy of momentous and thrilling interest, a prophecy which spans the active centuries of the world's history, and takes hold upon the eternal destinies of the race, a prophecy which is minute in its delineations, and which the pen of inspiration has taken care in great part to distinctly explain—stands the quotation given at the head of these lines.

These words purport to be a revelation. They are given to impart information to the inquiring mind on the subject to which they refer. They were spoken in answer to the question, put not by mortal man but by an angel himself, "How long shall be the vision concerning the daily sacrifice and the transgression of desecration, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot?" They are included in that Scripture which Paul told Timothy was all given for the instruction, correction, and profit of the men of God.

But to be a revelation they must be understood. The commencement and end of the period of time here given must be clearly ascertained, or its inscription upon the sacred page is to no profit. It would be a waste of time and space for even inspiration to write out a prophetic period, both ends of which should be enshrouded in impenetrable fog. Zero might be written against even a divine dissertation on the subject of the sanctuary, unless we can know what is meant by that object. So would every mention of the cleansing of the sanctuary be darker than the ancient pagan oracles, could we not understand the time and nature of that work. From the character of God, the wants of mankind, and the object of his revelation to them, we therefore reason, that all these points are to be fully understood, that what is necessary on our part to insure success in gaining the knowledge we desire, is but to bring to the investigation a humble mind, a teachable spirit, and a sincere desire, not to have truth on our side, but to be ourselves on the side of truth; to follow where she may lead the way, not to endeavor to compel her to follow us, in the insane and tortuous wanderings of our own wills.

The time was, when these words, "Unto two thousand and three hundred days, then shall the sanctuary be cleansed," were household words with every happy believer in the Lord's soon coming. They were emblazoned on the shields of every soldier in the Advent ranks. They were joyfully uttered from many lips as the watchword of their most ardent desires, and their brightest hopes. But the times in this respect are strangely altered. Over a great portion of the Advent body a mysterious silence now reigns concerning this positive and prominent promise. The lips which once were its joyful heralds seem now to be sealed to its utterance. It seems to be studiously ignored, avoided, and set aside. But ignored and set aside it cannot be. The glowing prophecy of which it forms so conspicuous a part, and which must enter into every Advent theory, forbids that it should be passed by unnoticed. There are some things in the regions of prophetic truth as well as in the political world, which are "irrepressible;" and this is one of them. Men may not think to avoid it by giving their attention to other themes and passing it by in silence. In every theory, deserving the name of theory, which professes to show the present age of the world, and the nearness of the great consummation, it imperatively demands a place, and an explanation. It is the embarrassing specter, which, with unvarying constancy, confronts every theory which would endeavor, with ill-concealed dread of its just claims, to turn aside from the straight path to avoid its presence. And it is well that it should be so; for it claims no more than it deserves, it presents no demand which the lover of truth ought not promptly and willingly to grant.

What, therefore, has been the cause of this change? Why are not these words dwelt upon as formerly, with frequency and pleasure? Answer: the expectations based upon them have once been disappointed; and in the different methods adopted to account for that disappointment, lies the explanation of the different views and treatment of the sanctuary and the 2300 days.

Previous to the autumn of 1844, the Advent people were a unit. Zealous in the great doctrine of the soon coming of their Redeemer, clothed with the blessing and power of God, devoted, harmonious, united, they presented a spectacle which made the saints rejoice and the world wonder. But since the tenth of the seventh month, Jewish time, of that year, dissension and division have been, to a mournful degree, inscribed upon their history, and the paths they have taken have been various and divergent. The cause of this division must be in some question involved, in some point at issue, in the events of that memorable day.

The expectation then entertained was, that at that point of time the Lord would come. Arguments had been produced, invulnerable to all the attacks of our enemies, and entirely satisfactory to all lovers of the Advent doctrine at that time, that the 2300 days would end in 1844. From this as a starting point, the argument then ran thus: The prophecy asserts that then the sanctuary shall be cleansed. The sanctuary is the earth or some part of the earth. Its cleansing is to be by fire; but the renovation of the earth by fire is to take place only at the second coming of the Lord; therefore the Lord will come at the termination of the 2300 days. But the time passed by and the Lord did not come—their hopes were not realized. The grievous disappointment many an honest heart full keenly felt; and that a mistake had somewhere been made, none were disposed to deny. What was that mistake? or, in other words, what was the cause of our disappointment? It is here that a difference of opinion begins. But before discussing this difference, let it be remembered that God cannot be the author of the confusion that has existed since that time in the Advent body. All the various theories that have since sprung up, cannot every one be true; and yet every Adventist will admit that the truth of God at the present day, must be found in connection with the Advent doctrine. Every Adventist will admit that if God designs, previous to the coming of the Lord, to warn the world of that event, the great Advent movement of 1840-1844, in so far as it tended to arouse a slumbering world to the fact that we are living in the time of the end, and to warn them of the nearness of the close of probation, and the great consummation of all things, was in the order and purpose of God. He must, therefore, still have a people on the earth, as the result of that movement; he must still have a truth bearing some relation to that great work; and there must be some correct explanation of the great disappointment in our past history.

To the question, Why were those who looked for the Lord in 1844 so grievously disappointed? but two essential answers can be given: The first is, that we were correct in our views of the sanctuary, but wrong in the application of the time. The other is that we were wrong in our views of the sanctuary, but correct in our application of the time. The first is, in other words, that it is still true that the earth, or some portion of the earth, is the sanctuary, but that the 2800 days did not then expire, to demand its cleansing. The other is that the 2800 days did then expire, but that neither the earth nor any part of the earth, was the sanctuary which was then to be cleansed.

These answers, it will be seen, are at perfect antipodes to each other; but they have both been offered as an explanation of the disappointment under consideration, and in our search for the true solution of that question, must, therefore, both be examined. To the consideration of the first, then, let us now address our attention. Is it true that we were wrong in the application of the time, and that the 2800 days did not end in 1844? Those who hold that they did not, arrive at this conclusion by two different methods: The one class claim that the seventy weeks of Dan. ix, are no part of the 2800 days of Dan. viii, and that consequently the date of the former does not determine the date of the latter. They acknowledge that the date assigned by all Adventists previous to 1844, for the commencement of the seventy weeks, namely, v. c. 457, cannot be disproved; but as they are no part of the 2800 days, they furnish no clue to the commencement of that period. Where the 2800 days did commence, or what event marked their beginning they cannot tell. This much only, on this point, they profess to know; that they did not end in 1844, because the earth is the sanctuary, and the earth was not then burned. The other class acknowledge the infallibility of the arguments by which the seventy weeks are shown to be a part of the 2800 days, as held by all Adventists up to 1844, but deny that the date of their commencement was rightly placed in v. c. 457. Commencing at that point they would end in 1844; but this class, like the one first mentioned, contend that they could not then have ended, and for the very same reason, namely, because the earth is the sanctuary, and the earth was not then burned.

From this general survey of the subject one would be led to conclude that there was something all-potent in the theory that the earth is the sanctuary. From what it has done, we should suppose it had been able to intrench itself behind infallible evidence. It has led the great majority of those who were in the past Advent movement, while divided on many other points, to agree in this, that the 2800 days did not end in 1844. It has led them to make a full surrender of positions which were once acknowledged to be the ground and pillar of the Advent faith; positions which able men were led to take when their hearts were glowing with a newly-found and life-giving truth, and their intellects quickened by the outpouring of the Spirit and power of God; positions which passed unscathed through the most fiery ordeal of scrutiny and opposition to which, perhaps, it has ever been the lot of any truth to be subjected; positions which stood the test when the world was aroused to the subject of the Advent as never before nor since, when the opposition was called forth in all its strength, and worldly wisdom played its heaviest batteries against the unpopular but heaven-supported movement. The reasons which would lead men to abandon positions like these, should be infinitely weighty; but these have all been surrendered to the solitary view, which has thus been set up paramount to them all, that the earth is the sanctuary. Where is the mighty array of evidence by which this is sustained? For this it will be our province to inquire somewhat as we proceed.

But to return: Did the 2800 days end in 1844? This question involves the two others already noticed, viz., are the seventy weeks of Dan. ix a part of the 2800 days of Dan. viii? and are they rightly dated from v. c. 457?

1. Are the seventy weeks a part of the 2800 days? To determine this, the 8th and 9th chapters of Daniel must be considered in connection. In the 8th chapter Daniel tells us that he had a view of a ram, he-goat, and little horn. He saw the ram pushing his conquests in every direction, except toward the east. He was met by the he-goat from the west, who slew him, broke his horns, and trampled him in the dust. The notable horn of the goat was then broken, and immediately four rose up in its stead toward the four winds of heaven. From one of these there then came forth a horn, at first little, but afterward waxing exceeding great toward the east, the south, and the pleasant land. This horn waxed great, even to the host of heaven, practiced and prospered, and cast down the truth to the ground. A question of vital interest to the prophet, is now raised, respecting the duration of these oppressive and persecuting powers. The inquiry made is, How long shall be the vision concerning the daily sacrifice and the transgression of desolation to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot? And the answer that comes back in response to this question is, Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed. To the wonderful vision of the restless, conflicting, and persecuting powers already brought before the mind of the prophet, another wonder is thus added, namely, that of the long period of 2300 days.

Naturally enough, Daniel seeks for the meaning of all these things, and God, ever ready to grant all the lawful desires of his children, immediately ordains that his request shall be granted. A voice is heard, saying, "Make this man to understand the vision." A divine command is thus given that Daniel shall receive a full explanation of all these matters. We may be assured that that command will be obeyed to the letter. The one to whom is intrusted this charge is no less a personage than the angel Gabriel, and we shall expect that he will fulfill his mission, and that Daniel will give us a record of his instructions. Gabriel immediately proceeds to give in plain and unmistakable language, an explanation of the symbols of the ram, the goat, and little horn, explaining the two former to be the kingdoms of Persia and Grecia, and the little horn an exceeding great kingdom which should arise after them; which it is not necessary for us to stop here to argue, signifies the great power of Rome. Up to this point, it will be noticed, the angel has said nothing in explanation of the time or the period of 2300 days; but the view that has already been presented to Daniel of the rise and fall of three successive kingdoms of the earth, and the fact that during all this time the truth should be cast to the ground, and the people of God be held under the iron heel of persecution and oppression, is too much for the tender feelings and sensitive heart of the prophet, and he falls in view of it. Being sick certain days, Gabriel's mission of explaining the vision is necessarily suspended. When Daniel had sufficiently recovered to attend to his ordinary court duties, he expresses his sense of amazement and astonishment that still rested on his mind in view of the vision, but declares that Gabriel had not fulfilled his mission; for he did not yet understand it. These matters stand at the close of chapter viii. Now if Gabriel does not somewhere resume his charge, and complete the explanation of this vision, a portion of it remains forever unexplained, and he becomes a disobedient, or, which is the same thing, a fallen angel. But this cannot be; for we find him more than four hundred years after this, still in divine employ, and sent on sacred missions to Zacharias and to Mary. Luke i. Gabriel has therefore somewhere given Daniel further instruction on that part of his vision which remained unexplained, namely, the 2300 days. We are now prepared to look at the events of chapter ix.

From the opening of this chapter it is evident that Daniel had so far misunderstood the period of the 2300 days as to suppose that they terminated with the seventy years' captivity of his people, predicted by Jeremiah. He accordingly "set his face unto the Lord God," and sent forth his supplications that he would remember his promise, and cause his face to shine upon his sanctuary which was desolate. And God answered the prayer of the prophet, as he often answers the prayers of his people now, not by granting them their direct requests, but by giving them something else which he sees it is better for them to have. So he answered Daniel, not by fulfilling his request, but by correcting the misapprehension upon which it was founded. In the very midst of his supplications, suddenly a divine personage stands before him. "Gabriel," is the joyful exclamation of Daniel, "whom I had seen in the vision at the beginning, being caused to fly swiftly, touched me about the time of the evening oblation." Upon what errand had he come? "I am now come forth," says he, "to give thee skill and understanding." Understanding on what? That on which Daniel was evidently coming to wrong conclusions; that part of the "vision" seen "at the beginning," which he did not understand, but which of course Gabriel had been commanded to make him understand. And what was that? The period of time mentioned in that vision, and that only; for all else had been definitely explained. And how does he proceed to explain this point? He does it as follows: "Understand the matter, and consider the vision: Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people, and upon thy holy city." The word here rendered, determined, (chatak) signifies, literally, cut off. Cassius in his Hebrew Lexicon defines it thus: "Properly, to cut off; tropically, to divide; and so, to determine, to decree." The earliest versions, the Septuagint and Vulgate, give the single signification of "cutting off" to this verb.

Mark not the lines of thought by which these two visions of Dan. viii. and ix. are inseparably interwoven:

1. Reference is made in chap. ix. to the "vision at the beginning," in which Gabriel appeared to the prophet. This must refer to the vision of chap. viii., as that is the only previous vision in which that angel is said to have been present.

2. Gabriel was seen in the former vision: the same person appears again and elicits the mind of the prophet as to that vision.

3. Gabriel was commanded in chap. viii. to make Daniel understand the vision. Daniel declared at the close of the chapter that he did not understand it; but says Gabriel in chap. ix., "I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding. Understand the matter and consider the vision."

4. The point which was omitted in chap. viii., was time; all else was fully explained; and hence the angel in giving Daniel further understanding, as recorded in chap. ix., taken up that point, and that only: "Seventy weeks are determined" (cut off) &c.

5. Seventy weeks are said to be cut off from something; but there is no period given from which they can be taken, but the 2300 days of chap. viii. The seventy weeks must therefore be the first part of the 2300 days, and the date of these weeks must determine the date of those days. To deny this is to lay the word of God open to the serious imputation of gravely telling us that a certain period of time is cut off, but giving nothing from which it can be taken, and also of informing us that momentous events are to transpire at the end of 2300 days, but furnishing no conceivable point from which to date them.

In view of this conclusive testimony that the seventy weeks are a part of the 2300 days, is it strange that strong confidence should have existed on this point? As specimens of the noble utterances of the advocates of truth, touching this subject, irrefutable when uttered, and as good to-day as they were then, we present the following:

"We call attention to one fact which shows that there is a necessary 'connection' between the seventy weeks of the ninth chapter, and something else which precedes or follows it, called 'the vision.' It is found in the 23d verse: 'Seventy weeks are determined, or cut off, upon thy people . . . to seal up the vision,' &c. Now there are but two significations to the phrase 'seal up.' They are, first, 'to make secret,' and second, 'to make sure.' We care not now in which of these significations the phrase is supposed to be used. That is not the point now before us. Let the signification be what it may, it shows that the prediction of the seventy weeks necessarily relates to something else beyond itself, called 'the vision,' in reference to which it performs this work, 'to seal up.' To talk of its sealing up itself is as much of an absurdity as to suppose that Josephus was so much afraid of the Romans that he refrained from telling the world that he thought the fourth kingdom of Daniel was 'the kingdom of the Greeks.' It is no more proper to say that the ninth chapter of Daniel 'is complete in itself,' than it would be to say that a map which was designed to show the relation of Massachusetts to the United States, referred to nothing but Massachusetts. It is no more complete in itself than a bond given in security for a note, or some other document to which it refers, is complete in itself; and we doubt if there is a school-boy of fourteen in the land, of ordinary capacity, who would not on reading the ninth chapter, with an understanding of the clause before us decide that it referred to something distinct from itself, called the vision. What vision it is, there is no difficulty in determining. It naturally and obviously refers to the vision which was not fully explained to Daniel, and to which Gabriel calls his attention in the preceding verse—the vision of the 8th chapter. Daniel tells us that Gabriel was commanded to make him understand that vision (viii. 16). This was not fully done at that interview connected with the vision; he is therefore sent to give Daniel the needed 'skill and understanding,' to explain its 'meaning' by communicating to him the prediction of the seventy weeks." Advent Shield, 1844.

"We claim that the ninth of Daniel is an appendix to the eighth, and that the seventy weeks and the 2300 days or years commence together. Our opponents deny this." Signs of the Times, 1843.

"The grand principle involved in the interpretation of the 2300 days of Dan. viii. 14, is that the seventy weeks of Dan. ix. 24, are the first 480 days of the 2300 of the eighth chapter." Advent Shield, p. 40.

"If the connection between the seventy weeks of Dan. ix, and the 2300 days of Dan. viii, does not exist, the whole system is shaken to its foundation; if it does exist, as we suppose, the system must stand." Harmony of the Prophetic Chronology, p. 38.

Says the learned Dr. Hales, in commenting upon the seventy weeks, "This chronological prophecy was evidently designed to explain the foregoing vision, especially in its chronological part of the 2300 days."

What need we say more? The arguments which show the seventy weeks to be a part of the 2300 days, are all iron-clad and invulnerable. We may consider this question decided, and hereafter appeal to this decision as authoritative.

The following points, then, are now established: 1. That the seventy weeks are a part of the 2300 days. 2. That they are cut off from that period. 3. That consequently they are the first part of those days; and 4. That from the date of the seventy weeks, the 2300 days are to be reckoned. Hence they who have taken the position that the seventy weeks are no part of the 2300 days, have abandoned truth for error, and have taken ground that is untenable.

2. The inquiry now follows, Are those correct who remove the date of the seventy weeks from s. c. 457? The data which the Bible furnishes on this point are found in the further instruction of the angel to Daniel. After telling him that seventy weeks are cut off, and allotted to his people and their holy city, he speaks as follows: "Know therefore and understand that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem, unto the Messiah the Prince, shall be seventy weeks, and three-score and two weeks: the street shall be built again and the wall even in troublous times. And after three-score and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off, but not for himself; and the people of the prince that shall come, shall destroy the city and the sanctuary: and the end thereof shall be with a flood, and unto the end of the war desolations are determined. And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week; and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease." Dan. ix, 25-27.

Seventy weeks contain 490 days. But before proceeding to an application of this prophecy, a word may be necessary relative to the nature of the time here introduced: is it literal or symbolic?

1. It is a fact that 2300 literal days (but little over six years) would not cover the duration of a single power in this prophecy, much less extend over them all. Therefore the days must be symbols, even as the beasts and horns are shown to be symbols.

2. It is a fact that a symbolic or prophetic day, is one year. Eze. iv, 5, 6; Num. xiv, 34. Hence the 2300 days denote 2300 years; and the seventy weeks, or 490 days, 490 years.

3. The fact that the seventy weeks, as all admit, were fulfilled in 490 years, is a demonstration of this theory.

The seventy weeks were to date from the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem, and we have thus only to find that commandment, to ascertain their starting-point. But the prophecy is still more definite than this; for it gives us also the events which mark their termination. Sixty-nine of the seventy weeks were to extend to the Messiah the Prince, or, to the commencement of our Lord's ministry upon the earth. During the seventieth week he was to confirm the covenant with many. In the midst, or middle, of that week, he was to be cut off, and cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease; which can refer to nothing else but his crucifixion. The seventy weeks then must be so dated as to bring the commencement of Christ's public ministry, and his crucifixion at the commencement and middle, respectively, of the last week. And taking the widest difference of opinion there is only a variation of a few years involved in the question respecting the date of the crucifixion of Christ; so there can be but little difference as to the date from which the seventy weeks should be reckoned. And this whole question might be left to an argument on this point, since this has as much bearing upon the question at issue, as even the commandment itself from which it is to date.

But it is not difficult to find the commandment to restore Jerusalem, a commandment, too, which went forth at the precise time to make the prophecy perfectly harmonious throughout.

There are but four events which can be taken as answering to the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem. These are, 1. The decree of Cyrus for the re-building of the house of God, s. c., 530. 2. The decree of Darius for the prosecution of that work which had been hindered, s. c. 510. 3. The decree of Artaxerxes to Ezra, s. c. 457, Es. vii, and 4. The commission to Nehemiah from the same king in his twentieth year, s. c. 444, Neh. ii.

Dating from the first two of these decrees, the seventy weeks would fall many years short of reaching even to the Christian era; besides, they had reference principally to the restoration of the temple and the temple-worship, of the Jews, and not to the restoration of their civil state and polity, all of which must be intended by the expression, "to restore and to build Jerusalem." Thus falling to answer to the prophecy in any respect, these two decrees have never been brought into the controversy. The only question lies between the decrees which were granted to Ezra and to Nehemiah.

THE COMMISSIONS OF NEHEMIAH AND ESRA.

THE facts between which we are to decide here, are briefly these: In 457 B. C., a decree was granted to Esra by the Persian emperor, Artaxerxes Longimanus, to go up to Jerusalem with as many of his people as were minded to go with him. The commission granted him an unlimited amount of treasure, to beautify the house of God, procure offerings for its service, and to do whatever else might seem good unto them. It empowered him to ordain laws, set magistrates and judges, and execute punishment even unto death; in other words, to restore the Jewish state, civil and ecclesiastical, according to the law of God and the ancient customs of that people. Inspiration has seen fit to preserve this decree; and a full and accurate copy of it is given in the seventh chapter of the book of Esra.

Thirteen years after this, in the 20th year of the same king, A. C. 444, Nehemiah sought and obtained permission to go up to Jerusalem. Neh. II. Permission was granted him, but we have no evidence that it was anything more than verbal. It pertained to him individually, nothing being said about others' going up with him. The king asked him how long a journey he wished to make, and when he would return. He received letters to the governors beyond the river, to help him on his way to Judah, and an order on the keeper of the king's forest for timber for beams, &c. When he arrived at Jerusalem, he found rulers, priests, and nobles, and people already engaged in the work of building Jerusalem. Neh. II. 10. These were, of course, acting under the decree given to Esra thirteen years before. And finally, Nehemiah, having arrived at Jerusalem, finished the work he came to accomplish, in fifty-two days. Neh. vi. 15.

Now which of these commissions, Esra's or Nehemiah's, constitutes the decree for the restoration of Jerusalem, from which the seventy weeks are to be dated? It hardly seems that there can be any question on this point.

1. The grant to Nehemiah cannot be called a decree. It was necessary that a Persian decree should be put in writing, and signed by the king. Dan. vi. 8. Such was the document given to Esra; but Nehemiah had nothing of the kind: his commission being only verbal. If it be said that the letters given him constituted the decree, then the decree was issued not to Nehemiah, but to the governors beyond the river; besides, these would constitute a series of decrees, and not one decree, as the prophecy contemplates.

2. The occasion of Nehemiah's petition to the king for permission to go up to Jerusalem was the report which certain ones, returning, had brought from thence, that those in the province were in great affliction and reproach, that the wall of Jerusalem was also broken down, and the gates thereof burned with fire. Neh. I. Whose work were these walls and gates that were broken down and burned with fire? Evidently the work of Esra and his associates; for it cannot for a moment be supposed that the utter destruction of the city by Nebuchadnezzar 144 years previous to that time, would have been reported to Nehemiah as a matter of news, or that he would have considered it, as he evidently did, a fresh misfortune calling for a fresh expression of his grief. A decree, therefore, authorizing the building of these, had gone forth previous to the grant to Nehemiah.

3. If any should contend that Nehemiah's commission must be the decree, because the object of his request was that he might build the city, it is sufficient to reply as shown above, that gates and walls had been built previous to his going up; besides the work of building which he went to perform was accomplished in fifty-two days; whereas the prophecy allows for the building of the city, seven weeks, or forty-nine years.

4. There was nothing granted to Nehemiah, which was not embraced in the decree to Esra; while the latter had all the forms and conditions of a decree, and was vastly more ample in its provisions.

5. It is evident from the prayer of Esra, as recorded in chap. ix. 3, of his book, that he considered himself fully empowered to proceed with the building of the city and the wall; and it is evident that he understood, further, that the conditional prophecies concerning his people were then fulfilled, from the closing words of that prayer in which he says, "Should we again break thy commandments and join in affinity with the people of these abominations, wouldst thou not be angry with us till thou hadst consumed us, so that there should be no remnant nor escaping?"

6. Reckoning from the commission to Nehemiah, A. C. 444, the dates throughout are entirely disarranged; for from that point the troublous times which were to attend the building of the street and wall, did not last seven weeks, or forty-nine years. Reckoning from that date, the sixty-nine weeks, or 483 years, which were to extend to the Messiah the Prince, bring us to A. D. 80-40; but Jesus was baptized of John in Jordan and the voice of his Father heard from heaven declaring him his Son, in A. D. 27, thirteen years before. According to this calculation, the midst of the last, or seventieth, week, which is marked by the crucifixion, is placed in A. D. 44, but the crucifixion took place in A. D. 31, thirteen years previous. And lastly, the 70 weeks, or 490 years, dated from the twelfth of Artaxerxes, extend to A. D. 47, with absolutely nothing to mark their termination. Hence if that be the year, and the grant to Nehemiah the event, from which to reckon, the prophecy has proved a failure. As it is, it only proves that theory a failure, which dates the seventy weeks from Nehemiah's commission in the twentieth of Artaxerxes.

7. Will these dates harmonize if we reckon from the decree to Esra? Let us see. In this case 457 B. C. is our starting-point. Forty-nine years were allotted to the building of the city and the wall. On this point, Prideaux, Connee. Vol. i, p. 822, says: "In the 45th, 46th year of Darius Nothus, ended the first seven weeks of the seventy weeks of Daniel's prophecy. For then the restoration of the church and State of the Jews in Jerusalem and Judaea was fully finished, in that last act of reformation which is recorded in the thirteenth chapter of Nehemiah, from the twenty-third verse to the end of the chapter, just forty-nine years after it had been commenced by Esra, in the seventh year of Artaxerxes Longimanus."

So far all is harmony. Let us apply the measuring-rod of the prophecy still further. Sixty-nine weeks, or 483 years, were to extend to the Messiah the Prince. Dating from B. C. 457, they end in A. D. 27. And what took place then? Luke thus informs us: "Now when all the people were baptized, it came to pass that Jesus also, being baptized, and praying, the heaven was opened, and the Holy Ghost descended in a bodily shape like a dove upon him, and a voice came from heaven which said, Thou art my beloved Son; in thee I am well pleased." Luke iii, 21, 22, margin A. D. 27. After this, Jesus came "into Galilee preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying, The time is fulfilled." The time here mentioned must have been some specific, definite, and predicated period; but no prophetic period can be found then terminating, except the sixty-nine weeks of the prophecy of Daniel, which were to extend to Messiah the Prince. The Messiah had now come, and with his own lips announced the termination of that period which was to be marked by his manifestation.

Here again is indisputable harmony. But further: Messiah was to confirm the covenant with many for one week. This would be the last week of the seventy, or the last seven years of the 490. In the midst of the week, the prophecy informs us, he should cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease. These Jewish ordinances, pointing to the death of Christ, could only cease at the cross; and there they did virtually end, though not literally till A. D. 70. After three-score and two weeks, according to the record, the Messiah was to be cut off. It is the same as if it had read, And after three-score and two weeks, in the midst of the seventieth week, shall Messiah be cut off and cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease. Now, as the word, midst, here means middle, according to abundance of authority which we might produce, if necessary, the crucifixion is definitely located in the middle of the seventieth week.

It now becomes an important point to determine in what year the crucifixion took place. This question is decided by the following testimony: "The Saviour attended but four passovers, at the last of which he was crucified. Jno. ii, 13; v, 1; vi, 4; xiii, 1. This could not bring the crucifixion later than A. D. 31, as recorded by Aurelius Cassiodorus, a respectable Roman senator, about A. D. 514; 'In the consulate of Tiberius Caesar Aug. v, and Aelius Sejanus [v. c. 784, A. D. 81], our Lord Jesus Christ suffered on the eighth of the calends of April.' In this year and in this day, says Dr. Hales, agree also the council of Nice, A. D. 188 or 198, the Alexandrian Chronicle, Maximus Neosolus, Nicephorus Constantinus, Cedrenus; and in this year but on different days, concur Eusebius and Epiphanius, followed by Kehler, Bucher, Patinus and Potavius." "It is recorded in history that the whole time of our Saviour's teaching was three years and a half, which is the half of a week of years."

Here, then, are thirteen credible authorities, locating the crucifixion of Christ in the spring of A. D. 31. We may therefore set this down as a fixed fact, as the most cautious or the most skeptical could require nothing more. This being in the middle of the last week, we have simply to reckon backward three and a half years to find where the 69 weeks ended, and forward from that point, three and a half years, to find the termination of the whole period. Thus, going back from the crucifixion, A. D. 31, spring, three and a half years, we find ourselves in the autumn of A. D. 27, where, as we have seen, the 69 weeks ended and Christ commenced his public ministry. And going from the crucifixion forward three and a half years, we are brought to the autumn of A. D. 34, as the grand terminating point of the whole period of the seventy weeks. This date is marked by the martyrdom of Stephen, the formal rejection of the gospel of Christ by the Jewish Sanhedrin in the persecution of his disciples, and the turning of the apostles to the Gentiles. Acts ix, 1-18. And these are just the events which we should expect to take place, when that period which was cut off for the Jews, and allotted to them as a peculiar people, should fully expire.

A word respecting the date of the seventh of Artaxerxes, and the array of evidences on this point is complete. Was the seventh of Artaxerxes, B. C. 457? For all those who can appreciate the force of facts, the following testimony will be sufficient here:

"The Bible gives the data for a complete system of chronology, extending from the creation to the birth of Cyrus—a clearly ascertained date. From this period downward we have the undisputed canon of Ptolemy, and the undoubted era of Nabonassar, extending below our vulgar era. At the point where inspired chronology leaves us, this canon of undoubted accuracy commences. And thus the whole arch is spanned. It is by the canon of Ptolemy that the great prophetic period of seventy weeks is fixed. This canon places the seventh year of Artaxerxes in the year B. C. 457; and the accuracy of this canon is demonstrated by the concurrent agreement of more than twenty eclipses. This date we cannot change from B. C. 457, without first demonstrating the inaccuracy of Ptolemy's canon. To do this it would be necessary to show that the large number of eclipses by which its accuracy has been repeatedly demonstrated have not been correctly computed; and such a result would unsettle every chronological date, and leave the settlement of epochs and the adjustment of eras entirely at the mercy of every dreamer, so that chronology would be of no more value than mere guess work. As the seventy weeks must terminate in A. D. 34, unless the seventh of Artaxerxes is wrongly fixed, and as that cannot be changed without some evidence to that effect, we inquire, What evidence marked that termination? The time when the apostles turned to the Gentiles harmonizes with that date better than any other which has been named. And the crucifixion in A. D. 31, in the midst of the last week, is sustained by a mass of testimony which cannot be easily invalidated."—Id. Herod.

From the facts above set forth, we see that reckoning the 70 weeks from the decree given to Ezra in the 7th of Artaxerxes, B. C. 457, there is the most perfect harmony throughout. The important and definite events of the manifestation of the Messiah at his baptism, the commencement of his public ministry, the crucifixion, and the turning away from the Jews to the Gentiles with the proclamation of the new covenant, all come in, in their exact place, and like a bright galaxy of messengers of light, cluster around to set to their seal to the prophecy and make it sure.

With the seventy weeks we are now done; but there remains a longer period and other important events to be considered. The seventy weeks are but the first 490 years of the 2300. Take 490 from 2300, and there remain 1810. The 490, as we have seen, ended in the autumn of A. D. 84. If to this date we now add the remaining 1810 years, we shall have the termination of the whole period. Thus, to A. D. 84, autumn, add 1810, and we have A. D., autumn, eighteen hundred and forty-four. Thus speedily and surely do we find the termination of the 2300 days, when once the 70 weeks have been located.

The query may here arise in some mind, how the days can be extended to the autumn of 1844, if they commence in 457 B. C., as it requires only 1848 years more, to make the whole number of 2300. Attention to one fact will clear this point of all difficulty; and that is, that it takes 457 full years before Christ, and 1843 full years after, to make 2300; so that if the period commenced with the very first day of 457, it would not terminate till the very last day of 1843. Now it will be evident to all that whatever part of the year 457 had passed away before the 2300 days commenced, just so much of the year 1844 must pass away before they would end. We therefore inquire, at what point in the year 457, are we to commence to reckon? From the fact that the first 49 years were allotted to the building of the street and wall, we learn that the period is to be dated, not from the starting of Esra for Babylon, but from the actual commencement of the work at Jerusalem; which it is not probable could be earlier than the seventh month (autumn) of 457, as he did not arrive at Jerusalem till the fifth month of that year. Ezra vii, 9. The whole period would therefore extend to the seventh month, autumn, Jewish time, of 1844.

The question respecting the time has now been examined. The first answer returned to the question of our disappointment in 1844, namely, that we were mistaken in the time, has been reviewed. We have seen that those have fallen into egregious error who have endeavored to disconnect the 70 weeks from the 2300 days, or to remove their date from B. C. 457. The 70 weeks are an inseparable part of the 2300 days. To endeavor to disconnect them is to outrage every principle of interpretation, and to brand a portion of the word of God as aimless and absurd. Railers at God, and despisers of his word, may take such a position as this, but Christians, never!

We have found the decree for the restoration of Jerusalem, and the date at which it went forth; and no system of sophistry exists on earth by which it can be made to appear that the 2300 days did not commence at that point and end in 1844.

Thus the original dates come forth vindicated from every encounter; their armor of defense is not marred or broken, but only polished to a brighter luster, by every conflict; and they still stand, as they heretofore have stood, sole and absolute masters of this field of controversy.

Our opponents on this view of the prophetic periods, have been wont in years past to meet us like this: "The 2300 days have not ended because the time has passed. Why the time passed in 1844, without the consummation of our hopes, we acknowledge to be a mystery, but the passing of the time is proof that the 2300 days have not ended."

Time, however, is no respecter of persons nor of theories; and with the formidable scythe which he is represented as carrying, he sometimes demolishes in the most summary manner the grotesque and gossamer theories of men, however dear they may be to their authors and defenders. It is so here. Heedless of the wild contentions of those who would vainly compel him to stop and fulfill their daring predictions, he has kept on the swift but even tenor of his way until—what? every limit is passed to which the 2300 days can be extended; and thus he has demonstrated that those days have passed. Let not this point be overlooked. Setting aside for a moment the arguments by which they are shown to have ended in 1844, and letting them date from any point where there is the least shadow of ground for thus placing them, or from which any one has ever dreamed of dating them, and the utmost limit to which they would extend has gone by. They cannot possibly be dated at any point which would bring their termination so late as the present time. We therefore say again, Those days have ended!

Adventists! Have you been wont to say, we know that the days have not ended, because the time has passed? It is now our turn to speak. Time has at length arrayed himself on our side of the controversy, and we reply, We know that the days have ended, because time has passed—passed beyond the utmost limits that can be assigned for those days. All then that we ask is that you need to face, and admit that those days, as revelation, and history, and time, have demonstrated, are in the past.

But perhaps you are thinking of the conclusion that immediately follows from this admission; for if the days are in the past, and the prophecy holds good, the sanctuary, whatever it is, is being cleansed. Not if that is so, the earth cannot be the sanctuary; for no physical change has come over the earth, except, perhaps, increasing signs of infirmity and old age; and no moral change, except a deeper plunge into wickedness and sin, on the part of its fast degenerating sons and daughters.

If time has demonstrated that the days are in the past, it has also demonstrated that the earth is not the sanctuary—the very point claimed by those who offer this fact as the explanation of our disappointment in 1844. The inquiry then, What is the sanctuary? is now fairly in hand.

The Sanctuary.

WHAT IS THE SANCTUARY?

This is exclusively a Bible question. With the testimony of the Bible only, then, have we to do. The object of our inquiry can only be, What does the Bible reveal to us respecting the sanctuary? And we shall find its testimony neither brief nor obscure on this important subject. The word occurs in the inspired Scriptures one hundred and forty-six times; and more times than this does it offer us instruction by prediction, definition, or historic record, concerning this wonderful object.

Perhaps no language can better introduce this subject than that of the apostle Paul in his letter to the Hebrews. In chap. viii, he contrasts the two covenants, the first and the second, the old and the new, under the latter of which we now live. In chap. ix, he then speaks as follows:

"Then verily the first covenant had also ordinances of divine service, and a worldly sanctuary. For there was a tabernacle made; the first wherein was the candlestick, and the table, and the shew-bread; which is called the sanctuary; and after the second veil, the tabernacle which is called the holiest of all; which had the golden censer, and the ark of the covenant overlaid round about with gold, wherein was the golden pot that had manna, and Aaron's rod that budded, and the tables of the covenant; and over it the cherubims of glory, shadowing the mercy-seat," &c. Ver. 1-5.

Let this language of the apostle be carefully considered. It both introduces and settles one great division of this question. It tells us definitely what, for a time, constituted the sanctuary of the Lord. During the period covered by the first covenant, while the tabernacle, ordained as thus plainly described, was in existence, there can be, in the face of these words of Paul, no controversy as to what constituted the sanctuary. Turning to the records of those times, we find a more definite mention of this singular structure, which from its bearings and relations in the temple of divine truth, deserves to be examined with absorbing interest.

Go back to the time when Israel, crowned with deliverance, stood on the shore of the Red Sea, while the Egyptians were perishing at their feet in the returning and angry waters. Listen to that song of triumph which Moses sings, and mark this language, "The Lord is my strength and song, and has become my salvation; he is my God, and I will prepare him an habitation," Ex. xv, 2. In this we receive the first intimation of that building that was afterward to be erected by the direction of the Lord, that he might dwell among his people. In verse 17 of the same chapter, is the first occurrence of the word, sanctuary, which we find in the Bible.

Pursuing the sacred record, we find in the twenty-fifth chapter of Exodus and onward, more definite information respecting the sanctuary. Here we read the commission which God gave to Moses for the erection of this building. In the third month after their departure from Egypt, the children of Israel came to the wilderness of Sinai. There Moses was summoned up into the mount, to an audience with his Maker. Forty days and nights were consumed in that memorable interview. During this time Moses was shown the pattern of the sanctuary, and all the sacred vessels, and received full instructions in relation thereto.

Into a particular description of the tabernacle, as erected by Moses, we need not here enter. It is minutely set forth in Exodus, chaps. xxv-xxxi. Suffice it to say that it was a structure of extraordinary magnificence, formed of upright boards overlaid with gold. It was thirty cubits in length, about ten in width, and ten in height. At the east end, which was the entrance, there were five pillars of shittim wood, overlaid with gold, having hooks of gold and sockets of brass. Over the tabernacle, thus erected, were thrown four different coverings. The first and inner covering was composed of fine linen, embroidered with figures of cherubim in blue, purple, and scarlet. By this would be formed a ceiling of surpassing beauty and magnificence. The second covering was made of goat's hair; the third of ram's skins dyed red; and the fourth and last of badger's skins. A richly embroidered curtain suspended from the five pillars overlaid with gold, that stood at the entrance upon the east, formed the door of the tabernacle.

The sacred tent was divided into two apartments by means of a veil suspended from four pillars of shittim wood, overlaid with gold, set in sockets of silver. In what proportion the sanctuary was thus divided we are not informed; but it was undoubtedly the same that was afterward observed in the temple, 1 Kings vi, in which two-thirds of the space was allotted to the first apartment, and the remaining one-third to the second.

In the first apartment or holy place were three things worthy of notice: the golden candlestick, the table of shew-bread, and the altar of incense. The candlestick was of solid gold, the table of shew-bread and the altar of incense, of shittim wood, but overlaid throughout with pure gold. In the second apartment, or most holy place were also three things to claim attention: the ark, the mercy-seat, and the cherubim. The ark was a chest of shittim wood, two cubits and a half in length, a cubit and a half in breadth, and the same in height. It was overlaid within and without with pure gold. The mercy-seat was the cover of the ark, of solid gold, and the cherubim were likewise of pure gold, on either end of the mercy-seat. It was above the ark, over the mercy-seat, between the cherubim, that God manifested his presence, and from whence he communicated with his people. Ex. xxv, 22. And so David prays, "Thou that dwellest between the cherubim, shine forth." 1 Ps. lxxv, 1.

It will be observed that neither the holy nor most holy place, had any window; hence in the first apartment there was need of the candlestick with its seven lamps; and in regard to the second, where God dwelt, Solomon said, The Lord said that he would dwell in the thick darkness. 1 Kings viii, 12.

How impressive must have been the scene presented by the interior of this building. There were its walls, having all the appearance of massive and solid gold, and reflecting in a thousand directions the light of the seven lamps of the golden candlestick; there were the table of shew-bread, and altar of incense, glittering in its light like burnished gold; and there was the curtain that formed the gorgeous ceiling, with its mystic figures of cherubim in blue, and purple, and scarlet, adding its beauty to the brilliant scene. While in, beyond the second veil, was the glorious Shekinah, or visible manifestation of God's glory, into the awful presence of which, except the high priest's entrance once every year, no man could venture and live.

Before the door of the tabernacle were placed the brazen laver, and the altar of burnt offering, and around the whole was erected the court with its curtains of fine twined linen.

In the second year after Israel had departed from Egypt, in the first month, on the first day of the month, the tabernacle was reared up. And Moses spread abroad the tent over the tabernacle, and he put the testimony (the tables of the ten commandments) into the ark, and the morey-seal upon it, and brought it into the tabernacle, and set up the vail; he placed the table of show-bread and golden candlestick in the first apartment, and lighted the lamps before the Lord; he put the golden altar of incense before the vail, and burnt sweet incense thereon; and on the altar, before the door of the tabernacle, he offered the burnt offering and the meat offering as the Lord commanded. Then a cloud covered the tent of the congregation, and the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle. Ex. xl. He had now taken possession of his dwelling place, in the midst of his people.

We have now before us the sanctuary as Moses erected it in the wilderness of Sinai, 1490 years before Christ. With its ark of the covenant, its morey-seal, and its glorious Shakinah, it constituted the heart and center of Israel's religious worship, under that typical system.

The children of Israel being at this time in the period of their wanderings, the sanctuary was first given to them was adapted to their condition. It was so constructed that it could be easily taken down and borne with them in their journeys, and immediately erected wherever the divine presence, which accompanied them in a cloud by day, and a pillar of fire by night, should direct them to pitch their camp. Num. ix, 15-23.

The Levites were consecrated to the service of the sanctuary: and were commanded to bear it and all its sacred vessels, when the camp set forward. Thus it was with them during the forty years in which they journeyed in the wilderness. During this time, this building which God claimed as his dwelling place, and where his service was performed, is fifty-six times called the sanctuary, in the following instances: Ex. xxv, 8; xxx, 18, 24; xxxvi, 1, 8, 4, 6; xxxviii, 24-27; Lev. iv, 6; v, 16; x, 4; xii, 4; xvi, 83; xix, 30; xx, 8; xxi, 12 (twice), 28 (plural); xxvi, 2; xxvii, 8, 25; Num. iii, 28, 81, 82, 88, 47, 50; ix, 12, 15 (twice), 16; vii, 0, 13, 19, 25, 81, 87, 43, 49, 65, 61, 67, 78, 79, 85, 86; viii, 10; x, 21; xviii, 1, 3, 6, 16; xix, 20.

From its entrance into Canaan, it is easy to trace the history of this building, till it was embodied in the larger and more glorious structure of the temple of Solomon, when the children of Israel had become settled in their own land, and the sanctuary had a permanent location. We trace it down to the period when it was overthrown by Nebuchednessar, and suffered to remain in ruins during the 70 years of the Babylonian captivity. From the time it was rebuilt by Zerubbabel, at the close of that captivity, we follow it to the days of Herod, by whom it was taken down and rebuilt, greatly enlarged and beautified, u. c. 19. We come to the days of the Saviour, who solemnly affirmed to the Jews, that their house was left unto them desolate. We behold its beautiful vail which divided between the holy and most holy place, rent in twain from top to bottom, amid the solemn scenes of the crucifixion, when the great sacrifice for the world was offered up, which rendered null and void all the typical services of the earthly temple. We trace it, after this event, through its brief and nominal existence, to the year A. D. 70, when the ungovernable violence of the Roman soldiers involved it in a ruin from which it has never since arisen.

This was the sanctuary of the first covenant. There can be no doubt on this point with any who yet have confidence in the Bible, either as a divine revelation, or even as a secular history. It is directly declared to be the sanctuary, by the apostle Paul; and of the one hundred and forty-two times of the occurrence of the word in the Old Testament, it refers in almost every instance to this building. Here, then, we occupy common ground with all parties. We have here a common basis on which to build further arguments on this subject. It is in the question, What is the sanctuary of the new covenant? or, in other words, What is now the sanctuary? that the great controversy is involved. This is our next inquiry. And we think we shall find the sanctuary of this covenant no less definitely defined and located than the sanctuary of the first.

The Sanctuary.

THE SANCTUARY OF THE NEW COVENANT.

We have referred to the old covenant and taken a brief survey of its sanctuary, the center of the typical worship of that system. But that covenant was not always to last. The Lord commissioned his prophet to declare, "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah." Jer. xxxi, 31. This covenant was confirmed by our Lord according to the prediction, Dan. ix 27, the last seven years of the 490, or the last week of the seventy—by himself in person the first half of that week, and after his crucifixion, by his apostles the remainder of that term. Heb. ii, 3. Only 490 years of the long period of 2300 were allotted to the first covenant, and the Jewish church. At the end of that period the act of confirming the covenant with that people, had, as prophesied, been finished, the services of that sanctuary had, virtually, forever ceased, and the Jewish church no longer had pre-eminence as the children of God above any other people. The sanctuary prolonged even its nominal existence but a few years after this; but yet 1810 years of the 2300 remained; and it is at the end of this period that the sanctuary of Dan. viii, 14, is to be cleansed. This must refer to the sanctuary of the new covenant; hence the argument is conclusive that this covenant has a sanctuary with its ordinances of divine service also.

As we pursue our inquiries to ascertain what constitutes the sanctuary of this dispensation, the opinions that already exist on this subject, demand a word of attention. If they are sound and true, there is no occasion to deviate from them; and unless they can be shown to be fallacious, the introduction of any new position will appear not only without occasion but without warrant.

Should the reader inquire for the positions that have obtained more or less credit upon this question, four prominent views would be set before him. It is claimed by some that this earth is now the sanctuary. Others, of more enlarged views, contend that this earth is but the first apartment of the sanctuary, while all heaven is the second. A third class claim that it is the land of Canaan which is now the sanctuary; while a fourth take the word in a more spiritual, but no less unauthoritative sense, and apply it to the church.

If we would form correct views on this question, we must keep constantly before us the relation which the sanctuaries of the two covenants sustain to each other. By keeping our eyes steadfastly fixed upon this, it will be almost as hard to arrive at wrong conclusions, as it would be easy were we to lose sight of it.

To this end we call attention to the numerous instances in which the worldly sanctuary is declared to be a pattern of the true. "Let them make me a sanctuary," said the Lord to Moses, "according to all that I show thee, after the pattern of the tabernacle, and the pattern of all the instruments thereof, even so shall ye make it." Ex. xxv, 8, 9. "And look that thou make them after their pattern which was showed thee in the mount." Verse 40. "And thou shalt rear up the tabernacle according to the fashion thereof which was showed thee in the mount." Chap. xxvi, 80. "As it was showed thee in the mount so shall they make it." Chap. xxvii, 8. "Our fathers had the tabernacle of witness in the wilderness, as he had appointed, speaking unto Moses that he should make it according to the fashion that he had seen." Acts vii, 44. "While as the first tabernacle was yet standing, which was a figure for the time then present, in which were offered both gifts and sacrifices," &c. Heb. ix, 8, 9. "For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true." Verse 24.

From this testimony but one conclusion can be drawn; namely, that the true sanctuary is the pattern from which the earthly tabernacle was erected: and that whatever object we may find of which this earthly sanctuary was a true type or figure, that object is the sanctuary of the better covenant under which we now live, and the cleansing of which the unerring word of the Lord locates at the termination of the 2300 days. We are therefore prepared for the following questions:

1. IN THE EARTH THE SANCTUARY? To this question we reply emphatically in the negative. It is not. This fact was made apparent in the argument on the 2300 days, in which it was shown that those days have ended, but that yet nothing is done toward a renovation of the earth, either moral or physical. But there are other considerations showing the absurdity of the claim that the earth is the sanctuary which should not be passed by unnoticed: 1. The word sanctuary occurs 140 times in the Bible and is not in a single instance applied to the earth. Now if it was really the intention of the Holy Ghost to teach us that the earth was the sanctuary, it seems that it ought, at least once, to have called it so. 2. The definition of the term, sanctuary, according to Walker, Webster, Cruden and the Bible, is, A holy place, a sacred place, a dwelling place for the Most High: but every one knows that the earth is neither a dwelling place for God, nor yet a holy, or sacred place. This fact alone should forever exclude the idea of its being the sanctuary. But 3. Take into consideration the typical and antitypical natures of the sanctuary, and the absurdity of this view will appear in a still stronger light. The earthly sanctuary was a type or figure of the true; but pray tell us in what respect it prefigured this rolling earth. Can it for a moment be supposed that Moses, when in the mount, was shown this earth, as the pattern from which he was to erect the sanctuary, and that the nearest resemblance he could make of it, was an oblong building ten cubits in width, and three times that number in length? And we might pursue this train of thought still further and inquire, What on the earth answers as antitype to the golden candlestick? What to the altar of incense? And what to the table of shew-bread?

But we need not spend time longer to write, nor trouble the reader longer to read, concerning a view so manifestly absurd.

But if the view that the earth is the entire sanctuary involves such apparent folly, what shall we say of that view which makes it only a part of that building? Both these views are indeed of the earth, earthly. The absurdity of the former is equally involved in the latter, while this goes a degree deeper, in making all heaven only the second apartment, and may be described, in the language of Pollok, as, "A strange belief, that leans its idiot back on folly's topmost twig." We will not detain the reader with any view so baseless and chimerical.

2. IS THE LAND OF CANAAN THE SANCTUARY? The arguments which show that the earth is not the sanctuary of the new covenant, bear with equal force against the view which would claim that honor for the land of Canaan. But as there are, out of the 140 times of the occurrence of the word sanctuary in the Bible, some two or three texts which are urged in favor of this view, we will examine them and see if they will bear the meaning which they have been supposed to convey. The first is Exodus xv, 17, and reads as follows: "Thou shalt bring them in and plant them in the mountain of thine inheritance in the place O Lord, which thou hast made for thee to dwell in, in the sanctuary, O Lord, which thy hands have established." Before it is decided however that this text fixes the application of the sanctuary to the land of Canaan, let the Psalmist's commentary on this very passage be taken into consideration. He says; "And he led them on safely, so that they feared not, but the sea overwhelmed their enemies. And he brought them to the border of his sanctuary, even to this mountain which his right hand had purchased, and he built his sanctuary like high palaces, like the earth which he hath established forever." Ps. lxxviii, 53, 54, 55.

It will be observed that here David speaks of the same events to which Moses referred. There is just this difference in their records; what Moses writes is a prediction. The Psalmist, living after the events had been fulfilled, speaks of them as a matter of history. Now what David gives as a fulfillment will surely be a good and safe commentary on the prediction; and while Moses did not say that the mountain of God's inheritance was the sanctuary, the Psalmist plainly declares that that mountain was only the border of the sanctuary, and that there God built his sanctuary like high palaces, like the earth which he hath established forever. That any one in view of this language should confound the sanctuary with the mountain on which it was built, is a marvelous exhibition of mental confusion.

Listen also to the distinction between the land of Canaan and the sanctuary as pointed out by a king of Judah: "Art not thou our God, who didst drive out the inhabitants of this land before thy people Israel, and gavest it to the seed of Abraham thy friend forever? And they dwelt therein and have built thee a sanctuary therein for thy name, saying, If, when evil comes upon us, as the sword, judgment or pestilence, or famine, we stand before this house, and in thy presence (for thy name is in this house) and cry unto thee in our affliction, then thou wilt hear and help." 2 Chron. xx, 7-9.

There is another text claimed by some as proof that Canaan is the sanctuary: Isa. lxxii, 18. "The people of thy holiness have possessed it but a little while our adversaries have trodden down thy sanctuary." It is by no means certain that the land is here referred to, since anything else may be trodden down as well as the land. Nothing therefore but an inference can be drawn from it: and there is one plain fact which is sufficient to annihilate the claim: When God's people were driven out of the land of Canaan (as the prophet here predicts, using the past tense for the future) they were not only dispossessed of their inheritance, but the sanctuary of God built in that land was laid in ruins. This fact is plainly stated in 2 Chron. xxxvi, 17-20, which divests the passage of all mystery.

Only one text more remains to be urged in favor of the land of Canaan. As such we present it. "The glory of Lebanon shall come unto thee, the fir-tree, the pine-tree and the box together, to beautify the place of my sanctuary; and I will make the place my feet glorious." Isa. lx, 13. Had the distinction ever been kept in view, between the sanctuary and the place of the sanctuary, we should have had no occasion to notice this text. But if people persist in ignoring this distinction, we would remind them that the same text calls the place of the sanctuary, the place of the Lord's feet also; and if by being the place of the sanctuary it becomes the sanctuary itself, by being the place of his feet, it becomes, by parity of reasoning, his feet also. When any just ground can be shown for avoiding this conclusion, it will be time to notice the passage further. We can only conclude then, that the land of Canaan is not the sanctuary, but that it is simply the place where the typical sanctuary was located.

3. IS THE CHURCH THE SANCTUARY? We answer, It is not. Do you ask for our reasons? One fact alone is sufficient to annihilate the idea: It is never once in the word of God called the sanctuary. Another definite object is invariably called the sanctuary, and the church is uniformly connected with that object as its host or worshipers; the sanctuary itself being the place of that worship, or toward which their prayer was directed. There is one text that may be urged as this point and we therefore notice it: "When Israel went out of Egypt, the house of Jacob from a people of strange language, Judah was his sanctuary, and Israel his dominion." Ps. cxxiv, 4. This would however only prove that one of the twelve tribes was the sanctuary and that the whole church was not. But if the fact be remembered that God chooses Jerusalem which was in Judah, as the place of his sanctuary, we think the following from another psalm will fully explain the connection between Judah and the sanctuary of God, and show that Judah was the tribe with which God designed to locate his habitation: "But chose the tribe of Judah, the mount Zion which he loved. And he built his sanctuary like high palaces (see 1 Chron. xxix, 1) like the earth which he hath established forever." Ps. lxxviii, 68-69. But could a single text be produced in favor of the view that the church is the sanctuary, it could not even then be the sanctuary of Dan, viii, 13, 14; for the church is there represented by the word "host." This none will deny. "To give both the host and the sanctuary to be trodden under foot." The church and the sanctuary then, are two things.

The Sanctuary.

We have now seen that the earth is not the sanctuary; that the land of Canaan is not the sanctuary, but simply the place where the typical sanctuary was located; and that the church is not the sanctuary, but simply the worshippers connected with it. We now inquire,

5. WHAT IS THE SANCTUARY? Turn to the Revelation given through John, and while bearing continually in mind that he is looking not to any spot on earth, nor to the church, but into heaven, mark some of the objects which he there beholds. First he beholds a door opened in heaven. Chap. iv, 1. Mark, he does not say that he saw heaven opened, but he saw a door opened in heaven. He then sees seven lamps of fire burning before the throne. Verse 5. He beholds an angel with a golden censer offering incense upon the golden altar which was before the throne. Chap. viii, 3. And again, he sees the temple of God opened in heaven, (mark, he does not see heaven opened, but the temple of God opened in heaven) and there beholds the ark of his testament. Chap. xi, 19. But we know nothing of the golden candlestick with its seven lamps, the golden censer, the altar of incense, and the ark of the testament, only as they are connected with the sanctuary. To the sanctuary all these instruments owed their existence. Had there been no sanctuary, these would never have been formed. From this fact may we not reason concerning the heavenly things. As here on earth, these instruments resulted from the sanctuary, so when we learn from the language of John that such instruments exist in heaven, may we not more than infer that there is a sanctuary there, and that these are its sacred vessels; more especially when John speaks definitely of a heavenly temple, and tells us that in this temple these things were seen. Are not these the patterns from which the earthly vessels were formed? and is there not in heaven a literal sanctuary, also, the antitype of the earthly building?

But an abundance of direct testimony waits to come in on this subject. That the reader is acquainted with the first seven chapters of the book of Hebrews, we take for granted. Paul there discommends upon the new covenant and the superiority of Christ's priesthood over that of Aaron's. He then opens in the eighth chapter as follows: "Now of the things which we have spoken this is the sum: We have such an high priest who is set on the right hand of the throne of the majesty in the heavens; a minister of the sanctuary and of the true tabernacle which the Lord pitched and not man." He declares plainly in chapter ix, 23, 24, that the holy places made with hands were "figures of the true," and that the earthly tabernacle and its sacred vessels, were "patterns of things in the heavens."

Here is positive testimony that there is a tabernacle which the Lord pitched and not man, and that this tabernacle is in the heavens, (not heaven itself,) and that of this sanctuary, Christ is the minister. That there are literal things in heaven the Scriptures abundantly testify. As the great offering for the world, made on Calvary was literal, and as our great High Priest, Jesus, the son of God, is a real and literal personage, so must he have a literal sanctuary in heaven, in which to perform his priestly office.

With a few Scripture testimonies concerning the existence of this temple in heaven, and a few of its declarations that it is the great original of which the earthly sanctuary was but a type, figure or pattern, we close this part of the subject.

Rev. xi, 19. "And the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament." Rev. xiv, 17. "And another angel came out of the temple which is in heaven." Rev. xv, 5. "And after that I looked and behold the temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in heaven was opened." Rev. xvi, 17. "And the seventh angel poured out his vial into the air; and there came a great voice out of the temple in heaven from the throne, saying, It is done." Ps. xi, 4. "The Lord is in his holy temple: the Lord's throne is in heaven." Heb. ix, 11, 12. "But Christ being come an High Priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building; neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood, he entered in once into the holy place having obtained eternal redemption for us." Heb. viii, 1, 2, has already been quoted. This heavenly sanctuary is called by Jesus "my Father's house;" John xiv, 2; by David, Habakkuk and John, "the temple of God in heaven;" Ps. xi, 4; Hab. ii, 20; Rev. ix, 19. God's "holy habitation." Zech. ii, 18; Jer. xxv, 30; Rev. xvi, 17. See also Ps. cii, 19; Jer. xvii, 12; 2 Sam. xxii, 7; Ps. xlviii, 6; Isa. vi, 1-6; Rev. vii, 16; xiii, 6; xiv, 15, 17; xvi, 1, 7.

This "more perfect tabernacle," this "true sanctuary" which the Lord pitched and not man, is the great antitype of the earthly building. The word of God declares it; and we therefore believe it. There is one declaration of Paul's to which we would call particular attention. Speaking of the priests that ministered in the earthly tabernacle he says: Who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things, as Moses was admonished of God, when he was about to make the tabernacle; for see, saith he, that thou make all things according to the pattern showed to thee in the mount." Heb. viii, 5. Paul here declares that the priests served unto the example and shadow of heavenly things; and how does he prove it? By a reference to the building and the command that Moses had, to make it according to the pattern. His argument is this: The priests served unto the example and shadow of heavenly things, just as the tabernacle, built according to the pattern shown to Moses, was a shadow and example of heavenly things; and just as this tabernacle was a shadow of the heavenly building, just so the priests served unto the example of heavenly things.

Here, then, Paul calls the tabernacle erected by Moses, a shadow of heavenly things. One distinguishing feature of this tabernacle was that it had two apartments, a holy and a most holy place. The heavenly sanctuary therefore has the same; for a sanctuary in heaven with only one apartment would not cast a shadow.

ow upon earth with two. And if the pattern had but one holy place, and Moses erected a building with two, he did not follow the pattern; for there would then have been a great dissimilarity. But Moses did build it according to the pattern. Accordingly we hear Paul speaking of the holy places (plural) of the heavenly sanctuary. See Heb. ix, 8, 12; x, 10. The word rendered, holiest, or holy place, in each of these texts is in the original plural (holy places), and is so rendered in many translations.

But Paul makes use of expressions still stronger on this point. Speaking of the earthly tabernacle and its instruments of service, he says, Heb. ix, 28: It was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these; that is with the blood of calves and goats. What was cleansed by these? The two apartments of the earthly sanctuary and the altar. See Lev. xvi. And Paul explicitly tells us that these were patterns of things in the heavens. Is there need of more testimony here? Apparently not; but yet more given. As if anticipating that some would endeavor to be incorrigibly skeptical upon this point, the apostle makes use of still stronger language. "For Christ," says he, is not entered into the holy places made with hands [the earthly sanctuary] which are figures of the true." Thus does inspiration, by applying to the earthly sanctuary these strong and unequivocal expressions "shadows of heavenly things," "patterns of things in the heavens," "figures of the true," teach us that there is in heaven a greater and more perfect tabernacle, a true sanctuary which the Lord pitched and not man, of which the earthly was a true shadow, resemblance, type or figure.

At the close of the seventy weeks, when the old covenant gave place to the new, the typical sanctuary of that covenant was superseded by the true sanctuary in heaven. The type could not reach beyond its antitype.

The shadow must have ceased when it reached the substance. The offering of goats and calves was no longer serviceable when the great offering for the world had died on Calvary. Christ declared to the Jews as he departed from the temple, "Behold your house is left unto you desolate." Matt. xxiii, 37, 38. And when amid the terrific scenes of the crucifixion day, the veil of the temple was rent in twain from top to bottom, it was a solemn demonstration that its services were forever finished. That blood was then shed that was to be ministered for us in the heavenly sanctuary, and there, from henceforth, the world was to look for salvation and pardon.

The way into the heavenly holy places, says Paul, "was not yet made manifest, while as the first tabernacle was yet standing." Heb. ix, 8. That is, God did not during the typical dispensation, lay open the true tabernacle, but gave to the people a figure or pattern of it. But when the time came that the services of the worldly sanctuary ended, when the dying Saviour cried with a loud voice, It is finished, and darkness overpread the land, and the earth quaked, and the rocks burst, then the way of the temple of God in heaven was laid open. The true church has had since that time neither sanctuary nor priesthood in old Jerusalem, but it has had both in heaven.

We have before shown that only 400 years of the 2300 belonged to the Jews and the earthly sanctuary. Gabriel, in his instructions to Daniel concerning the events to transpire at that time, shows him, first, that the earthly sanctuary should be destroyed shortly after their rejection of the Messiah, and never be built, but be desolate till the consummation. Dan. ix, 26, 27. Second, he brings to view the new covenant: "He (the Messiah) shall confirm the covenant with many for one week. Verse 27. Third, he brings to view the new-covenant church, or host, namely, the "many" with whom the covenant is confirmed. Fourth, he brings to view the new-covenant sacrifice, namely, the cutting off of the Messiah, but not for himself. He brings to view also the Mediator of the new covenant. Verse 26; chap. xi, 22; Heb. xii, 24. And, fifth, he brings to view, lastly, the new covenant sanctuary, viz., "to anoint the Most Holy." Verse 24. This has reference, doubtless, to an act preparatory to the commencement of the ministration of the sanctuary, which was, to anoint both the holy places and all the sacred vessels. Ex. xl, 9-11. On this point we quote the following from the Advent Shield, No. 1, p. 76:

"And the last event of the 70 weeks, as enumerated in verse 64, was the anointing of the 'Most Holy,' or the 'Holy of holies,' or the 'Sanctum sanctorum.' Not that which was on earth, made with hands, but the true tabernacle, into which Christ, our High Priest, is for us entered. Christ was to do in the true tabernacle, in heaven, what Moses and Aaron did in its pattern. See Heb. vi; vii; viii; ix; Ex. xxx, 22-30; Lev. viii, 10-15."

The fact that the most holy of the heavenly sanctuary is mentioned in Dan. ix, 24, is proof that it has two apartments, as otherwise this distinction would not exist, while it cannot be claimed because only the anointing of the most holy is mentioned that Christ commenced his ministration in that apartment, as the sanctuary when anointed was anointed in both its departments, and immediately following that event, the ministration commenced, not in the most holy, but in the holy place.

There can be no doubt, then, concerning the object which the angel had in view when he said, "Unto 2300 days then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." What that cleansing is, and how it is to be accomplished, we shall find made equally clear in the sacred record.

The Sanctuary.

HAVING become satisfied of the existence of a sanctuary in heaven, a true tabernacle which the Lord pitched and not man, the subject of its ministration and cleansing can furnish little ground for controversy. On this point, as on every other concerning the glorious heavenly things, and the more excellent ministry of the Melchisedec priesthood, in the person of our Lord, we must reason from type to antitype, from the earthly shadow to the heavenly substance.

The priests on earth, says Paul, serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things. This being so, it follows that the work connected with the earthly tabernacle, was the example and shadow of a like work in heaven. Let us then briefly examine

The Ministration and Cleansing of the Earthly Sanctuary. This ministration was accomplished by the Levitical order of priest-hood, and consisted of two great divisions: the daily ministration in the holy place, and the work in the most holy place at the end of the year. The daily ministration embraced the regular morning and evening burnt offering [Ex. xxix, 38-40], the burning of sweet incense on the golden altar, every morning when the high priest dressed the lamps, and every evening when he lighted them [Ex. xxx]; also, the additional work appointed for the Sabbaths of the Lord, and the annual sabbaths, new moons and feasts [Num. xxviii; xxxix], besides the particular work to be accomplished for individuals as they should present their offerings throughout the year.

This latter was an important part of the service, and was performed as follows: Whoever had sinned brought his victim, that was to be offered up for him, to the door of the tabernacle. He then laid his hand upon the head of the victim which signified that his sin was transferred to it; it was then slain on account of that transgression, and the blood borne in by the priest and sprinkled in the sanctuary. Lev. i; iii; iv. Thus the sin of the individual was transferred first to the victim, and then through his blood to the sanctuary itself.

In this manner went the typical service forward through the year. Day after day, week after week, month after month, we behold the victim of expiation brought up before the door of the tabernacle. We see the transgressor confessing over him his sin, and thus transferring to him his guilt. He hereby acknowledged that he had sinned and was worthy of death. The law demands the life of the transgressor. But a substitute was provided. The guilt was imputed to the victim, and his life paid the forfeit. The priest took of his blood (and the blood of it is the life thereof, Lev. xvii, 11, 14) and bore it within the tabernacle, and sprinkled it before the Lord, before the veil of the sanctuary. Lev. iv. The sanctuary thenceforth became the receptacle of the offender's sin. A continual transfer of sins from the people to the sanctuary, was thus carried on through the year.

But what at length became of these sins? Were they suffered to remain in the sanctuary? They were not. There was another ministration at the close of the year, by which they were forever removed from the sanctuary, and a final disposition made of them. This was the yearly ministration, or the cleansing of the sanctuary. Lev. xvi. It took place on the tenth day of the seventh month. Verse 29. To accomplish this, the work of the high priest was changed from the holy place, to the most holy, within the veil. Here he entered with the blood of a bullock as a sin-offering for himself. Verse 3. He was then to take of the congregation of the children of Israel, (verse 6,) two kids of the goats for a sin offering. Upon these he was to cast lots, (verse 8,) one lot for the Lord and the other for the scape-goat. He was then to slay the goat upon which the lot fell for the Lord, for a sin-offering for the people (verse 16), and bear his blood within the veil, and sprinkle it with his finger upon the mercy-seat eastward, and before the mercy-seat seven times.

This blood was offered for two purposes: 1. To make an atonement for the transgression of the children of Israel in all their sins. 2. To cleanse, or make atonement for the holy sanctuary. This fact is plainly stated in Lev. xvi, 16-22, a part of which we here transcribe:

Verse 16. "Then shall he kill the goat of the sin-offering that is for the people, and bring his blood within the veil, and do with that blood as he did with the blood of the bullock, and sprinkle it upon the mercy-seat, and before the mercy-seat."

Verse 18. "And he shall make an atonement for the holy place, because of the uncleanness of the children of Israel, and because of their transgressions in all their sins: and so shall he do for the tabernacle of the congregation."

Verse 17. "And there shall be no man in the tabernacle of the congregation when he goeth in to make an atonement in the holy place, until he come out and have made an atonement for himself, and for his household, and for all the congregation of Israel."

Verse 20. "And when he hath made an end of reconciling the holy place, and the tabernacle of the congregation, and the altar, he shall bring the live goat:

Verse 21. "And Aaron shall lay both his hands upon the head of the live goat, and confess over him all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and all their transgressions in all their sins, putting them upon the head of the goat, and shall send him away by the hand of a fit man into the wilderness."

Verse 22. "And the goat shall bear upon him all their iniquities unto a land not inhabited."

Tradition has it, that the goat thus led away, was hurled from a precipice and so killed. With this act the yearly round of service was completed. The work of the priest is again summed up in verses 33, 34, as follows:

"And he shall make an atonement for the holy sanctuary, and he shall make an atonement for the tabernacle of the congregation, and for the altar; and he shall make an atonement for the priests, and for all the people of the congregation. And this shall be an everlasting statute unto you, to make an atonement for the children of Israel, for all their sins, once a year."

In the foregoing testimony, is presented a general outline of the ministration and cleansing of the earthly sanctuary. This was performed unto the example and shadow of heavenly things. From this, therefore, we are to reason concerning

The ministration and cleansing of the heavenly sanctuary.
If the reader has seen no cause to disagree with us, in any of the positions thus far taken, he will see none, we trust, while this point is under investigation. We are not left to our own reasoning on this subject. Paul in his divine commentary on the typical system, has drawn the parallels between that and the more excellent ministry of the Melchisedec priesthood, to the satisfaction, it should be, of every one. We refer to the book of Hebrews. Let us notice his testimony.

1. The earthly sanctuary meets its antitype in the true tabernacle which the Lord pitched and not man, of which, with its two holy places, it constituted a correct pattern or shadow. Chap. viii, 2, 5; ix, 8, 9, 12, 23, 24.

2. The typical offerings meet their antitype in the great offering on Calvary. Chap. vii, 27; ix, 11-14, 26; x, 10, 12, 14.

3. The typical priesthood meets its antitype in the priesthood of our Lord. Chap. iv, 14 vii, 28, 24; viii, 1, 2; ix, 11, 24, 25.

4. As they had offerings to make, it is necessary that he also have somewhat to offer. Chap. viii, 8.

5. The work of the priests in the earthly tabernacle meets its antitype in the ministry of our Lord in the sanctuary above. Chap. viii, 5, 6.

We shall now show that Christ commences his ministry in the first apartment of the heavenly sanctuary. It is necessary to keep this point in view, to guard against the erroneous theories which some have been led to adopt, by either losing sight of, or denying it. That Christ is our High Priest cannot be denied; that he has ascended to heaven is also beyond dispute; and that he there ministers for his people, they cannot call in question. But some claim that there is in the antitype only a most holy place, and that he all hears, consequently our High Priest ministers in but one apartment.

1. The argument drawn from Dan. ix, 24, has already been noticed. We have also proved that the temple of God in heaven consists of two holy places, or it cast a most inexplicable shadow upon earth. But who will explain the anomaly of there being two holy places in the heavenly sanctuary, and yet a ministry performed in only one.

2. The text, "This man after he had offered as sacrifice for sins, forever sat down on the right hand of God" (Heb. x, 12), has been urged as forbidding the idea of his ministering in two holy places. Was answer, that so far as the idea of sitting is concerned, it would be equally proper to represent him as standing on the Father's right hand. Acts vii, 55, 56. And then we reply further, that even when he is seen coming in the clouds of heaven, he is said to be "sitting on the right hand of power." Matt. xxvi, 64; Mark xiv, 62. Then he can certainly be at the Father's right hand in both the holy places. But Paul bears direct testimony on this point. He says that Christ is a minister of the sanctuary; and the word here rendered sanctuary is in the plural number, and signifies the holy places. This none can deny. It is by the Douay Bible rendered, "the holies;" and by Macnight, "holy places." We therefore justly conclude (1.) that our Lord can be a minister of the two holy places, and yet be at the Father's right hand; and (2.) that he must minister in both the holy places, as

Paul's testimony that he is a minister of the holies (plural) is not true; for a priest that should minister simply in the holiest of all, would not be a minister of the holy places.

8. Again: Heb. ix, 8, and also x, 10, are by some urged to prove that Christ ministers only in the most holy place. These texts both speak of the holiest as though it were in the singular number; but we have already observed that the words thus rendered are not in the singular, but plural: not "hagia hagion," holy of holies, as in chap. ix, 8, but simply "hagion," holies, plural, the same as is rendered sanctuary in chap. viii, 2. Also the phrase in chap. ix, 12, 26, rendered "into the holy place," is the same as is in verse 24 literally rendered into the holy places (plural). These texts therefore instead of sustaining what they are often quoted to prove, viz., that Christ has but one apartment in which to minister, furnish positive testimony to the reverse, by showing that there are holy places in the heavenly sanctuary, and that Jesus ministers in them both.

4. Three hundred and sixty-four days of that service which was performed unto the "example and shadow of heavenly things," was accomplished in the first apartment, or holy place, and only one day out of the year, in the most holy. If therefore, Christ ministers only in the most holy place, the first, and by far the greater, part of the earthly ministration is without an antitype.

5. The ministration in the most holy at the end of the year, was only performed for the purpose of cleansing the sanctuary; and if in the antitype, Christ only ministers in the holy place, it follows that he performs only the antitype of this service; consequently the cleansing of the sanctuary commenced at the ascension of our Lord. But the cleansing of the sanctuary, according to the type, must be preceded by a long ministration; and who will tell us, in this case, when it took place? Again, the 2800 days extend to the cleansing of the sanctuary, and with this view, they should have terminated in A. D. 31, at our Lord's ascension. But, as we have already seen, they did not terminate till 1818 years this side of that event.

The priesthood of Christ is a superior priesthood in which the imperfections of the earthly priesthood find no analogy. We will notice this in a few of its particulars.

1. Christ is a priest after the order of Melchisedec, and not after the order of Aaron. Heb. v, 6.

2. Perfection was not of the Levitical priesthood; for if it had been, says Paul, what further need was there that another priest should rise after the order of Melchisedec, and not after the order of Aaron, Chap. vii, 11.

3. Those priests were many; because they were not suffered to continue by reason of death; but this man continually ever and hath an unchangeable priesthood. Verses 23, 24.

4. It was necessary for the priests of the house of Levi, to offer up sacrifices daily, embracing all the various offerings that were made by those who had transgressed. But all this Christ did by one act when he offered up himself. Chap. ix, 25, 26, 28; x, 10, 12, 14.

5. The round of service in the earthly tabernacle was many times repeated; but the ministry of Christ is accomplished once for all. Heb. ix, 11, 12, 24, 26; x.

6. All the blood which was offered in the former dispensation, was offered for past transgression only, and made no provision for the future; while the merits of that blood which was shed on Calvary applied not to the past alone, but to the future also. Heb. ix, 14, 15.

7. As the blood of Christ is the only blood ministered in connection with the heavenly sanctuary, whether by actual presentation or by virtue of its merits, we need not inquire, the same blood must be ministered in both apartments.

8. As long as Christ fills the office of priest, so long he is mediator between God and man.

The prophets John and Isaiah had each a view of our Lord's position and ministry in the heavenly sanctuary. John saw a door opened in heaven. This must have been the door of the heavenly tabernacle; for it disclosed to John's view the throne of God, which was in that temple. Rev. iv, 1, 2; xvi, 17. That it was the door of the first apartment is evident from the objects which he there beheld [Rev. iv, 6; viii, 3]; and the second apartment which contains the ark of the testament, or ten commandments, is not opened till the sounding of the seventh angel. Rev. xi, 10. Read also Isaiah's description of the same place: Isa. vi, 1-6. That he and John were both viewing the same place will appear from a comparison of the following Scriptures: Isa. vi, 1, with Rev. iv, 2. Isa. vi, 2, with Rev. iv, 6-8. Isa. vi, 3, with Rev. iv, 8. Isa. vi, 4, with Rev. viii, 3; ix, 13.

The Lord here carries forward this great work which he commenced with the act of bearing the sins of the world at his death, by pleading the cause of penitent sinners, through his blood shed in their behalf; and thus their sins are, by his mediation, transferred to the heavenly sanctuary. There is nothing strange or fearful in this. Every one can easily understand it. Such was the service of the type, which was a shadow of the heavenly things; and such, therefore, is the heavenly ministration itself. Thus are the sins of God's people transferred to the sanctuary. But will they remain there forever? No. They will be removed, just as they were in the type, and the heavenly sanctuary will be cleansed even as was the earthly.

The Sanctuary.

BEYOND we proceed further with the subject of the cleansing of the heavenly sanctuary, we must stop a moment to remove an obstruction that lies at this point, like a stumbling block directly across the path of many; and that is the idea, that there is anything in heaven to be cleansed. "What!" is their exclamation of surprise, "is there anything in heaven that needs cleansing? anything there that is impure?" And they are even ready to spurn the whole theory of the sanctuary, here presented, on account of this, to them, unpardonable feature. But let us look at the idea, and meet it fairly. Was there not a work of cleansing to be performed in the earthly sanctuary? There was. Where was the necessity for this? Into the most holy place, for instance, no man entered, except the high priest, and he but once a year. Was there anything there physically impure? All are obliged to confess there was not. And yet it had to be cleansed, the most holy, as well as the holy place. Why was this? Because the sins of the people had been transferred to it, and from them it must be freed. The work of cleansing was not the removing of physical uncleanness, but simply a ceremony by which the sins of the people were removed and borne away forever. So in the antitype. There is nothing literally impure or unclean in the heavenly sanctuary; but the sins of those who have sought pardon through the merits of Jesus, have been transferred there, and all the cleansing it is to undergo, is the removal of these. Simply this, and nothing more. No mind can fail to understand, and none need revolt at such an idea.

But however objectionable any may still be disposed to make it appear, the question is settled by positive declarations of the apostle Paul, which there is no erasing. He states in plain and unequivocal terms, that the heavenly sanctuary must be cleansed. Listen to his language. Heb. ix, 21-24. "Moreover he [Moses] sprinkled with blood both the tabernacle and all the vessels of the ministry. [Referring to the ancient sanctuary and its service.] And almost all things are by the law purged with blood; and without shedding of blood there is no remission. It was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these, [the blood of goats and calves, verse 10,] but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these."

Nothing can be, we say it emphatically, nothing can be, plainer and more definite than this. The "tabernacle and vessels of the ministry," "patterns of things in the heavens," were cleansed with the blood of calves and goats. We have already noted its performance, through the ministry of the priesthood. It was necessary, says the Apostle, that it should be cleansed with these. Why? Because without the shedding of blood there is no remission. Remission, and not physical uncleanness, is the burden of the Apostle's argument. The sanctuary must be cleansed; the imputed guilt must be removed. He then goes on to argue that for the same reason, the heavenly things themselves, of which the earthly were a figure, must be cleansed or purified, but with better sacrifices than those of the type. What is this better sacrifice? The sacrifice of our Lord himself. Heb. ix, 13, 14, 26. Why was a better sacrifice needed? Because the blood of bulls and goats could not take away sin [chap. x, 4]; but yet the law was satisfied with that service for the time being, in anticipation of the great and effectual sacrifice which was thus prefigured. The blood of this better sacrifice does take away sin. It is this blood that is ministered in the heavenly sanctuary in behalf of man, and by this at last, that the heavenly holy places themselves are to be purified and cleansed. Those, therefore who object to a work of cleansing in heaven, take issue with Paul, not with us; and those who condemn and ridicule the idea, are keeping their countenances and reproach, not upon us, but upon the inspired language of that holy apostle.

There is another idea which may lie with weight in some minds against the existence of a sanctuary in heaven; and that is the fact, that Daniel speaks of its being trodden under foot. Now, it has been asked, can a sanctuary in heaven be trodden under foot? And it has been urged as one of the greatest recommendations of the view that the earth or land of Canaan is the sanctuary, that they are both eminently susceptible of being in that condition. We inquire, then. How much does the prophecy comprehend in the term, "to tread under foot?" The same text [Dan. viii, 13] speaks of treading the host [the worshippers connected with the sanctuary] under foot also. Does this mean that people would literally get them under their feet and stamp upon them? By no means. What then does the expression mean? We shall define it, to oppress or perform any act prejudicial to the interests of another; and this definition the following quotations will sustain: 1. The same prophecy [Dan. viii] represents the little horn as casting the truth to the ground, and casting down the stars, and stamping upon them. We all know what this means; or if not, verse 24 of the same chapter furnishes an explanation; namely, "he shall destroy wonderfully the mighty and the holy people." 2. Paul shows us that wicked men, apostates, even tread "under foot" (this is his expression) the Son of God, who is minister of the heavenly sanctuary. Heb. x, 29. They do it by setting him at naught, counting the blood of the covenant wherewith they were sanctified, an unholy thing, and doing despite unto the Spirit of grace. Why may not the heavenly sanctuary itself, in an equal sense, and in an equal degree, be trodden under foot also?

The agencies through which Satan has all along stood up against the worship of God, are the dally, and transgression of idolatry, or Paganism and Paganism. He has done this by erecting rival sanctuaries to the sanctuary of Jehovah, and endeavoring to turn mankind away from the worship of the true God to the unanctified rites of heathenism. For instance, in the days of Samuel and the Judges, one of Satan's rival sanctuaries was the temple of Dagon where the Philistines worshiped. Jud. xvi, 23, 24. After Solomon had erected the glorious temple upon mount Moriah, Jeroboam erected a rival sanctuary at Bethel, and drew away ten of the twelve tribes to the worship of golden calves. 1 Kings xii, 26-33. In the days of Nebuchadnezzar, the rival sanctuary of Satan was found in the temple of old Belus at Babylon; and great was his triumph when he was able to deposit the sacred vessels of Jehovah's tabernacle in the palace of his heathen deity. 2 Chron. xxxvi, 7. And still later, a sanctuary of the Devil turns up at Rome, under the name of the Pantheon, or "asylum of all the gods." Dan. viii, 11.

And when the gospel dispensation was ushered in, when the shadow reached the substance, and the type gave place to the antitype, and the sanctuary in heaven took the place of the tabernacle on earth, how did Satan change his mode of opposition? He baptized his heathen deities, and called them Christian. The Pantheon, or "asylum of all the gods," easily became the "sanctuary of all the saints;" and the statue of Jupiter, by an easy metamorphosis became that of Paul or Peter. But more than this: he here set up in his temple at Rome, a blasphemous being, a monster Man of Sin, who should exalt himself above all that is called God, and turn away mankind from the mediation of Christ in the heavenly sanctuary, by pretending to dispense those favors which are the prerogative of Deity alone. Thus the Papacy has trodden under foot the "host," the "holy city," the sanctuary above and its minister, by wearing out the saints of the Most High, and lifting up his voice in blasphemy against God, his tabernacle and them that dwell in heaven. Rev. xlii, 8.

With the conviction that this objection is now entirely removed, we turn again to our subject, the cleansing of the sanctuary. The nature of this cleansing we now understand. It is accomplished by blood not by fire. We understand also the ceremony by which it was performed, through a change in the ministrations from the holy to the most holy place. We conclude, then, that at the end of the 2300 days, when it was said that the sanctuary should be cleansed, the ministration in heaven was changed from the holy to the most holy place: in other words, that in 1844, in the autumn of that year, our great High Priest, commenced the last act of his priestly ministration in the most holy place of the tabernacle above. Are there any to whom it seems presumption to pretend to understand what is being accomplished in heaven? Of such then we would inquire, Have not the 2300 days ended? and was it not said that at their termination the sanctuary should be cleansed? and are we not to reason concerning the sanctuary, from those objects and from that work, which the voice of inspiration declares to us, were the shadow which it cast on earth? Of what use is a type, if we may not, from it, derive some knowledge respecting its antitype?

In the light of these facts of what infinite importance does the subject of the sanctuary become! The whole plan and work of salvation for a lost world is involved therein. How momentous the subject of its cleansing—the final close of the Saviour's redeeming work! And if this last act in the great scheme is now being accomplished, what truth could more vitally concern our perishing race! This finished, the final decision will have passed upon all men; the fiat of the Almighty will have gone forth, "He that is filthy, let him be filthy still, and he that is holy, let him be holy still." Rev. xxii, 11. Momentous period! May he whose meditation for a rebel world is about to close, deeply impress our hearts, with those emotions which this mighty truth is calculated to inspire.

THE SCAPÉ GOAT.

The ministry in the most holy being finished, it yet remained for the priest to bear out the sins from the sanctuary, place them upon the head of the scape-goat and send him away by the hand of a fit man into a land not inhabited. Lev. xvi, 20-22. This ceremony as performed in the type we have already noticed. We now inquire, what service connected with the more perfect tabernacle, answers to this, and to what being shall we look, as the one shadowed forth anciently by the literal and typical goat, as, loaded with the sins of Israel, he went forth from the camp to be heard of no more forever? This point demands more particular notice, as here, again, we are led to differ very materially from the views which have generally obtained upon this subject.

Because John says, [chap. i, 29,] "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh, (margin; beareth,) away the sins of the world," and because it is said of the scape-goat that he "shall bear upon him all their iniquities into a land not inhabited," [Lev. xvi, 22], it has been concluded, by some, that the latter is a type of the former.

From the view, however, that Christ is the antitype of the scape-goat, we are compelled to differ, for what we shall offer as very plain reasons:

1. If Christ, in bearing the sin of the world, fulfilled the antitype of the scape-goat, he must have accomplished it at the crucifixion; for Peter says of him, "Who his own self bear our sins in his own body on the tree." 1 Pet. ii, 24. But in the type the goat was not sent away till after the cleansing of the sanctuary; hence the antitype of this work cannot be performed till after the termination of the 2300 days; for it is not till after those days have ended that the sanctuary is cleansed. Dan. viii, 14; Heb. ix, 23. It is therefore impossible to carry this work back to the crucifixion of Christ, which was even before he commenced his ministration in the sanctuary above; and therefore he cannot be the antitype of the scape-goat.

2. Christ is our great High Priest, the minister of the sanctuary; but the goat is something to be sent away by the priest: therefore he cannot be the priest himself; in other words, he cannot in this dispensation be Christ; but he must be a being whom Christ, after he has loaded him with the sins borne from the sanctuary, can send away into a land not inhabited.

3. The goat was sent away from Israel into a land not inhabited, to be heard of no more forever. But Christ will dwell in the midst of his people, the true Israel of faith.

4. It is impossible that two goats, one of which was chosen by the Lord and is called the Lord's, and was for a sin-offering, while the other is not so called, but was left to perform an entirely different office;—it is impossible that these both should typify the same person.

From these considerations we think it must be evident to every one that Christ cannot be the antitype of the Levitical scape-goat. Who then can he? We answer, The Devil; and our reasons for this position are at hand:

1. We know of only two beings which any one has ever thought could possibly be typified by the scape-goat; and these are Christ and Satan. We have shown above that the goat cannot be a type of Christ; we must therefore look to the Devil for its fulfillment.

2. The Hebrew word for scape-goat, as given in the margin of Lev. xvi, 8, is Assael. On this verse, Jenks in his Comprehensive Commentary remarks, "Scape-goat. See diff. opin. in Bochart. Spencer after the oldest opinion of the Hebrews and Christians, thinks Assael is the name of the Devil; and so Rosenmire, whom see. The Syriac has, Assail, the angel (strong one) who revolted." The Devil is here evidently pointed out. Thus we have the definition of the Scripture term in two ancient languages, with the oldest opinion of the Christians in favor of the view that the scape-goat is a type of Satan.

3. In the common acceptation of the word, the term scape-goat, is applied to any miserable vagabond who has become obnoxious to the claims of justice; and while it is revolting to all our conceptions of the character and glory of Christ, to apply this term to him, it most strike every one as a very appropriate designation of the Devil who is styled in the Scriptures, the scooner, adversary, angel of the bottomless pit, Beelzebub, Belial, dragon, enemy, evil spirit, father of lies, murderer, prince of devils, serpent, tempter, &c., &c.

4. Our fourth reason for this position is the very striking manner in which it harmonizes with the events to transpire in connection with the cleansing of the heavenly Sanctuary, as far as revealed to us in the Scriptures of truth.

We behold in the type, 1. The sin of the transgressor imparted to the victim. 2. We see that sin borne by the priest in the blood of the offering, into the sanctuary. 3. On the tenth day of the seventh month we see the priest with the blood of the sin-offering for the people, remove all these sins from the sanctuary, and lay them upon the head of the scape-goat. 4. The goat bears them away into a land not inhabited.

Answering to these events in the type, we behold in the antitype, 1. The great offering for the world made on Calvary. 2. The sins of all those who avail themselves of the merits of Christ's shed blood, by faith in him, in that blood are borne into the sanctuary. 3. After Christ, the minister of the true tabernacle, Heb. viii, 2, has finished his ministration, he will remove the sins of his people from the sanctuary, and lay them upon the head of their author, the antitypical scape-goat, the Devil. 4. The Devil will be sent away with them into a land not inhabited.

If we want a description of this event in plain terms we find it in Rev. xx, 1-3: "And I saw an angel come down from heaven having the key of the bottomless pit, and a great chain in his hand. And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil and Satan, and bound him a thousand years, and cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more till the thousand years should be fulfilled."

But if Satan is the antitypical scape-goat, it may be objected that he shares with Christ the honor of making the atonement. Not at all. The atonement is all made, the servants of God are pardoned and their sins all removed from them, and from the sanctuary, before the Devil is brought to take any part in the transaction. And what is the part he there performs? Simply receiving upon himself the infinite weight of sins which he has instigated, and being sent away under their intolerable load.

And here we would ask, What could be more fitting than that the author and instigator of all sin should receive the guilt of those transgressions which he has incited mortals to commit, but of which they have repented, back upon his own head? And what could be a more striking antitype of the ancient ceremony of sending away the scape-goat into the wilderness, than the act of the mighty angel in binding Satan and casting him into the bottomless pit at the commencement of the thousand years.

This is a point of transcendent interest to every believer. Then the sins of God's people will be borne away to be remembered no more forever. Then he who instigated them, will have received them back again. Then the serpent's bond will have been bruised by the seed of the woman. Then the "strong man armed," (Satan,) will have been bound by a stronger than he, (Christ,) and the house of the strong man (the grave) spoiled of its goods, the saints. Matt. xii, 29; Heb. ii, 14. Then will the work of the enemy, in sowing tares among the wheat, [Matt. xiii, 24-48,] be forever remedied, the tares will have been gathered into bundles to burn, and the wheat gathered into the garner. Then our great High Priest will have come forth from the sanctuary to pronounce the everlasting blessing upon his waiting people. Then shall we have come unto mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels. Then will the redeemed, placing the foot of triumph upon the world, the flesh and the Devil, raise their glad voices in the song of Moses and the Lamb. O glorious day! May the Lord hasten it in his good time. Who would not, in view of this, take up the petition of the beloved John, "Even so, come Lord Jesus!"

These are scenes to which the children of hope in this lower world love to look forward. On these hang their brightest anticipations. These are the very portals to the glorious city, and to their eternal inheritance.

(Concluded.)

The question, Why were those so grievously disappointed who looked for the Lord in 1844? has now been answered. That disappointment arose not from any mistake in the time, for that was all correct; but from our mistaking the subject of the sanctuary. When we claimed that the earth was the sanctuary, and that the cleansing of the sanctuary was to be the renovation of the earth by fire, and that consequently, the Lord would be revealed from heaven in flaming fire for this very purpose at the end of the 2300 days, we claimed that which we had no warrant to expect. An examination of this subject would have shown us that the cleansing of the sanctuary which was then to take place, signified merely that our great High Priest would change his ministrations from the holy to the most holy of the heavenly temple, there to finish up his work of mediation for the world.

But an explanation of our past disappointment is not all that is accomplished by the subject of the sanctuary. It throws over the great doctrine of the Lord's soon coming, an air of nearness and certainty, beyond all other subjects. It is calculated to inspire in the church on earth a spirit of unwonted watchfulness, self-examination and prayer. It becomes the grand and radiant nucleus around which cluster the glorious constellations of present truth!

How it opens to our understanding the plan of salvation! How it lifts the veil from the position of our Lord in heaven! What a halo of glory it throws upon his ministry! What a divine harmony it establishes in the word of God! What a flood of light it pours upon past fulfillment of prophecy! How it fortifies the mighty truths of these last days! What a glory it sheds upon the future! With what hope and joy and consolation it fills the heart of the believer! Glorious subject! Its importance can neither be overdrawn nor overestimated. It is as though a new apartment of the heavenly temple were suddenly opened before us, filled with all the divine splendor, the majesty and the beauty of eternal truth.

We venture the assertion that it is impossible for a person to entertain correct and scriptural views on the subject of the sanctuary, and yet be at variance with any of the fundamental points of present truth; and perhaps no one fact can serve to place its importance in a stronger light than this. It is the great safeguard against all those bewildering errors, which, since the passing of the time in 1844, have torn and scattered the once harmonious body of Advent believers.

An application of this fact in a few particulars may be well. The wild and disastrous work that has been made by some during the past nineteen years, in setting so many erroneous times for the second advent of the Saviour, growing out of the idea that the prophetic periods must reach to the coming of the Lord, might in the light of the sanctuary, have been avoided. That shows up at once that those periods were not designed to extend to the second advent. The most important one, perhaps, any where given in the Scriptures, is expressly declared to reach only to the cleansing of the sanctuary, Dan. viii. 14. The 2300 days ended in 1844. We believe that then our great High Priest entered into the most holy of the heavenly sanctuary, and commenced the work of its cleansing, as the prophecy declared, and that no jot nor tittle of what we were warranted to expect at that time, has in any wise failed.

Not only might the erroneous movements on time since 1844, have been avoided by a careful investigation of this subject, but we are guarded by it against any such work in the future. In the light of this truth no time can again be set for the coming of the Lord. To illustrate could it be shown that the 2300 days extend into the future, admitting for instance that they could be shown to end without a doubt in 1867 or 8, what then?

Is it proved that the Lord will then come? By no means. It is only proved that the work called the cleansing of the sanctuary is then to commence, and time for the accomplishment of that work must be allotted between the ending of those days, and the revelation of the Lord Jesus.

That any of the prophetic periods reach beyond the 2300 days and extend to the coming of the Lord we have no evidence. The 1836 days will doubtless here recur to the mind of the reader, and the inquiry will arise if Daniel's standing in his lot at the end of the days does not mean his rising in the resurrection, and if therefore those days do not extend to the coming of the Lord. We answer, it needs to be proved that it is the 1836, and not the 2300, at the end of which Daniel is to stand in his lot. But what is meant by the "lot" in which Daniel stands? The word here translated lot, is not the word which means, region country lot of inheritance, &c., but that word which means, chance, fortune, the determinations of Providence, &c. This word is therefore applicable to the decisions of character which take place with the cleansing of the heavenly sanctuary, just before the time when the decree goes forth, life that is filthy let him be filthy still and he that is holy let him be holy still. Rev. xii. 11. Especially does this view become probable when David plainly declares that the righteous shall "stand" in the judgment, by declaring the opposite of this, which is that the wicked shall not stand therein. Ps. i. 5. It will hence be seen that Daniel does not stand in the "lot of his inheritance," as it has been expressed, but he stands in his lot in the decisions of the judgment of the righteous dead. He stands in his lot, with all the righteous dead, in the person of his Advocate. There is, therefore, nothing in this to prove that any of the prophetic periods extend to the coming of the Lord.

Being satisfied with regard to the termination of the prophetic periods, we are guarded also, by the subject of the sanctuary against giving up the past Advent movement, as a delusion, or ignoring the divine agency that produced it. We are prevented from misapplying the first and second messages of Rev. xiv, as they were but proclamations preparatory to the sanctuary work; and we are as firmly fixed upon the third, since that work is its very foot and foundation.

But we call attention more particularly to the connection which this subject has with a practice which constitutes one of our distinguishing features as a people—we mean the observance of the Lord's Sabbath.

We read in Revelation, "that the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament." Chap. xi. 19. This ark of the testament, whether contemplated on the earth, as man was connected with it under the former dispensation, or in heaven as it is here introduced to us, is equally an object of interest.

Considering that the sanctuary of the first covenant was but a type or shadow of the sanctuary of this, which now exists in heaven, who will tell us that the ark of the true tabernacle which the Lord pitched and not man, differs from the former, either in the purpoes for which it was used, or the things which it contained? The ark of the earthly sanctuary was called the ark of the testimony, or testament, because it contained the tables of stone, on which were engraved by the finger of God the ten commandments, and just as he engraved them. Ex. xxv, 16, 22: xxxi, 18. The ark of the heavenly sanctuary, called also the ark of his testament, as in the text above quoted [Rev. xi, 19], must also contain similar tables, or it could not be called the "ark of his testament," and could not be prefigured by the former.

The ark, then, under whatever dispensation we view it, suggests to our mind the same idea: the commandments of God, as he uttered them from Sinai, and engraved them with his own finger.

But who can suppose that thoughts of the ark, or the writing it contained, suggested to the mind of a Jew the observance of the first day of the week as a day of rest? Neither does it suggest such an idea to our minds; but quite another, according as the fourth commandment contained in it declares that the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God.

Such are some of the considerations which naturally connect themselves with the ark of God. But, says the Revelation, "The temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament;" therefore considerations like these have been, and are still, agitating the minds of the people; and as we have seen by faith, through the declarations of his word, those tables of the law carefully preserved in the holy temple of the Highest, we have received such overwhelming impressions of its immutability and perpetuity that we could do no otherwise than turn our feet to the keeping of all those holy commandments.

Here is a nail in a sure place. The tables of the testimony are enthroned in heaven. There they exist without liability of change or decay. Men may legislate and hold councils, and pass decrees, and wage war against those who will acknowledge the claims of the royal law, but they cannot touch the law: as high as heaven from earth it still remains above their reach. What must man do to change it? He must ascend to heaven, burst through the angel guards into the sacred temple, dethrone Jehovah, wrest from the ark the mercy-seat, and with his own would-be omnipotent finger, change the writing of the imperishable tables. And yet people will talk about the change of the law as a very little thing! or even proceed further and speak of its abolition! They might as well talk of abolishing heaven itself!

The temple has been opened in heaven, and there is seen the ark of his testament. I have set before thee an open door, says Jesus, and no man can shut it. Rev. iii, 8. Men may endeavor with all their energies to obscure the claims of the law, but they cannot obscure them. They may raise all the stir they are able to raise amid the rubbish and dirt of earth, and joy over the dust they succeed in throwing into their own eyes; but we have only to look away to the heavenly sanctuary, and there we behold the ark of his testament, and in that ark the tables of the commandments, safely deposited beneath the eye of Him who slumbers not nor sleeps.

We now perceive a beauty, before unnoticed, in the work of redemption. Sin is the transgression of the law. The law is deposited in the ark. The cover of the ark is the mercy-seat. Ex. xxv, 21. Before the mercy-seat Christ pleads his blood for sinful man. Before the eyes of our Mediator therefore lies the law which we have transgressed, and which is the test of our characters. And now, reader, what think you? Can you with confidence approach the throne of grace, and plead with the Minister of the sanctuary for mercy until you are conscious that you are at least striving to keep every one of those commandments, just as they are engraved upon those tables which repose beneath the mercy-seat before which he ministers? Think well upon this point; and may the Lord help you to seek in a consistent manner remission of your sins, and justification by faith in Christ.

Thus the sanctuary becomes the great center and bulwark of truth on every hand. We do not say that a person cannot keep the Sabbath unless he believes in it; but we do say that a person cannot believe in it, and yet consistently, we may say honestly, refuse to observe the Sabbath.

Never lose sight of the sanctuary. When the carnal heart is venting its spite against the law of God, look to the sanctuary. Amid all the opposition of "unreasonable men" against the commandments of God, look to the sanctuary. In hours of darkness, trial, temptation, and persecution, look to the sanctuary. There is light and glory there. There help has been laid upon one that is mighty. There our High Priest ministers for us; and thither our hope has entered within the veil. Heb. vi, 19, 20.

Reader, remember that you have an interest in the great and momentous work which the world's High Priest is now consummating before the ark of God in heaven. Whether men know it or not, their eternal interests center there. The last great act in the plan of salvation is being accomplished; and the last messenger, the third angel of Rev. xiv, that is ever to announce that God's long-extended and long-abused mercy still lingers for a rebel world, is fulfilling his mission. With this message, all efforts of animosity and everlasting life on the part of the government of God forever cease. All that could be done for sinful, rebellious man has been done. Life has been freely offered. The Son of God has died to make an atonement for their transgressions. Yet a few more days will he plead his blood in the sanctuary in their behalf, ere the work is forever finished. The announcement that his mediation is consummated will soon be heralded from on high, announcing their day of triumph to his waiting church, and startling from their delusive dreams of peace and safety, a hapless world. The "great voice out of the temple of heaven from the throne" will soon be heard saying, "It is done!" Rev. xvi, 17. The fearful decree is soon to go forth, "He which is filthy let him be filthy still, and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still." Rev. xxi, 11.

May it not be in vain for us that the plan of salvation was ever devised; but when the sanctuary work which was set forth in shadow here upon earth, but which is now being performed in fact and once for all, in the tabernacle in heaven, shall be finished, be it ours to be among the holy company who shall be holy still; to have on the wedding garment when the King shall come in to see the guests; to be prepared to join the ransomed of the Lord, when they shall return and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads: when the "tabernacle of God shall be with men," and he shall dwell with them forevermore.

JAMES WHITE, EDITOR.

The Sanctuary.

"A TRACT for the times. The Sanctuary. By Eld. H. V. Lyon, Minister of the Gospel, Oshawa, Canada West."

Such is the title of a tract which we recently saw advertised, and purchased for perusal. Whenever we meet with anything bearing the title of the sanctuary, our attention is at once arrested; for we regard it as one of the most important, beautiful and harmonious subjects that can, at the present time, engage the mind of man.

The tract of which we speak is designed to enlighten certain classes who are ignorant on this important question. It therefore comes forth challenging public examination; and as it is perused by those for whose benefit it is designed, consistency requires that, if they are enlightened by it, they should acknowledge that fact; and if not, that they should give their reasons why.

After quoting Dan. viii, 14, "And he said unto me, Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed," the tract opens with the following very unfortunate assertion: "First-day Adventists have taken and still take the position, that the earth as a whole, is the sanctuary spoken of in the text. The Seventh-day Adventists take the position that it is heaven. Each are wrong in their positions! And the object of these pages is to assist honest inquirers, to arrive at the truth on this all-important theme—the sanctuary."

We have given the above, with its exclamation point, italics and small caps, just as we find it. In reply we speak, of course, only in behalf of Seventh-day Adventists. We are among those, it appears, who are wrong in their position; and this tract has come forth to set us right. The modest declaration that "the object of these pages is to assist honest inquirers to arrive at the truth," with its implied suspicion of our honesty in this matter, can only mean in plain language that their object is to expose our dishonesty, and reveal, if not dispel, our ignorance, on this question.

The author commences by stating that the position of Seventh-day Adventists is, that Heaven is the sanctuary. He has no right to make such an assertion for two reasons: 1. If he knows so little of our views, or has so heedlessly examined our arguments as to suppose that we believe that Heaven is the sanctuary, he has no right to stand forth as an exponent of our belief in this matter; and 2. If he knows what our position is, he has no right to misrepresent it by the utterance of that which is utterly and positively untrue. We do not thank any man for conjuring up positions which we do not believe, and then proclaiming them to the world as a part of our errors. That which he gives as the position of the Seventh-day Adventists, is not, and never has been, their position; nor have they ever written anything from which such an inference could be drawn.

But a tract which is designed to set right those who are wrong, should be exhaustive of the subject in hand; it should thoroughly canvass the testimony, and all the testimony bearing on the question, point out the wrongs and establish the truth. How far this tract does this we shall see. A very few words will suffice to set forth its method of reasoning and the sum of its testimony.

We are treated first to the different meanings of the word sanctuary. On p. 4 we read: "First, What are we to understand by the word sanctuary? Upon an investigation of the Living Oracles, we shall find that the word sanctuary has various meanings. First, the temple at Jerusalem is called a sanctuary." We reply that it is called more than this: it is called the sanctuary; and of the one hundred and forty-two times of the occurrence of the word sanctuary in the Old Testament it refers in almost every instance to this building and the tabernacle of Moses, of which the temple was but a continuation, on a larger and more magnificent scale.

We quote from the tract again: Second, The holy place, or place appointed for the public worship of the Lord is called a sanctuary. Ps. lxxiii, 17, 'Until I went into the sanctuary of God.' This undoubtedly refers to the temple, and hence is not a different application of the word from the one given above.

We read again: "Third, Judah is called God's sanctuary. Ps. cxlv, 2. 'Judah was his sanctuary.'" The same psalm says, "The mountains skipped like rams, and the little hills like lambs." Verse 4. This shows the highly figurative nature of that psalm. In another psalm we read, "But choose the tribe of Judah, the mount Zion which he loved." Ps. lxxviii, 68. Shall we understand from this that Judah was mount Zion? The same rule which would make Judah the sanctuary in Ps. cxlv, 2, would make it mount Zion here. It is not difficult to see that these are figurative expressions; and the reason why such figures are applied to Judah, may be learned from those texts which inform us that mount Zion was the city of David, a part of Jerusalem, which was located in Judah, as one of its cities. See 2 Sam. v, 6, 7; Ezra i, 8; Ps. lxxix, 86.

Mr. L. continues: "Fourth, Christ is called a sanctuary. Isa. viii, 18, 14. 'Sanctify the Lord of Hosts himself . . . and he shall be for a sanctuary.'" This text does not call Christ the sanctuary or a sanctuary. It only says he should be for a sanctuary.

Again, "Fifth, Heaven is called the sanctuary. Ps. cii, 19. 'For he hath looked down from the height of his sanctuary; from Heaven did the Lord behold the earth.'" Heaven is not here called, nor proved to be, the sanctuary. To illustrate we might say, From the capitol, from Washington, come forth the laws of this nation. This would not prove that the capitol was Washington, but only that it was in Washington. So Psalm cii, 19, does not prove that the sanctuary is Heaven, but only that it is in Heaven; so that in looking from his sanctuary, the Lord would, of course, look from Heaven.

Again we read: "Sixth, mount Zion, or the land of Palestine is called the sanctuary; and this is the sanctuary spoken of in the text." We deny that the land of Palestine is ever called the sanctuary! But even if it is, how does he arrive at so sudden and abrupt a conclusion that it is the very one spoken of in the text? We have his assertion for it—nothing more. To prove Palestine the sanctuary, he quotes the following texts which will be noticed hereafter: Ex. xv, 17; Ps. lxxviii, 54; xxxii, 13, 14; Isa. lxiii, 18. To prove it the one spoken of in the text, he offers—nothing.

His second chapter then opens as follows: "In my first chapter, I have shown the reader, by presenting to him immutable testimony, that the sanctuary spoken of in my text is Palestine." He thus rests his whole argument on the four texts last quoted; for these are the only ones claimed to refer to the land of Palestine. These are the texts which are to show that all others are wrong and he is right. Truly this is reducing the subject to a very small compass. Accordingly chapter ii, which commences on page 6 of his tract is composed of quotations from the prophecies threatening desolation to the land of Israel. Whether these have anything to do with the sanctuary or not, all depends upon the texts quoted to prove Palestine the sanctuary. If they do not prove it, these of course are altogether irrelevant.

Chapter three embraces pp. 9-23, and concludes the book. This chapter is composed of long and rambling quotations from prophecies supposed to refer to the Age to Come, in which the only point worthy of notice is, that the land is to be defiled by the dead bodies slain in the great battle, and it is to be cleansed by burying them! Eze. xxxix, 11-16. Such, according to this book, is the cleansing of the sanctuary! Whether the writer has any just conception of this great work, and the relation it sustains to the plan of salvation, the readers of the Review can judge. There is therefore nothing in chapter iii, that demands notice, as whatever relevancy its testimony has, is dependent on the texts before quoted to prove Canaan the sanctuary; for, if they do not prove it, none of these prophecies are relevant to the subject in hand. The whole question, therefore, so far as this book is concerned, is reduced to the four texts above mentioned. These we will now examine.

1. Ex. xv, 17. "Thou shalt bring them in and plant them in the mountain of thine inheritance; in the place, O Lord, which thou hast made for them to dwell in; in the sanctuary, O Lord, which thy hand hath established." It will be noticed that this is part of the song of Moses uttered immediately after the passage of the red sea. It is a prediction of what God would do for Israel. It was to be accomplished in the promised land, hence we may look for its fulfillment; and when we see how it was fulfilled, we shall have, beyond question, the intent of the prophecy. We trace the history of Israel till they were brought in and planted in the land of Palestine, and the mountain of his inheritance, as predicted. But what do we then learn of the sanctuary? We learn that a sanctuary was built therein by that people, as the center of their worship and the dwelling place of God. And could we have asked Moses, or any Jew, from his day down to A. D. 70, to point out to us the sanctuary, the answer would ever have been, Behold the tabernacle, or the temple. David bears direct testimony on this point; but as his language is quoted as text number two to prove the position under review, we will examine it as such.

2. Ps. lxxviii, 54. "And he brought them to the border of his sanctuary, even to this mountain which his right hand had purchased." This text belongs with Ex. xv, 17; for it is the record of the fulfillment of what Moses utters as a prediction. Hence it is an inspired commentary upon that song. But so far from proving the mountain to be the sanctuary, as has been hastily inferred from the song of Moses, it tells us plainly that the mountain was only the border of the sanctuary. Our author does not seem inclined to use further testimony from this same psalm of David. But there is, a few verses further on, direct testimony as to what the sanctuary then was. Why was not this quoted? To introduce it would indeed have been fatal to his purpose of proving Palestine the sanctuary; and shall we conclude that this is the reason it was omitted? He has certainly left the way all open to so grave a suspicion as this. But let us look at the testimony. After stating that the Lord had brought his people into that good land, and cast out the heathen before them, the psalmist proceeds, verse 69, "And he built his sanctuary like high palaces." Ah, then the sanctuary was a building erected in that land, and not the land itself. If there are any who still cannot see the difference between the sanctuary and the land, listen while good king Jehoshaphat, a ruler on the throne of David, rebukes such lack of discernment: "Art not thou our God, who didst drive out the inhabitants of this land before thy people Israel, and gave it to the seed of Abraham thy friend, forever? And they dwell therein, and have built thee a sanctuary therein for thy name saying, If when evil cometh upon us, as the sword, judgment or pestilence, or famine, we stand before this house, and in thy presence (for thy name is in this house), and cry unto thee in our affliction, then thou wilt hear and help." 2 Chron. xv, 7-9. The house which is here referred to, was the temple which they had built in that land; and this is plainly called the sanctuary, in distinction from the land in which it was built.

3. The third text quoted is Ps. cxxxiii, 13, 14: "For the Lord hath chosen Zion, he hath desired it for his habitation. This is my rest forever; here will I dwell; for I have desired it." How this proves that the whole land of Palestine is the sanctuary, we should be truly gratified to learn. It speaks of Zion, not Palestine; and the reason for calling Zion his habitation, can only be because Jerusalem of which Zion, the city of David, was a part, contained the sanctuary, in which God dwelt." Ex. xxv, 8.

4. Isa. lxiii, 18. "The people of thy holiness have possessed it but a little while: our adversaries have trodden down thy sanctuary." This cannot be offered as positive testimony that the land is the sanctuary, since the treading down is equally applicable to cities or dwellings, as to the land. And it is a fact that when the people were dispossessed of the land, the sanctuary which they had built in that land was laid in ruins. In referring to the same event in the next chapter, verse 11, the prophet says, "Our holy and our beautiful house, where our fathers praised thee, is burned up with fire;" thus showing that the sanctuary was their beautiful house, and not the land.

And this is the sum total of the "immutable testimony" that Palestine is the sanctuary, which this book claims to give. We have said that a book coming forth with the claims of this one, should be exhaustive of the subject. How far it is so, the reader can now judge. No word is said in reference to what Paul calls the sanctuary of the first covenant, Heb. ix, 1, 2, and the wonderful service connected therewith, and which occupied so prominent a place in the former dispensation. No word is spoken of Paul's invincible commentary on that system, in his epistle to the Hebrews, in which he shows that the sanctuary and priesthood of this dispensation is in Heaven, as that of the former was upon earth. And of the one hundred and forty-six times of the occurrence of the word sanctuary in the Bible, only four texts, and one of these not even mentioning the sanctuary, are quoted to show what the sanctuary is! Is this important subject to be settled with treatment like this?

We are reminded by this effort that there are few subjects which our opponents seem more loth to meet, and certainly none on which they manifest greater weakness, than the subject of the sanctuary. Brethren, we have here a citadel of strength. Here all the great columns of present truth center; and our system of truth forever remains unshaken while this citadel stands.

Let nothing then cause your interest in this subject to wane away. Let nothing obscure its light and glory. But remember that the light has come, not so much to enable us to maintain a theory, as to reveal the momentous work now consummating before the ark of God in Heaven, to show us the position of our Great High Priest, inspire us with earnestness to confess all our sins ere his intercession shall cease, and enable us to be among the number whose sins shall be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord, and he shall come forth to pronounce the everlasting covenant of peace upon his people. And while we are strong and joyful in this blessed truth, let us also be faithful in all the duties which it brings to view.

CHAPTER TEN.

*The Types.—Patient Waiting.—The Perilous Task.—
The Shut Door.—Two Ways of Leaving the Position.*

In the providence of God, in the seventh-month movement the attention of the people was turned to the types of the law of Moses. The argument which had been given, that as the vernal types, namely, the pass-over, the wave sheaf, and the meat-offering, were fulfilled in their order and time in the crucifixion, the resurrection of Christ, and the descent of the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost, so would the autumnal types be fulfilled as to time, in the events connected with the second advent, seemed to be conclusive and satisfactory. The position taken was, that as the high priest came out of the typical sanctuary on the tenth day of the seventh month and blessed the people, so Christ, our great High Priest, would on that day come out of Heaven to bless his waiting people.

But it should be borne in mind that at that time those types which point to the work in the heavenly sanctuary were not understood. In fact, no one had any definite, tangible idea of the tabernacle of God in Heaven. We now see that the two holies of the typical sanctuary, made by the direction of the Lord to Moses, with their two distinct ministrations—the daily and the yearly services,—were, in the language of Paul to the Hebrews, "patterns of things in the heavens," "figures of the true," chapter ix. He also says of the work of the Jewish priests in chapter viii, "Who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things." His words mean simply this: In Heaven there is a sanctuary where Christ ministers, and that sanctuary has two holies, and two distinct ministrations, as truly as the earthly sanctuary had. If his words do not mean this, they have no meaning at all. How natural, then, the conclusion, that as the Jewish priests ministered daily in connection with the holy place of the sanctuary, and on the tenth day of the seventh month, at the close of their yearly round of service, the high priest entered the most holy place to make atonement for the cleansing of the sanctuary, so Christ ministered in connection with the holy place of the heavenly sanctuary from the time of his ascension to the ending of the 2800 days of Dan. viii. In 1844, when on the tenth day of the seventh month of that year he entered the most holy place of the heavenly tabernacle to make a special atonement for the blotting out of the sins of his people, or, which is the same thing, for the cleansing of the sanctuary. "Unto two thousand three hundred days," said the angel to the prophet, "then shall the sanctuary be cleansed."

The typical sanctuary was cleansed from the sins of the people with the offering of blood. The nature of the cleansing of the heavenly sanctuary may be learned from the type. By virtue of his own blood, Christ entered the most holy to make a special atonement for the cleansing of the heavenly tabernacle. For a clear and full exposition of the sanctuary and the nature of its cleansing, see the excellent work upon the subject from the pen of Eld. J. N. Andrews, for sale at the Review Office, Battle Creek, Mich.

With this view of the heavenly sanctuary before the reader, he can see the defect in the seventh-month theory. It now appears evident that the conclusion that Christ would come out of Heaven on that day is not justified by the promises in the case. But if Christ's ministry in the heavenly sanctuary was to last but one year, on the last day of which he would make an atonement for the cleansing of the heavenly tabernacle, according to the type, then the conclusion that he would on that day come out and bless his waiting people, would be irretrievable.

But let it be remembered that "the law having a shadow of good things to come," was "not the very image of the things." In the shadow, the round of service, first in the holy place for the entire year, came one day, and second, in the most holy place on the last day of that year, was repeated each successive year. But not so in the ministry of Christ. He entered the holy place of that heavenly sanctuary at his ascension once for all. There he ministered till the time for the cleansing of the sanctuary at the close of the 2800 days in the autumn of 1844. To accomplish this work, he then entered the most holy place once for all. Christ suffered upon the cross—not often—but once for all. He entered upon his work in the holy place once for all. And he cleanses the heavenly sanctuary for the sins of his people once for all. His ministry in the holy from his ascension in the spring of A. D. 81, to the autumn of 1844, was eighteen hundred and thirteen years and six months. The period of his ministry in the most holy can no more be defined before its close, than the time of his ministry in the holy could be defined before it terminated. Therefore, however much the tenth-day atonement for the cleansing of the typical sanctuary proved that our great High Priest would enter the most holy of the heavenly tabernacle on the tenth day of the seventh month, it proved nothing to the point that he would on that day come out of the most holy place.

But just what was accomplished on the tenth day of the seventh month became a matter of discussion. Some took the rash position that the movement had not been directed by the providence of God. They cast away their confidence in that work, not having sufficient faith and patience to "wait," and to "watch," until it should be explained by the light of the sanctuary and the three messages of Rev. xiv, and they drew back, to say the least, toward perdition.

Others trembled for this fearful step, and felt the deepest solicitude for the welfare of the flock, and exhorted the brethren to patiently wait and watch for the coming of the Lord, in full faith that God had been in the work. Among these was William Miller. In a letter published in the Advent Herald for Dec. 11, 1844, he says:

"Dear Bro. Himes: Be patient, establish your heart, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. For ye have need of patience that after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise. For yet a little while and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry."

I have room for only one more extract. It is from the cheering pen of Elder F. O. Brown, who was not only a man of ability, but one who drank deeply at the fountain of advent experience. He saw and felt the danger of drawing back, and wrote the following letter to encourage his brethren to hold fast, and believe to the ending of the soul. It was written Nov. 11, 1844, and published in the Advent Herald.

"Dear Brethren and Sisters: The great God has dealt wonderfully with us. When we were in a state of alarming blindness in relation to the coming of the great and terrible day of the Lord, he saw fit to awaken us from our death-like slumbers, to a knowledge of these things. How little of our own or man's agency was employed in this work you know. Our prejudices, education, tastes, both intellectual and moral were all opposed to the doctrine of the Lord's coming. We know that it was the Almighty's arm that disposed us to receive this grace. The Holy Ghost wrought it in our inmost souls, yes, incorporated it into our very being, so that it is now a part of us, and no man can take it from us. It is our hope, our joy, our all. The Bible reads it, every page is full of the Lord's immediate coming, and much from without strengthens us in the belief that the Judge standeth at the door! At present everything tries us. Well, we have heretofore had almost uninterrupted peace and exceeding great joy. True, we have had some trials formerly, but what were they in comparison with the glory to be revealed? We are permitted to live in the days of the Son of man, which Jesus spoke of as a desirable day. How special the honor! How unspeakable the privilege.

"And shall we be so selfish as not to be willing to endure a little trial for such a day, when all our worthy and honored predecessors have so patiently submitted to the toils and sufferings incident to their pilgrimage and to their times? Let it never be! We know that God has been with us. Perhaps never before this has he for a moment seemed to depart from us. Shall we now begin like the children of Israel to doubt and to fear and repine, after he has so frequently and signally shown us his hand in effecting for us one deliverance after another? Has God blest us with sanctification and salvation and glory, now to rebuke and destroy us! The thought is almost blasphemous. Away with it! Have we been so long with our Lord and yet not know him? Have we read our Bibles in vain? Have we forgotten the record of his wonderful dealings unto his people in all past ages? Let us pause, and wait, and read, and pray, before we act rashly or pronounce a hasty judgment upon the ways and works of God. If we are in darkness, and see not as clearly as heretofore, let us not be impatient. We shall have light just as soon as God sees it will be for our good. Mark it, dearly beloved, our great Joshua will surely bring us unto the goodly land. I have no kind of fears of it, and I will not desert him before he does me.

"Here doing the work just right. Glory to his name! Remember you have been sailing a long, long voyage, and you began to think yourselves pretty skillful sailors until you approached the home coast, when the Pilot coming on board, you had to relinquish the charge to him, and oh, how hard it is to commit all your precious cargo and your noble vessel into his hands! You fear, you tremble, lest the gallant ship should become a wreck, and the dear-bought freight be emptied into the ocean! But do not fear. Throw off the masts, and like a good, cool, relieved officer, go and take your place with the humble, yet sturdy crew, and talk over home scenes and endearments. Cheer up, 'all's well.'

"You have finished your work, and now be patient, and you shall have the reward.

"It was necessary that our 'faith' and 'patience' should be tried before our work could be completed. We closed up our work with the world some time ago. This is my conviction. And now God has given us a little season for self-preparation, and to prove us before the world. Who now will abide the test? Who is resolved to see the end of his faith, live or die? Who will go to Heaven if he has to go alone? Who will fight the battle through, though the armorbearers faint, and fear and fall? Who will keep his eye alone on the floating flag of his King, and, if need be, sacrifice his last drop of blood for it? Such only are worthy to be crowned, and such only will reap the glorious laurels.

"We must be in speaking distance of port. God's recent work for us proves it. We needed just such a work if Christ is coming forthwith. I bless God for such glorious manifestations of himself to his people. Don't dishonor him, questioning whether it might not have been the work of man, for he will vindicate that, and his word, too, very shortly, in my solemn belief.

Do not be allured by the baits that may be hung out to draw you back from your confidence in God. The world and the nominal church know nothing at all of your hope. They cannot be made to understand us. Let them alone. You have buried your name and your reputation once, and now do not go to digging it up again, when all manner of evil is spoken of you falsely for Christ's sake. Pray for your enemies. Do look straight ahead, lest your minds again become occupied with earth—its business, cares, labors, pleasures, friends. The Bible, the Bible, is the best teacher now. Prayer, prayer, is the best helper. The next signal we have will be the final one. Oh, shall any of us be found with our lamps going out when the Master comes? Oh, how impressive the Saviour's repeated admonition, Watch, watch, watch."

Many concluded that great changes took place on the tenth day of the seventh month closely connected with the final destiny of men, but as yet there was no well-defined position as to what did take place.

Joseph Marsh, editor of the Voices of Truth, Nov. 7, 1844, says:

"We did believe that he would come at that time; and now, though we sorrow on account of our disappointment, yet we rejoice that we have acted according to our faith. We have had, and still have, a conscience void of offense in this matter, toward God and man. God has blessed us abundantly, and we have not a doubt but that all will soon be made to work together for the good of his dear people, and his glory.

"We cheerfully admit that we have been mistaken in the nature of the event we expected would occur on the tenth day of the seventh month; but we cannot yet admit that our great High Priest did not on that very day, accomplish all that the type would justify us to expect. We now believe he did."

"Where are we in the fulfillment of prophecy?" soon became a matter of most interesting inquiry. Some yielded to the clamors of the church and world, who called for confessions that they had been mistaken at least in the time, and among this number were several able ministers. Their fearful course greatly increased the anxiety to understand the real position. The hour was a most trying one. There seemed to be a strong inclination with many to draw back, which ripened in them into a general stampede in the direction of Egypt. Finally, not a few settled with more or less clearness, upon a position embracing the following points:—

1. That the parable of the ten virgins represented the great advent movement, each specification illustrating a corresponding event connected with second-advent history.

2. That, in answer to the inquiry, "Where are we?" the point of time was resolved, when the words of our Lord following the parable were applicable, "Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh." Math. xxv, 13.

3. That the time had come to liken, or to compare, the experience of those who were looking for the kingdom, here called the kingdom of Heaven, with an eastern marriage, and that in order to do this, both must be matters of history, showing that each specification in the parable was already fulfilled.

4. That the time when to compare second-advent experience with the events in the marriage was definitely pointed out by our Lord, when he says, "Then shall the kingdom of Heaven be likened unto ten virgins." When? He had just closed a description of two kinds of servants in chapter xlvii, one giving meat to their master's household in due season, the other class emitting these good and faithful servants, and in their hearts saying, "My Lord delayeth his coming." Just then may the comparison between the events con-needed with advent history be compared with profit with the specifications of the parable. These two classes had both been engaged in the same work. But by some means, one begins to say in his heart, My Lord delayeth his coming, and smites his fellows. No one who wished to see, could fail to see a clear fulfillment of this illustration in the labors and general course of Advent ministers soon after the passing of the time. All came up to the time apparently a band of brothers. The time passed. Some became impatient and cast away their confidence in the work, confessed to a scoffing church and world, and because others would not confess as they had done, that a human or satanic influence had controlled them, they were ready to smite those who were strengthening the Master's household with the bread of Heaven. The spiritual food for that time was by no means that teaching which would let them down from the position they had taken, and send them weeping and murmuring back to Egypt. But most in due season were those expositions of God's word which showed his hand in the movement, and such cheering testimonies are quoted in the foregoing pages in vindication of the advent movement. How humiliating and painful the fact that Satan is permitted to bring the spiritual warfare within the second-advent ranks.

5. That in the sense of the parable the Bridegroom had come. Come where? Answer, To the marriage. Was the marriage of the Lamb to take place in this world at the second appearing of Christ? The Bridegroom had not come. But if the marriage of the Lamb was to take place in Heaven, the position might be correct. And right here the charge of our Lord to the waiting ones comes in with peculiar force: "Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning, and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord when he will return from the wedding." Luke xli, 35, 36. If our Lord at his second appearing returns from the wedding, then the marriage of the Lamb must take place in Heaven prior to his return. Therefore, the coming of the Bridegroom in the parable illustrated some change in the position and work of our great High Priest in Heaven in reference to the marriage of the Lamb.

In a letter to the Voice of Truth for Feb. 10, 1846, William Miller says:

"I presume, Bro. Marsh, you have seen the Advent Mirror, printed in Boston, Jan. 1846, concerning the marriage, in the parable of the virgins. I do believe in the main they are right—that cannot be the personal coming of Christ.—Why, say you? Read Luke xli, 36: 'And ye yourselves, like unto men that wait for their Lord, when he shall return from the wedding, that when he cometh and knocketh, they may open to him immediately.' You see his coming, for which we look, is after the wedding.

"Has Christ come in the sense spoken of, Matt. xxv, 10? I think he has."

"I know many of my brethren whom I highly esteem, will, and do, disagree with me on this matter. I would advise them not to have any hardness. Remember what James says, v, 9. 'Grudge not one against another, brethren, lest ye be condemned: behold the Judge standeth before the door.' It would seem that in this very time when we have need of patience, the apostle, by the inspiration of the divine Spirit, foresees that there would be danger of grudging, or grieving one another, and warns us not to do it, lest ye be condemned: for 'the Judge standeth before the door.'"

"Let the dear brethren see to it, that we give meat in due season. Let no one say in his heart, my Lord delayeth his coming, and begin to beat, and bruise, and grudge against his fellow-servant. He that seeks to save his life now by conformity to the world, or worldly men, will lose it; and he that loses his life now, for the truth's sake, will find eternal life."

6. That the old, established view that the marriage of the Lamb, the church, was the bride of Christ, was among the errors of past times. By investigation it was clearly seen that there were two things which the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments illustrate by marriage. First, the union of God's people in all past ages, as well as at the present time, with their Lord. Second, Christ's reception of the throne of David, which is in the New Jerusalem. But union of believers with their Lord has existed since the days of Adam, and cannot be regarded as the marriage of the Lamb. It is supposed that Isaiah (lv, 6, 7) speaks of the church when he says, "Thy Maker is thine husband;" but Paul, in Gal. iv, applies this prophecy to the New Jerusalem.

Says John, speaking of Christ, "He that hath the bride is the bridegroom." John iii, 29. That Christ is here represented in his relation to his followers by a bridegroom, and his followers by a bride, is true; but that he and they are here called the bridegroom and bride is not true. No one believes that the event called the marriage of the Lamb, took place more than eighteen hundred years since.

Paul, in writing to the church, 2 Cor. xi, 2, says, "I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you a chaste virgin to Christ." But does this prove that the marriage of the Lamb took place in Corinth? Or, did Paul only wish to represent by marriage the union which he had effected through the gospel between Christ and the church at Corinth?

He also says, Eph. v, 23, "For the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the church." But please turn and read from verse 21, and it will be seen that Paul's subject is the relation and duty of man and wife to each other. This is illustrated and enforced by the relation of Christ and the church. Those who suppose that Paul is here defining who the Lamb's wife is, are greatly mistaken. That is not his subject. He commences, "Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands." Verse 22. "Husbands, love your wives." Verse 25. It is, indeed, an excellent subject, but has nothing to do in determining what the bride is.

The marriage of the Lamb does not cover the entire period of probation, in which believers are united to their Lord, from Adam to the close of probation. It is one event, to take place at one point of time, and that is just prior to the resurrection of the just.

Then what is the bride in the marriage of the Lamb? Said the angel to John, "Come hither, I will shew thee the bride, the Lamb's wife." Rev. xxi, 9. Did the angel show John the church? Let John testify. "And he carried me away in the Spirit to a great and high mountain, and showed me that great city, the holy Jerusalem, descending out of Heaven from God." Verse 10.

The New Jerusalem is also represented as the mother. "But Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all." Gal. iv, 26. Christ is represented [Isa. lx, 6, 7] as the "everlasting Father" of his people; the New Jerusalem, the mother, and the subjects of the first resurrection, the children. And, beyond all doubt, the resurrection of the just is represented by birth. Now appropriate, then, is the view that the marriage of the Lamb takes place in Heaven, before the Lord comes, and before the children of the great family of Heaven are brought forth at the resurrection of the just.

Let those who are disposed to cling to the old view that the church is the bride, and that the marriage is after Christ comes, and the saints are caught up to Heaven, answer the following questions:

1. Who are illustrated by the men found at the marriage, Matt. xxii, not having on the wedding garment?
2. Will any be caught up by mistake, to be bound hand and foot, and be cast down to the earth again?
3. If the church is the wife, who are they that are called to the marriage as guests?
4. Jerusalem above is the mother of the children of promise; but if the church is the Lamb's wife, who are the children?

5. Allowing that the church is to be the bride, who are "the nations of the saved," Rev. xxi, 24, that walk in her light?

6. That the door was shut. The clear light from the heavenly sanctuary that a door, or ministration, was opened at the close of the 2800 days, while another was closed at that time, had not yet been seen. And in the absence of light in reference to the shut and open door of the heavenly sanctuary, the reader can hardly see how those who held fast their advent experience, as illustrated by the parable of the ten virgins, could fail to come to the conclusion that probation for sinners had closed.

But light on the subject soon came, and then it was seen that although Christ closed one ministration at the termination of the 2800 days, he had opened another in the most holy place, and still presented his blood before the Father for sinners. As the high priest, in the type, on the tenth day of the seventh month, entered the most holy place, and offered blood for the sins of the people, before the ark of the testament and the mercy-seat, so Christ, at the close of the 2800 days, came before the ark of God and the mercy-seat to plead his blood in behalf of sinners. Mark this: The great Redeemer then approached the mercy-seat in behalf of sinners. Was the door of mercy closed? This is an unscriptural expression, but, if I may be allowed to use it, may I not say that in the fullest sense of the expression the door of mercy was opened on the tenth day of the seventh month, 1844.

Inside the ark of God containing the ten precepts of his holy law, over which was the mercy-seat, did the trusting ones now behold their merciful High Priest. They had stood in harmony with the whole advent host at the passing of the time, then represented as "the church in Philadelphia;" meaning brotherly love. And with what inexpressible sweetness did the following words addressed to that church come home to their stricken hearts: "These things saith he that is holy, he that is true, he that hath the key of David, he that openeth, and no man shutteth; and he that shutteth, and no man openeth. I know thy works. Behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it." Rev. iii, 7, 8.

Adventists were agreed that the seven churches of Rev. ii and iii, symbolized seven states of the church, covering the entire period from the first advent of Christ to his second appearing, and that the sixth state addressed represented those who with one united voice proclaimed the coming of Jesus, in the autumn of 1844. This church was about to enter upon a period of great trial. And they were to find relief from it, so far as ascertaining their true position is concerned, by light from the heavenly sanctuary. After the light should come, then would also come the battle upon the shut and open door. Here was seen the connecting link between the work of God in the past advent movement, present duty to keep the commandments of God, and the future glory. And as these views were taught in vindication of the advent movement, in connection with the claims of the Sabbath of the fourth commandment, those men, especially those who had given up their advent experience, felt called upon to oppose. And their opposition, as a general thing, was most violent, bitter, and wicked.

The shut and open door of the heavenly sanctuary was the strong point upon which this matter turned. If we were right on the subject of the cleansing of the sanctuary, the preaching of the time was right, and the entire movement has been right.

The hand of the Lord seemed to be with those who took hold of these views, and many embraced them. Then it was that our opponents arose in the spirit of persecution, manifesting the wrath of the dragon against those who kept the commandments of God, and labored to open the door that had been shut, and to shut that door which had been opened, and thus put an end to the matter. Hence the strong expressions quoted above—"He that openeth and no man shutteth, and he that shutteth and no man openeth." "Behold I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it." Nothing can be plainer than that man, or a set of men, would, near the close of the history of the church, war against the truth of God in reference to the shut and open door.

And to this day those who retain the spirit of war upon those who keep the commandments of God, make the belief in the shut and open door edious, and charge it all upon Seventh-day Adventists. Many of them are not unaware of the injustice of this. Some of this people did believe in the shut door, in common with the Adventists generally, soon after the passing of the time. Some of us held fast this position longer than those did who gave up their advent experience, and drew back in the direction of perdition. And God be thanked that we did hold fast to the position till the matter was explained by light from the heavenly sanctuary.

And it may be worthy of notice that although the belief in, and abandonment of, the shut-door position has been general; there have been two distinct and opposite ways of getting out of it. One class did this by casting away their confidence in the advent movement, by confessions to those who had opposed and had scoffed at them, and by ascribing the powerful work of the Holy Spirit, which they had felt, to human or satanic influence. These got out of the position on the side of perdition.

Another class heeded the many exhortations of Christ and his apostles, applicable to their position, with its trials, dangers and duties—Watch—Be ye therefore patient—Cast not away therefore your confidence—For ye have need of patience—Hold fast.—They waited, watched, and prayed till light came, and they, by faith in the word, saw the open door of the heavenly sanctuary, and Jesus there pleading his precious blood before the ark of the most holy place.

But what was that ark? It was the ark of God's testimony, the ten commandments. Reader, please follow these trusting, waiting ones as they, by faith, enter the heavenly sanctuary. They take you into the holy place, and show you "the candlestick, and the table, and the shewbread," and other articles of furniture. Then they lead you into the most holy, where stands Jesus, clad in priestly garments, before the mercy-seat which is upon, and but the cover of, the ark containing the law of God. They lift the cover and bid you look into the sacred ark, and there you behold the ten commandments, a copy of which God gave to Moses. Yes, dear reader, there, safe from the wrath of man and the rage of demons, beside his own holiness were the ten precepts of God's holy law.

The waiting, watching, praying ones embraced the fourth precept of that law, and with fresh courage took their onward course to the golden gates of the city of God, cheered by the closing benediction of the Son of God: "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." Thus they came out of the position of the shut door on the side of loyalty to the God of high Heaven, the tree of life, and the eternal city of the redeemed. The reader will not fail to see the difference between this and getting out of the shut door on the side of perdition. God pity the apostate.

SAVING FAITH.

BY REV. JAMES WHITE.*

TRUST.—"Cast not away therefore your confidence, which hath great recompense of reward. For ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise. For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry. Now the just shall live by faith; but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him. But we are not of them who draw back unto perdition; but of them that believe to the saving of the soul. Heb. x, 35-39.

I know of no better subject for this occasion than that which sets forth the position of those who have prepared this house of worship.

"Cast not away therefore your confidence." Somebody has had great confidence.

"Which hath great recompense of reward." This confidence is not to be condemned. It is approved of high Heaven, and will meet its reward.

"For ye have need of patience." Those who have had this confidence are brought into a position of extreme trial, calling for patience.

"That, after ye have done the will of God." Here they have the assurance that they have done the will of God, notwithstanding their disappointments and trials.

"That ye might receive the promise." It is important that they retain their confidence. It is their privilege and duty to hold fast the beginning of their confidence firm unto the end, that they may receive the promises of God.

I believe that this portion of Scripture applies to Adventists. I believe that it clearly delineates their hopes, their disappointments, their trials, their present position, and their present duties. Do you ask me why I apply this scripture to Adventists, and to this time? Let the next verse, which I have already read in your hearing, answer the question:

"For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry." The subject of the apostle's remark is evidently the Coming One. "Cast not away therefore your confidence" in the Coming One. "For ye have need of patience," being disappointed in reference to the time of the appearing of the Coming One.

"That ye might receive the promise." "For yet a little while." Time is not long, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry."

"Tarry." Why this word introduced into the text, unless there was to be disappointment and delay? The time had passed to which they were looking anxiously and joyfully for the return of the Coming One. The time already past, they no longer looked to a future point of time. Once it was a matter of mathematical calculation. Then they walked as it were by sight. But now the time has passed, and the just live by faith.

"But if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him." Draw back from what? His advanced position in reference to the Coming One. Such apostasy is extremely offensive to God.

"But we are not of those who draw back to perdition. Fearful words! Ood pity the apostate.

"But of those that believe to the saving of the soul." Believe in what? What is the subject? Answer, The Coming One. During the delay, following the disappointment, the faith of believers is to be exceedingly tried. Many were to draw back. Some were to hold fast. God approves those who hold fast their confidence, and continue to the end, and sets before us the extreme danger of apostatising and drawing back after having been called out to look for the Coming One. God save us.

We do not expect this entire congregation to appreciate our views upon this subject. Some of you will; others will not. To many of you they will appear inconsistent. Millenism, you say, is a mistake. The doctrine was all blown up when the time past; and to talk of holding fast our faith, looks to you one of the greatest inconsistencies.

We think, however, that the matter is explainable. It is consistent. We believe that in the great Advent movement, illustrated by those three figures, the three angels upon this chart are explainable.

Prophecy has been fulfilled in our disappointments, as well as in our most joyful expectations. And here again we appear inconsistent. Prophecy fulfilled, and yet we mistaken! We acknowledge our disappointment, and yet we believe prophecy has been fulfilled in the great Advent movement.

Do you say this can not be? Do you take the position that when Providence fulfills prophecy in any class of men, there can be no mistake connected with it? Go back with me, if you please, more than eighteen centuries. Behold the Master riding into Jerusalem, while the shouting multitudes are crying, Hosanna. They expected that he would then, and there, ascend the throne of David, and be king. In a few days, however, he was nailed to the cross, and with him the hopes of the disciples, died. Their expectations utterly failed, yet they fulfilled prophecy.

"Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem; behold thy King cometh unto thee. He is just, and having salvation; lowly, and riding upon an ass, and upon a colt, the foal of an ass." Zech. ix, 9. This was fulfilled when Christ meekly rode into Jerusalem, followed by the devoted twelve, and the shouting multitude. They spread their outer garments in the way that he was to pass, cut off the branches of the beautiful palm trees, and carpeted his pathway as he rode meekly along. They cried, "Hosanna to the King of David." Some of the prudent ones came to the Lord and said, "Master, rebuke thy disciples." He approvingly said, "If these should hold their peace, the stones would cry out."

Prophecy had gone forth, and unless the multitude had cried, Hosanna, God would have put a tongue into the very stones. The crowd supposed Christ was then to take the throne. They had no doubt of it. And they became excited and enthusiastic at the prospect. They were filled with the spirit of the time, and of the occasion. They cried hosanna in full expectation that Christ was there to take the throne. Did they fulfill prophecy? They did. Were they disappointed? They were. They were disappointed in every particular.

Were Adventists disappointed in 1844? They were. Then I ask, may not prophecy be fulfilled in their experience, although they were disappointed, as well as

* Preached at the dedication of the house of worship in Ottawa, Sunday, Jan. 25, 1860. Reported for REVIEW.

In the experience of discipline who lived eighteen centuries ago, when Christ rode into Jerusalem?

But, my friends, I am prepared to show that where the shouting multitudes, eighteen centuries since, were disappointed in every particular, Adventists, in 1844, were mistaken in only one out of four leading points of their faith.

The leading points in the Advent faith were these: First, the personal, not spiritual, coming of Christ. Second, the application of the prophetic symbols which are here represented upon this chart, namely, the great image of Daniel ii, the four beasts of Daniel vii, and the symbols of Dan. viii, &c. The third point was prophetic time. The fourth point was the event to take place at the termination of the prophetic periods. These are the four great points of their faith. On three of these we maintain that we were right. On one, we were mistaken.

I repeat, the consecrated twelve and the shouting multitude fulfilled prophecy, and were disappointed in every particular. It was an entire failure. But the Adventists of 1844, who were joyfully looking for the coming of the King of kings, were disappointed in one point, while in three other leading points they were right. To these four points I wish to call your attention:

First, the personal coming of Christ. When Wm.

Miller and his associates went forth to lecture publicly and scatter publications everywhere, the churches were holding the doctrine of the temporal millennium, or spiritual coming and reign of Jesus Christ. This was not the old established doctrine in the church. He who undertook to trace it back to the apostles, could go no further than Daniel Whithy, of the eighteenth century, as the first to teach the spiritual second advent and reign of Christ. It had, however, in this short time, become very popular in all the churches, and, with few exceptions, the individual members received the sentiment.

The Low Hampton farmer came out upon the doctrine of the literal personal advent of Jesus Christ at the resurrection of the just, and met this popular error of the world's conversion and the spiritual reign of Christ, with the word of God. He presented the words of Christ himself: "And ye shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. And he shall send his angels, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other."

He also relied upon the declaration of the angels who stood by, at the ascension of Christ, and said to the disciples, as they gazed earnestly to catch the last glimpses of their ascending Lord, "Why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." They saw him after his resurrection. Thomas even placed his finger in the prints of the nails in his hands and feet, and of the spear in his side; and as he saw these tangible evidences of his personality, he exclaims, "My Lord and my God."

"Mury," said the Master, "touch me not, for I have not yet ascended to my Father." And he afterward said to his disciples, "A spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have."

He ate of the broiled fish and of the honeycomb. It was this personal Christ that led his disciples up upon the Mount of Olives, and there ascended in their sight. And the angels bore testimony that this same Jesus, not another, that ye see go into heaven, shall so come, in like manner, as ye see him go into heaven. This is the best kind of testimony. Language cannot be formed to give stronger evidence of the literal return of the Son of God.

In language equally plain, the Revelator says: "Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him." And the great apostle says: "For the Lord himself [not another, but himself, lest we should make a mistake and think that the second advent was the advent of the Spirit, or conversion, or death, or something else] shall descend from Heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the tramp of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first."

I might go to the prophets. I might read to you what Job says: "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth."

With this view of the subject, the book of God appears harmonious. It appears beautiful and clear, as the testimony of Christ, of the angels, of the apostles, and of the prophets, all harmonizing in the clearest terms to impress us with the fact that He who ascended up in a tangible form, and personally went up to the throne of the Father, will come again a personal Christ, to reign King over his people forever. On this point, Adventists are right.

On the second point, the application of the prophetic symbols, Wm. Miller has the majority of commentators with him. I need not dwell upon this point. All Protestants agree, with very few exceptions; and Wm. Miller only repeated that which had been concerted to in the past, as to the application of these great prophetic symbols.

The third point, the time, the termination of the prophetic periods. Here it was said that Wm. Miller was treading upon forbidden ground. It was asserted that he had no business with prophetic chronology. Then I answer that it had no business in the Bible. This book professes to be a revelation. We take it as such. The God of the Bible has not troubled the church with non-essentials. He has given us the essentials, and has been very careful to keep the non-essentials out. "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable."

But there is no book in the Bible that contains more of the grand pillars that bear up Christianity against infidelity, than the book of Daniel. It is the Christian's stronghold. And in that book are the prophetic measurements. They, as well as other portions of that book, are profitable.

I have not time to go into the arguments on prophetic chronology. I was stating Wm. Miller's position in regard to the prophetic times. He claimed that the 2300 days were so many years; that they commenced, not from any point in the eighth chapter, but that the ninth chapter is a key that explains the eighth. The 70 prophetic weeks, or 490 years, were to be determined or cut off from the 2300. The 70 weeks were to date from the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem, which went forth 457 years before Christ. This being the case, the whole period of 2300 days would reach to A. D. 1844.

This position stood the test of the most rigid criticism. Said Prof. Bush, who stood at the head of New England Presbyterianism, Millerism is a mistake; but he who touches Wm. Miller on chronology, touches him on the strongest point. Miller is right as to time; but he is mistaken in the event. He says that Christ is coming, and that the world is to be burned, whereas the true event is the spiritual reign of Christ, and the temporal millennium. This great man taught the people that the temporal millennium was coming about the year 1844. Did not Prof. Bush make a mistake? Has the temporal millennium come, friends? If we have been enjoying it since 1844, why the Lord save us from the balance.

Wm. Miller believed that the prophetic periods terminated in 1844, and that Christ would then come, and the resurrection of the just take place. Wm. Miller was mistaken; Prof. Bush was also mistaken. To err, even in matters and events pertaining to the great God and the events of prophecy, is human. Everything beneath the sun is marked with imperfection, with a lack of foresight. God only is supremely great and supremely wise. But why not let Wm. Miller rest in the grave without reproach, as well as Prof. Bush. Both of these great men sleep; but who thinks of reproaching Prof. Bush because the temporal millennium has not come? But who will plead the cause of Wm. Miller? The good man rests. God bless him! In the resurrection morning he will come forth.

The shouting multitude eighteen centuries ago were utterly mistaken, when they were fulfilling prophecy. Wm. Miller and his associates were right on three points out of four. They were mistaken in only one leading point. Time has rolled on, and given us chance to search our Bibles with a little more care and prayerfulness, until the matter is now all perfectly explainable.

The mistake of these two great men, Miller and Bush, was in not rightly understanding the subject of the Sanctuary and its cleansing. I have already referred to the 2300 days. Allow me to quote the words of the angel to Daniel: "Then I heard one saint speaking, and another saint said unto that certain saint which spake, How long shall be the vision concerning the daily sacrifice, and the transgression of desolation, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot? And he said unto me, Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed."

Says Prof. Bush, "The sanctuary is the church. The church is to be cleansed, and the world converted; and it is all to take place at the end of the 2300 days, about 1844." But the church has not been cleansed yet. Said Wm. Miller, "The sanctuary is the earth. That good and truly great man, when he searched the word of God, and saw blazing light shine forth from this precious book in reference to the coming of Christ, saw that one object of that coming was to cleanse and purify the earth. And as the old earth was cleansed by being washed by the waters of the flood, so the present was to be cleansed by the fires of the last day. He inferred that the sanctuary to be cleansed at the end of the 2300 days was the earth. He made a great mistake; and there is the secret of the whole disappointment.

The earth God's sanctuary? Never, since man stepped his foot out of Eden. Once God walked and talked with man in Eden. Sin entered. The blight and mildew of sin rests everywhere, and moral darkness and iniquity have covered the earth. The primary signification of sanctuary is, a holy place, a sacred place, the dwelling-place of the most high God. Neither this earth, nor any part of it, has been such a place since man left Eden.

Two things only God acknowledges in the Scriptures as his sanctuary: First, the tabernacle built by Moses; second, the sanctuary which is represented here upon this chart. Said God to Moses, "Make me a sanctuary, that I may dwell among you." Moses obeyed. There God placed his name, manifested his glory, and held converse with the high priest relative to the welfare of Israel. That was a holy place. It was the dwelling-place of God.

The second place that God acknowledges as his sanctuary is that of which the apostle speaks in Hebrews: "Now of the things which we have spoken this is the sum: We have such an High Priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the Heavens, a minister of the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man."

The man, Moses, pitched the earthly tabernacle. The Lord pitched the heavenly. Men of infirmity were priests under the typical system, and officiated under the shadow, in the earthly sanctuary. But Christ ascended up to the great antitypical sanctuary in Heaven, to plead his own precious blood.

The Jewish sanctuary was but the shadow, the type, the pattern. The great reality is in Heaven. There is the sanctuary of the new covenant.

The sanctuary of the old covenant long since passed away. Unto two thousand three hundred days, years, reaching down near the close of this dispensation, and then shall the sanctuary be cleansed. But does Heaven need cleansing? Well, friends, your ideas are altogether too gross upon the subject of the cleansing of the sanctuary as spoken of by the prophet. We cleanse rooms in this world with sand, soap, and water. But would we get a clear idea of cleansing as applied to heavenly things, let us look at the cleansing of the typical sanctuary.

Into the holy place went the high priest once every year to cleanse the sanctuary. Did he go in there with water, soap, and sand to cleanse it? Was it because that building was unclean as this house might be by bringing dirt and filth into it? There was no such uncleanness in the typical sanctuary. The priests were required to wash their feet before going into the sanctuary, lest some particle of dust should cling to their feet and they should thus leave it in that place. But there was moral uncleanness transported to the sanctuary. The people brought their sin-offerings, confessed their sins, and the priest bore in before the Lord the sins of the people. They were thus taken from the people and conveyed to the sanctuary. It was sin that polluted the sanctuary. It was sin conveyed in figure from the people to that sanctuary which made its cleansing by blood necessary. Hence on the tenth day of the seventh month, the last day of that yearly service, the high priest went into the most holy place to cleanse the sanctuary. He came out bearing the sins of the people, and confessed them on the head of the scapegoat, which is then sent away by the hand of a fit man into the wilderness. All this is done in shadow, and the goat is borne away into the land of separation. This is the way in which the typical sanctuary was cleansed.

Now, how with the antitypical? Every sinner, who has found pardon of his sins, has looked up to Jesus, and to him has confessed his sins. Jesus reaches down his arm to save him. He accepts his confessions of sin, and thus, shall I say, through the intercession of Christ, the sins of the sinner are conveyed to the heavenly sanctuary. Hence at the close of his ministration, Jesus goes into the most holy place of the heavenly sanctuary, and hears out these sins and consecrates them upon the head of the great antitypical scapegoat, which we think is the Devil. And as the goat in the type was by the hand of a fit man sent away into the wilderness, so the Devil is at this time bound by the mighty angel. This is our idea of the cleansing of the sanctuary of the new covenant.

The grand period of 2300 prophetic days reached from the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem, B. C. 457, to A. D. 1844, when Christ, our great high priest, entered the most holy place, where, by virtue of his own blood, he is to remove the sins of his people from the heavenly sanctuary.

This view of the subject explains the nature of the disappointment of Adventists, and helps define their present position. It was a part of God's great plan in dealing with the people of our time to arouse the sleeping churches and the world by the proclamation of the time of the Lord's coming. In order for this it seems necessary that the present clear light upon the sanctuary, and the nature of its cleansing should remain hidden till after the passing of the time. Since the disappointment, how forcible the words of the text:

"Cast not away therefore your confidence which hath great recompense of reward."

Adventists had great confidence in the proclamation that the Lord would come in 1844. Are they reproved, or approved for this confidence? Hear while I quote the text again; and may God impress you with its true meaning: "Cast not away therefore your confidence which hath great recompense of reward. For ye have need of patience [God knows that we have had need of patience], that after ye have done the will of God ye might receive the promise; for yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry. Now the just shall live by faith, but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him. But we are not of them who draw back unto perdition, but of them that believe to the saving of the soul."

Faith, my friends, unshaken faith in this great question yet. We see no reason for doubting on this great question. Our faith has never been stronger in the personal coming of our Lord, in the application of the prophetic symbols, in prophetic chronology. We were mistaken in the event. Time has rolled on to fulfill this prophecy, and these declarations about the tarrying and the waiting time. What use should we have for them if we had not had just such a disappointment?

In our waiting position, we have had opportunity to correct our mistakes. And here we stand, with increased light upon this great question.

Believers should follow down the track of prophecy, and see God's providential hand still leading. Those who stand in the light are to-day stronger than at any other point in our Advent history.

This is saving faith—faith in God and in his word; faith in the great second Advent movement which has been wrought out in harmony with the word and Spirit of God; faith in our advanced position in the third message, keeping the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus; faith that in a little while, He that is to come will come, and will not tarry. Here is saving faith. God save us from drawing back to perdition.

May God bless this dear congregation. May these truths of such tremendous importance, oh, may they find a place in all your minds and hearts.

I thank God that our friends, though few, have prepared so comfortable and fitting a place of worship. With cheerful hearts and ready hands have they done this; and now open their doors for worship. We are disappointed this morning at having so large a representation from this community to address. God bless you, dear friends. May his Spirit come down upon us, and may this be the place where God's honor shall dwell, and his servants shall be free; and may they ever have in their bosoms the love and compassion of Christ.

This house has not been built with feelings of ambition to maintain a party feeling; but has been erected for Christ's cause. May all the members of this church be the servants of Jesus Christ, conducting themselves in humility and love. And may this be the place where the people shall ever love to come to hear the plain word of God. And may his blessing ever rest upon us while we meet in earthly courts to pray, and praise his holy name. And when these scenes shall close may it be our happy lot to meet in the mansions above. Amen.

OUR FAITH AND HOPE;

Or, Reasons Why We Believe as We Do.

NUMBER TWELVE.—THE VISION.

BY ELDER JAMES WHITE.

"Then I heard one saint speaking, and another saint said unto that certain saint which spake, How long shall be the vision concerning the daily sacrifice, and the transgression of desolation, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot? And he said unto me, Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." Dan. 8:13, 14.

This text is important, or it would not be in the Bible. The text may be understood; otherwise, it is not a portion of God's revelation to man. What God has revealed, he designed should be understood. It is true that "the secret things belong unto the Lord our God." We have no business with them. "But those things which are revealed belong unto us, and to our children for ever." Deut. 29:29.

Time is revealed in the sacred Scriptures. Time is important, or it would not be in the Bible. To class the prophetic periods with non-essentials is an insult upon the God of the Bible. In giving man a revelation, our gracious God gave the essentials, and left the non-essentials out of the book.

The definite time of the second advent of Christ is not revealed in the Bible. This fact, however, does not take from the prophetic periods any of their importance. They were designed to serve an important purpose, and just what purpose, is the object of this discourse to show.

We will first briefly define the terms employed in the text.

1. The two saints in conversation are Christ and Gabriel.

2. The vision embraces the three empires of Persia, Greece, and Rome.

3. The daily sacrifice, and the transgression of desolation, represent Rome in its Pagan and Papal forms.

4. The sanctuary is that of the new covenant, or of the Christian age, and is in Heaven. It is the sanctuary of which Paul speaks in the book of Hebrews.

5. The host are the true people of God, who direct their worship to the heavenly sanctuary.

6. Both the sanctuary and the host are trodden under foot in the same sense that men now tread under foot the Son of God. Heb. 10:29.

7. The days are prophetic, meaning 2300 years, and their commencement and termination can be distinctly defined.

8. The cleansing of the sanctuary is not from physical uncleanness, but from the sins of the people. Much may be learned of the nature of the cleansing of the heavenly sanctuary at the close of the 2300 prophetic days, by the manner in which the typical sanctuary was cleansed on the tenth day of the seventh month of each year.

We will now notice each point stated, and give our reasons for the positions taken.

1. The two saints in conversation. The angel selected to especially instruct Daniel says to him, in chap. 10:21, "There is none that holdeth with me in these things but Michael your prince." Jude, verse 9, has the expression: "Michael the archangel." Archangel is the head over angels, as archbishop in head over bishops. But who is the archangel? The apostle, in 1 Thess. 4:16, says, "The Lord himself shall descend from Heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first." And John 5:28, proves that it is the voice of the Son of God that wakes the dead to life. "The dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live." These texts prove that Michael is the Son of God. Therefore the Son of God was one of the two heavenly beings. And as there were but two engaged in revealing to Daniel the great facts of the vision, the angel Gabriel, mentioned in chap. 8:10; 9:21, is the other heavenly being.

How beautifully grand the scene! The Son of God and the angel Gabriel in conversation! One inquires of the other, "How long the vision" concerning Persia, Greece, and Rome? The other directs the answer to the prophet, "Unto 2300 days, then shall the sanctuary be cleansed."

2. The vision relates to what the prophet saw respecting Media and Persia, Greece, and Rome, as recorded in the eighth chapter of Daniel: Verses 1, 2;

"In the third year of the reign of King Belshazzar, a vision appeared unto me, even unto me Daniel, after that which appeared unto me at the first. And I saw in a vision; and it came to pass, when I saw, that I was at Shushan in the palace, which is in the province of Elam; and I saw in a vision, and I was by the river of Ulai." In these verses the term, "a vision," is mentioned three times. Referring to the same in verse 13, the question is asked, "How long shall be the vision?" The Son of God, in verse 16, commands Gabriel to make Daniel "understand the vision." And Daniel says at the close of his prayer, in chapter 9: "While I was speaking in prayer, even the man Gabriel, whom I had seen in the vision." This vision we will now consider.

Verses 4, 5: "Then I lifted up mine eyes, and saw, and behold, there stood before the river a ram which had two horns; and the two horns were high; but one was higher than the other, and the higher came up last. I saw the ram pushing westward, and northward, and southward, so that no beasts might stand before him, neither was there any that could deliver out of his hand; but he did according to his will, and became great." The symbol of the ram is explained in verse 20:

"The ram which thou sawest having two horns are the kings of Media and Persia." This vision does not begin with the empire of Babylon, represented by the head of gold in chap. 2, and the lion of chap. 7. It begins with the empire of Media and Persia at the height of its power, prevailing westward, northward, and southward, so that no power could stand before it. The two horns of the ram denote the union of these two powers in one government. Compare with the arms of the metallic image of chap. 2, and the bear, raising itself up on one side, of chap. 7.

Verses 6-8: "And as I was considering, behold an he goat came from the west on the face of the whole earth, and touched not the ground; and the goat had a notable horn between his eyes. And he came to the ram that had two horns, which I had seen standing before the river, and ran unto him in the fury of his power. And I saw him come close unto the ram, and he was moved with cholera against him, and smote the ram, and brake his two horns; and there was no power in the ram to stand before him, but he cast him down to the ground, and stamped upon him; and there was none that could deliver the ram out of his hand. Therefore the he goat waxed very great; and when he was strong, the great horn was broken; and for it came up four notable ones toward the four winds of heaven."

The symbol of the goat is explained in verses 21, 23: "And the rough goat is the king of Greece; and the great horn that is between his eyes is the first king. Now that being broken, whereas four stood up for it, four kingdoms shall stand up out of the nation, but not in his power." Verses 21, 22. The explanation of this symbol is also definite and certain. The power that should overthrow the Medes and Persians, and, in their stead, bear rule over the earth, is the empire of the Greeks. Greece succeeded Persia in the dominion of the world, n. c. 331. The great horn is here explained to be the first king of Greece. It was Alexander the Great. The four horns that arose when this horn was broken, denote the four kingdoms into which the empire of Alexander was divided after his death. The same is represented by the four heads and four wings of the leopard of chap. 7. It is predicted without the use of symbols, in Dan. 11: 2, 4. These four kingdoms were Macedonia, Thrace, Syria, and Egypt. They originated about n. c. 312.

Verses 9-12: "And out of one of them came forth a little horn, which waxed exceeding great, toward the south, and toward the east, and toward the pleasant land. And it waxed great, even to the host of heaven; and it cast down some of the host and of the stars to the ground, and stamped upon them. Yes, he magnified himself even to the Prince of the host, and by him the daily sacrifice was taken away, and the place of his sanctuary was cast down. And an host was given him against the daily sacrifice by reason of transgression, and it cast down the truth to the ground; and it practised and prospered."

In verses 23-25, the symbol of the little horn is explained thus:

"And in the latter time of their kingdom, when the transgressors are come to the full, a king of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences, shall stand up. And his power shall be mighty, but not by his own power; and he shall destroy wonderfully, and shall prosper, and practise, and shall destroy the mighty and the holy people. And through his policy also he shall cause craft to prosper in his hand; and he shall magnify himself in his heart, and by peace shall destroy many; he shall also stand up against the Prince of princes; but he shall be broken without hand."

To avoid the application of this prophecy to the Roman power, Pagan and Papal, the Papists have changed it from Rome to Antiochus Epiphanes, a Syrian king who could not resist the mandates of Rome. See notes of the Douay (Romish) Bible on Dan. 7: 8; 11. This application is made by the Papists to save their church from any share in the fulfillment of the prophecy; and in this they have been followed by most of those who have opposed the Advent faith. The following facts show that the little horn was not Antiochus.

(1) The four kingdoms into which the dominion of Alexander was divided, are symbolized by the four horns of the goat. Now this Antiochus was but one of the twenty-five kings that constituted the Syrian horn. Now, then, could he, at the same time, be another remarkable horn?

(2) The ram, according to this vision, became great; the goat waxed very great; but the little horn became exceeding great. How absurd and ludicrous is the following application of this comparison:

Great. Persia.	Very great. Greece.	Exceeding great. ANTIOCHUS.
-------------------	------------------------	--------------------------------

How easy and natural is the following:

Great. Persia.	Very great. Greece.	Exceeding great. ROME.
-------------------	------------------------	---------------------------

(3) The Medo-Persian empire is simply called great. Verse 4. The Bible informs us that it extended "from India even unto Ethiopia, over as hundred and seven and twenty provinces." Esther 1: 1. This was succeeded by the Grecian power, which is called very great. Verse 8. Then comes the power in question, which is called EXCEEDING GREAT. Verse 9. Was Antiochus exceeding great when compared with Alexander, the conqueror of the world? Let an item from the Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge answer:

"Finding his resources exhausted, he resolved to go into Persia, to levy tributes and collect large sums which he had agreed to pay to the Romans."

Surely, we need not question which was exceeding great, the Roman power which exacted the tribute, or Antiochus who was compelled to pay it.

(4) The power in question was "little" at first, but it waxed, or grew, "exceeding great toward the south, and toward the east, and toward the pleasant land." What can this describe but the conquering marches of a mighty power? Rome was almost directly north-west from Jerusalem, and its conquests in Asia and Africa were, of course, toward the east and south; but where were Antiochus' conquests? He came into possession of a kingdom already established, and Sir Isaac Newton says, "He did not enlarge it."

(5) Out of many reasons that might be added to the above, we name but one. This power was to stand up against the Prince of princes. Verse 25. The Prince of princes is Jesus Christ. Rev. 1: 5; 17: 14; 19: 16. But Antiochus died 164 years before our Lord was born. It is settled, therefore, that another power is the subject of this prophecy. The following facts demonstrate that Rome is the power in question:

(1) This power was to come forth from one of the four kingdoms of Alexander's empire. Let us remember that nations are not brought into prophecy till connected with the people of God. Rome had been in existence many years before it was noticed in prophecy; and Rome had made Macedonia, one of the four horns of the Grecian goat, a part of itself n. c. 108, about seven years before its first connection with the people of God. See 1 Mac. 8. So that Rome could as truly be said to be "out of one of them," as the ten horns of the fourth beast in the seventh chapter, could be said to come out of that beast, when they were ten kingdoms set up by the conquerors of Rome.

(2) It was to wax exceeding great toward the south, and toward the east, and toward the pleasant land. (Psalms. Ps. 106: 24; Zeck. 7: 14.) This was tree of Rome in every particular. Witness its conquests in Africa and Asia, and its overthrow of the place and nation of the Jews. John 11:48.

(8) It was to cast down some of the host and of the stars. This is predicted respecting the dragon. Rev. 12:8, 4. All admit that the dragon was Rome. Who can fail to see the identity of the dragon and the little horn?

(4) Rome was emphatically a king of fierce countenance, and one that did understand dark sentences. Moses used similar language when, as all agree, he predicted the Roman power. Deut. 28:40, 50.

(5) Rome did destroy wonderfully. Witness its overthrow of all opposing powers.

(6) Rome has destroyed more of "the mighty and holy people," than all other persecuting powers combined. From fifty to one hundred millions of the church have been slain by it.

(7) Rome did stand up against the Prince of princes. The Roman power nailed Jesus Christ to the cross. Acts 4:20, 27; Matt. 27:2; Rev. 12:4.

(8) This power is to "be broken without hand." How clear the reference to the stone "cut out without hand," that smote the image. Dan. 2:34. Its destruction, then, does not take place until the final overthrow of earthly power. These facts are conclusive proof that Rome is the subject of this prophecy.

The field of vision, then, is the empire of Persia, Greece, and Rome.

3. The daily sacrifice and the transgression of desolation represent Rome in its Pagan and Papal forms. Leaving out the supplied words, the text would read, "The daily, and the transgression of desolation." These are two desolating powers; first, Paganism, then, Papacy. Of these, Paul in 2 Thess. 2:8-8, says: "Let no man deceive you by any means; for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that Man of Sin be revealed, the son of perdition, who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped; so that he, as God, sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God. Remember ye not, that when I was yet with you, I told you these things? And now ye know what withholdeth that he might be revealed in his time. For the mystery of iniquity doth already work; only he who now letteth will let, until he be taken out of the way. And then shall that Wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming."

That which withheld the manifestation of the Papacy in Paul's day was Paganism. These are the two powers which have desolated the people of God, of which the angel speaks in the vision of Dan. 8.

4. The sanctuary. The definition of the word sanctuary is, "A holy place"—Walker. "A sacred place"—Webster. "A holy or sanctified place, a dwelling-place of the Most High."—Cruice. A dwelling-place for God. Ex. 25:8.

The earth is not the sanctuary. Since man left Eden on account of transgression, the earth, or any portion of it, has not been a holy place, a sacred place, the dwelling of the Most High. The word sanctuary is used a hundred and forty-six times in the Bible, and it is not applied to the earth in a single instance.

The church is not the sanctuary. The Bible never calls the church the sanctuary. But if a single text could be cited to prove that the church is called the sanctuary, the following plain fact would prove beyond controversy that the church is not the sanctuary to be cleansed at the end of the 2800 days. The church is represented in Dan. 8:13, by the word host, "To give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot." The church and the sanctuary are two things. The church is the host, or worshippers, and the sanctuary is the place of worship, or the place toward which it is directed.

The land of Canaan is not the sanctuary. Of the one hundred and forty-six times in which the word sanctuary occurs in the Bible, only two or three texts have been urged, with any degree of confidence, as referring to the land of Canaan. Yet, strangely enough, men have claimed that the supposed meaning of them two or three texts ought to determine the signification of the word in Dan. 8:13, 14, against the plain testimony of more than a hundred texts! For none can deny that in almost every instance in which the word does occur, it refers directly to the typical tabernacle, or else to the true, of which that was but the figure or pattern. But we now inquire whether the two or three texts in question do actually apply the word sanctuary to the land of Canaan. They read as follows: "Thou shalt bring them in, and plant them in the mountains of thine inheritance, in the place, O Lord, which thou hast made for thee to dwell in: in the sanctuary, O Lord, which thy hands have established." Ex. 15:17. "And he led them on safely, so that they feared not; but the sea overwhelmed their enemies. And he brought them to the border of his sanctuary, even to this mountain, which his right hand had purchased. . . . And he built his sanctuary like high palaces, like the earth which he hath established forever." Ps. 78:53, 54, 60.

The first of these texts, it will be noticed, is taken from the song of Moses, after the passage of the Red Sea. It is a prediction of what God would do for Israel. The second text was written about five hundred years after the song of Moses. What Moses utters as a prediction, the psalmist records as a matter of history. Hence the psalm is an inspired commentary on the song of Moses. If the first text be read without the other, the idea might be gathered that the mountain was the sanctuary, though it does not directly state this.

But if the second text be read in connection with the first, it destroys the possibility of such an inference. The psalmist states that the mountain of the inheritance was the border of the sanctuary; and that God, after driving out the heathen before his people, proceeded to build his sanctuary like high palaces. See 1 Chron. 29:1. 1. The land of Canaan was the mounlands of the inheritance. Ex. 16: 17. 2. That mountain was the border of the sanctuary. Ps. 78: 64. 3. In that border God built his sanctuary. Ps. 78: 69. 4. In that sanctuary God dwelt, by his representative, the glorious Shekinah. Ps. 74: 7; Ex. 26: 8. 5. In that border the people dwelt. Ps. 78: 64, 65. These facts demonstrate that the same Spirit moved both those "holy men of old." These facts perfectly harmonize, not only with each other, but with the entire testimony of the Bible, respecting the sanctuary. If the reader still persists in confounding the sanctuary with its border, the land of Canaan, we request him to listen while a king of Judah points out the distinction:

"Art thou our God, who didst drive out the inhabitants of this land before thy people Israel, and gavest it to the seed of Abraham thy friend forever? And they dwell therein, and have built thee a sanctuary therein for thy name, saying, If, when evil cometh upon us, as the sword, judgment, or pestilence, or famine, we stand before this house, and in thy presence (for thy name is in this house), and cry unto thee in our affliction, then thou wilt hear and help." 2 Chron. 20: 7-9.

This language is a perfect parallel to that of Ps. 78: 64, 66, 69. In the clearest manner it points out the distinction between the land of Canaan, and the sanctuary which was built therein; and it does clearly teach that that sanctuary was the house erected as the habitation of God.

But there is another text by which some attempt to prove that Canaan is the sanctuary. "The people of thy holiness have trodden it but a little while: our adversaries have trodden down thy sanctuary." Isa. 63: 19. No one offers this as direct testimony. As it is only an inference, a few words are all that are needed. 1. When the people of God's holiness were driven out of the land of Canaan (as here predicted by the prophet, who uses the past tense for the future), not only were they dispossessed of their inheritance, but the sanctuary of God built in that land, was laid in ruins. This is plainly stated in 2 Chron. 30: 17-20. 2. The next chapter testifies that the prophet had a view of the destruction of God's sanctuary, as stated in the text quoted from 2 Chronicles. This explains the whole matter. Isa. 64: 10, 11; Ps. 74: 3, 7; 79: 1.

A fourth text may occur to some minds as conclusive proof that Canaan is the sanctuary. We present it, as it is the only remaining one that has ever been urged in support of this view. "The glory of Lebanon shall come unto thee, the fir tree, the pine tree, and the box together, to beautify the place of my sanctuary; and I will make the place of my feet glorious." Isa. 60: 13. This text needs little comment. The place of God's sanctuary, we fully admit is the land of Canaan, or the new earth, for Isaiah refers to the glorified state. And as God has promised to set his sanctuary in that place, Isa. 67: 25-28, the meaning of the text is perfectly plain. But if any still assert that the place of the sanctuary is the sanctuary itself, let them notice that the same text calls the same "place" the place of the Lord's feet; and hence, the same principle would make the land of Canaan the feet of the Lord!

The view that Canaan is the sanctuary is too absurd to need further notice. And even were it a sanctuary, it would not even then be the sanctuary of Daniel; for the prophet had his eye upon the habitation of God. Dan. 9. Canaan was only the place of God's sanctuary or habitation.

The sanctuary to be cleansed at the termination of the 2800 prophetic days, or, as we shall show, years, is not the sanctuary of the first covenant. Heb. 9: 1-7. This sanctuary exists at the end of the 2800 days, while that passed away with the first covenant. The sanctuary of Dan. 9, then, is the greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands. Heb. 9: 11. The sanctuary of the first covenant was typical of this. In chap. 9: 1, 2, the apostle says:

"Now of the things which we have spoken this is the sum: We have such an High Priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the Heavens; a minister of the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man." Man pitched the typical on earth. The Lord pitched the antitypical in Heaven. The Jewish priests ministered in the earthly. Christ ministers in the heavenly. The earthly sanctuary was cleansed from the sins of the people on the last day of each yearly service of the Jews. The heavenly is cleansed from the sins of the people once for all at the close of the 2300 days. But of the cleansing of this sanctuary we will speak hereafter.

5. The host. We have only to say on this point that the host embraces all the people of God who direct their worship to the heavenly sanctuary where their great High Priest ministers.

6. The sanctuary and host trodden under foot. The agents by which the sanctuary and host are trodden under foot are the Jolly, or continual desolation, and the transgression, or abomination of desolation. Dan. 8: 13; 11: 31; 12: 11. These two desolations, as we have already seen, are Paganism and Papacy. It is often urged as a sufficient argument against the view of the sanctuary of God in Heaven, that such a sanctuary is not susceptible of being trodden under foot. But we answer, this is not impossible, when the New Testament shows us that wicked men (apostates) tread under foot the Minister of the heavenly sanctuary, our Lord Jesus Christ. Heb. 10: 29; 8: 1, 2. If they can tread under foot the Minister of that sanctuary, then they can tread under foot the sanctuary itself. It is not impossible that the Pagan and Papal desolations should be represented as treading under foot the heavenly sanctuary, when the same vision represents the little horn as stamping upon the stars, Dan. 8: 10, and when it is expressly predicted that the Papal power should war against the tabernacle of God in Heaven. Rev. 18: 6-7. The language of this vision, that these blasphemous powers should cast down the truth to the ground, stamp upon the stars, and tread under foot the sanctuary and the host, is certainly figurative, as it would otherwise involve complete absurdities.

Let us now briefly trace the manner in which Satan has, by Paganism and Papacy, trodden under foot the sanctuary of the Lord. We have already seen that he has done this by erecting rival sanctuaries, where, in the place of the only living and true God, he has established "new gods that came newly up." Deut. 32:16, 17. In the days of the Judges and of Samuel, Satan's rival sanctuary was the temple of Dagon, where the Philistines worshiped. Judges 16:23, 24. And when they had taken the ark of God from Israel, the Philistines deposited it in this temple. 1 Sam. 5. After Solomon had erected a glorious sanctuary upon Mount Moriah, Jeroboam, who made Israel to sin, erected a rival sanctuary at Bethel, and thus drew away ten of the twelve tribes from the worship of the living God, to that of the golden calves. 1 Kings 12:26-33; Amos 7:18, margin. In the days of Nebuchadnezzar, the rival to the sanctuary of God was the temple of Nebuchadnezzar's god at Babylon. And into this temple he carried the vessels of the Lord's sanctuary, when he laid it desolate. Dan 1:2; Ezra 1:7; 5:14; 2 Chron. 36:7. At a still later period, Satan established at Rome a temple or sanctuary of all the gods. Dan 8:11; 11:31.

After the typical sanctuary of the first covenant had given place to the true sanctuary of God, Satan usurped his Pagan sanctuary and heathen rites and ceremonies, calling them Christianity. Thenceforward he had at Rome a "temple of God," and in that temple a being exalted above all that is called God, or that is worshiped. 2 Thess. 2:4. And this Papal abomination has trodden under foot the holy city, Rev. 11:2; 21:2, by persuading a large portion of the human family that Rome, the place of this counterfeit temple of God, was the "holy city," or the "eternal city." And it has trodden under foot and blasphemed God's sanctuary or tabernacle, Rev. 18:6; Heb. 8:2, by calling its own sanctuary the temple of God, and by turning away the worship of them that dwell on the earth from the temple of God in Heaven to the sanctuary of Satan at Rome.

It has trodden under foot the Son of God, the minister of the heavenly sanctuary, Heb. 10:20; 8:2, by making the pope the head of the church, instead of Jesus Christ, Eph. 5:23, and by leading men to the worship of that son of perdition, as one able to forgive past sins, and confer the right to commit them in the future, and thus turning men from Him who alone has power on earth to forgive sins, and to pardon iniquity and transgression. Such has been the nature of the warfare which Satan has maintained against the sanctuary and the cause of God, in his vain attempts to defeat the great plan of redemption which God has been carrying forward in his sanctuary.

NUMBER THIRTEEN.—THE TIME.

BY ELIAS JAMES WHITE.

7. THE 2800 DAYS. We will now go back to

Verses 13, 14: "Then I heard one saint speaking, and another saint said unto that certain saint which spake, How long shall be the vision concerning the daily sacrifice, and the transgression of desolation, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot? And he said unto me, Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed."

Gabriel is next commanded to explain the vision to the prophet.

Verses 15-19: "And it came to pass when I, even I Daniel, had seen the vision, and sought for the meaning, then, behold, there stood before me as the appearance of a man. And I heard a man's voice between the banks of Ulai, which called, and said, Gabriel, make this man to understand the vision. So he came near where I stood; and when he came I was afraid, and fell upon my face; but he said unto me, Understand, O son of man; for at the time of the end shall be the vision. Now as he was speaking with me, I was in a deep sleep on my face toward the ground; but he touched me and set me upright. And he said, Behold, I will make thee know what shall be in the last end of the indignation; for at the time appointed the end shall be."

In the remaining verses of chap. 8, the angel explained the meaning of the ram, the goat, and the little horns. But he gave no explanation of the time in this chapter. The vision embraces Persia, Grecia, and Rome. And it is evident that 2800 literal days could not cover the duration of one of these kingdoms, much less all three of them. Hence the days must be symbolic, a day for a year, even as the heasts and horns are shown to be symbols. And it is a fact that a symbolic, or prophetic, day is one year. Num. 14: 34; Eze. 4: 6, 9. Hence the period is 2800 years.

But the angel did not explain the time in chap. 8. And, at the very close of the chapter, the prophet says, "I was astonished at the vision, but none understood it." It was the time alone that he did not understand, as all else had been explained in that chapter. But Gabriel did explain the time in chap. 9, so that in the first verse of chap. 10, he says that "he understood the thing, and had understanding of the vision." This understanding, therefore, he did receive in chap. 9.

This chapter commences with the earnest, importunate prayer of the prophet, from the reading of which it is evident that he had so far misunderstood the vision of chap. 8, that he concluded that the 2800 days of trampling under foot the sanctuary would terminate with the 70 years' desolation of the city and sanctuary predicted by Jeremiah. Compare verses 1 and 2, with verses 16 and 17. Gabriel is now sent to undeceive him, and to complete the explanation of the vision. "While I was speaking in prayer," says Daniel, "even the man Gabriel, whom I had seen in the vision at the beginning [here he cites us back to chap. 8: 15, 16], being caused to fly swiftly, touched me about the time of the evening oblation. And he informed me, and talked with me, and said, O Daniel, I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding. At the beginning of thy supplications the commandment came forth, and I am come to show thee; for thou art greatly beloved; therefore understand the matter and consider the vision." Verses 21-23.

Note these facts: (1) In verse 21, Daniel cites us to the vision of chap. 8. (2) In verse 22, Gabriel states that he had come to give Daniel skill and understanding. This being the object of Gabriel's mission, Daniel, who, at the close of chapter 8, did not understand the vision, may, ere Gabriel leaves him, fully understand its import. (3) As Daniel testifies at the close of chap. 8, that none understood the vision, it is certain that the charge given to Gabriel, "Make this man to understand the vision," still rested upon him. Hence it is that he tells Daniel, "I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding;" and in verse 23 requests him to "understand the matter, and to consider the vision." This is undeniable proof that Gabriel's mission in chap. 9, was for the purpose of explaining what he omitted in chap. 8. If any ask further evidence, the fact that Gabriel proceeds to explain the very point in question, most fully meets the demand.

Verses 24-27: "Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the Most Holy. Know therefore and understand that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem unto the Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks: the street shall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times. And after threescore and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off, but not for himself; and the people of the prince that shall come, shall destroy the city and the sanctuary; and the end thereof shall be with a flood, and unto the end of the war, desolations are determined. And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week; and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease, and for the over-spreading of abominations, he shall make it desolate, even until the consummation, and that determined, shall be poured upon the desolate."

These facts should not be forgotten: (1) The word rendered "determined," verse 24, literally signifies

"The word rendered determined in Dan. 9: 24, is chatak, and occurs nowhere else in the Bible. Gesenius, in his Lexicon, defines it thus: "Properly, to cut off; tropically, to divide, and so to determine, to decree."

"cut off." (2) "The vision" which Gabriel came to explain, contained the period of 2800 days; and in the explanation he tells us that "seventy weeks have been cut off" upon Jerusalem and the Jews. Therefore the seventy weeks are a part of the 2800 days. Hence the commencement of the seventy weeks is the date of the 2800 days. And the fact that the seventy weeks were fulfilled in 490 years, as all admit, is a demonstration that the 2800 days, from which this period of 490 days was cut off, are 2800 years.

The angel's date of the seventy weeks next claims our attention. The date for the commencement of the weeks is thus given by Gabriel: "Know therefore and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem unto the Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks; the street shall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times." Dan. 9: 25.

We present the following important testimony from the Advent Herald. It is a calm, dispassionate vindication of the dates, which establishes them beyond dispute. It was written in the year 1850, and consequently cannot be supposed to be given with a desire to prove that the days ended in 1844, as the Herald is not willing to admit that fact. Therefore it must be regarded as candid and honorable testimony to important facts. That it demolishes every view that has been put forth to re-adjust the 2300 days, no one, who can appreciate the force of the arguments presented, will fail to perceive.

"The Bible gives the data for a complete system of chronology, extending from the creation to the birth of Cyrus, a clearly-ascertained date. From this period downward, we have the undisputed Canon of Ptolemy and the undoubted era of Nabonassar, extending below our vulgar era. At the point where inspired chronology leaves us, this Canon of undoubted accuracy commences. And thus the whole arch is opened. It is by the Canon of Ptolemy that the great prophetic period of seventy weeks is fixed. This Canon places the seventh year of Artaxerxes in the year s. c. 467; and the accuracy of the Canon is demonstrated by the concurrent agreement of more than twenty eclipses. The seventy weeks date from the going forth of a decree respecting the restoration of Jerusalem. There were no decrees between the seventh and twentieth years of Artaxerxes. Four hundred and ninety years, beginning with the seventh, must commence in s. c. 467, and end in a. d. 34. Commencing in the twentieth, they must commence in s. c. 444, and end in a. d. 47. As no event occurred in a. d. 47, to mark their termination, we cannot reckon from the twentieth; we must therefore look to the seventh of Artaxerxes. This date we cannot change from s. c. 467, without first demonstrating the inaccuracy of Ptolemy's Canon. To do this, it would be necessary to show that the large number of eclipses by which its accuracy has been repeatedly demonstrated, have not been correctly computed; and such a result would unsettle every chronological date, and leave the settlement of epochs and the adjustment of eras entirely at the mercy of every dreamer, so that chronology would be of no more value than mere guess-work. As the seventy weeks must terminate in a. d. 34, unless the seventh of Artaxerxes is wrongly fixed, and as that cannot be changed without some evidence to that effect, we inquire, What evidence marked that termination? The time when the apostles turned to the Gentiles harmonizes with that date better than any other which has been named. And the crucifixion, in a. d. 31, in the midst of the last week, is sustained by a mass of testimony which cannot be easily invalidated."—Advent Herald, March 2, 1850.

Sixty-nine of the seventy weeks were to extend to the Messiah the Prince. Sixty-nine weeks of years are 483 years. Beginning these with the seventh of Artaxerxes, they extend to a. d. 20-7. The word Messiah signifies the anointed. John 1: 41, margin. The Saviour was anointed at his baptism. Compare Acts 10: 37, 38; Mark 1: 10; Luke 4: 18.

After being thus anointed he went into Galilee preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying, "The time is fulfilled." Mark 1: 14, 15. The time then fulfilled could be no other period than the sixty-nine weeks, for that was to reach unto the Messiah, or the Anointed One. The sixty-nine weeks, reckoned from the seventh of Artaxerxes, as it is fixed by astronomical calculations, would end in a. d. 20-7; and a. d. 27 we find is the precise point of time when the Saviour must have been "about thirty years" of age, when he was baptized of John, and declared the time fulfilled.

The decree referred to in Dan. 9, from which the seventy weeks are dated, is that of the seventh of Artaxerxes. Ezra 7. Indeed, speaking properly, there was no decree in his twentieth year. For by turning to Neh. 2: 18, it will be seen that when Nehemiah arrived at Jerusalem he had nothing with which to incite the Jews to action, except to relate to them the good words which the king had spoken to him. Thus Nehemiah had mere verbal permission to restore the city of Jerusalem. But such verbal permission does not constitute a Persian decree. For in Dan. 6: 8, we learn that it must be a written document, signed by the king.

But thirteen years previous to Nehemiah's permission to go up to Jerusalem, such a decree had been given to Ezra in the seventh year of Artaxerxes. Respecting this decree Prof. Whiting remarks:

"We are informed in Ezra 7: 11, 'Now this is the copy of the letter that king Artaxerxes gave unto Ezra the priest, the scribe, even a scribe of the words of the commandments of the Lord, and of his statutes to Israel.' The letter then follows, written, not in Hebrew, but in Chaldean (or the Eastern Aramaic), the language then used at Babylon. At the 37th verse, the narrative proceeds in Hebrew. We are thus furnished with the original document, by virtue of which Ezra was authorized to 'restore and build Jerusalem,' or, in other words, by which he was clothed with power, not merely to erect walls or houses, but to regulate the affairs of his countrymen in general, to 'set magistrates and judges which may judge all the people beyond the river.'"

That Ezra understood that power was conferred upon himself and upon the people of Israel, to rebuild the street and wall of Jerusalem is certain from his own testimony, recorded in chap. 9: 9: "For we were bondmen; yet our God hath not forsaken us in our bondage, but hath extended mercy unto us in the sight of the kings of Persia, to give us a reviving, to set up the house of our God, and to repair the desolations thereof, and to give us a wall in Judah and in Jerusalem."

The seventh year of Artaxerxes, from which the decree is dated, is fixed beyond dispute in s. c. 467. The commencement of Christ's ministry, in a. d. 27, was just 69 weeks, or 483 prophetic days, from the decree in s. c. 467. The crucifixion in the midst of the week occurred in the spring of a. d. 31, just three and a half years from the commencement of Christ's ministry. The remaining three and a half years of the seventieth week, ended in the autumn of a. d. 34. Here the seventy weeks, which had been cut off upon the Jews, in which they were "to finish the transgression, sion," alone with the Jewish Sanhedrim's act of formally rejecting Christ by persecuting his disciples, and God gives the great apostle to the Gentiles his commission to them. Acts 9.

The first three and a half years of the seventieth week ended in the first Jewish month (April) in the spring of A. D. 31. The remaining three and a half years would therefore end in the seventh month, autumn, of A. D. 34.

Here ends the great period which Gabriel, in explaining the 2300 days to Daniel, tells him was cut off upon Jerusalem and the Jews. Its commencement, intermediate dates, and final termination, are unequivocally established. It remains then to notice this one grand fact: the first 490 years of the 2800 ended in the seventh month, autumn of A. D. 34. This period of 490 years being cut off from the 2300, a period of 1810 years remains. This period of 1810 years being added to the seventh month, autumn of A. D. 34, brings us to the seventh month, autumn of 1844.

Let us recur to the events connected with the great Advent movement of 1843 and 1844. Previous to the year 1843, the evidence on the going forth of the doctrine in A. D. 457 had been clearly and faithfully set forth. And as the period of 457 years before Christ, subtracted from the 2300, would leave but 1843 years after Christ, the end of the 2800 years was confidently expected in 1843. But if the 2800 years began with the commencement of A. D. 457, they would not end till the last day of A. D. 1843, as it would require all of 457, and all of 1843, to make 2800 full years.

But at the close of 1843, it was clearly seen that as the crucifixion occurred in the midst of the week, in the spring of A. D. 31, the remainder of the seventieth week, viz., three and a half years, would end in the autumn of A. D. 34. And as the seventy weeks, or 490 years, ended in the seventh month, autumn of A. D. 34, it is a settled point that the days began, not in the spring, with Ezra's starting from Babylon, but in the autumn, with the commencement of the work at Jerusalem. Ezra 7. And this view that the days begin with the actual commencement of the work, is much strengthened by the fact that the first seven weeks, or 49 years, are manifestly allotted to the work of restoration in "troublesome times." And that period could only begin with the actual commencement of the work. Dan. 9: 25.

When it was seen that only 456 years and a fraction had expired before Christ, it was at once understood that 1843 years and a portion of 1844, sufficient to make up a full year when joined to that fraction, was required in order to make 2800 full years. In other words, the 2800 days in full time, would expire in the seventh month, 1844. And if we take into the account the fact that the midst of the seventieth week was the fourteenth day of the first month, and consequently the end of the seventy weeks must have been at a corresponding point in the seventh month, A. D. 34, we perceive at once that the remainder of the 2800 days would end about that point in the seventh month, 1844.

It was with this great fact before us, that the 2800 days of Daniel, which reached to the cleansing of the sanctuary, would terminate at that time, and also with the light of the types, that the high priest in "the example and shadow of heavenly things," on the tenth day of the seventh month, entered within the second veil to cleanse the sanctuary, that we confidently expected the advent of our Redeemer in the seventh month, 1844. The prophecy said, "Then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." The type said that at that season in the year the high priest should pass from the holy place of the earthly tabernacle to the most holy, to cleanse the sanctuary. Lev. 16.

With these facts before us we reasoned as follows:

(1) The sanctuary is the earth: or the land of Palestine. (2) The cleansing of the sanctuary is the burning of the earth, or the purification of Palestine, at the coming of Christ. (3) And hence, we concluded that our great High Priest would leave the tabernacle of God in Heaven, and descend in flaming fire on the tenth day of the seventh month, in the autumn of 1844.

It is needless to say that we were painfully disappointed. And, though the man does not live who can overthrow the chronological argument, which terminates the 2800 days at that time, or meet the formidable array of evidence by which it is fortified and sustained, yet multitudes, without stopping to inquire whether our conceptions of the sanctuary and of its cleansing were correct or not, have openly denied the agency of Jehovah in the Advent movement, and have pronounced it the work of man.

OUR FAITH AND HOPE;

Or, Reasons Why We Believe as We Do.

NUMBER FOURTEEN—THE SANCTUARY.

BY ELLEN JAMES WHITE.

"Then I heard one saint speaking, and another saint said unto that certain saint which spake, How long shall be the vision concerning the daily sacrifice, and the transgression of desolation, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot? And he said unto me, Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." Dan. 8:14, 15.

We have seen that the earth is not recognized in the sacred Scriptures as God's sanctuary, that the church is not his sanctuary, and that the land of Canaan is not the sanctuary. The definition of the word is, "A holy place."—Walker. "A sacred place."—Widener. "A holy or sanctified place, a dwelling place of the Most High."—Cruden. A dwelling place for God. Ex. 25:8. Neither the earth, nor any portion of it, has been such a place since sin found its way into Eden.

The word sanctuary is used in the Bible one hundred and forty-six times, and not in a single instance does it apply to the earth, the land of Canaan, or the church. In one hundred and thirty-seven times it refers to two things, and only two: first, the sanctuary which was the center of the Jewish system of worship; and, second, the sanctuary of which Christ is the minister in Heaven. There are nine instances where the word sanctuary does not refer to the sanctuary of the Lord. In one text it is said that "Judah was his sanctuary." Ps. 114:2. The Lord of hosts "shall be for a sanctuary." Isa. 8:14. Moab had a sanctuary. Isa. 16:12. God is a little sanctuary. Eze. 11:16. The king of Tyre had sanctuaries. Eze. 28:18. There were heathen sanctuaries. Dan. 9:11; 11:31. The "king's chapel," margin, sanctuary. This was a rival sanctuary. Amos 7:18. See verse 9, where the sanctuaries, plural, of Israel are named. In these nine texts the word sanctuary does not refer to either the earthly sanctuary or to the heavenly; but in all these instances it derives its name from the sanctuary of the Lord.

The sanctuary of the Bible is the habitation of God. It includes, first, the tabernacle pitched by man, which was the pattern of the true; and second, "the true tabernacle which the Lord pitched and not man." The tabernacle erected by man, as a pattern of the true, embraced, first, the tabernacle of Moses, second, the temple of Solomon, and, third, the temple of Zerubbabel. The true tabernacle of God is the great original of which Moses, Solomon, and Zerubbabel erected "figures," "patterns," or "images." We trace the pattern of the true from the time it was erected by Moses, until it was merged into the larger and more glorious pattern which Solomon caused to be established. We trace this building down to the period when it was overthrown by Nebuchadnezzar, and suffered to remain in ruins through the Babylonian captivity. And from the time that Zerubbabel rebuilt the sanctuary, we trace the history of the pattern until we reach the true tabernacle, the great sanctuary of Jehovah in Heaven.

We gather our first instruction respecting the sanctuary from the book of Exodus. In chapter 24, we learn that Moses went up into the cloud that overshadowed the God of Israel, upon the mount Sinai, and that he was there forty days. It was during this period that the building of the sanctuary was explained to Moses, and the pattern of it shown to him in the mount. Heb. 8:5. The next chapter commences with the commandment to erect the sanctuary: "And let them make me a sanctuary; that I may dwell among them. According to all that I show thee, after the pattern of the tabernacle, and the pattern of all the instruments thereof, even so shall ye make it." Ex. 25:8, 9.

We have learned several important facts: (1) The sanctuary was the habitation of God. It was erected for this express purpose, that God might dwell among his people. And Moses had his eye upon this habitation, or sanctuary, in that very chapter in which he is supposed by some to teach that the land of Canaan is the sanctuary. "He is my God," says Moses, "and I will prepare him a habitation." Chap. 16:2. It is plain that even then Moses understood the difference between the habitation of Jehovah, and the place of its location. (2) The sanctuary which God commanded Moses to erect, was the tabernacle. The tabernacle of witness was the sanctuary of God. (3) Moses was solemnly enjoined to make the sanctuary and all its vessels according to the pattern showed to him in that place. Hence, we are now to have a model of the habitation of God set before us.

In the plan of the sanctuary, its walls on the north, the west, and the south sides, were formed of upright boards set in sockets of silver. Five bars running the length of the sides, and passing through rings in the boards, joined them all together. And the whole was overlaid with gold. The sanctuary was covered with four different coverings. The east end was closed by a veil, or hanging, called the door of the tent, or tabernacle. A second veil divided the tabernacle into two parts, called the holy place, and the holiest of all. Chap. 26:1-28, 31-37; 38:8-38; Lev. 16:2; Heb. 9:8.

The vessels of the sanctuary were all made after the pattern which the Lord showed to Moses. Ex. 25:9, 40. They were as follows: (1) The ark. This was a chest about four feet six inches in length, and about two feet six inches in width and height, overlaid with pure gold, within and without. This was made for the express purpose of containing God's testament, the ten commandments. Chap. 25:10-16, 21; 31:8; 32:16, 18; 37:1-6; Deut. 10:1-6; 1 Kings 8:9; 2 Chron. 5:10; Heb. 9:4. (2) The mercy-seat. This was the top of the ark. On either end of it stood a cherub, the cherubim and the mercy-seat being one solid work of beaten gold. Ex. 25:17-22; 37:8-9; 26:34; Heb. 9:4, 5. (3) The altar of incense. This was overlaid with gold, and was about three and a half feet in height, and nearly two feet square. It was for the purpose of burning incense before God. Ex. 30:1-10; 37:25-28; Luke 1:9-11. (4) The golden censor. This was used to burn incense before the Lord, particularly in the holiest. Lev. 10:1; 16:

12; Heb. 9:4. (5) The candlestick, with its seven lamps, was one solid work of beaten gold, about the weight of a talent. It was made after the express pattern shown to Moses. Ex. 25:31-40; 37:17-24; Num. 8:4. (6) The table of show-bread. This was about three and a half feet in length, two and a half in height, and two in width. It was overlaid with pure gold, and on it show-bread was always kept before the Lord. Ex. 25:23-30; 37:10-16; Heb. 9:2. (7) The altar of burnt-offering. This was about nine feet square, and nearly five and a half in height. It was overlaid with brass, and was, as its name implies, used for the purpose of offering up sacrifices to God. Ex. 27:1-8; 38:1-7. (8) The laver. This was made of brass and contained water for the use of the priests. Chap. 30:18-21; 38:8. The court of the tabernacle was one hundred cubits in length, by fifty in breadth, and five cubits, or about nine feet in height. Chap. 27:9-16; 38:9-20.

Moses erected the sanctuary. He reared up the tabernacle, and set up its boards in the sockets of silver, and united them together by the bars, and spread over the whole, the covering of the tabernacle. He then placed the testimony in the ark, and set the mercy-seat upon it, and carried the ark into the tabernacle. Chap. 40:17-21. He then hung up the veil in front of the ark, and thus divided between the holy places. Verses 21; 26:33; Heb. 9:8. He placed the table without the veil on the north side of the holy place, and set the bread in order upon it. Verses 22, 23. He then placed the candlestick on the south side of the holy place, and lighted its lamps before the Lord. Verses 24, 25. He placed the golden altar before the veil in the holy place, and burned sweet incense upon it. Verses 26, 27. He set up the hanging for the door of the sanctuary, and he placed the altar of burnt offering at the door, and set the laver between the tabernacle and this altar, and around the whole, he set up the court of the tabernacle. Verses 28-33. The sanctuary erected for the habitation of Jehovah, Ex. 16:2; 26:8, is now ready to receive the King eternal.

"Then a cloud covered the tent of the congregation, and the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle. And Moses was not able to enter into the tent of the congregation, because the cloud abode thereon, and the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle." Verses 34, 35. We now have found the habitation or sanctuary of the Lord. In the book of Exodus, Moses calls this building the sanctuary at least eleven times.

But do you ask for the testimony of the New Testament on this point? Then listen to Paul's view of the sanctuary of the first covenant: "Then verily the first covenant had also ordinances of divine service, and a worldly sanctuary. For there was a tabernacle made; the first, wherein was the candlestick, and the table, and the show-bread; which is called the sanctuary. And after the second veil, the tabernacle, which is called the holiest of all; which had the golden censor, and the ark of the covenant overlaid round about with gold, wherein was the golden pot that had manna, and Aaron's rod that budded, and the tables of the covenant; and over it the cherubim of glory, shadowing the mercy-seat." Heb. 9:1-5; 13:11. It is settled, therefore, that we have the right view of this subject thus far, and that the tabernacle of God, and not the land of Canaan, was the sanctuary.

The worldly sanctuary was the pattern of the true. "After the pattern of the tabernacle, and the pattern of all the instruments thereof, even so shall ye make it." "And look that thou make them after their pattern, which was showed thee in the mount." Ex. 25:9, 40. "And thou shalt rear up the tabernacle according to the fashion thereof, which was showed thee in the mount." Chap. 26:30. "As it was showed thee in the mount, so shall they make it." Chap. 27:8. "According unto the pattern which the Lord had showed Moses, so he made the candlestick." Num. 8:4. "Our fathers had the tabernacle of witness in the wilderness as he had appointed, speaking unto Moses, that he should make it according to the fashion that he had seen." Acts 7:44. "Who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things, as Moses was admonished of God when he was about to make the tabernacle: for, See, saith he, that thou make all things according to the pattern showed to thee in the mount." Heb. 8:5. "It was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these. For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true." Heb. 9:23, 24.

From these texts we learn two important facts: 1. We are many times certified that the tabernacle of witness was made according to the pattern which God showed to Moses. 2. That that pattern was a representation of the heavenly sanctuary itself. Heb. 8:2.

From Acts 7:46, we learn that the tribes of Israel carried the sanctuary with them into the promised land. In the book of Joshua it is called the house of God, or tabernacle; and we learn that it was set up at Shiloh. Josh. 9:23; 18:1; 19:51; Jer. 7:12. It is called the Lord's tabernacle. Josh. 22:19. It is called "the sanctuary of the Lord." Chap. 24:26. In the book of Judges it is simply called "the house of God," located at Shiloh. Judges 18:31; 20:18, 26, 31; 21:2. In first Samuel it is termed the house of the Lord. Chap. 1:7, 24; 3:16. In chapters 1:0; 3:8, it is called "the temple of the Lord." In chapter 2:29, God calls it "my habitation," or tabernacle, margin. It still abode in Shiloh. Chap. 4:4.

We now pass from the shadow to the substance. The typical sanctuary gave place to the true.

1. The sanctuary of the first covenant ends with that covenant, and does not constitute the sanctuary of the new covenant. Heb. 9:1, 2, 8, 9; Acts 7:48, 49.

2. That sanctuary was a figure for the time then present, or for that dispensation. Heb. 9:9. That is, God did not, during the typical dispensation, lay open the true tabernacle; but gave to the people a figure or pattern of it.

3. When the work of the first tabernacle was accomplished, the way of the temple of God in Heaven was laid open. Heb. 9:8; Pa. 11:4; Jer. 17:12.

4. The typical sanctuary and the carnal ordinances connected with it, were to last only till the time of reformation. And when that time arrived, Christ came, as high priest of good things to come by a greater and more perfect tabernacle. Heb. 9:9-12.

5. The rending of the veil of the earthly sanctuary at the death of our Saviour evinced that his services were finished. Matt. 27:50, 51; Mark 15:38; Luke 23:45.

6. Christ solemnly declared that it was left desolate. Matt. 23:37, 38; Luke 13:34, 35.

7. The sanctuary is connected with the host. Dan. 8:13. And the host, which is the true church, has had neither sanctuary nor priesthood in old Jerusalem the past 1800 years, but has had both in Heaven. Heb. 8:1-6.

8. While the typical sanctuary was standing, it was evidence that the way into the true sanctuary was not laid open. But when its services were abolished, the tabernacle in Heaven, of which it was a figure, took its place. Heb. 10:1-9; 9:6-12.

9. The holy places made with hands, the figures or patterns of things in the heavens, have been superseded by the heavenly holy places themselves. Heb. 9:23, 24.

10. The sanctuary since the commencement of Christ's priesthood, is the true tabernacle of God in Heaven. This is plainly stated in Heb. 8:1-6. These points are conclusive evidence that the worldly sanctuary of the first covenant has given place to the heavenly sanctuary of the new covenant. The typical sanctuary is forsaken, and the priesthood is transferred to the true tabernacle.

But the most important question in the mind of the reader is this: How did Gabriel explain the sanctuary to Daniel? Did he point out to him the transition from the "figure" or "pattern," to the "greater and more perfect tabernacle," the true holy places? We answer, He did.

1. Gabriel explains to Daniel what portion of the 2300 days belonged to Jerusalem and the Jews: "Seventy weeks have been cut off upon thy people, and upon thy holy city." Dan. 9:24. Whiting's Translation. Then the whole of the 2300 days does not belong to old Jerusalem, the place of the earthly sanctuary, nor do they all belong to the Jews, the professed people of God in the time of the first covenant.

2. For in that period of 70 weeks, the transgression was to be finished, that is, the Jewish people were to fill up their measure of iniquity, by rejecting and crucifying their Messiah, and were no longer to be his people, or host. Dan. 9:24; Matt. 23:32, 33; 21:33-43; 27:26.

3. Gabriel showed Daniel that the earthly sanctuary should be destroyed, shortly after their rejection of the Messiah, and never be rebuilt, but be desolate till the consummation. Dan. 9:26, 27.

4. The angel brings the new covenant to Daniel's view. "He [the Messiah] shall confirm the covenant with many for one week." Dan. 9:27; Matt. 26:28.

5. He brings to Daniel's view the new-covenant church, or host; viz., the "many" with whom the covenant is confirmed. Verse 27.

6. He brings to view the new-covenant sacrifice, viz., the cutting off of the Messiah, but not for himself. Verse 26. And also the Prince, or Mediator, of the new covenant. Verse 25; 11:22; Heb. 12:24. He brings to Daniel's view the new covenant sanctuary, and informs him that before the close of the 70 weeks, which belonged to the earthly sanctuary, the most holy should be anointed. That this "most holy" is the true tabernacle in which the Messiah is to officiate as priest, we offer the following testimony:

"And to anoint the most holy;" kodesh, kodashim, the holy of holies."—Adam Clarke. Dan. 9:24.

"Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people, and the city of thy sanctuary; that sin may be restrained, and transgression have an end; that iniquity may be expiated, and an everlasting righteousness brought in; that visions and prophecies may be sealed up and the holy of holies anointed."—Houbigant's Translation of Dan. 9:24.

The fact is plain, then, that of the vision of 2300 days concerning the sanctuary, only 490 pertained to the earthly sanctuary; and also that the iniquity of the Jewish people would in that period be so far filled up that God would leave them, and the city and sanctuary would soon after be destroyed, and never be rebuilt, but be left in ruins till the consummation. And it is also a fact that Gabriel did present to Daniel a view of the true tabernacle, Heb. 8:1, 2, which about the close of the 70 weeks did take the place of the pattern. And as the ministration of the earthly tabernacle began with its anointing, so in the more excellent ministry of our great High Priest, the first act, as shown to Daniel, is the anointing of the true tabernacle or sanctuary, of which he is a minister. Ex. 40:9-11; Lev. 8:10, 11; Num. 7:1; Dan. 9:24.

It is, therefore, an established fact that the worldly sanctuary of the first covenant, and the heavenly sanctuary of the new covenant, are both embraced in the vision of the 2300 days. Seventy weeks are cut off upon the earthly sanctuary, and at their termination, the true tabernacle, with its anointing, its sacrifice, and its minister, is introduced. And it is interesting to notice that the transfer from the tabernacle made with hands, to the true tabernacle itself, which the Lord pitched and not man, is placed by Gabriel at the very point where the Bible testifies that the shadow of good things to come ceased, being nailed to the cross, Col. 2:14, 17; where the offering of bulls and goats gave place to the great sacrifice, Heb. 9:11-14; 10:1-10; 13:40; 10:8; Dan. 9:27; where the Levitical priesthood was superseded by that of the order of Melchisedec, Heb. 7:1-10; 13:10; where the example and shadow of heavenly things was terminated by the more excellent ministry which it shadowed forth, Heb. 8:1-6; and where the holy places, which were the figures of the true, were succeeded by the true holy places in Heaven, Heb. 9:23, 24. In the first part of this article we saw that Gabriel did not explain the 2300 days and the sanctuary in Dan. 8. We now see that in Dan. 9 he explained both.

OUR FAITH AND HOPE; Or, Reasons Why We Believe as We Do.

BY ELDER JAMES WHITE.

NUMBER FIFTEEN—THE HEAVENLY SANCTUARY.

"Now of the things which we have spoken, this is the sum: We have such an High Priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the Heavens; a minister of the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle which the Lord pitched and not man." Heb. 8:1, 2. "A glorious high throne from the beginning, is the place of our sanctuary." Jer. 17:12; Rev. 16:17; Ps. 11:4. "For he hath looked down from the height of his sanctuary; from Heaven did the Lord behold the earth." Ps. 102:10.

The heavenly sanctuary has two holy places. The following testimony on this point is conclusive. We gather it from the Old and New Testaments, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established:

1. The tabernacle erected by Moses, after a forty-days' inspection of the one showed to him in the mount, consisted of two holy places, Ex. 26:30-33, and is declared to be a correct pattern, or model, of that building. Ex. 26:8, 9, 40, compared with chap. 39:32-48. But if the earthly sanctuary consisted of two holy places, and the great original, from which it was copied, consisted of only one, instead of likeness, there would be perfect dissimilarity.

2. The temple was built in every respect according to the pattern which God gave to David by the Spirit. 1 Chron. 28:10-19. And Solomon in addressing God, says, "Thou hast commanded me to build a temple upon thy holy mount, and an altar in the city wherein thou dwellest, a resemblance of the holy tabernacle which thou hast prepared from the beginning." Wis. Sol. 9:8. The temple was built on a larger and grander scale than the tabernacle; but its distinguishing feature, like the tabernacle, consisted in the fact that it was composed of two holy places. 1 Kings 6; 2 Chron. 3. This is clear proof that the heavenly tabernacle contains the same.

3. Paul plainly states, that "the holy places [plural] made with hands" "are the figures [plural] of the true," and that the tabernacle and its vessels are "patterns of things in the Heavens." Heb. 4:23, 24. This is direct evidence that, in the greater and more perfect tabernacle, there are two holy places, even as in the figure, example, or pattern.

4. The apostle actually uses the word holy (plural) in speaking of the heavenly sanctuary. The expression, "holiest of all," in Heb. 9:8; 10:19, has been supposed by some to prove that Christ began to minister in the most holy place, at his ascension. But the expression is not "hagios hagion," holy of holies, as in chapter 9:3; but is simply "hagion," holies. It is the same word that is rendered sanctuary in Heb. 9:2. In each of those three texts, Heb. 9:2; 9:8; 10:19, Macknight renders the word, "holy places." The Douay Bible renders it, "the holies." And thus we learn that the heavenly sanctuary consists of two "holy places."

We have noticed particularly the vessels of the earthly sanctuary, and have cited divine testimony to show that they were patterns of the true in Heaven. This is strikingly confirmed by the fact that in the heavenly sanctuary we find the like vessels:

1. The ark of God's testament, and the cherubim. Rev. 11:19; 1's 30:1.

2. The golden altar of incense. Rev. 8:3; 9:13.
3. The candlestick with the seven lamps. Rev. 4:5; Zech. 4:2.

4. The golden cover. Rev. 8:8. This heavenly sanctuary is called by David, Hahakkuk, and John, "the temple of God in Heaven." Ps. 11:4; Heb. 2:20; Rev. 11:19; "God's holy habitation," Zech. 2:13; Jer. 25:30; Rev. 16:17; "greater and more perfect tabernacle," Heb. 9:11; "the sanctuary and true tabernacle which the Lord pitched, and not man," Heb. 8:2.

THE MINISTRATION AND CLEANSING OF THE EARTHLY SANCTUARY.

We have before shown that the earthly sanctuary consisted of two holy places, and that it was a pattern of the true tabernacle of God in Heaven. We shall now present in a brief manner, the work of ministration in both these holy places, and also the work of cleansing that sanctuary, at the end of that ministration every year, and shall prove that that ministration was the example and shadow of Christ's more excellent ministry in the true tabernacle.

The ministration in the earthly sanctuary was performed by the Levitical order of priesthood. Ex. 28; 29; Lev. 8; 9; Heb. 7. The act preparatory to the commencement of the ministration in the earthly tabernacle, was the anointing of its two holy places and all its sacred vessels. Ex. 40:9; 30:20-29; Lev. 8:10. The entire work of the priests in the two holy places is summed up by the apostle, as follows: "Now when these things were thus ordained, the priests went always into the first tabernacle, accomplishing the service of God; but into the second went the high priest alone once every year, not without blood, which he offered for himself, and for the errors of the people." Heb. 9:6, 7. The ministration in the earthly sanctuary is thus presented before us in two grand divisions. First, the daily service in the holy place, which consisted of the regular morning and evening burnt offering, Ex. 29:38-43; Num. 28:3-8, the burning of sweet incense upon the golden altar, when the high priest lighted the lamps every morning and evening, Ex. 30:7, 8, 34-36; 31:11, the special work upon the Lord's Sabbaths, and also upon the annual sabbaths, new moons, and feasts, Num. 28:11-31; 29; Lev. 23, and besides all this, the special work for individuals as they should present their particular offerings during the year. Lev.

1-7. And, second, the yearly work in the most holy place, for the sins of the people, and for the cleansing of the sanctuary. Lev. 16. Thus each of the two holy places had its appropriate work assigned. The glory of the God of Israel was manifested in both apartments. When he entered the tabernacle at the first, his glory filled both the holy places. Ex. 40:34, 35. See also 1 Kings 8:10, 11; 2 Chron. 5:13, 14; 7:1, 2. In the door of the first apartment, the Lord stood and talked with Moses. Ex. 33:9-11. In this place, God promised to meet with the children of Israel, and to sanctify the tabernacle with his glory. Ex. 29:42-44; 30:36. In the holiest, also, God manifested his glory in a special manner. Ex. 25:21, 22; Lev. 16:2.

In the first apartment stood the priests in a continual course of ministration for the people. He that had sinned, brought his victim to the door of this apartment to be offered up for himself. He laid his hand upon the head of the victim, to denote that his sin was transferred to it. Lev. 1:8. Then the victim was slain on account of that transgression, and his blood, bearing that sin and guilt, was carried into the sanctuary, and sprinkled upon it. Lev. 4. Thus, through the year this ministration went forward; the sins of the people being transferred from themselves to the victims offered in sacrifice, and through the blood of the sacrifices, transferred to the sanctuary itself.

On the tenth day of the seventh month, the ministration was changed from the holy place, where it had been continued through the year, to the most holy place. Lev. 16:2, 20-24. The high priest entered the holiest with the blood of a bullock, as a sin offering for himself. Verses 5, 6, 11-14. He then received of the children of Israel two kids of the goats for a sin offering. Upon these goats he cast lots; one lot for the Lord, and the other for the scape-goat. Verses 5, 7, 8. He next proceeded to offer the goat upon which the Lord's lot fell, as a sin offering for the people.

We shall now show that he offered this blood for two purposes:

1. "To make an atonement for the children of Israel, for all their sins."

2. To cleanse or "make an atonement for the holy sanctuary." Let us read a portion of Lev. 16: "Then shall he kill the goat of the sin offering that is for the people, and bring his blood within the veil, and do with that blood as he did with the blood of the bullock, and sprinkle it upon the mercy-seat, and before the mercy-seat; and he shall make an atonement for the holy place, because of the uncleanness of the children of Israel, and because of their transgressions in all their sins; and so shall he do for the tabernacle of the congregation that remaineth among them in the midst of their uncleanness. And there shall be no man in the tabernacle of the congregation when he goeth in to make an atonement in the holy place, until he come out, and have made an atonement for himself, and for his household, and for all the congregation of Israel. And he shall go out unto the altar that is before the Lord, and make an atonement for it; and shall take of the blood of the bullock, and of the blood of the goat, and put it upon the horns of the altar round about. And he shall sprinkle of the blood upon it with his finger seven times, and cleanse it, and hallow it from the uncleanness of the children of Israel. And when he hath made an end of reconciling the holy place, and the tabernacle of the congregation, and the altar, he shall bring the live goat; and Aaron shall lay both his hands upon the head of the live goat, and confess over him all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and all their transgressions in all their sins, putting them upon the head of the goat, and shall send him away by the hand of a fit man into the wilderness; and the goat shall bear upon him all their iniquities unto a land not inhabited; and he shall let go the goat into the wilderness." "And this shall be a statute forever unto you; that in the seventh month, on the tenth day of the month, ye shall afflict your souls, and do no work at all, whether it be one of your own country or a stranger that sojourneth among you; for on that day shall the priest make an atonement for you, to cleanse you, that ye may be clean from all your sins before the Lord." "And he shall make an atonement for the holy sanctuary, and he shall make an atonement for the tabernacle of the congregation, and for the altar; and he shall make an atonement for the priests, and for all the people of the congregation. And this shall be an everlasting statute unto you, to make an atonement for the children of Israel for all their sins once a year." Verses 16-22, 28, 30, 33, 34.

We have here read several important facts:

1. On the tenth day of the seventh month the ministration was changed from the holy place to the holiest of all. Verses 2, 20-24.

2. That in the most holy place, blood was offered for the sins of the people to make an atonement for them. Verses 2, 5, 15, 17, 20, 22, 24; Heb. 9:7.

3. That the two holy places of the sanctuary, and also the altar of incense, were on this day cleansed from the sins of the people, which, as we have seen, had been borne into the sanctuary by means of the blood of sin offering. Verses 16, 18-20, 24; Ex. 30:10.

4. That the high priest having by blood removed the sins of the people from the sanctuary, bears them to the door of the tabernacle, Num. 18:1; Ex. 28:38, where the scape-goat stands, and putting both his hands upon the head of the goat, and confessing over him all the iniquities of the children of Israel in all their sins, he puts them upon the head of the goat and sends him away, with all their iniquities, into a land not inhabited. Verses 5, 7-10, 20-22. The sanctuary was thus cleansed from the sins of the people, and those sins were borne by the scape-goat from the sanctuary.

The foregoing presents in our view a general outline of the ministration in the worldly sanctuary. The following scriptures show that that ministration was the example and shadow of Christ's ministry in the tabernacle in Heaven: "Now of the things which we have spoken, this is the sum: We have such an High Priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the Heavens; a minister of the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched and not man. For every high priest is ordained to offer gifts and sacrifices; wherefore, it is of necessity that this man have somewhat also to offer. For if he were on earth, he should not be a priest, seeing that there are priests that offer gifts according to the law; who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things, as Moses was admonished of God when he was about to make the tabernacle; for, See, saith he, that thou make all things according to the pattern shewed to thee in the mount. But now hath he obtained a more excellent ministry, by how much also he is the mediator of a better covenant, which was established upon better promises." Heb. 8:1-6; Col. 2:17; Heb. 10:1; 9:11, 12.

The facts stated in these texts are worthy of careful attention.

1. We have a High Priest in the Heavens.

2. This High Priest is a minister of the sanctuary or true tabernacle.

3. As the earthly high priests were ordained to offer sacrifices for sins, so it is of necessity that our High Priest should have something to offer for us in the heavenly sanctuary.

4. When upon earth he was not a priest.

5. The ministry of the priests in that tabernacle, made after the pattern of the true, was the example and shadow of Christ's more excellent ministry in the true tabernacle itself.

6. The entire typical service was a shadow of good things to come.

7. In the greater and more perfect tabernacle, Christ is a minister of these good things thus shadowed forth. With these facts before us, in our next we will consider that more excellent ministry in the temple of God in Heaven.

OUR FAITH AND HOPE;

Or, Reasons Why We Believe as We Do.

BY HENRY JAMES WHITE.

PUBLISHED SIXTEEN—THE HEAVENLY SANCTUARY.

At the close of the typical services, He of whom Moses in the law and the prophets did write, Jesus of Nazareth, came and laid down his life for us. The death of the Lord Jesus is the dividing point between the two dispensations, as it put an end to the typical services, and was the great foundation of his work as a priest in the heavenly tabernacle. On Jesus was laid the iniquity of us all, and he bore our sins in his own body on the tree. Isa. 53:6; 1 Pet. 2:24; Heb. 9:28. He was raised from the dead for our justification, and ascended into Heaven to become a great High Priest in the presence of God for us. Rom. 4:25; Heb. 9:11, 12, 24.

The ministration in the heavenly sanctuary is performed by the Melchisedec order of priesthood, in the person of our Lord. Ps. 110: Heb. 5-8. We have already proved that the temple of God in Heaven consists of two holy places, as did the earthly tabernacle; and that the ministration in the two holy places of the worldly sanctuary was the example and shadow of Christ's ministry in the true tabernacle. But it is contended by some that Christ ministers only in the most holy place of the heavenly sanctuary. Let us examine this point:

1. The anointing of the most holy place at the commencement of his ministration, may be urged as proof that he ministers only in the second apartment of the heavenly sanctuary. Dan. 9:24. But this objection vanishes at once, if we consider that before the Levitical priesthood began to minister in the earthly sanctuary, that entire building, the holiest as well as the holy place and all the sacred vessels, was anointed. Ex. 40:9-11; 40:28-29; Lev. 8:10; Num. 7:1. And when this anointing was accomplished, that ministration began in the first apartment. Lev. 8-10; Heb. 9:6, 7. And this order, let it be remembered, was "the example and shadow of heavenly things."

2. It has been urged by some that the text, "This Man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins, forever sat down on the right hand of God," Heb. 10:12, forbids the idea of his ministering in the two holy places. But we answer, so far as the idea of sitting down is concerned, it would be equally proper to represent him as standing on the Father's right hand. Acts 7:56. And if the Saviour is at "the right hand of the power of God" when descending from Heaven, as he testifies respecting himself, Matt. 28:18; Mark 16:7; Luke 22:69, then he certainly can be at the Father's right hand in both the holy places. But we have direct testimony here. Paul says that Christ is a "minister of the sanctuary." Heb. 8:2. That the word, Agion, here rendered sanctuary, is plural, no one can deny. It is literally rendered by the Douay Bible, "the holies." As translated by Macknight, Heb. 8:1, 2, reads thus: "Now of the things spoken the chief is, we have such an High Priest as became us, who sat down at the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the Heavens, a minister of the holy places, namely, of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched and not man." We draw two conclusions from the foregoing: (1) Our Lord can be a minister of the two holy places, and yet be at the Father's right hand. (2) He must minister in both the holy places, or Paul's language that he is a minister of the holies or holy places (plural), is not true. A high priest that should minister simply in the holiest of all, is not a minister of the holy places.

3. But another argument to prove that Christ ministers only in the most holy place, has been urged by some, from the following texts: "The Holy Ghost, this signifying, that the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while as the first tabernacle was yet standing." Heb. 9:8. "Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus." Chap. 10:19. But as has been before remarked, the word rendered "holiest of all," is the same that is rendered "sanctuary" in chap. 8:2, and is not Agia hegion, holy of holies, as in chap. 9:8, but is simply Agion, holies, plural. The rendering of Macknight, which correctly translates the word in the plural, removes all difficulty. He translates these two texts, as follows: "The Holy Ghost signifying this, that the way of the holy places was not yet laid open, while the first tabernacle still standeth." "Well then, brethren, having boldness in the entrance of the holy places, by the blood of Jesus." These texts, therefore, do not favor the doctrine that Christ is a minister of only one of the holy places. With a literal rendering of the word, giving it in the plural in our language, just as it was written by Paul, the objection to Christ's ministration in the two holy places of the heavenly sanctuary is entirely removed. The way into the holy places of the heavenly sanctuary was not laid open, while the ministration in the earthly tabernacle continued; but when that ministration was abolished, the way of the heavenly holy places was laid open, and we have boldness to enter by faith, where our High Priest is ministering for us.

It may be proper to add, that the phrase rendered "into the holy place," in Heb. 9:12, 26, and "into the sanctuary," in chap. 13:11, is the same that in chap. 9:24, is literally rendered in the plural, "into the holy places." Macknight renders them all in the plural. Then the heavenly tabernacle, where our Lord Jesus Christ ministers, is composed of holy places, as really as was its pattern or image, the earthly tabernacle; and our great High Priest is a minister of those holy places while at the Father's right hand.

Let us now examine those scriptures which present our Lord's position and ministry in the tabernacle in Heaven. In vision at Patmos, the beloved disciple had a view of the temple of God, the heavenly sanctuary. A door was opened in Heaven. This must be the door of the heavenly tabernacle, for it disclosed to John's view the throne of God, which was in that temple. Rev. 4:1, 2; 16:17; Jer. 17:12. It must be the door of the first apartment, for that of the second apartment (which discloses the ark containing the ten commandments) is not opened until the sounding of the seventh angel. Rev. 11:19. And the view that John was looking into the first apartment of the heavenly sanctuary, when he saw the Lord Jesus take the book from the hand of Him that sat upon the throne, is strikingly confirmed by what he saw before the throne. He testified "that there were seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, which are the seven spirits of God." Rev. 4:5; Zech. 4:2. He also saw the golden altar of incense before the throne, and witnessed the ministration at that altar with the golden censer. Rev. 8:5. In the earthly tabernacle, which was the pattern of things in the heavens, the golden candlestick with its seven lamps, and the golden altar of incense, were both represented, and by God's express direction, placed in the first apartment. Num. 8:2-4; Heb. 9:2; Lev. 24:2-4; Ex. 40:24-27. The scene of this vision is the first apartment of the heavenly sanctuary. Here it was that John saw the Lord Jesus. Rev. 6:1-8.

Let us read Isaiah's description of this place: "[In the year that king Uzziah died, I saw, also, the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up; and his train filled the temple. Above it stood the seraphims: each one had six wings; with twain he covered his face, and with twain he covered his feet; and with twain he did fly. And one cried unto another, and said, Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts: the whole earth is full of his glory. And the posts of the door moved at the voice of him that cried, and the house was filled with smoke. Then said I, Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts. Then flew one of the seraphims unto me, having a live coal in his hand, which he had taken with the tongs from off the altar." Isa. 6:1-6.

That this was a view of the heavenly tabernacle, and not of the temple at Jerusalem, may be proved by comparing John 12:80-41, with Isa. 6:1-10. Words written by Isaiah, while looking into the temple of God, are quoted by John, with the declaration that Isaiah spoke them while beholding Christ's glory. That John and Isaiah both beheld the same place, is evident; both beheld the throne of God, and him that sat upon it; Isa. 6:1; Rev. 4:2; both beheld the living beings with six wings; Isa. 6:2; Rev. 4:6-8; each heard from these beings a like song; Isa. 6:3; Rev. 4:8; and both beheld the golden altar before the throne. Isa. 6:6; Rev. 8:5; 9:13. That John and Isaiah both saw our Lord Jesus Christ, we have already proved. And the scene of their visions was in the first apartment of the heavenly sanctuary, the place of the golden candlestick with its seven lamps, and the golden altar of incense. And in this apartment our High Priest commenced his ministration, like the priests in the temple and shadow of heavenly things. In the shadow, each part of the work was many times repeated; but in the substance, each part is fulfilled once for all. Once for all our sacrifice is slain; Rom.

6:9, 10; Heb. 9:25-28, and once for all our High Priest appears in each of the holy places. Heb. 9:11, 12, 24, 25. Hence our Lord must continue his ministration in the first apartment until the period arrives for his ministration within the second veil, before the ark of God's testament.

The sins of the world were laid upon the Lord Jesus, and he died for these sins according to the Scriptures. The blood of the Lamb of God, which was shed for our transgressions of God's law, is that by which our High Priest enters the heavenly sanctuary, Heb. 9:12, and which, as our advocate, he offers for us in that sanctuary. Heb. 9:12; 1 Pet. 1:2; 1 John 2:1, 2. His great work, which began with the act of bearing the sins of the world at his death, he here carries forward by pleading the cause of penitent sinners, and presenting for them his blood which had been shed as the great sacrifice for the sins of the world. The work in the earthly sanctuary was essentially the same thing. The sins were there laid upon the victim, which was then slain. The blood of that sacrifice, bearing that guilt, was sprinkled in the sanctuary, to make reconciliation for the sinner. And thus in the shadow of heavenly things, we see the guilt of the people transferred to the sanctuary itself. This can be easily understood. And it is a plain fact that its great design was to give an example of heavenly things. As the sin of him who came to God through the offering of blood by the high priest, was, through that blood, transferred to the sanctuary itself, so it is in the substance. He who bore our sins at his death, offers for us his blood in the heavenly sanctuary. But when he comes again he is "without sin;" Heb. 9:26; his great work for the removal of sin is fully completed before he comes again.

OUR FAITH AND HOPE; Or, Reasons Why We Believe as We Do.

BY ELDER JAMES WHITE.

HUNDRED SEVENTEENTH—REMOVAL OF SIN.

We now inquire respecting the removal of the sins of the church, or host, from the sanctuary. We have seen that only 400 of the 2300 years belonged to the earthly sanctuary, and that the remaining 1810 years belonged to the true sanctuary, which Gabriel introduced to Daniel in his explanation in chapter 9; consequently the sanctuary to be cleansed from the sins of the church, or host, at the end of the 2300 years, in the heavenly sanctuary. We have also examined those portions of the Bible that explain how and why the earthly sanctuary was cleansed, and have seen that that cleansing was accomplished, not by fire, but by blood. We have seen that that work was ordained for the express purpose of shadowing forth the work in the heavenly sanctuary. And we have also seen that the sins of those who come to God through our great High Priest are communicated to the sanctuary, as was the case in the type. But we are not left without direct testimony on this important point. The apostle Paul states the fact of the cleansing of the earthly and the heavenly sanctuaries, and plainly affirms that the latter must be cleansed for the same reason that the former had been. He speaks as follows: "And almost all things are by the law purged with blood; and without shedding of blood is no remission. It was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these. For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into Heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us." Heb. 9: 22-24. Two important facts are stated in this portion of Scripture:

1. The earthly sanctuary was cleansed by blood.
2. The heavenly sanctuary must be cleansed by better sacrifices, that is, by the blood of Christ. It is plain, then, that the idea of cleansing the sanctuary by fire has no support in the Bible.

These words, as rendered by Macknight, are very clear: "And almost all things, according to the law, are cleansed with blood, and without the shedding of blood, there is no remission. There was a necessity, therefore, that the representations indeed of the holy places in the heavens, should be cleansed by these sacrifices; but the heavenly, holy places themselves, by sacrifices better than these. Therefore, Christ hath not entered into the holy places made with hands; the images of the true holy places; but into Heaven itself, now to appear before the face of God on our account." Heb. 9: 22-24. Then the fact of the cleansing of the heavenly sanctuary is plainly taught by the apostle Paul in his commentary on the typical system. And this great truth, plainly stated, is worthy of lasting remembrance.

By many, the idea of the cleansing of the heavenly sanctuary will be treated with scorn, "because," say they, "there is nothing in Heaven to be cleansed."

Such overlook the fact that the holy of holies, where God manifested his glory, and which no one but the high priest could enter, was, according to the law, to be cleansed, because of the sins of the people were borne into it by the blood of sin-offering. Lev. 16. And they overlook the fact that Paul plainly testifies that the heavenly sanctuary must be cleansed for the same reason. Heb. 9: 23, 24. See also Col. 1: 20. It was unlawful in this sense only: the sins of men had been borne into it through the blood of sin-offering, and they must be removed. This fact can be grasped by every mind.

The work of cleansing the sanctuary changes the ministration from the holy place to the holiest of all. Lev. 16; Heb. 9: 6, 7; Rev. 11: 19. As the ministration in the holy place of the temple in Heaven began immediately after the end of the typical system, at the close of the sixty-nine and a half weeks, Dan. 9: 27, so the ministration in the holiest of all, in the heavenly sanctuary, begins with the termination of the 2300 days. Then our High Priest enters the holiest to cleanse the sanctuary. The termination of this great period marks the commencement of the ministration of the Lord Jesus in the holiest of all. This work, as presented in the type, we have already seen was for the two-fold purpose, of the forgiveness of iniquity, and the cleansing of the sanctuary. And this great work our Lord accomplishes with his own blood; whether by the actual presentation of it, or by virtue of its merits, we need not stop to inquire.

No one can fail to see that the cleansing of the sanctuary is an event of infinite importance. This accomplishes the great work of the Messiah in the tabernacle in Heaven, and renders it complete. The work of cleansing the sanctuary is succeeded by the act of placing the sins thus removed, upon the head of the scape-goat, to be borne away forever from the sanctuary. The work of our High Priest for the sins of the world, will then be completed, and he be ready to appear "without sin unto salvation." The act of placing the sins upon the head of the scape-goat, in the type, has already been noticed. Lev. 16: 6, 7-10, 20-22.

The next event of that day, after the sanctuary was cleansed, was the putting of all the iniquities and transgressions of the children of Israel upon the scape-goat, and sending him away into a land not inhabited, or of separation. It is supposed by almost every one that this goat typified Christ in some of his offices, and that the type was fulfilled at the first advent. From this opinion I must differ, because,

1. That goat was not sent away till after the high priest had made an end of cleansing the sanctuary. Lev. 16: 20, 21. Hence that event cannot meet its antitype till after the end of the 2300 days.

2. It was sent away from Israel into the wilderness, a land not inhabited, to receive them. If our blessed Saviour is its antitype, he also must be sent away from his people to a land not inhabited, but not to the grave; for the goat was sent away alive; nor into Heaven, for that is not an uninhabited land.

3. The goat received and retained all the iniquities of Israel; but when Christ appears the second time, he will be "without sin."

4. The goat received the iniquities from the hands of the priest, and he sent it away. As Christ is the priest, the goat must be something else besides himself which he can send away.

5. This was one of two goats, chosen for that day, of which one was the Lord's, and was offered for a sin-offering; but the other was not called the Lord's, neither offered as a sacrifice. Its only office was to receive the iniquities from the priest, after he had cleansed the sanctuary from them, and bear them into a land not inhabited, leaving the sanctuary, priest, and people, behind, and free from their iniquities. Lev. 16: 7-10, 22.

6. The Hebrew name of the scape-goat, as will be seen from the margin of verse 8, is Azazel. On this verse Wm. Jones, in his Comp. Com., has the following remarks:

"Scape-goat. See different opinion in Bechart. Spencer, after the oldest opinion of the Hebrews and Christians, thinks Azazel is the name of the Devil; and so Beza and others. The Syriac has Azazel, the angel (strong one) who revolted."

7. At the appearing of Christ, as taught in Rev. 20, Satan is to be bound and cast into the bottomless pit, which not and place are significantly symbolized by the ancient high priest's sending the scape-goat into a separate and uninhabited wilderness.

8. Thus we have the Scripture, the definition of the name in two ancient languages, both spoken at the same time, and the oldest opinion of the Christians in favor of regarding the scape-goat as the type of Satan.

Because it is said, "The goat shall bear upon him all their iniquities into a land not inhabited," Lev. 16: 22, and John said, "Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh [margin, beareth] away the sin of the world," it is concluded without further thought that the former was the type of the latter. But a little attention to the law will show that the sins were borne from the people by the priest, and from the priest by the goat.

1. They are imparted to the victim.
2. The priest bore them in his blood to the sanctuary.

3. After cleansing it from them, on the tenth day of the seventh month, he bore them to the scape-goat.

4. The goat finally bore them away beyond the camp of Israel to the wilderness.

This was the legal process, and when fulfilled, the author of sins will have received them back again (but the nakedly will bear their own sins), and his head will have been bruised by the seed of the woman; "the strong man armed" will have been bound by a stronger than he, and his house (the grave) spoiled of its goods, the saints. Matt. 12: 28; Luke 11: 21, 22.

The great work of the atonement is now complete, and the work of our Lord, as priest, accomplished. The sins of those who have obtained pardon through the great sin-offering, are, at the close of our Lord's work in the holy places, blotted out, Acts 3: 19, and being then transferred to the scape-goat, are borne away from the sanctuary and host forever, and rest upon the head of their author, the devil. The Azazel, or antitypical scape-goat, will then have received the sins of those who have been pardoned in the sanctuary, and in the lake of fire will suffer for the sins which he has instigated. God's people, the host, will then be free forever from their iniquity. "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still; and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still; and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still; and he that is holy, let him be holy still. And behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give to every man according as his work shall be." Rev. 22: 11, 12. "And to you who are troubled, rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." 2 Thess. 1: 7, 8.

OUR FAITH AND HOPE;

Or, Reasons Why We Believe as We Do.

BY OLIVER JARVIS WHITE.

NUMBER EIGHTEEN—OUR DISAPPOINTMENT.

Why were those disappointed who looked for the second appearing of Christ in the year 1844? This important question, we believe, can be answered in the most satisfactory manner.

Our disappointment did not arise from mistaking the manner and object of the second advent; for no truth is more distinctly stated in the sacred Scriptures than the personal and visible second appearing of Jesus Christ to raise the righteous dead, change to immortality the living righteous, and to destroy the unbelieving world.

Nor did our disappointment arise from misapplying the prophetic symbols of Daniel and John. A careful review of the subject confirms us that the application of these symbols made by the Adventists of 1840-44 was correct.

Nor did our disappointment arise from a misapplication of the prophetic periods. The year-day theory is well sustained. The argument by which the original date of the seventy weeks of the ninth chapter of Daniel is sustained, is invulnerable. And Adventists correctly held that the seventy weeks were a part of the 2300 days. These two points relative to the seventy weeks being correct, we had sufficient reasons for believing that the 2300 days would terminate in the year 1844.

Neither did our disappointment arise from believing that at the end of the 2300 days the work of cleansing the sanctuary would take place. For it is plainly stated, "Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." Dan. 8:14. But when we said that this earth, or a part of this earth, was the sanctuary, and that Christ must descend from Heaven at the end of the 2300 days, to purify the earth by fire, we looked for that which the Bible did not warrant us to expect. Here was the cause of our disappointment. For we have seen that there is no scriptural authority to support the view that any part of the earth is the sanctuary, or that the burning of the earth, and the melting of the elements, 2 Pet. 3, is the cleansing of the sanctuary. By a multitude of witnesses, we have proved that the tabernacle of God in Heaven is the sanctuary to be cleansed, and that its cleansing is a work performed in that sanctuary, with blood, and not with fire. Our disappointment, then, arose from a misunderstanding of the work to transpire at the end of the days.

William Miller and his associates were correct on three of the four fundamental points of the Advent faith. On one they were mistaken. Their views were correct relative to the literal and personal second advent, the application of the prophetic symbols, and their exposition of the great periods of Daniel and John. But they did not understand the event to occur at the termination of the 2300 prophetic days. And their mistake on this one point does not affect the great second advent question, as most men suppose that it does. This one point scripturally corrected, the Second Advent faith stands on as firm a basis, to say the least, as before the disappointment. We therefore see no reason for denouncing that truly great and good man, Wm. Miller, as a false prophet, and the Advent faith as a failure, simply because he was mistaken on one point in four, and when that one mistake was of such a nature as to be scripturally corrected without in the least changing or weakening any other point. And here we would remark that other great men have made mistakes as well as Wm. Miller. The learned Prof. Bush, in a letter to Wm. Miller, said:

"Neither is it to be objected, as I conceive, to yourself or your friends, that you have devoted much time and attention to the study of the chronology of prophecy, and have labored much to determine the commencing and closing dates of its great periods. If these periods are actually given by the Holy Ghost in the prophetic books, it was doubtless with the design that they should be studied, and probably, in the end, fully understood; and no man is to be charged with presumptuous folly who reverently makes the attempt to do this. On this point, I have myself no charges to bring against you. Nay, I am even ready to go so far as to say, that I do not conceive your errors on the subject of chronology to be at all of a serious nature, or, in fact, to be very wide of the truth. In taking a day as the prophetic term for a year, I believe you are sustained by the soundest exegesis, as well as fortified by the high names of Mede, Sir Isaac Newton, Bishop Newton, Kirby, Scott, Keith, and a host of others who have long since come to substantially your conclusions on this head. They all agree that the leading periods mentioned by Daniel and John, do actually expire about this age of the world, and it would be a strange logic that would convict you of heresy for holding in effect the same views which stand forth so prominent in the notices of these eminent divines. Your error, as I apprehend, lies in another direction than your chronology."

Here Prof. Bush speaks frankly and truthfully, and his words of wisdom sustain the Adventists in the most objectionable feature of their faith. But what was the event for which he looked to mark the termination of the 2300 days? Let the following extract from the same letter to Wm. Miller answer:

"While I have no question that well-informed students of prophecy will admit that your calculation of times, with the above exception, is not materially erroneous, they will still, I believe, maintain that you have entirely mistaken the nature of the events which are to occur when those periods have expired. This is the head and front of your expository offending. You have assumed that the close of the 2300 days of Daniel, for instance, is also the close of the period of human probation—that it is the epoch of the visible and personal second coming of Christ—of the resurrection of the righteous dead—and of the dissolution of the present mundane system. All this I affirm to be gratuitously and groundlessly asserted. Admitting, as I readily do, that we have arrived at a momentous era of the world, and that the expiration of these periods is to introduce, by gradual steps, a new order of things, intellectual, political, and moral, I still persistently deny that the Scriptures, soundly interpreted, warrant the expectation of any such sudden and miraculous disruption of the existing order of things, as yourself, and those usually termed Adventists, are in the habit of teaching.

"The great event before the world is not its physical conflagration, but its moral regeneration; and for one, I am happy to think that by your own limitation, the question is so soon to be put to the test of indisputable fact. The 23d of March—if that is the time—will soon be upon us, and the truth or falsehood of one part, at least, of your scheme will then be decided. But even if years or centuries were yet to intervene, I should still be strong in my ground position, that you had mistaken the nature of the event."

"Although there is doubtless a sense in which Christ may be said to come, in connection with the passing away of the fourth empire, and of the Ottoman power, and his kingdom to be illustriously established, yet that will be found to be a spiritual coming in the power of his gospel, in the ample outpouring of his Spirit, and the glorious administration of his providence. This is the common and prevailing belief of Christendom, and I have no doubt the true one."

Evidently, Mr. Bush looked for the conversion of the world as the event to mark the termination of the 2300 days. Both Mr. Miller and Mr. Bush were right on the time question, and both were mistaken in the event to occur at the close of the great periods. Mr. Miller held that the world would be regenerated by fire, and Mr. Bush by the gospel, at the end of the 2300 days. Mr. Bush would put Mr. Miller's views to the severe test of a few weeks only, while the conversion-of-the-world theory of Mr. Bush has had the terrible test of the last twenty-six years of apostasy, spiritual darkness, and crime. This period has been noted by departures from the faith of the gospel, and apostasies from the Christian religion, as no other period has been marked in the history of the Christian church.

Infidelity in various forms, especially in the name of Spiritualism, has spread over the Christian world with fearful rapidity, while the dark record of crime has been blackening since Prof. Bush addressed his letter to Wm. Miller. If this be the commencement of the temporal millennium, may the Lord save us from the delusion.

Both these great men mistake the event to terminate the 2300 days. Why should Mr. Miller be condemned for his mistake, and Mr. Bush be excused for his unscriptural conclusion? Both rest in the grave, while we have opportunity to scripturally correct their errors by the light of the heavenly sanctuary.

"Unto two thousand and three hundred days, thou shalt the sanctuary be cleansed."

In the providence of God, in the seventh-month movement of 1844, the attention of the people was turned to the types of the law of Moses. The argument which had been given, that as the vernal types, namely, the paschal lamb, and the meat-offering, were fulfilled in their order and time in the crucifixion, the resurrection of Christ, and the descent of the Holy Spirit on the day of pentecost, so would the autumnal types be fulfilled as to time, in the events connected with the second advent, seemed to be conclusive and satisfactory. The position taken was, that as the high priest came out of the typical sanctuary on the tenth day of the seventh month and blessed the people, so Christ, our great High Priest, would, on that day, come out of Heaven to bless his waiting people.

But it should be borne in mind that at that time these types which point to the work in the heavenly sanctuary, were not understood. In fact, no one had any definite idea of the tabernacle of God in Heaven. We now see that the two holies of the typical sanctuary, made by the direction of the Lord to Moses, with their two distinct ministrations—the daily and the yearly services—were, in the language of Paul to the Hebrews, "patterns of things in the heavens," figures of the true." Chap. 9. He also says of the work of the Jewish priests, in chapter 8: "Who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things." His words mean simply this: In Heaven there is a sanctuary where Christ ministers, and that sanctuary has two holies, and two distinct ministrations, as truly as the earthly sanctuary had. If his words do not mean this, they have no meaning at all.

How natural, then, the conclusion, that as the Jewish priests ministered daily in connection with the holy place of the sanctuary, and on the tenth day of the seventh month, at the close of their yearly round of service, the high priest entered the most holy place to make atonement for the cleansing of the sanctuary, so Christ ministered in connection with the holy place of the heavenly sanctuary from the time of his ascension to the ending of the 2300 days of Dan. 8, in 1844, when, on the tenth day of the seventh month of that year, he entered the most holy place of the heavenly tabernacle, to make a special atonement for the blotting out of the sins of his people, or, which is the same thing, for the cleansing of the sanctuary.

The typical sanctuary was cleansed from the sins of the people with the offering of blood. The nature of the cleansing of the heavenly sanctuary may be learned from the type. By virtue of his own blood, Christ entered the most holy to make a special atonement for the cleansing of the heavenly tabernacle.

With this view of the heavenly sanctuary before the reader, he can see the defect in the seventh-month theory. It now appears evident that the conclusion that Christ would come out of Heaven on that day is not justified by the premises in the case. But if Christ's ministry in the heavenly sanctuary was to last but one year, on the last day of which he would make an atonement for the cleansing of the heavenly tabernacle, according to the type, then the conclusion that he would on that day come out and bless his waiting people, would be irresistible.

service, first in the holy place for the entire year, save one day, and second, in the most holy place on the last day of that year, was repeated each successive year. But not so in the ministry of Christ. He entered the holy place of the heavenly sanctuary at his ascension once for all. There he ministered till the time for the cleansing of the sanctuary at the close of the 2300 days in the autumn of 1844. To accomplish this work, he then entered the most holy place once for all. Christ suffered upon the cross—not often—but once for all. He entered upon his work in the holy place once for all. And he cleanses the heavenly sanctuary from the sins of his people once for all. His ministry in the holy, from his ascension in the spring of A. D. 31 to the autumn of 1844, was eighteen hundred and thirteen years and six months. The period of his ministry in the most holy can no more be defined before its close, than the time of his ministry in the holy could be defined before it terminated. Therefore, however much the tenth-day atonement for the cleansing of the typical sanctuary proved that our great High Priest would enter the most holy of the heavenly tabernacle on the tenth day of the seventh month, it proved nothing to the point that he would on that day come out of the most holy place.

Could we then have understood the subject of the heavenly sanctuary, our disappointment would have been avoided. Our evidence did not prove that our High Priest would descend from the holy place of the heavenly sanctuary in flaming fire to burn the earth, at the end of the 2300 days; but, so far from this, it did prove that he must at that time enter within the second veil, to minister for us before the ark of God's testament, and to cleanse the sanctuary. Dan. 8:14; Heb. 9:23, 24. Such has been the position of our High Priest since the end of the days, and this is the reason that we did not behold our King in 1844. He had then ministered in only one of the holy places, and the termination of the 2300 days marked the commencement of his ministration in the other.

When John, who saw the door of the first apartment of the heavenly tabernacle opened, Rev. 4:1-5, at the commencement of Christ's ministry, was carried in vision down the stream of time to "the days of the voice of the seventh angel," he saw the most holy place of God's temple opened. "And the temple of God was opened in Heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament; and there were lightnings, and voices, and thunderings, and an earthquake, and great hail." Rev. 11:10. Here, by the ark of God's testament, is where our High Priest ministers, since the close of the 2300 days. To this open door in the heavenly sanctuary, Rev. 3:7, 8; Isa. 22:22-25, we invite those to come for pardon and salvation, who have not sinned away the day of grace. Our High Priest stands by the Mercy-Seat (which is simply the top of the ark), and here he offers his blood, not merely for the cleansing of the sanctuary, but also for the pardon of iniquity and transgression. But while we call men to this open door, and point them to the blood of Christ, offered for us at the mercy-seat, we would remind them of the Law of God beneath that mercy-seat, which made the death of God's beloved Son necessary in order that guilty man might be pardoned. The ark contains God's commandments, and he that would receive the blessing of God, at the hand of our High Priest, must keep the commandments contained in the ark before which he ministers.

OUR FAITH AND HOPE,

Or, Reasons Why We Believe as We Do.

NUMBER TWENTY—THE THREE MESSAGES.

BY ELDER JAMES WHITE.

Whoever will read attentively the proclamations embraced in the fourteenth chapter of Revelation, cannot fail to notice their vast importance. At whatever period in the history of the church these proclamations are made, from their very nature they must constitute the great theme of interest for that generation. Whenever the angels of this chapter are commissioned by God to announce to the nations of the earth that the hour of his Judgment is come, or to proclaim the fall of Babylon, or to utter against the worshippers of the beast the most dreadful threatening which the Bible contains, no man can disregard their work, or treat their warnings as non-essential, except at the peril of his soul. If it were merely possible that these warnings were addressed to ourselves, it would become us to examine this subject with serious attention. But if this point can be proved by decisive testimony, it is certain that we cannot too carefully attend to the warnings here uttered.

THE FIRST MESSAGE.

"And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his Judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters." Rev. 14: 6, 7.

This is called the first message because it is the first of the series. See verse 9. John calls it "another angel," from the fact that he had previously seen an angel flying in the midst of heaven. See chap. 8: 12.

This proclamation is one of pre-eminent importance. It is not a mere local judgment, but one that concerns all the inhabitants of the earth. Hence it has reference to the final Judgment scene. It is the same gospel that Paul preached that is here styled the "everlasting gospel." But the great truth uttered by this angel would not have been a truth if uttered by Paul; for he lived at the commencement of the gospel dispensation, and this proclamation relates to its closing scenes. It seems to be the same as "this gospel of the kingdom," that our Lord presents in Matt. 24: 14, as the sign of the end of this dispensation, and which was to be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations before the end should come.

The truth on this point is well expressed in the following language of the late Mr. Bliss, editor of the Advent Herald, Dec. 14, 1850:

"As an indication of the approach of the end, there was, however, to be seen another angel flying through the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people. Rev. 14: 6. The burden of this angel was to be the same gospel which had been before proclaimed; but connected with it was the additional motive of the proximity of the kingdom, 'saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his Judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters.'"

ment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters." Verse 7. No mere preaching of the gospel without announcing its proximity could fulfill this message."

In harmony with this testimony from the editor of the Herald, I will here give another from a tract on prophecy, published by J. V. Himes about the same time, which also speaks of the character of the message and the time of its application. The title of the tract is "Our Specific Work:"

"The proclamation of an everlasting gospel, 'The hour of his Judgment is come,' Rev. 14: 6, 7, is the leading Advent proclamation."

"The facts summed up are these: John, looking into the distant future, gazing upon the theater of the final conflict, sees a messenger, a minister of an everlasting gospel, fly through mid-heaven, with a special, elevated, joyous, public, proclamation, requiring haste and extraordinary energy in its delivery. The proclamation contains a fact, and a command founded upon that fact. 1. The fact: 'The hour of his Judgment is come.' 2. The command: 'Fear God,' &c. These are the elements of this special commission. The work of this symbol agent is thus clearly defined; no terms more specific."

"Does this messenger symbolize a class of teachers? Such has been the general understanding of expositors. Mr. Wesley and Dr. Benson so interpret the passage. On this point there is great unanimity. It is plain from the fact that it is said to preach. That class of people is modern. Mr. Wesley and Dr. Benson make this messenger symbolize the Protestant reformers in the days of Luther. With their view agree a mass of expositors. This commission, however, cannot be Luther's."

"That body must exist somewhere, and, in its character and in the nature of its work, it must agree with the symbol messenger. They must agree as face to face in a mirror. Can such a body be found? The proclamation above stated has been heard. The world can bear testimony to this. The cry, 'The hour of his Judgment is come,' sounded through all Christendom. The multitudes heard, and scoffed, or trembled. By what body of believers was this proclamation made? Not by those who taught that that Judgment was a thousand years in the future. No church which holds to the doctrine of a spiritual reign can be that body, as the elements of their proclamation fully contradict those elements above stated. Such a body now existing can alone be found among those who constitute the Advent believers in Europe and America."

In proof that this message has not been fulfilled in the history of the church in ages past, I offer the following reasons:

1. No proclamation of the hour of God's Judgment come, has ever been made in any past age.
2. If such a proclamation had been made many centuries in the past, as some contend, it would have been a false one.
3. The prophecies on which such a proclamation to men in a state of probation must be based, were closed up and sealed to the time of the end.
4. The Scriptures plainly locate the message of warning respecting the Judgment in a brief space immediately preceding the advent of our Lord; thus directly contradicting the view that locates these messages in past ages.

We now offer proof in support of the foregoing propositions. If they are sustained, they establish the fact that the present generation is that one to which the angels' messages are addressed. We earnestly invite all who wish the truth, to weigh this part of the argument with especial care.

1. Has the proclamation of the hour of God's Judgment come, been made in any past age? If such a proclamation has never been made in past centuries, there is an end to controversy on this part of the subject. No persons have ever been able to show any such proclamation in the past. The apostles did not make such a proclamation. On the contrary, they plainly inform us that the day of the Lord was not then at hand. Martin Luther did not make this proclamation; for he thought the Judgment about three hundred years in the future. And finally, the history of the church presents no such proclamation in the past. Had the first angel preached to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, that the hour of God's Judgment had come, the publicity of such a proclamation would be a sufficient guaranty that the history of the world would contain some record of the fact. Its total silence respecting such a proclamation is ample proof that it never was made, and should put to silence those who make such an affirmation.

2. We are on firm ground, also, when we say that had such a proclamation been made to the world in past ages, it would have been a false proclamation. Four reasons sustain this statement: (1) There is no part of the Bible on which such a message, centuries in the past, could have been based. Hence had such a proclamation been made, it would have been without scriptural foundation, and consequently not from Heaven. (2) It would have been in direct opposition to those scriptures which locate the Judgment, and the warning respecting its approach, in the period of the last generation. The scriptures which sustain these two reasons we shall presently cite. (3) The history of the world amply evinces that the hour of God's Judgment had not come ages in the past. (4) Nor would it be true of past ages, if limited to Babylon. For Rev. 18: 6-10, clearly shows that the hour of Babylon's Judgment is yet in the future. It is certain, therefore, that the angel with the proclamation respecting the hour of God's Judgment, has not given it at a time when it would be not only destitute of scriptural support, but would absolutely contradict their plain testimony.

OUR FAITH AND HOPE,

Or, Reasons Why We Believe as We Do.

NUMBER TWENTY-ONE—THE THREE MESSAGES.

BY ELDER JAMES WHITE.

3. The prophecies which give us the time of the Judgment, and which present the succession of events leading down to that great crisis, were closed up and sealed till the time of the end. We refer particularly to the prophecies of Daniel. See chap. 8: 17, 26; 12: 4, 9. Hence it is evident that God reserves the warning to that generation which alone needs it. Noah's warning respecting the flood, was alone applicable to those who should witness it; thus also the warning respecting the Judgment near is alone applicable to that generation which lives in the last days.

4. The Bible locates this message in the period which immediately precedes the second advent, and plainly warns us against the proclamation of the Judgment at hand prior to that time. Here we join issue with our opponents. Instead of finding that the apostles gave this proclamation, as some teach, we shall find indubitable evidence that they located this warning far in the future, and that they admonished the church to heed none that should precede a given time. If we recur to the book of Acts, we shall find Paul preaching before Felix, of the Judgment to come; and before the Athenians, that God had appointed a day in which he would judge the world in righteousness by Jesus Christ. Acts 24: 26; 17: 31. But that book nowhere intimates that Christ was immediately coming to Judgment. Peter points his hearers to the future, saying, that the heavens which had then received Christ, must retain him until the times of restitution. Acts 3: 21.

The first epistle to the Thessalonians may seem to teach that the apostles expected the coming of Christ in their day. Indeed, it is evident that such an idea was received from it by the Thessalonian church. Hence it was, that in his second epistle to them, Paul found it necessary to speak explicitly on the point. He tells them that the coming of Christ could not take place until the great apostasy; and as the result of that apostasy, that the Man of Sin should be revealed, showing himself that he is God, and exalting himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped. That this mystery of iniquity is the great Romish apostasy, none but a Papist will deny.

Paul reminds the Thessalonians that he had told them of these things when he was yet with them. And where could Paul have learned this fact, which he had thus stated to them? He was accustomed to reason from the Scriptures, and not to deal merely in assertions. Hence it is very evident that he refers to the prophecy of Daniel, which in its seventh chapter has given the successive events which intervened between its time and the Judgment. In this series of events it has with wonderful precision described the power to which Paul has referred as the Man of Sin. No Protestant will deny the identity of Daniel's little horn and Paul's Man of Sin. And as Daniel has brought it into a series of events which ends with the Judgment and the setting up of the everlasting kingdom, it was an easy matter for Paul to tell where, in this series of events, he stood, and whether the Judgment was its next event or not. The apostle, therefore, plainly tells them that that day was not at hand. For the Man of Sin, the little horn, must arise and perform his predicted work, and when that should be accomplished, the coming of Christ should transpire, to consume "that Wicked with its brightness."

Now when was the little horn to arise? Daniel was told that it should arise after the ten horns upon the fourth beast; or, in other words, after the fourth empire should be divided into ten kingdoms, which was accomplished about five hundred years after Christ. The Judgment therefore could not come prior to that time. But how long was this little horn to have power to wear out the saints? Daniel informs us that it should be for "a time and times, and the dividing of time," or 1260 prophetic days. Rev. 12: 6, 14. It follows therefore that the apostle carries the mind forward five hundred years to the development of the Man of Sin, and thence 1260 years for his triumph, before the Judgment could be preached as an event immediately impending. Whoever will carefully read Dan. 7, will get the original of Paul's argument in 2 Thess. 2, and will not fail to see the force of his statement.

The papal supremacy began 538, and ended in 1798 with the overthrow of the Pope's temporal power. The warning of Paul against a false proclamation respecting the Judgment at hand, therefore, expires at the last given date, and not before. For we have then reached the point of time where the last important event in Dan. 7, before the Judgment, has transpired. An angel from Heaven preaching the hour of God's Judgment some many years in the past, would be giving a different gospel from that preached by Paul. Those who locate the angel of Rev. 14: 6, 7, in past ages, virtually place upon his head the anathema of Paul in Gal. 1: 8.

And what is of very deep interest, the point of time at which Paul's warning expires is the commencement of the time of the end—the very point to which the visions of Daniel were closed up and sealed. Compare chapter 11: 33, 35; 7: 25; and the fact that the 1260 years' persecution of the saints terminates with the commencement of the time of the end, will appear obvious. How gloriously does this view of the subject make the truth of God shine out! For the warning of the apostle against a false proclamation of the Judgment at hand, expires at the very point where the seal is taken from those prophecies which show when the Judgment sits. And it is respecting this period, the time of the end, that it is said, Many shall run to and fro, and knowledge [on the very subject which was before concealed] shall be increased.

Then the time of the end is the period in which the Judgment-hour cry, and the subsequent messages are to be given. Dan. 8: 17, 26; 12: 4, 9.

Another important argument on this point is found in what our Lord has said relative to the signs of his second advent. The church were to understand when his coming was at the doors, by the fulfillment of certain tokens. Until these should be seen, they were not authorized to look for the immediate advent of the Lord. But when the signs should begin to appear, his church might then know that their redemption drew near. Luke 21: 28. It is an interesting fact that Christ has marked the time in which these signs were to begin to appear. Consequently the messages in question could not be delivered prior to that time.

"Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken." Matt 24: 29. "But in those days, after that tribulation, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars of heaven shall fall, and the powers that are in heaven shall be shaken." Mark 13: 24, 25. We think there can be no mistake that in these scriptures our Lord refers to the papal tribulation of Daniel the prophet. The signs of his second coming were to commence "in those days," but "after that tribulation." In other words, the 1260 prophetic days should not be quite over, but their tribulation should be ended, when the sun should be darkened. The sun was darkened in 1780, and the tribulation of those days was then past, but the days did not expire till 1798. Thus we have the signs of our Lord's immediate advent just opening upon us, as we come down to the time of the end, the period when the vision should be unveiled, and many run to and fro and knowledge respecting the end should be increased.

The extent of this proclamation is worthy of notice. An English writer, Mourant Brock, thus remarks: "It is not merely in Great Britain that the expectation of the near return of the Redeemer is entertained, and the voice of warning raised, but also in America, India, and on the continent of Europe. In America about three hundred ministers of the word are thus preaching 'the gospel of the kingdom;' whilst in this country, about seven hundred of the church of England are raising the same cry."

Dr. Joseph Wolff traveled in Arabia Felix, through the region inhabited by the descendants of Hobab, Moses' father-in-law. In Yemen he saw a book which he mentions thus:

"The Arabs of this place have a book called Seera, which treats of the second coming of Christ, and his reign in glory!"

"In Yemen he spent six days with the Rechabites. 'They drink no wine, plant no vineyards, sow no seed, live in tents, and remember the words of Jehonadab, the son of Rechab. With them were children of Israel, of the tribe of Dan, who reside near Terim in Matramawt, who expect, in common with the children of Rechab, the speedy arrival of the Messiah in the clouds of heaven.'"—Wolff's Mission to Bokhara.

"In Wietzenberg there is a Christian colony numbering hundreds, who look for the speedy advent of Christ; also another of like belief on the shores of the Caspian; the Molokans, a large body of Dissenters from the Russian Greek church, residing on the shores of the Baltic—a very pious people, of whom it is said, 'taking the Bible alone for their creed, the norm of their faith is simply the Holy Scriptures'—are characterized by the 'expectation of Christ's immediate and visible reign upon earth.' In Russia the doctrine of Christ's coming and reign is preached to some extent, and received by many of the lower class. It has been extensively agitated in Germany, particularly in the north part among the Moravians. In Norway, charis and books on the advent have been circulated extensively, and the doctrine received by many. Among the Tartars, in Tartary, there prevails an expectation of Christ's advent about this time. English and American publications on this doctrine have been sent to Holland, Germany, India, Ireland, Constantinople, Rome, and to nearly every missionary station on the globe. At the Turks Islands, it has been received to some extent among the Wesleyans. Mr. Fox, a Scottish missionary to the Telougee people, was a believer in Christ's soon coming. James McGregor Bertram, a Scottish missionary of the Baptist order at St. Helena, has sounded the cry extensively on that island, making many converts and premillennialists; he has also preached it at South Africa, at the missionary stations there. David N. Lord informs us that a large proportion of the missionaries who have gone from Great Britain to make known the gospel to the heathen, and who are now laboring in Asia and Africa, are Millenarians; and Joseph Wolff, D. D., according to his journals, between the years 1821 and 1845, proclaimed the Lord's speedy advent in Palestine, Egypt, on the shores of the Red Sea, Mesopotamia, the Crimea, Persia, Georgia, throughout the Ottoman Empire, in Greece, Arabia, Turkistan, Bokhara, Afghanistan, Cashmere, Hindostan, Thibet, in Holland, Scotland and Ireland, at Constantinople, Jerusalem, St. Helena, also on shipboard in the Mediterranean, and at New York city, to all denominations. He declares he has preached among Jews, Turks, Moham-medans, Persians, Hindoos, Chaldeans, Yezeds, Syrians, Sebeans, to Paohas, Shiks, Shabs, the kings of Orghenish and Bokhara, the queen of Greece, etc. And of his extraordinary labors the Investigator says: "No individual has, perhaps, given greater publicity to the doctrine of the second coming of the Lord Jesus Christ, than has this well-known missionary to the world. Wherever he goes, he proclaims the approaching advent of the Messiah in glory."—Voice of the Church, pp. 312-344.

The Voice of Truth for January, 1845, says:

"We are doubtless near that auspicious hour when the harvest of the earth will be reaped, as described in Rev. 14: 14-16. The history of God's people in this mortal state, as given in that chapter, before being glorified, is nearly complete. The everlasting gospel, as described in verses 6 and 7, has been preached unto every nation, kindred, tongue, and people; saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his Judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. No case can be more clearly demonstrated with facts than that this message has been borne to every nation and tongue under heaven, within a few past years, in the preaching of the coming of Christ in 1843, or near at hand. Through the medium of lectures and publications the sound has gone into all the earth, and the word unto the ends of the world."

But those were disappointed who expected the Lord would come in 1843 and in 1844. This fact with many is sufficient for rejecting all the testimony in the case. To them the position that the Advent movement was in fulfillment of prophecy, when at the same time those who took part in the movement were disappointed, is an absurdity. We acknowledge the disappointment, but cannot acknowledge that this furnishes a just reason for denying the hand of God in that work. It is a fact that God's people have fulfilled prophecy, and at the same time been disappointed in their hopes. This was the case with the disciples and the shouting multitude on the occasion of our Lord's meekly riding into Jerusalem, when they cried, "Hosannah to the Son of David; Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord; Hosannah in the highest." The prophet of God had said, "Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem: behold, thy King cometh unto thee: he is just, and having salvation; lowly, and riding upon an ass, and upon a colt the foal of an ass." Zech. 12, 9. And his words must be fulfilled. That which inspired the shouts of the disciples was the expectation that their Master would then ascend to the throne of David and reign among them. But in this they were disappointed. In a few days their hopes died, as he expired upon the cross.

Did they fulfill prophecy? They certainly did. Were their expectations which moved them to fulfill the prophecy realized? They were utterly disappointed.

Disappointment by no means proves that God has no hand in the guidance of his people. It should lead them to correct their errors, but it should not lead them to cast away their confidence in God. It was because the children of Israel were disappointed in the wilderness that they so often denied divine guidance. They are set forth as an admonition to us, that we should not fall after the same example of unbelief. But it must be apparent to every student of the Scriptures, that the angel who proclaims the hour of God's Judgment, does not give the latest message of mercy. Rev. 14 presents two other and later proclamations, before the close of human probation.

THE SANCTUARY.

BY J. H. ANDREWS.

In presenting this most important subject to the consideration of the people of God, we bespeak the candid and prayerful attention of all who have ears to hear. It is well understood by thousands, that the great disappointment of the Advent believers, arose from the fact that they believed the cleansing of the sanctuary to be the burning of the earth, or some event to transpire at the second Advent of the Lord Jesus; and as they could clearly establish the fact that the 2300 days would terminate in the seventh month 1844, they looked with the full assurance of faith and hope, for the glorious appearing of the Son of God at that time. Painful and grievous was the disappointment; and while the heart of the trusting was bowed with sorrow, numbers were not waiting who openly denied the hand of God in the Advent movement, and made utter shipwreck of their faith.

As the subject of the sanctuary of the Bible involves the most important facts connected with our disappointment, it is worthy of the serious attention of all who wait the consolation of Israel. Let us then examine again with care, the vision of the man greatly beloved, recorded in Daniel viii. We call attention to the symbols presented in this chapter. The first thing presented to the eye of the prophet, was the VIEW OF THE RAM.

"Then I lifted up mine eyes, and saw, and behold, there stood before the river, a ram which had two horns; and the two horns were high; but one was higher than the other, and the higher came up last. I saw the ram pushing westward, and northward, and southward; so that no beasts might stand before him, neither was there any that could deliver him out of his hand; but he did according to his will, and became great." Verses 3, 4.

VIEW OF THE GOAT.

"And as I was considering, behold an he goat came from the west on the face of the whole earth, and touched not the ground; and the goat had a notable horn between his eyes. And he came to the ram that had two horns, which I had seen standing before the river, and ran unto him in the fury of his power. And I saw him come close unto the ram, and he was moved with choler against him, and smote the ram, and brake his two horns; and there was no power in the ram to stand before him, but he cast him down to the ground, and stamped upon him; and there was none that could deliver the ram out of his hand. Therefore the he goat waxed very great; and when he was strong, the great horn was broken; and for it came up four notable ones toward the four winds of heaven." Verses 5-8.

VIEW OF THE LITTLE HORN.

"And out of one of them came forth a little horn, which waxed exceeding great, toward the south, and toward the east, and toward the pleasant land. And it waxed great, even to the host of heaven; and it cast down some of the host and of the stars to the ground, and stamped upon them. Yea, he magnified himself even to the Prince of the host, and by him the daily sacrifice was taken away, and the place of his sanctuary was cast down. And an host was given him against the daily sacrifice by reason of transgression, and it cast down the truth to the ground; and it practised, and prospered." Verses 9-12.

VIEW OF THE SANCTUARY AND 2300 DAYS.

"Then I heard one saint speaking, and another saint said unto that certain saint which spake, How long shall be the vision concerning the daily sacrifice, and the transgression of desolation, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot? And he said unto me, Unto 2300 days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." Verses 13, 14.

GABRIEL COMMANDED TO EXPLAIN THIS VISION.

"And it came to pass, when I, even I Daniel, had seen the vision, and sought for the meaning, then behold there stood before me as the appearance of a man. And I heard a man's voice between the banks of Ulai, which called, and said, Gabriel, make this man to understand the vision. So he came near where I stood; and when he came, I was afraid, and fell upon my face; but he said unto me, Understand O son of man; for at the time of the end shall be the vision. Now as he was speaking with me, I was in a deep sleep on my face toward the ground; but he touched me, and set me upright. And he said, Behold, I will make thee know what shall be in the last end of the indignation; for at the time appointed the end shall be." Verses 15-19.

SYMBOL OF THE RAM EXPLAINED.

"The ram which thou sawest, having two horns, are the kings of Media and Persia." Verse 20.

Then the meaning of the first symbol cannot be misunderstood. By it, the Medo-Persian empire was presented to the eye of the prophet. Its two horns denoting the union of those two powers in one government. This vision, therefore, does not begin with the empire of Babylon; as do the visions of the second and seventh chapters, but it commences with the empire of the Medes and Persians at the height of its power, prevailing westward, northward and southward, so that no power could stand before it. The explanation of the next symbol will show what power overthrew the Persian empire and succeeded to its place.

SYMBOL OF THE GOAT EXPLAINED.

"And the rough goat is the king of Grecia; and the great horn that is between his eyes, is the first king. Now that being broken, whereas four stood up for it, four kingdoms shall stand up out of the nation, but not in his power." Verses 21, 22.

The explanation of this symbol is also definite and certain. The power that should overthrow the Medes and Persians, and in their stead, bear rule over the earth, is the empire of the Greeks. Greece succeeded Persia in the dominion of the world B. C. 331.

THE GREAT HORN is here explained to be the first king of Greece; it was Alexander the great.

THE FOUR HORNS that arose when this horn was broken, denote the four kingdoms into which the empire of Alexander was divided after his death. The same was represented by the four heads and four wings of the leopard. Dan. vii, 6. It is predicted without the use of symbols in Dan. ii, 3, 4. These four kingdoms were Macedonia, Thrace, Syria and Egypt. They originated B. C. 312.

SYMBOL OF THE LITTLE HORN EXPLAINED.

"And in the latter time of their kingdom, when the transgressors are come to the full, a king of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences, shall stand up. And his power shall be mighty, but not by his own power; and he shall destroy wonderfully, and shall prosper, and practice, and shall destroy the mighty and the holy people. And through his policy, also, he shall cause craft to prosper in his hand; and he shall magnify himself in his heart, and by peace shall destroy many; he shall also stand up against the Prince of princes; but he shall be broken without hand."—Verses 23-25.

To avoid the application of this prophecy to the Roman power, Pagan and Papal, the Papists have shifted it from Rome to Antiochus Epiphanes, a Syrian king who could not resist the mandates of Rome. See notes of the Dowry [Romish] Bible on Dan. vii; viii; xi. This application is made by the Papists, to save their church from any share in the fulfillment of the prophecy; and in this, they have been followed by the mass of opposers to the Advent faith. The following facts show that

THE LITTLE HORN WAS NOT ANTIOCHUS.

1. The four kingdoms into which the dominion of Alexander was divided, are symbolized by the four horns of the goat. Now this Antiochus was but one of the twenty-five kings that constituted the Syrian horn. How, then, could he, at the same time, be another remarkable horn?

2. The rain, according to this vision, became great; the goat waxed very great; but the little horn became exceeding great. How absurd and ludicrous is the following application of this comparison:

Great.	Very Great.	Exceeding Great.
Persia.	GREECE.	ANTIOCHUS.

How easy and natural is the following:

Great.	Very Great.	Exceeding Great.
Persia.	GREECE.	ROME.

3. The Medo-Persian empire is simply called great. Verse 4. The Bible informs us that it extended "from India even unto Ethiopia, over an hundred seven and twenty provinces." Esther i, 1. This was succeeded by the Grecian power, which is called VERY GREAT. Verse 8. Then comes the power in question which is called EXCEEDING GREAT. Verse 9. Was Antiochus exceeding great when compared with Alexander, the conqueror of the world? Let an item from the Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge answer!

"Finding his resources exhausted, he resolved to go into Persia, to levy tributes and collect large sums which he had agreed to pay to the Romans."

Surely we need not question which was exceeding great, the Roman power which exacted the tribute, or Antiochus who was compelled to pay it.

4. The power in question was "little" at first, but it waxed or grew "exceeding great toward the south, and toward the east, and toward the pleasant land." What can this describe but the conquering marches of a mighty power? Rome was almost directly northwest from Jerusalem, and its conquests in Asia and Africa were, of course, towards the east and south; but where were Antiochus' conquests? He came into possession of a kingdom already established, and Sir Isaac Newton says, "He did not enlarge it."

5. Out of many reasons that might be added to the above we name but one. This power was to stand up against the Prince of princes. Verse 25. The Prince of princes is Jesus Christ. Rev. i, 5; xvii, 14; xix, 10. But Antiochus died 164 years before our Lord was born. It is settled, therefore, that another power is the subject of this prophecy. The following facts demonstrate that

ROME IS THE POWER IN QUESTION.

1. This power was to come forth from one of the four kingdoms of Alexander's empire. Let us remember that nations are not brought into prophecy, till somehow connected with the people of God. Rome had been in existence many years before it was noticed in prophecy; and Rome had made Macedonia, one of the four horns of the Grecian goat, a part of itself B. C. 168, about ten years before its first connection with the people of God. See 1 Mac. viii. So that Rome could be truly be said to be "out of one of them," as the ten horns of the fourth beast in the seventh chapter, could be said to come out of that beast, when they were ten kingdoms set up by the conquerors of Rome.

2. It was to wax exceeding great toward the south, and toward the east, and toward the pleasant land. [Palestine. Pa. cvi, 24; Zach. vii, 14.] This was true of Rome in every particular. Witness its conquests in Africa and Asia, and its overthrow of the place and nation of the Jews. John xi, 48.

3. It was to cast down of the host and of the stars. This is predicted respecting the dragon.—Rev. xii, 3, 4. All admit that the dragon was Rome. Who can fail to see their identity?

4. Rome was emphatically a king of fierce countenance, and one that did understand dark sentences. Moses used similar language, when as all agree, he predicted the Roman power. Deut. xxi, 40, 50.

5. Rome did destroy wonderfully. Witness its overthrow of all opposing powers.

6. Rome has destroyed more of "the mighty and the holy people," than all other persecuting powers combined. From fifty to one hundred millions of the church have been slain by it.

7. Rome did stand up against the Prince of princes. The Roman power united Jesus Christ to the cross. Acts iv, 26, 27; Matt. xxvii, 2; Rev. xii, 4.

8. This power is to "be broken without hand." How clear the reference to the stone "cut out without hand" that smote the image. Dan. ii, 34. Its destruction then does not take place until the final overthrow of earthly power. These facts are conclusive proof that Rome is the subject of this prophecy. For an extended notice, see Advent Library, No. 33.

THE FIELD OF VISION, then, is the empire of Persia, Greece and Rome.

That part of the vision that now engages our attention is the time—the reckoning of the 2300 days.

THE 2300 DAYS NOT EXPLAINED IN DAN. VIII.

Gabriel did explain to Daniel what was meant by the symbols of the beasts and of the horns, but did not in this vision explain to him the 2300 days and the sanctuary. Hence, Daniel tells us at the end of the chapter that he "was astonished at the vision, but none understood it." But there are several facts that will give us some light on this matter.

1. It is a fact that 2300 literal days [not quite seven years] would not cover the duration of a single power in this prophecy, much less extend over them all. Therefore, the days must be symbols, even as the beast and horns are shown to be symbols.

2. It is a fact, that a symbolic or prophetic day is one year. Eze. iv, 6, 10; Num. xiv, 34. Hence, the period is 2300 years.

3. It must begin with "the vision," consequently it commences in the height of the Medo-Persian power.

But the angel has not yet explained the "manner of time," or given its date to the prophet. If Gabriel never did explain this subject to Daniel, he is a fallen angel; for he was commanded in plain terms thus to do. Dan. viii, 16. But he is not a fallen angel as appears from the fact that some hundred years after this, he was sent by Jehovah to Zacharias and to Mary. Luke i. Gabriel did explain to Daniel at that time more than he could bear, [verse 27,] and at a later period, as we shall now show, he did make Daniel understand and understand the vision.

GABRIEL EXPLAINS IN DAN. IX WHAT HE OMITTED IN DAN. VIII.

As we have seen, the charge had been given to Gabriel to make Daniel understand the vision. Verse 16. But in the last verse of the chapter we learn that "none understood" the vision. This must refer particularly to the 2300 days, and to the sanctuary, as the other parts of the vision had been clearly explained.

But in the first verse of chapter ix he informs us that a thing was revealed to him; "and the thing was true, but the time appointed was long; and he understood the thing, and had understanding of the vision." Hence, it is evident that between chapters viii and ix, he must have obtained the desired understanding of the time. In other words the explanation must be found in chapter ix.

Dan. ix commences with the earnest, importunate prayer of the prophet, from the reading of which it is evident that he had so far misunderstood the vision of chapter viii, that he concluded that the 2300 days of treading under foot the sanctuary would terminate with the 70 years desolation of the city and sanctuary predicted by Jeremiah. Compare verses 1 and 2 with verses 16 and 17. The man Gabriel is now sent to undeceive him, and to complete the explanation of the vision. "While I was speaking in prayer," says Daniel, "even the man Gabriel, whom I had seen in the vision at the beginning, [here he cites us back to chapter viii, 16, 18,] being caused to fly swiftly, touched me about the time of the evening oblation. And he informed me, and talked with me, and said, O Daniel, I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding. At the beginning of thy supplications the commandment came forth, and I am come to show thee; for thou art greatly beloved; therefore understand the matter, and consider the vision."—Verses 21—23. Note these facts:

1. In verse 21, Daniel cites us to the vision of chapter viii.

2. In verse 22, Gabriel states that he had come to give Daniel skill and understanding. This being the object of Gabriel's mission, Daniel, who at the close of chapter viii did not understand the vision, may, ere Gabriel leaves him, fully understand its import.

3. As Daniel testifies at the close of chapter viii that none understood the vision, it is certain that the charge given to Gabriel, "Make this man to understand the vision," still rested upon him. Hence it is that he tells Daniel, "I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding," and in verse 23, commands him to "understand the matter and to consider the vision." This is undeniable proof that Gabriel's mission in chapter ix, was for the purpose of explaining what he omitted in chapter viii. If any ask further evidence, the fact that Gabriel proceeds to explain the very point in question, most fully meets the request. That he does so this we will now show.

GABRIEL'S EXPLANATION OF THE TIME.

"Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sin, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the Most Holy. Know therefore and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem, unto the Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks, and three score and two weeks: the street shall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times. And after three score and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off, but not for himself; and the people of the prince that shall come, shall destroy the city and the sanctuary; and the end thereof shall be with a flood, and unto the end of the war desolations are determined. And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week; and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease, and for the oversteeping of abominations, he shall make it desolate, even until the consummation, and that determined shall be poured upon the desolate." Dan. ix, 24-27.

"DETERMINED" IN VERSE 24, MEANS CUT OFF.

"Seventy weeks are determined," literally 'cut off.' The Hebrewists all admit that the word determined, in our English version, does signify 'cut off.' Not one has disputed it.—Joshua Litch, Midnight Cry, Vol. IV, No. 25.

"Thus Chaddic and Rabbinical authority, and that of the earliest versions, the Septuagint and Vulgate, give the single signification of 'cutting off' to this verb. Should it be inquired why a tropical sense has been attributed to it, such as 'determining' or 'decreeing,' it may be answered that the reference of the verse (in which it occurs) to Dan. vii, 14, was unobserved. It was therefore supposed that there was no propriety in saying 'seventy weeks are cut off,' when there was no other period of which they could have formed a portion. But as the period of 2300 days is first given, and verses 21 and 23, compared with Dan. viii, 14, show that the ninth chapter furnishes an explanation of the vision in which Gabriel appeared to Daniel, and of the 'matter' (the commencement of the 2300 days)—the literal (or rather, to speak properly, the only) signification demanded by the subject matter, is that of 'cut off.'—Prof. Whiting, Midnight Cry, Vol. IV, No. 17.

"Seventy weeks have been cut off upon thy people and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sin-offerings, and to make atonement for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the Most Holy." Dan. ix, 24. Whiting's Translation.

The facts which are set before us in the above, from Litch and Whiting, should not be forgotten.

1. The word rendered "determined," [verse 24,] literally signifies "cut off."

2. "The vision" which Gabriel came to explain, contained the period of 2300 days; and in the explanation he tells us that "seventy weeks have been cut off" upon Jerusalem and the Jews. This is a demonstration that the seventy weeks are a part of the 2300 days. Hence the commencement of the seventy weeks is the date of the 2300 days. And the fact that the seventy weeks were fulfilled in 490 years, as all admit, is a demonstration that the 2300 days from which this period of 490 days was cut off, is 2300 years.

THE ANGEL'S DATE OF THE SEVENTY WEEKS.

We have seen that the seventy weeks are cut off from the 2300 days. Hence, when the date of the seventy weeks is established, the key to unlock and understand the reckoning of the days is in our hand. The date for the commencement of the weeks is thus given by Gabriel:

"Know therefore and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem unto Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks, and three-score and two weeks; the street shall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times." Dan. ix, 25.

We present the following important testimony from the Advent Herald. It is a calm, dispassionate vindication of the original dates, which establishes them beyond dispute. It was written in the years 1850 and 1851; and, consequently, cannot be supposed to be given with a desire to prove that the days ended in 1844, as the Herald is not willing to admit that fact. Therefore it must be regarded as candid and honorable testimony to important facts. That it demolishes every view which has been put forth to re-adjust the 2300 days, no one, who can appreciate the force of the arguments presented, will fail to perceive. For further testimony, the reader is cited to a very valuable work by S. Bliss, entitled, "Analysis of Sacred Chronology." The Herald speaks as follows:

"The Bible gives the data for a complete system of chronology, extending from the creation to the birth of Cyrus, a clearly ascertained date. From this period downwards we have the undisputed Canon of Ptolemy and the undoubted era of Nabonassar, extending below our vulgar era. At the point where inspired chronology leaves us, this Canon of undoubted accuracy commences. And thus the whole arch is spanned. It is by the Canon of Ptolemy that the great prophetic period of seventy weeks is fixed. This Canon places the seventh year of Artaxerxes in the year B. C. 457; and the accuracy of the Canon is demonstrated by the concurrent agreement of more than twenty eclipses.—The seventy weeks date from the going forth of a decree respecting the restoration of Jerusalem.—There were no decrees between the seventh and twentieth years of Artaxerxes. Four hundred and ninety years, beginning with the seventh, must commence in B. C. 457, and end in A. D. 34.—Commencing in the twentieth, they must commence in before B. C. 444, and end in A. D. 47. As no event occurred in A. D. 47 to mark their termination, we cannot reckon from the twentieth; we must, therefore, look to the seventh of Artaxerxes. This date we cannot change from B. C. 457 without first demonstrating the inaccuracy of Ptolemy's Canon. To do this, it would be necessary to show that the large number of eclipses by which its accuracy has been repeatedly demonstrated, have not been correctly computed; and such a result would unsettle every chronological date, and leave the settlement of epochs and the adjustment of eras entirely at the mercy of every dreamer, so that chronology would be of no more value than mere guess-work. As the seventy weeks must terminate in A. D. 34, unless the seventh of Artaxerxes is wrongly fixed, and as that cannot be changed without some evidence to that effect, we inquire, What evidence marked that termination? The time when the apostles turned to the Gentiles harmonizes with that date better than any other which has been named. And the crucifixion, in A. D. 31, in the midst of the last week, is sustained by a mass of testimony which cannot be easily invalidated."—Advent Herald, March 2, 1850.

"The Saviour attended but four passovers, at the last of which he was crucified. This could not bring the crucifixion later than A. D. 31, as is recorded by Aurelius Cassiodorus, a respectable Roman Senator, about A. D. 514: 'In the consulate of Tiberius Caesar Aug. V. and Atilius Sejanus, [u. c. 784, A. D. 31,] our Lord Jesus Christ suffered on the eighth of the Calends of April.' In this year, and in this day, says Dr. Hales, agree also the Council of Cæsarea, A. D. 190, or 198, the Alexandrian Chronicle, Maximus Monarchus, Nicephorus Constantinus, Cedrenus; and in this year, but on different days, concur Eusebius and Epiphanius, followed by Kober, Bucher, Patinus, and Potavious."—Advent Herald. August 24, 1850.

"There are certain chronological points which have been settled as fixed; and before the seventy weeks can be made to terminate at a later period, those must be unsettled, by being shown to have been fixed on wrong principles; and a new date must be assigned for their commencement based on better principles. Now, that the commencement of the reign of Artaxerxes Longimanus was A. C. 404-3, is demonstrated by the agreement of above twenty eclipses, which have been repeatedly calculated, and have invariably been found to fall in the times specified. Before it can be shown that the commencement of his reign is wrongly fixed, it must first be shown that those eclipses have all been wrongly calculated. This no one has done, or ever will venture to do. Consequently the commencement of his reign cannot be removed from that point.

The seventy weeks must date from some decree for the restoration of Jerusalem. Only two events are named in the reign of Artaxerxes for the commencement of those weeks. The one is the decree of the seventh year of his reign, and the other, that of the twentieth. From one of these, those four hundred and ninety years must reckon. As his reign began A. C. 404-3, his seventh year must have been A. C. 458-7; and his twentieth, A. C. 445-4. If the seventy weeks date from the former, they cannot terminate later than A. D. 34; and if from the latter, they cannot have terminated earlier than A. D. 40-7.

In addition to the above, sixty-nine of the seventy were to extend to the Messiah the Prince. It does not read that they are to terminate when he is called the Prince, or that he is to begin to be the Prince when they terminate. They were to extend to the Messiah—the words, the Prince, being added to show who was signified by the Messiah. Sixty-nine weeks of years are four hundred and eighty-three years. Beginning those with the seventh of Artaxerxes, they extend to A. D. 20-7; dating from the twentieth, they terminate in A. D. 30-40. Was there anything in either of those years which would make the words, 'unto the Messiah the Prince,' appropriate? When Jesus was baptized of John in Jordan, a voice was heard from heaven, acknowledging the Saviour as the Son of God, in whom the Father was well pleased. Consequently he was 'the Messiah the Prince,' whose coming had been predicted. With that baptism, the Saviour commenced the work of his public ministry—the Messiah the Prince had then come, as it was predicted he should at the end of the sixty-nine weeks. When he was acknowledged as the Son of God—the Messiah—he went into Galilee preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying, 'The time is fulfilled.' The time then fulfilled, must have been some predicted period. There was no predicted period which could then terminate but the sixty-nine, or seventy weeks. Did either of those then terminate? We have seen that the former, reckoned from the seventh of Artaxerxes, as it is fixed by astronomical calculations, would end in A. D. 20-7; and A. D. 27 we find is the precise point of time when the Saviour must have been about thirty years of age, when he was baptized of John, and declared the time fulfilled. At the first passover the Saviour attended, which could not have been later than the Spring of his second year, the Jews told him that the temple had then been forty-six years in building; reckoning back forty-six years from A. D. 28, they began A. C. 10, which is the precise year when Herod began the work of rebuilding the temple. From the eclipses which marked the death of Herod, before which the Saviour had been born, his birth could not have been later than A. C. 4, which would make him about thirty at the very time of his baptism of John.—Such a concurrence of chronological, astronomical, and historical testimony, can only be set aside by testimony still more conclusive.

Your argument that he was not called a prince till after his crucifixion is of no weight; for the Jews could not have crucified 'the Prince of life,' as Peter accused them, if he was not the Prince of life till after his crucifixion. Nor is your argument respecting the midst of the week any more to the point. Your criticism has respect only to the English word midst. If you wish to show that it does not mean middle in the present case, you must first show that the Hebrew word chatsi, which is here translated midst, from the verb chatsab, has no such meaning; and that its verb has not 'a special signification of dividing into two parts, or to halve;' and that it has not 'a general sense of dividing into any number of equal parts,' as Hebrewists tell us it has. Till you show this, you make no progress whatever towards proving that it does not mean 'middle.'—But what was to occur in the midst of the week? The 'sacrifice and oblation' were then to cease.—These Jewish ordinances could only cease actually or virtually. They did not actually cease till A. D. 70. They ceased virtually only at the crucifixion: they then ceased to foreshadow the sacrifice then offered. Was that in the midst of the week? 3½ years from A. D. 27 bring us to the Spring of A. D. 31, where Dr. Hales has demonstrated the crucifixion took place. The week during which the covenant was confirmed, was that in the 'midst' of which the sacrifice and oblation virtually ceased. Consequently it could not extend beyond A. D. 34—the latest time to which seventy weeks from the seventh of Artaxerxes Longimanus could reach."—Advent Herald, Feb. 15, 1851.

"Eusebius dates the first half of the Passion Week of years as beginning with our Lord's baptism, and ending with his crucifixion. The same period precisely is recorded by Peter, as including our Lord's personal ministry: 'All the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us, beginning from the baptism of [or by] John, until the day that he was taken up from us, at his ascension, which was only forty-three days after the crucifixion. Acts i, 21, 22. And the remaining half of the Passion Week ended with the martyrdom of Stephen, in the seventh, or last year of the week. For it is remarkable, that the year after, A. D. 35, began a new era in the church, namely, the conversion of Saul, or Paul, the Apostle, by the personal appearance of Christ to him on the road to Damascus, when he received his mission to the Gentiles, after the Jewish Sanhedrim had formerly rejected Christ by persecuting his disciples. Acts ix, 1-18. And the remainder of the Acts principally records the circumstances of his mission to the Gentiles, and the churches he founded among them."—Dr. Hales, as quoted in the Advent Herald, March 2, 1850.

The foregoing testimony from the Herald establishes the following important points:

1. The decree referred to in Dan. ix, from which the 70 weeks are dated, is the decree of the seventh of Artaxerxes, and not that of his twentieth year. Ezra vii. And to this point we do not it duty to append an extract from Prof. Whiting:

"We are informed in Ezra vii, 11, 'Now this is the copy of the letter that king Artaxerxes gave unto Ezra the priest, the scribe, even a scribe of the words of the commandments of the Lord, and of his statutes to Israel.' The letter then follows, written not in Hebrew, but in Chaldaic (or the Eastern Aramaic) the language then used at Babylon. At the 27th verse, the narrative proceeds in Hebrew. We are thus furnished with the original document, by virtue of which Ezra was authorized to 'restore and build Jerusalem;' or, in other words, by which he was clothed with power, not merely to erect walls or houses, but regulate the affairs of his countrymen in general, to 'set magistrates and judges which may judge all the people beyond the river.' He was commissioned to enforce the observance of the laws of his God, and to punish those who transgressed, with death, banishment, confiscation or imprisonment. See verses 23-27. No grant of powers thus ample, can be found in the case of Nehemiah, or in any other instance after the captivity. That the commission given to Ezra authorized him to proceed in rebuilding the walls of Jerusalem, is evident from the fact that in the twentieth year of Artaxerxes, Nehemiah, who was then in the Persian court, received information that 'the remnant who were left of the captivity, then in the province, were in great affliction and reproach; the wall of Jerusalem was broken down, and the gates thereof burned with fire.' See Nehemiah i, 1-3. The fact is, that Ezra and his associates met with continual opposition from the Samaritans, so that during the whole of the seven weeks, or forty-nine years from the time that Ezra went up, to the last act of Nehemiah in obliging the Jews to put away their strange wives, the prediction of the prophet was verified—the street shall be built again, and the wall even in troublous times.' After Nehemiah reached Jerusalem, he examined the city by night. The result of his examination is thus stated, Nehemiah ii, 13, 'And I went out by night, by the gate of the valley, even before the dragon-wall, and to the dung-port, and viewed the walls of Jerusalem, which were broken down, and the gates thereof were consumed with fire.' It is evident that 'the walls and gates' which had been destroyed, were the works of Ezra. The impropriety of referring the language of Nehemiah to the destruction of the city by Nebuchadnezzar will be seen at once, if we recollect that he reduced it to ruins on the capture of Zedekiah, B. C. 588, one hundred and forty-four years previous to the time when Nehemiah went up to Jerusalem."—Advent Shield, No. 1. Article, Prophetic Chronology, pages 105-6.

That Ezra understood that power was conferred upon himself, and upon the people of Israel, to rebuild the street of Jerusalem and the wall, is certain from his own testimony recorded in chapter ix, 9.

2. The second point in the evidence which the Herald has adduced, is this: the seventh year of Artaxerxes from which the decree is dated, is fixed beyond dispute in B. C. 457.

3. The commencement of Christ's ministry in A. D. 27 is clearly established, being just 69 weeks, or 483 prophetic days from the decree in B. C. 457.

4. The crucifixion in the midst of the week is proved to have occurred in the Spring of A. D. 31, just three and a half years from the commencement of Christ's ministry.

5. And it further demonstrates that the remaining three and a half years of the seventieth week, ended in the Autumn of A. D. 34. Here the seventy weeks, which had been cut off upon the Jews, in which they were "to finish the transgression," close with the Jewish Sanhedrim's act of formally rejecting Christ by persecuting his disciples, and God gives the great Apostle to the Gentiles his commission to them. Acts ix.

These important dates are clearly and unequivocally established by historical, chronological and astronomical testimony. Sixty-nine of the 70 weeks from the decree in B. C. 457, ended in A. D. 27, when our Lord was baptized, and began to preach, saying, "The time is fulfilled." Mark i. Three and a half years from this, brings us to the midst of the week in A. D. 31, where it is demonstrated that our Lord was crucified. Three and a half years from A. D. 31, the period of 70 weeks terminates in the Autumn of A. D. 34. Or to be more definite, the first three and a half years of the seventieth week ended in the first Jewish month [April] in the Spring of A. D. 31. The remaining three and a half years would therefore end in the seventh month, Autumn of A. D. 34.

Here then we stand at the end of the great period which Gabriel, in explaining the 2300 days to Daniel, tells him was cut off upon Jerusalem and the Jews. Its commencement, intermediate dates, and final termination are unequivocally established. It remains then to notice this one grand fact: the first 490 years of the 2300 ended in the seventh month, Autumn of A. D. 34. This period of 490 years being cut off from the 2300, a period 1810 years remains. This period of 1810 years being added to the seventh month, Autumn of A. D. 34, brings us to the seventh month, Autumn of 1844. And here, after every effort which has been made to remove the dates, all are compelled to let them stand. For a moment let us recur to the events of 1843 and 1844.

Previous to the year 1843, the light on the going forth of the decree in n. c. 457 had been clearly and faithfully set forth. And as the period of 457 years before Christ, subtracted from the 2300, would leave but 1843 years after Christ, the end of the 2300 years was confidently expected in 1843.—But if the 2300 years began with the commencement of n. c. 457, they would not end till the last day of A. D. 1843, as it would require all of 457, and all of 1843, to make 2300 full years.

But at the close of 1843, it was clearly seen that as the crucifixion occurred in the midst of the week, in the Spring of A. D. 31, the remainder of the seventieth week, viz: three and a half years, would end in the Autumn of A. D. 34. And as the seventy weeks, or 490 years, end in the seventh month, Autumn of A. D. 34, it is a settled point that the days began, not in the Spring, with Ezra's starting from Babylon, but in the Autumn, with the commencement of the work at Jerusalem, Ezra vii. And this view, that the days begin with the actual commencement of the work, is much strengthened by the fact that the first seven weeks, or 49 years, are manifestly allotted to the work of restoration in "troublesome times." And that period could only begin with the actual commencement of the work.—Dan. ix, 25.

When it was seen that only 456 years and a fraction had expired before Christ, it was at once understood that 1843 years and a portion of 1844, sufficient to make up a full year when joined to that fraction, was required in order to make 2300 full years. In other words, the 2300 days in full time would expire in the seventh month 1844. And if we take into the account the fact that the midst of the seventieth week was the fourteenth day of the first month, and consequently the end of the seventy weeks must have been at a corresponding point in the seventh month A. D. 34, we are at once shown that the remainder of the 2300 days would end about that point in the seventh month 1844.

It was with this great fact before us, that the 2300 days of Daniel, which reached to the cleansing of the sanctuary, would terminate at that time, and also with the light of the types, that the high priest in "the example and shadow of heavenly things," on the tenth day of the seventh month, entered within the second veil to cleanse the sanctuary, that we confidently expected the Advent of our Redeemer in the seventh month 1844. The prophecy said, "Then shall the sanctuary be cleansed."—The type said that at that season in the year the high priest should pass from the holy place of the earthly tabernacle to the most holy, to cleanse the sanctuary. Lev. xvi.

With these facts before us we reasoned as follows: (1.) The sanctuary is the earth, or the land of Palestine. (2.) The cleansing of the sanctuary is the burning of the earth, or the purification of Palestine, at the coming of Christ. (3.) And hence, we concluded that our great High Priest would leave the tabernacle of God in heaven and descend in flaming fire, on the tenth day of the seventh month, in the Autumn of 1844.

It is needless to say that we were painfully disappointed. And, though the man does not live who can overthrow the chronological argument, which terminates the 2300 days at that time, or meet the mighty array of evidence by which it is fortified and sustained, yet multitudes, without stopping to inquire whether our conceptions of the sanctuary and of its cleansing were correct or not, have openly denied the agency of Jehovah in the Advent movement, and have pronounced it the work of man.

AN INEXPLICABLE POSITION.

The position of those Adventists who have attempted to re-adjust the 2300 days, in order to extend them to some future period in which Palestine should be purified, or the earth be burned, has been, to say the least, extremely embarrassing. In the Herald for Dec. 28, 1850, Josiah Litch remarks as follows:

"Chronologically, the period is at an end, according to the best light to be obtained on the subject; and where the discrepancy is, I am unable to decide. But of this we shall know more in due time.

'God is his own interpreter

And he will make it plain.'"

But not being able to longer maintain a position in denying the termination of the 2300 years in the past, while at the same time they were getting forth an unanswerable vindication of the original dates for the commencement of the period, the Herald has at last denied the connection between the 70 weeks and the 2300 days. We write this with deep regret. A correspondent asks the following questions, and the Editor of the Herald gives the answers which are enclosed in brackets:

"In your 'Chronology' the cross is placed A. D. 31. What are the principal objections which bear against its being placed in A. D. 39? [Ans. 1. The absence of any evidence placing it there. 2. The contradiction of the wonderful astronomical, chronological, and historical coincidences which show beyond the shadow of controversy, that the seventh of Artaxerxes was in n. c. 457-8, that the birth of Christ was n. c. 4-5, that the thirtieth year of Christ was 483 years from the seventh of Artaxerxes, that the crucifixion was in A. D. 31, and that that was the point of time in the last week, when the sacrifice and oblation should come.]

If the seventy weeks of Dan. ix do not commence in the twentieth of Artaxerxes, how can the 2300 days begin at the same time with them, and yet terminate in the future? [Ans. They cannot.]

Must we not henceforth consider that they have different starting points? [Ans.—Yes.]—Advent Herald, May 22, 1852.

That this is a serious departure from the "original Advent faith," let the following, which once formed a part of a standing notice in the Advent papers under the head of "points of difference between us and our opponent", answer:

"We claim that the ninth of Daniel is an appendix to the eighth, and that the seventy weeks and the 2300 days or years commence together. Our opponents deny this."—See Signs of the Times, 1843.

"The grand principle involved in the interpretation of the 2300 days of Dan. viii, 14, is, that the 70 weeks of Dan. ix, 24 are the first 490 days of the 2300, of the eighth chapter."—Advent Shield, page 49. Article, The rise and progress of Adventism.

If it is not a serious defection from the original Advent faith to deny "the grand principle involved in the interpretation of the 2300 days of Dan. viii," and in its place to take the position of "our opponents" then we greatly err. Hear the opinion of Apollos Hale in 1846:

"The second point to be settled, in explaining the text, [Dan. ix, 24.] is to show what vision it is which the seventy weeks are said to seal. And it should be understood that this involves one of the great questions which constitute the main pillars in our system of interpretation, so far as prophetic times are concerned. If the connection between the 70 weeks of Dan. ix, and the 2300 days of Dan. viii, does not exist, the whole system is shaken to its foundation; if it does exist, as we suppose, the system must stand."—Harmony of Prophetic Chronology, page 33.

Then the act of those who deny the connection of the seventy weeks and the 2300 days, is of a fearful character. It is a denial of "one of the main pillars in our system of interpretation so far as prophetic times are concerned. If the connection between the 70 weeks of Dan. ix, and the 2300 days of Dan. viii, does not exist, the whole system is shaken to its foundation." And now reader will you listen to their reasons for denying the connection between those two periods, which as we have seen is fortified by a mass of direct testimony. They are as follows:

"We have no new light respecting the connection between the 70 weeks and 2300 days. The only argument against their connection is, the passing of the time. Why that has passed is a mystery to us, which we wait to have revealed."—Advent Herald, Sept. 7, 1850.

"Before 1843 we became satisfied of the validity of the arguments sustaining their connection and simultaneous commencement. There has nothing transpired to weaken the force of those arguments, but the passing of the time we expected for their termination. We now have no other fact to advance against their connection; and therefore can only wait for the mystery of the passing of time to be explained. But of the commencement and termination of the 70 weeks, we are satisfied that they cannot be removed from the position which Protestants have always assigned them."—Advent Herald, Feb. 22, 1851.

In its appropriate place, we offered conclusive testimony to prove the connexion of the 70 weeks and 2300 days. And it is submitted to the reader's judgment whether the reasons offered to disprove that connection are entitled to any weight or not. It will be seen that they grow out of the assumed correctness of the view that the earth, or land of Canaan is the sanctuary, and that the cleansing of the sanctuary is the burning of the earth, or the purification of Palestine at the coming of Christ. Before the reader adopts the conclusion that the 70 weeks, which Gabriel says were "cut off," are no part of the great period contained in the vision which he was explaining to Daniel, we request him to follow us in the inquiry: What is the sanctuary, and how is it to be cleansed? This we shall presently follow out, and in doing it we may discover the cause of our disappointment.

THE REVIEW AND HERALD.

"Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth."

ROCHESTER, THURSDAY, DEC. 23, 1852.

The Sanctuary.

WITH the greatest pleasure we give in this number, a portion of Bro. Andrews' article on the Sanctuary. The remainder of it will be published as soon as possible. For want of the truth of this subject, thousands have made ship-wreck of their faith. It will be seen that this view of the subject, explains the disappointment of the Advent people, and harmonizes the position of those among them who are still waiting for the Lord, with their past experience in the Advent faith. And we confidently expect that the harmony of this position will yet be seen by many who have, through discouragement and want of light, given up the "blessed hope" of soon seeing Jesus, and they again rejoice in a coming Saviour.

And as this subject shall be presented, we ask our readers, not only to read it, but to study it carefully, and compare it with the word of the Lord. Is it not your privilege and your duty also, to seek to be able to give a scriptural reason of your hope and faith?—Most certainly it is.

BY J. M. ANDREWS.

Continued.

THERE ARE TWO "DESOLATIONS" IN DAN. VIII.—This fact is made so plain by Josiah Litch, that I present his words:

"The daily sacrifice is the present reading of the English text. But no such thing as sacrifice is found in the original. This is acknowledged on all hands. It is a gloss or construction put on it by the translators. The true reading is, 'the daily and the transgression of desolation,' duty and transgression being connected together by 'and;' the daily desolation and the transgression of desolation. They are two desolating powers, which were to desolate the sanctuary and the host."—Prophetic Expositions, Vol. I, page 127.

It is plain that the sanctuary and the host were to be trodden under foot by the daily and the transgression of desolation. The careful reading of verse 13 settles this point. And this fact establishes another, viz: that these two desolations are the two grand forms under which Satan has attempted to overthrow the worship and the cause of Jehovah. Mr. Miller's remarks on the meaning of these two terms, and the course pursued by himself in ascertaining that meaning, is presented under the following head:

THE TWO DESOLATIONS ARE PAGANISM AND POPEERY.

"I read on, and could find no other case in which it [the daily] was found, but in Daniel. I then [by the aid of a concordance] took those words which stood in connection with it, 'take away;' he shall take away the daily; 'from the time the daily shall be taken away,' &c. I read on, and thought I should find no light on the text; finally I came to 2 Thess. ii, 7, 8. 'For the mystery of iniquity doth already work; only he who now letteth will let, until he be taken out of the way, and then shall that wicked be revealed,' &c. And when I had come to that text, O, how clear and glorious the truth appeared! There it is! That is the daily! Well, now, what does Paul mean by 'he who now letteth,' or hindereth? By 'the man of sin,' and the 'wicked,' Popery is meant. Well, what is it which hinders Popery from being revealed? Why, it is Paganism; well, then, 'the daily' must mean Paganism."—Second Advent Manual, page 66.

It needs no argument to prove that the two grand forms of opposition, by which Satan has desolated the church, and trod under foot the sanctuary of the living God, are none other than Paganism and Popery. It is also a clear point that the change from one of these desolations to the other did occur under the Roman power. Paganism, from the days of the kings of Assyria down to the period when it became so far modified that it took the name of Popery, had been the daily [or, as Prof. Whiting renders it, "the continual"] desolation, by which Satan had stood up against the cause of Jehovah. And, indeed, in its priests, its altars and its sacrifices, it bore resemblance to the Levitical form of Jehovah's worship. When the Christian form of worship took the place of the Levitical, a change in Satan's form of opposition, and counterfeit worship, became necessary, if he would successfully oppose the worship of the great God.

And it is in the light of these facts that we are able to understand our Lord's reference to the abomination of desolation in Matt. xxiv, 15. It is evident that he there cites Dan. ix, 20, 27. Now, although we do not understand that Paganism in the year 70 had given place to Popery, we do understand that that same power which then appeared, modified somewhat in name and form, was the very power that should, as the abomination of desolation, wear out the saints of the Most High.

The language of Paul is to the point: "For the mystery of iniquity [Popery] doth already work; only he who now letteth will let, until he be taken out of the way. And then shall that Wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the Spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming." 2 Thess. ii, 7, 8. That Paul refers to Paganism and Popery, none question.—And here is direct proof that Popery, the abomination of desolation, had in Paul's day, already begun to work. Nor was it a very great change of character when Satan transformed his counterfeit worship from Paganism to Popery. The same temples, altars, incense, priests and worshippers were ready, with little change, to serve as the appendages of the Papal abomination. The statue of Jupiter readily changed to that of Peter, the prince of the apostles; and the Pantheon, which had been the temple of all the gods, without difficulty became the sanctuary of all the saints. Thus the same abomination that desolated Jerusalem, in a degree changed and modified, became the wonderful desolator of the saints and martyrs of Jesus. And in its so-called temple of God, it set at naught and trod under foot the true temple of Jehovah, and he who is its minister, Jesus Christ.

The change from Paganism to Popery is clearly shown in John's view of the transfer of power from the dragon of Rev. xii, to the beast of Rev. xiii.—And that they are essentially the same thing, is evident from the fact that both the dragon and the beast are represented with the seven heads; thus showing that, in a certain sense, either may be understood to cover the whole time. And in the same sense we understand that either abomination covers all the period.—Christ's reference to the abomination of desolation [Matt. xxiv, 15; Luke xxi, 20] is an absolute demonstration that Rome is the little horn of Dan. viii, 9-14.

Having shown that there are two desolations, by which the sanctuary and the host are trodden down, we now notice the fact that there are

TWO OPPOSING SANCTUARIES IN DAN. VIII.

To the careful reader this fact will at once appear. They are as follows: First, the sanctuary of the daily desolation. Verse 11; xi, 31. Second, the sanctuary which the daily and the transgression of desolation were to tread under foot. Verses 13, 14. The one is the sanctuary of Satan; the other is the sanctuary of Jehovah of hosts. The one is the dwelling place of "all the gods;" the other is the habitation of the only living and true God.

If it be said that a sanctuary is never connected with heathen and idolatrous worship, we cite the direct testimony of the Bible. Heathen Moab had a sanctuary. And that sanctuary was a place of prayer and worship for that heathen nation. Isa. xvi, 12. The chapel erected by the king of Israel at Bethel, as a rival to the temple of Jehovah at Jerusalem [1 Kings xii, 27, 31-33] was called his sanctuary. Amos vii, 13, margin. And the places in which idolatrous Israel [the ten tribes] worshipped, are called sanctuaries. Amos vii, 9. The same is true of idolatrous Tyre. Eze. xxviii, 18. Attention is called to the following from Apollon Hale:

"What can be meant by the 'sanctuary' of Paganism? Paganism, and error of every kind, have their sanctuaries, as well as truth. These are the temples or asylums consecrated to their service.—Some particular and renowned temple of Paganism may, then, be supposed to be here spoken of.—Which of its numerous distinguished temples may it be? One of the most magnificent specimens of classic architecture is called the Pantheon. The name signifies 'the temple or asylum of all the gods.' The 'place' of its location is Rome. The idols of the nations conquered by the Romans were sacredly deposited in some niche or apartment of this temple, and in many cases became objects of worship by the Romans themselves. Could we find a temple of Paganism that was more strikingly 'his sanctuary?' Was Rome, the city or place of the Pantheon, 'cast down' by the authority of the state? Read the following well-known and remarkable facts in history: 'The death of the last rival of Constantine had sealed the peace of the empire.—Rome was once more the undisputed queen of nations. But, in the hour of elevation and splendor, she had been raised to the edge of a precipice. Her next step was to be downwards and irrecoverable. The change of the government to Constantinople still perplexes the historian. Constantine abandoned Rome, the great citadel and throne of the Caesars, for an obscure corner of Thrace, and expended the remainder of his vigorous and ambitious life in the double toil of raising a colony into the capital of his empire, and degrading the capital into the feeble honors and humiliated strength of a colony.'—Second Advent Manual, page 68.

And not only did Satan possess himself of a rival to the sanctuary of Jehovah in the period of Pagan worship, but, throughout the Christian dispensation, has that arch fiend possessed a rival temple of God. 2 Thess. ii, 4. Thus much for the rival sanctuary of Satan. The sanctuary of Jehovah remains to be noticed at length. Connected with these two sanctuaries,

THERE ARE TWO HOSTS IN DAN. VIII, 9-13.

The one is the host that was given to the little horn against the daily, when it had filled its measure of transgression; and by the aid of this host, the little horn was able to cast down the truth.—Verse 12. This host is mentioned in Dan. xi, 31. By this host, the sanctuary of the daily desolation, and its services, were transferred to the transgression, or abomination of desolation. This host is the forces of Satan, and it is intimately associated with his sanctuary.

The other host is "the host of heaven." Verse 10. Michael is the Prince of this host. Dan. x, 21. Against the Prince of this host the little horn stands up. Verses 11, 25. [Prof. Whiting remarks that in the original, "Prince of the host" occurs in Joshua v, 14.] None dispute that the host of whom Michael [Christ] is Prince, is the church of the living God. Dan. xii, 1. This host, the true church, is fitly represented by a green olive tree. Jer. xi, 15-17. And when some of the branches [members of the Jewish church] were broken off through unbelief, others were grafted in from the Gentiles, and thus the host continues to exist. Rom. xi, 17-20. This host, or church, is the worshippers of Jehovah, and is intimately connected with his sanctuary. That sanctuary we are now prepared to consider.

WHAT IS THE SANCTUARY OF JEHOVAH?

Before answering this question, we present the definition of the word sanctuary: "A holy place."—Walker. "A sacred place."—Webster. "A holy or sanctified place, a dwelling-place of the Most High."—Cruden. A dwelling-place for God.—Ex. xxv, 8. Thus much for the meaning of the word. We now inquire respecting its application.

IS THE EARTH THE SANCTUARY? To this question we answer emphatically: It is not. And if we are requested to prove a negative, we offer the following reasons: 1. The word sanctuary is used 145 times in the Bible, and it is not in a single instance applied to the earth. Hence there is no authority for this view, except that of man. 2. Every one knows that the earth is neither a dwelling-place of God, nor yet a holy, or sacred place. Those, therefore, who affirm that it is the sanctuary of God, should know better than to make such a statement. 3. In almost every instance in which the word sanctuary occurs in the Bible, [and the exceptions nearly all refer to Satan's rival sanctuary,] it refers directly to another definite object which God calls his sanctuary. Hence, those who teach that the earth is the sanctuary of the Lord of hosts, contradict the positive testimony of Jehovah, an hundred times repeated.

For the benefit of those who think that the earth will become the sanctuary after it has been cleansed by fire, we add that God does not even then call it his sanctuary; but simply "the place" of its location. Isa. lx, 13; Eze. xxxvii, 20-28; Rev. xxi, 1-3. The earth, then, is not the sanctuary, but merely the place where it will be located hereafter.

IS THE CHURCH THE SANCTUARY? We answer: It is not. The following reasons in support of this answer are to the point: 1. The Bible never calls the church the sanctuary. 2. In a great number of texts, God has called another object his sanctuary, and has uniformly associated the church with that object, as the worshippers; and that sanctuary itself, as the place of that worship, or toward which their prayer was directed. Ps. xx, 2; xxviii, 2, margin; xxix, 2, margin; lxiii, 2; lxviii, 24; lxviii, 17; cxxxiv, 2; cl, 1; v, 7. 3. The following inference is all that we have ever seen urged in favor of this view. God has many times called the tabernacle or temple, which are the patterns of the true, his "sanctuary." And because that the church is spiritually called the temple of God, some have supposed that they were at liberty to call the church the sanctuary.

4. But there is one text that some may urge.—It is this: "When Israel went out of Egypt, the house of Jacob from a people of strange language; Judah was his sanctuary, and Israel his dominion." Ps. cxiv, 1, 2. But, at most, this would only prove that one of the twelve tribes was the sanctuary, and that the whole church was not. But if the fact be remembered that God chose Jerusalem, [2 Chron. vi, 6,] which was in Judah, [Josh. xv, 8; Judges i, 8; Zech. i, 12; Ezra i, 3,] as the place of his sanctuary, [1 Chron. xxviii, 9, 10; 2 Chron. iii, 1,] we think the following from another Psalm will fully explain the connection between Judah and the sanctuary of Jehovah, and show that Judah was the tribe with which God designed to locate his habitation: "But chose the tribe of Judah, the mount Zion which he loved. And he built his sanctuary like high palaces, [see 1 Chron. xxix, 1,] like the earth which he hath established for ever." Ps. lxxviii, 68, 69.

5. But if a single text could be adduced to prove that the church is called a sanctuary, the following plain fact would prove beyond controversy that it is not the sanctuary of Dan. viii, 13, 14. The church is represented in Dan. viii, 13, by the word "host." This, none will deny. "To give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot." Then the church and the sanctuary are two things. The church is the host or worshippers; the sanctuary is the place of that worship, or the place toward which it is directed.

IS THE LAND OF CANAAN THE SANCTUARY? Of the 145 times in which the word sanctuary occurs in the Bible, only two or three texts have been urged, with any degree of confidence, as referring to the land of Canaan. Yet strangely enough, men have claimed that the supposed meaning of these two or three texts ought to determine the signification of the word in Dan. viii, 13, 14, against the plain testimony of more than a hundred texts! For none can deny that in almost every instance in which the word does occur, it refers directly to the typical tabernacle, or else to the true, of which that was but the figure or pattern. But we now inquire whether the two or three texts in question do actually apply the word sanctuary to the land of Canaan. They read as follows:

"Thou shalt bring them in, and plant them in the mountain of thine inheritance, in the place, O Lord, which thou hast made for thee to dwell in, in the sanctuary, O Lord, which thy hands have established." Ex. xv, 17.

"And he led them on safely, so that they feared not; but the sea overwhelmed their enemies. And he brought them to the border of his sanctuary, even to this mountain, which his right hand had purchased. And he built his sanctuary like high palaces, like the earth which he hath established for ever." Ps. lxxviii, 63, 64, 69.

The first of these texts, it will be noticed, is taken from the song of Moses after the passage of the Red Sea. It is a prediction of what God would do for Israel. The second text was written about 500 years after the song of Moses. What Moses uttered as a prediction, the Psalmist records as a matter of history. Hence the Psalm is an inspired commentary on the song of Moses.

If the first text be read without the other, the idea might be gathered that the mountain was the sanctuary, though it does not directly state this.—Even as one might get the idea that the tribe of Judah was mount Zion, were they to read only the expression "but chose the tribe of Judah, the mount Zion which he loved," [Ps. lxxviii, 68,] and omit those texts which inform us that mount Zion was the city of David, a part of Jerusalem [2 Sam. v, 6, 7] and was located in Judah, as one of its cities.—Ezra i, 3; Ps. lxxix, 35.

But if the second text be read in connection with the first, it destroys the possibility of such an inference. The Psalmist states that the mountain of the inheritance was the border of the sanctuary.—And that God, after driving out the heathen before his people, proceeded to build his sanctuary like high palaces. See 1 Chron. xxix, 1.

1. The land of Canaan was the mountain of the inheritance. Ex. xv, 17.

2. That mountain was the border of the sanctuary. Ps. lxxviii, 64.

3. In that border God built his sanctuary. Ps. lxxviii, 69.

4. In that sanctuary God dwelt. Ps. lxxiv, 7; Ex. xxv, 8.

5. In that border the people dwelt. Ps. lxxviii, 64, 65.

These facts demonstrate that the same Spirit moved both these "holy men of old." These texts perfectly harmonize, not only with each other, but with the entire testimony of the Bible, respecting the sanctuary. If the reader still persists in confounding the sanctuary with its border, the land of Canaan, we request him to listen while a king of Judah points out the distinction:

"Art not thou our God, who didst drive out the inhabitants of this land before thy people Israel, and gavest it to the seed of Abraham thy friend for ever? And they dwell therein, and have built thee a sanctuary therein for thy name, saying, If, when evil cometh upon us, as the sword, judgment, or pestilence, or famine, we stand before this house, and in thy presence, (for thy name is in this house,) and cry unto thee in our affliction, then thou wilt hear and help." 2 Chron. xx, 7-9.

This language is a perfect parallel to that of Ps. lxxviii, 54, 55, 60. In the clearest manner it points out the distinction between the land of Canaan, and the sanctuary which was built therein; and it does clearly teach that that sanctuary was the house erected as the habitation of God.

But there is another text by which some attempt to prove that Canaan is the sanctuary.

"The people of thy holiness have possessed it but a little while: our adversaries have trodden down thy sanctuary." Isa. lxiii, 18. No one offers this as direct testimony. As it is only an inference, a few words are all that is needed. 1. When the people of God's holiness were driven out of the land of Canaan, (as here predicted by the prophet, who uses the past tense for the future,) not only were they dispossessed of their inheritance, but the sanctuary of Jehovah built in that land, was hid in ruins. This is plainly stated in 2 Chron. xxxvi, 17-20. 2. The next chapter testifies that the prophet had a view of the destruction of God's sanctuary, as stated in the text quoted from 2 Chronicles. This explains the whole matter. Isa. lxiv, 10, 11; Ps. lxiv, 3, 7; lxxix, 1.

A fourth text may occur to some minds as conclusive proof that Canaan is the sanctuary. We present it, as it is the only remaining one that has ever been urged in support of this view.

"The glory of Lebanon shall come unto thee, the fir-tree, the pine-tree, and the box together, to beautify the place of my sanctuary; and I will make the place of my feet glorious." Isa. lx, 13. This text needs little comment. The place of God's sanctuary, we fully admit, is the land of Canaan, or the new earth, for Isaiah refers to the glorified state. And as God has promised to set his sanctuary in that place, [Eze. xxxviii, 25-28,] the meaning of the text is perfectly plain. But if any still assert that the place of the sanctuary is the sanctuary itself, let them notice that the same text calls the same "place" the place of the Lord's feet; and hence the same principle would make the land of Canaan the feet of the Lord! The view that Canaan is the sanctuary is too absurd to need further notice. And even were it a sanctuary, it would not even then be the sanctuary of Daniel; for the prophet had his eye upon the habitation of Jehovah. Daniel. Canaan was only the place of God's sanctuary or habitation.

We have found that the earth is not the sanctuary, but simply the territory where it will finally be located. That the church is not the sanctuary, but simply the worshippers connected with the sanctuary. And that the land of Canaan is not the sanctuary, but that it is the place where the typical sanctuary was located. Now we inquire for the sanctuary itself.

SINGLE VIEW OF THE SANCTUARY.

The sanctuary of the Bible is the habitation of Jehovah. It includes, first, the tabernacle pitched by man, which was the pattern of the true; and second, the true tabernacle which the Lord pitched and not man. The tabernacle erected by man, as the pattern of the true, embraced, first, the tabernacle of Moses, second, the temple of Solomon, and, third, the temple of Zerubbabel. The true tabernacle of God is the great original of which Moses, Solomon and Zerubbabel erected "figures," "patterns" or "images."

We trace the pattern of the true from the time it was erected by Moses, until it was merged in the larger and more glorious pattern which Solomon caused to be established. We trace this building down to the period when it was overthrown by Nebuchadnezzar, and suffered to remain in ruins through the Babylonish captivity. And from the time that Zerubbabel rebuilt the sanctuary, we trace the history of the pattern until we reach the true tabernacle, the great sanctuary of Jehovah.—We trace the history of the tabernacle from the time that our Lord entered it to minister in "the holy places" for us, forward to the time when it shall be located on the New Earth, when the tabernacle and sanctuary of God shall be with his people for ever.

We are compassed about with a great cloud of witnesses. To the law and to the testimony. We gather our first instruction respecting the sanctuary, from the book of Exodus. In chapter xxiv, we learn that Moses went up into the cloud that enveloped the God of Israel, upon the Mount Sinai, and that he was there forty days. It was during the period that the building of the sanctuary was explained to Moses, and the pattern of it shown to him in that mount. Heb. viii, 5. The next chapter commences with

THE COMMANDMENT TO ERECT THE SANCTUARY.

"And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel, that they bring me an offering: of every man that giveth it willingly with his heart ye shall take my offering. And this is the offering which ye shall take of them, gold, and silver, and brass, and blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine linen, and goat's hair, and rams' skins dyed red, and badger's skins, and shittim-wood, oil for the light, spices for anointing oil, and for sweet incense, onyx stones, and stones to be set in the ephod, and in the breast-plate. And let them make me a sanctuary; that I may dwell among them. According to all that I shewed thee, after the pattern of the tabernacle, and the pattern of all the instruments thereof, even so shall ye make it." Ex. xxv, 1-9.

We have here learned several important facts.—1. The sanctuary was the habitation of God. It was erected for this express purpose, that God might dwell among his people. And Moses had his eye upon this habitation, or sanctuary, in that very chapter in which he is supposed by some to teach that the land of Canaan is the sanctuary. "He is my God," says Moses, "and I will prepare him an habitation." Ex. xv, 2. It is plain that even then, Moses understood the difference between the habitation of Jehovah, and the place of its location.—

2. The Sanctuary, which God commanded Moses to erect, was the tabernacle. The tabernacle of witness was the sanctuary of God. 3. Moses was solemnly enjoined to make the sanctuary, and all its vessels, according to the pattern showed to him in that place. Hence, we are now to have a model of the habitation of God set before us.

THE PLAN OF THE SANCTUARY.

Its walls on the north, the west, and the south sides, were formed of upright boards, set in sockets of silver. These boards were ten cubits in length, by one cubit and a half in breadth. And as there were twenty of them on each of the two sides, we learn that it was thirty cubits in length and ten in height. In the same manner we ascertain that it was about ten cubits in width. Ex. xxvi, 15-25; xxxvi, 20-30. The sockets in which the boards were set, are termed, "the sockets of the sanctuary." Chap. xxxviii, 27. Five bars running the length of the sides, and passing through rings in the boards, joined them all together. And the whole was overlaid with gold. The sanctuary was covered with four different coverings. The east end was closed by a veil, or hanging, called the door of the tent, or tabernacle. A second veil divided the tabernacle into two parts called the holy place, and the holiest of all. Chap. xxvi, 1-14, 26-29, 31-37; xxxvi, 8-10, 31-38; Lev. xvi, 2; Heb. ix, 3.

THE VESSELS OF THE SANCTUARY.

These were all made after the pattern which the Lord showed to Moses. Ex. xxv, 9, 40. They were as follows:

1. THE ARK. This was a small chest about four feet six inches in length, and about two feet six inches in width and height, overlaid with pure gold, within and without. This was made for the express purpose of containing God's testament, the ten commandments. Chap. xxv, 10-16, 21; xxxi, 8; xxxii, 16, 18; xxxvii, 1-6; Deut. x, 1-6; 1 Kings viii, 9; 2 Chron. v, 10; Heb. ix, 4.

2. THE MERCY-SEAT. This was the top of the ark. On either end of it stood a cherub. The cherubim and the mercy-seat being one solid work of beaten gold. Ex. xxv, 17-22; xxxvii, 6-9; xxvi, 34; Heb. ix, 4, 5.

3. THE ALTAR OF INCENSE. This was overlaid with gold, and was about three and a half feet in height, and nearly two feet square. It was for the purpose of burning incense before God. Ex. xxx, 1-10; xxxvii, 25-28; Luke i, 9-11.

4. THE GOLDEN CENSER. This was used to burn incense before the Lord, particularly in the holiest. Lev. x, 1; xvi, 12; Heb. ix, 4.

5. THE CANDLESTICK, with its seven lamps, was one solid work of beaten gold, about the weight of a talent. It was made after the express pattern showed to Moses. Ex. xxv, 31-40; xxxvii, 17-24; Num. viii, 4.

6. THE TABLE OF SHOW-BREAD. This was about three and a half feet in length, two and a half in height, and two in width. It was overlaid with pure gold, and on it show-bread was always kept before the Lord. Ex. xxv, 23-30; xxxvii, 10-16; Heb. ix, 2.

7. THE ALTAR OF BURNT-OFFERING. This was about nine feet square, and nearly five and a half feet in height. It was overlaid with brass, and was, as its name implies, used for the purpose of offering up sacrifices to God. Ex. xxvii, 1-8; xxxviii, 1-7.

8. THE LAVEN. This was made of brass, and contained water for the use of the priests. Chap. xxx, 18-21; xxxviii, 8. The court of the tabernacle was one hundred cubits in length, by fifty in breadth, and five cubits, or about nine feet, in height. Chap. xxvii, 9-10; xxxviii, 9-20.

God called by name those who were to execute this work, and filled them with the spirit of wisdom. Chap. xxxi, 1-11; xxxv, 30-35. They knew "how to work all manner of work for the service of the sanctuary." Chap. xxxvi, 1. They received the offering of the children of Israel for "the service of the sanctuary." Verse 3. They came from "the work of the sanctuary," [verse 4,] and testified that more was offered than could be used. And Moses commanded that none should "make any more work for the offering of the sanctuary." Verse 6. The construction of every part of the sanctuary is minutely described in Chaps. xxxvi-xxxix.—Every thing was then submitted to Moses for inspection, and he pronounced the work such as God commanded, viz: a true pattern. Chap. xxxix, 32-43. God then commanded Moses to set up the sanctuary, and to place every thing in order. Chap. xl, 1-10.

MOSES ERECTS THE SANCTUARY.

And Moses reared up the tabernacle, and set up its boards in the sockets of silver, and united them together by the bars, and spread over the whole the covering of the tabernacle. He then placed the testimony in the ark, and set the mercy-seat upon it, and carried the ark into the tabernacle.—Chap. xl, 17-21. He then hung up the veil in front of the ark, and thus divided between the holy places. Verse 21; xxvi, 33; Heb. ix, 3. He placed the table without the veil, on the north side of the holy place, and set the bread in order upon it. Verses 22, 23. He then placed the candlestick on the south side of the holy place, and lighted its lamps before the Lord. Verses 24, 25. He placed the golden altar before the veil, in the holy place, and burned sweet incense upon it. Verse 26, 27. He set up the hanging for the door of the sanctuary, and he placed the altar of burnt offering at the door, and set the laver between the tabernacle and this altar, and around the whole, he set up the court of the tabernacle. Verses 28-33.

The sanctuary erected for the habitation of Jehovah [Ex. xv, 2; xxv, 8] is now ready to receive the King Eternal.

GOD TAKES POSSESSION OF THE SANCTUARY.

"Then a cloud covered the tent of the congregation, and the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle. And Moses was not able to enter into the tent of the congregation, because the cloud abode thereon, and the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle." Verses 34, 35. We now have found the habitation or sanctuary of the Lord. In the book of Exodus, Moses calls this building the sanctuary, at least eleven times. But do you ask for the words of the New Testament on the point? Then listen.

PAUL'S VIEW OF THE SANCTUARY OF THE FIRST COVENANT.

"Then verily the first covenant had also ordinances of divine service, and a worldly sanctuary. For there was a tabernacle made; the first, wherein was the candlestick, and the table, and the shewbread; which is called the sanctuary. And after the second veil, the tabernacle which is called the Holiest of all; which had the golden censer, and the ark of the covenant overlaid round about with gold, wherein was the golden pot that had manna, and Aaron's rod that budded, and the tables of the covenant; and over it the cherubim of glory shadowing the mercy-seat." Heb. ix, 1-5; xiii, 11. It is settled, therefore, that we have the right view of this subject thus far, and that the tabernacle of God, and not the land of Canaan, was the sanctuary.

THE WORLDLY SANCTUARY WAS THE PATTERN OF THE TRUE.

"After the pattern of the tabernacle, and the pattern of all the instruments thereof even so shall ye make it." "And look that thou make them after their pattern, which was shewed thee in the mount." Ex. xxv, 9, 40. "And thou shalt rear up the tabernacle according to the fashion thereof which was shewed thee in the mount." Chap. xxvi, 30. "As it was shewed thee in the mount so shall they make it." Chap. xxvii, 8. "According unto the pattern which the Lord had shewed Moses, so he made the candlestick." Num. viii, 4. "Our fathers had the tabernacle of witness in the wilderness, as he had appointed, speaking unto Moses, that he should make it according to the fashion that he had seen." Acts vii, 44. "Who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things, as Moses was admonished of God when he was about to make the tabernacle; for, see, saith he, that thou make all things according to the pattern shewed to thee in the mount." Heb. viii, 5. "It was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these. For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true." Heb. ix, 23, 24.

From these texts we learn two important facts. 1. We are many times certified that the tabernacle of witness was made according to the pattern which God showed to Moses. 2. That that pattern was a representation of the heavenly sanctuary itself.—Heb. viii, 2.

We trace the history of the sanctuary in the book of Leviticus. Every instance in which the word occurs, it is admitted, refers to the tabernacle of the Lord. The blood of sin-offering was sprinkled "before the veil of the sanctuary." Lev. iv, 0. For offering strange fire before the Lord in his tabernacle, two of the sons of Aaron were slain. They were then carried "from before the sanctuary."—Lev. x, 4. The unclean were not to "come into the sanctuary," or tabernacle. Lev. xii, 4, 0. "The holy sanctuary" was to be cleansed. Lev. xvi, 16, 33. "Ye shall keep my Sabbaths, and reverence my sanctuary: I am the Lord." Lev. xix, 30; xxvi, 2. Those who worshiped Molech, defiled the Lord's sanctuary. Lev. xx, 3. "Sanctuaries," used for the two holy places. Lev. xxi, 23; xxvi, 31.—See also Jer. ii, 51. God commanded that the high priest should not "go out of the sanctuary, nor profane the sanctuary of his God," to mourn for the dead. Lev. xxi, 12.

God placed his tabernacle in the charge of the tribe of Levi, who pitched around it. Num. 1, 50-53. Under the standard of Judah on the east, of Benjamin on the south, of Ephraim on the west, and of Dan on the north, the tribes of Israel were to pitch around the tabernacle in four great bodies, during their sojourn in the wilderness. Num. ii. God then divided the tribe of Levi according to his three sons, Gershon, Kohath and Merari. These three divisions were to pitch severally on the west, south and north sides of the tabernacle. Num. iii. The Kohathites were to keep "the charge of the sanctuary," and also of "the vessels of the sanctuary." Verses 28, 31. And Eleazar the priest was to have the oversight of those who thus kept "the charge of the sanctuary." Verse 32. But on the east side of the tabernacle, Moses, Aaron and his sons were to encamp and keep "the charge of the sanctuary." Verse 38.

When the camp was to set forward, the priest were to take down the tabernacle, [Num. iv,] and cover the sacred vessels, and "all the instruments of ministry wherewith they minister in the sanctuary;" [verse 12;] "and when they have made an end of covering the sanctuary, and all the vessels of the sanctuary," the sons of Kohath came near to bear it. Verse 15. And God commanded that Eleazar should have "the oversight of all the tabernacle, and of all that therein is, in the sanctuary."—Verse 16. "The service of the sanctuary," belonging unto the Kohathites, was to bear it upon their shoulders. Num. vii, 9. The Levites were given to Aaron to do the service of the tabernacle, that there be no plague "when the children of Israel come nigh unto the sanctuary." Num. viii, 10. "The Kohathites set forward bearing the sanctuary." Num. x, 21.

The priests were to "bear the iniquity of the sanctuary." Num. xviii, 1. The Levites were not to "come nigh the vessels of the sanctuary." Verse 3. And the priests should "keep the charge of the sanctuary." Verse 5. The man that neglected purification "defiled the sanctuary of the Lord."—

Num. xix, 20. "The shewel of the sanctuary," or tabernacle, was the standard in Israel. The word sanctuary, meaning the habitation of God, occurs in this connection twenty-five times. Ex. xxx, 13, 24; xxxviii, 24, 25, 26; Lev. v, 15; xxvii, 3, 25; Num. iii, 47, 50; vii, 13, 19, 25, 31, 37, 43, 49, 55, 61, 67, 73, 79, 85, 86; xviii, 16.

The word sanctuary does not occur in the book of Deuteronomy. One chapter refers to it as "the tabernacle of the congregation," xxxi, 14, 15. We have traced the history of the sanctuary, from the time that it was erected, through the period of Israel's sojourn in the wilderness. From Acts vii, 45, we learn that the tribes of Israel carried it with them into the promised land. In the book of Joshua it is called the house of God, or tabernacle, and we learn that it was set up at Shiloh. Josh. ix, 23; xviii, 1; xix, 51; Jer. vii, 12. It is called the Lord's tabernacle. Josh. xvii, 10. It is called "the sanctuary of the Lord." Josh. xxiv, 26. In the book of Judges it is simply called "the house of God," located at Shiloh. Judges xviii, 31; xx, 18, 20, 31; xxi, 2. In 1 Samuel it is termed the house of the Lord. Chap. i, 7, 24; iii, 15. In chapters i, 9; iii, 8, it is called the temple of the Lord. In chapter ii, 32, it is called by God, "my habitation," or tabernacle, margin. It still abode in Shiloh. Chap. iv, 4.

GOD FOMAKES THE SANCTUARY.

For the gross wickedness of the priests and people, [1 Sam. ii,] God fomook his habitation, and gave his glory [the ark of his testament] into the hands of the enemy, the Philistines. 1's. lxxviii, 60-62; Jer. vii, 12-14; 1 Sam. iv. It does not appear that after the ark of God was taken from the tabernacle at Shiloh, and God there fomook his habitation, that his glory, or the ark of his covenant, ever returned to that building. The other sacred vessels remained with the tabernacle, which in the days of Saml seems to have been located at Nub; [1 Sam. xxi; Matt. xii, 3, 4; Mark ii, 26;] and in the days of David, at Gibeon. 1 Chron. xvi, 30; xxi, 20, 30; 1 Kings iii, 4; 2 Chron. i, 3. And here we leave it for the present to follow the ark.

The ark was taken by the Philistines, and kept in their land seven months. In which time they were smitten with sore plagues, and Dagon, their god, twice fell before it. They then returned it to Israel to Beth-shemesh. At this place 50,000 of Israel were smitten for looking into the ark. 1 Sam. iv, v, vi. From thence it was removed to Kirjath-jearim to the house of Abinadab, where it abode twenty years. 1 Sam. vii, 1, 2. In this period it is said that all Israel "lamented after the Lord."—From this place it was removed to the house of Obed-edom where it abode three months. 2 Sam. vi, 1-11; 1 Chron. xiii. From this place David removed it to his own city, Jerusalem, and placed it in a tabernacle which he had pitched. 2 Sam. vi, 12-17; 1 Chron. xv; xvi, 1. It was at this time, when the Lord had given David rest from all his enemies, and he dwelt securely in his own house, that the habitation of his God came before his mind.

DAVID DESIRES TO BUILD A GLORIOUS SANCTUARY.

The situation of God's house came into the mind of David, and he "desired to find a tabernacle for the God of Jacob." Acts vii, 40; Ps. cxxxii, 1-8. He set this matter before Nathan the prophet, who told him, "Do all that is in thy heart, for God is with thee." But that night God charged Nathan to say to David, "Thus saith the Lord, thou shalt not build me a house to dwell in." 1 Chron. xvii, 1-4; 2 Sam. vii 1-6. This was because David had been a man of war, and had shed blood abundantly. But God promised that Solomon, his son, should build the house. 1 Chron. xxii, 7-10. Then David proceeded to make great preparation for the building. Chap. xxii; xxix. The place where the angel of the Lord appeared to David, at the time when the plague was stayed, viz: the threshing-floor of Ornan the Jethite, [Chap. xxi, 14-18,] upon Mount Moriah, [2 Chron. iii, 1; Gen. xxii, 2, 14,] which was near to Mount Zion, was the place of God's habitation. Ps. lxxviii, 68, 69; cxxxii, 13, 14. And here, "like high palaces," God's sanctuary was built. 1 Chron. xxix, 1.

SOLOMON AND THE PRINCES CHARGED TO BUILD THE SANCTUARY.

"Now set your heart and your soul to seek the Lord your God; arise therefore, and build ye the sanctuary of the Lord God, to bring the ark of the covenant of the Lord, and the holy vessels of God, into the house that is to be built to the name of the Lord." Chap. xxii, 10. Take heed now; for the Lord hath chosen thee to build an house for the sanctuary; be strong, and do it." Chap. xxviii, 10.

Then David gave to Solomon explicit direction respecting the building of the sanctuary. Vers 11-21. A full account of the erection of this glorious sanctuary may be read in 1 Kings vi; vii; 2 Chron. iii; iv. It occupied seven years and six months in building, and when finished was of wonderful magnificence. It principally differed from the tabernacle, in being an enlargement of that plan, and in being a permanent, instead of temporary building. The vessels of the sanctuary were also increased in size and number.

THE TABERNACLE GIVEN PLACE TO THE TEMPLE.

Every thing being finished in the temple of the Lord, and all Israel assembled at its dedication, we read as follows: "And they brought up the ark of the Lord, and the tabernacle of the congregation, and all the holy vessels that were in the tabernacle, even those did the priests and the Levites bring up." "And the priests brought in the ark of the covenant of the Lord unto his place, into the oracle of the house, to the most holy place, even under the wings of the cherubims." 1 Kings viii, 4, 6.

The tabernacle which had been at Gibeon for a long while, was as we have here read, brought up to the temple of the Lord, and the sacred vessels, and the priesthood, were transferred to that more glorious sanctuary. The ark which had for some time been kept at Jerusalem, was carried into the most holy place in the temple. And now the habitation for the God of Jacob, is complete.

GOD TAKES POSSESSION OF THE SANCTUARY.

"And it came to pass, when the priests were come out of the holy place, that the cloud filled the house of the Lord, so that the priests could not stand to minister because of the cloud; for the glory of the Lord had filled the house of the Lord.—Then spake Solomon, The Lord said that he would dwell in thick darkness. I have surely built thee an house to dwell in, a settled place for thee to abide in for ever." 1 Kings viii, 10-12. The Shekinah, or visible glory of God, which had dwelt in the tabernacle, has now passed into the temple, and that temple is thenceforward the sanctuary of the Lord God.

THE TEMPLE WAS A PATTERN OF THE TRUE SANCTUARY.

"Then David gave to Solomon his son the pattern of the porch, and of the houses thereof, and of the treasures thereof, and of the upper chambers thereof, and of the inner parlors thereof, and of the place of the mercy-seat, and the pattern of all that he had by the Spirit, of the courts of the house of the Lord, and all the chambers round about, of the treasures of the house of God, and of the treasures of the dedicated things; also for the courses of the priests and the Levites, and for all the work of the service of the house of the Lord, and for all the vessels of service in the house of the Lord." "All this, said David, the Lord made me understand in writing by his hand upon me, even all the works of this pattern." 1 Chron. xxviii, 11-13, 19. "Thou hast commanded me [Solomon] to build a temple upon thy holy mount, and an altar in the city wherein thou dwellest, a resemblance of the holy tabernacle, which thou hast prepared from the beginning." Wisdom of Solomon ix, 8. "The pattern of things in the heavens;" "the holy places made with hands which are the figures of the true." Heb. ix, 23, 24.

THE SANCTUARY.

BY J. P. ANDREWS.

Continued.

The history of the sanctuary is stated very fully in the books of Kings, and in 2 Chronicles. But we can only quote those texts in which it is called the sanctuary. In 1 Chron. ix, 29, we read of "the instruments of the sanctuary," referring either to the tabernacle, or the temple. In 1 Chron. xxiv, 5, we read of "the governors of the sanctuary," or "house of God."

The Psalmist prays that God would send "help from the sanctuary." Ps. xx, 2. He lifted up his hands "toward the oracle of thy sanctuary." Ps. xxviii, 2, margin. See 1 Kings vi, 10, 20. He calls upon the spirits to "worship the Lord in his glorious sanctuary." Ps. xxix, 2, margin. He prays "to see thy power and thy glory, so as I have seen thee in the sanctuary." Ps. lxxiii, 2. He speaks of "the goings of my God, my King, in the sanctuary." Ps. lxxviii, 24, 29. In Ps. lxxviii, 64, he styles the land of Canaan "the border of the sanctuary." And in verses 68, 69, he testifies that God "built his sanctuary like high palaces" at Mount Zion in Judah. He "went into the sanctuary of God," and saw the end of the wicked. Ps. lxxiii, 17. He testifies that "thy way O God is in the sanctuary." Ps. lxxvii, 13. He predicts the future desolation of God's temple, or sanctuary.—Ps. lxxiv, 3, 7; lxxix, 1. In Ps. xli, 6, he declares that "strength and beauty are in his sanctuary."—And in verse 9, unargued, he says, "O worship the Lord in the glorious sanctuary." "Lift up your hands in the sanctuary, and bless the Lord." Ps. cxxiv, 1, 2. "Praise God in his sanctuary."—Ps. cl, 1.

From the period in which the Psalms were written, we pass down the history of the kings of Judah to Jehoshaphat. In prayer he states that God gave the land of Canaan to the people of Israel, "and they dwelt therein, and have built thee a sanctuary therein." 2 Chron. xx, 7, 8. And in verse 9, he quotes the words used at the dedication of the temple. 1 Kings viii, 33-37.

After this, we read that Uzziah, king of Judah, being lifted up with pride, went into the temple to burn incense. And the priests ordered him to go out of the sanctuary. 2 Chron. xxvi, 16-18. Still later we read that Hezekiah offered a sin-offering for the kingdom, and for the sanctuary, and for Judah. 2 Chron. xxix, 21. And he called upon all Israel to yield themselves unto the Lord, and enter into his sanctuary. And he prays for those who were not cleansed according to the purification of the sanctuary. 2 Chron. xxx, 8, 19.

About this time, God says by Isaiah, "I have profaned the princes of the sanctuary, and have given Jacob to the curse, and Israel to reproaches." Isa. xlii, 28. Next, Zephaniah complains that her prophets are light and treacherous persons; her priests have polluted the sanctuary, they have done violence to the law. Zeph. iii, 4.

After this, Ezekiel says, "Thou hast defiled my sanctuary." Eze. v, 11; vii, 6. And in his view of the men with the slaughtering weapons, they were charged to "begin at my sanctuary." "And they began at the ancient men which were before the house." Eze. ix, 9. And in chapter xxiii, 38, 39, he says, "Moreover, this they have done unto me: they have defiled my sanctuary in the same day, and have profaned my Sabbaths. For when they had slain their children to their idols, then they came the same day into my sanctuary to profane it; and so, thus have they done in the midst of mine house." And in chapter xxiv, 21, God says, "I will profane my sanctuary."

GOD FORSAKES HIS SANCTUARY.

"But go ye now unto my place which was in Shiloh, where I set my name at the first, and see what I did to it for the wickedness of my people Israel. And now, because ye have done all these works, saith the Lord, and I spake unto you, rising up early and speaking, but ye heard not; and I called you, but ye answered not; therefore will I do unto this house, which is called by my name, wherein ye trust, and unto the place which I gave to your fathers, as I have done to Shiloh." Jer. vii, 12-14; xxvi, 6.

What did God do to the sanctuary at Shiloh? "When God heard this, he was wroth, and greatly abhorred Israel: so that he forsook the tabernacle of Shiloh, the tent which he placed among men: and delivered his strength into captivity, and his glory into the enemy's hand." Ps. lxxviii, 60-61. Then when God told the people that he would do to the temple, as he had done to the tabernacle at Shiloh, it was a solemn declaration that he would forsake it. Eze. viii, 6. That this prediction was accomplished we shall now show.

THE SANCTUARY DESTROYED.

"But they mocked the messengers of God, and despised his words, and misused his prophets, until the wrath of the Lord arose against his people, till there was no remedy. Therefore he brought upon them the king of the Chaldees, who slew their young men with the sword in the house of their sanctuary, and had no compassion upon young man or maiden, old man, or him that stooped for age; he gave them all into his hand. And all the vessels of the house of God, great and small, and the treasures of the house of the Lord, and the treasures of the king, and of his princes; all these he brought to Babylon. And they burnt the house of God, and brake down the wall of Jerusalem, and burnt all the palaces thereof with fire, and destroyed all the goodly vessels thereof." 2 Chron. xxxvi, 10-19.

The predictions of Amos, [Ps. lxxiv, 3, 7; lxxix, 1.] of Isaiah, [chapter lxxiii, 18; lxxiv, 10, 11.] and of Ezekiel, [chapter xxiv, 21,] were now verified.—The heathen then entered "into the sanctuaries [the holies] of the Lord's house." Jer. li, 51.—"The heathen entered into her sanctuary, whom thou didst command that they should not enter into thy congregation." Lam. i, 10. And the Lord "cast off his altar," and "abhorred his sanctuary;" and the priest and the prophet were "slain in the sanctuary," and "the stones of the sanctuary were poured out in the top of the street." Lam. ii, 7, 20; iv, 1. In this time of their dispersion, and of their sanctuary's desolation, God promises to be to them "as a little sanctuary." Eze. xi, 16; Isa. viii, 14. The sanctuary thus destroyed, lay desolate till the reign of the kingdom of Persia.—2 Chron. xxxvi, 10-23; Ezra i, 1-3; Isa. xliii, 28. It was near the close of the seventy years captivity that Daniel prayed, "cause thy face to shine upon thy sanctuary that is desolate." Dan. ix, 2, 17.

EZEKIEL OFFERS TO ISRAEL A SANCTUARY.

It was fourteen years after the sanctuary had been destroyed, that God gave Ezekiel the "pattern" of another, to show to the house of Israel. Chap. xl-xlviii. Like the tabernacle and the temple, this building consisted of two holy places. Chap. xli. And the most holy place was of the same size with that in the temple of Solomon. Verse 4; 1 Kings vi, 10, 20. To this building the word sanctuary is applied in the following texts. Eze. xli, 21, 23; xlii, 20; xliii, 21; xlv, 1, 5, [verses 7, 8, refer to Solomon's temple,] 9, 11, 15, 16, 27; xlv, 2, 3, 4, 18; xlvii, 12; xlviii, 8, 10, 21. It was offered to the house of Israel then in captivity on this condition, that they should be "ashamed of their iniquities, and put them away. If they did this, God would cause this building to be established, and would cause 'the twelve tribes' to return. Chap. xl, 4; xliii, 10, 11; xlv, 5-8; xlvii, 13-33; xlviii.

But the house of Israel were not at all ashamed. For when the decree for Israel's restoration went forth, all Israel could go up to the land where God's abundant blessing was promised. See the decree of Cyrus. 2 Chron. xxxvi, 22, 23; Ezra i, 1-4; vii, 13. But the ten tribes slighted the offer of Cyrus, as well as the promised blessings of God, and the tribes of Judah and Benjamin, with a portion of the tribe of Levi, and a few others, were all that went up. Ezra i, 5; vii, 7; viii, 15. Thus the house of Israel rejected the gracious offer of the Lord, and slighted the inestimable blessings which God would have given them. Eze. xlvii; xlviii.—Hence this sanctuary was never erected. But that this prophecy does not belong to the future reign of Christ and his saints, the following facts demonstrate:

1. The Prince that shall reign over God's people Israel, for ever, is none other than Jesus Christ. There is to be but one Prince and Shepherd that shall be the King over Israel in the glorified state, and that one is Jesus. Luke i, 32, 33; Eze. xxxvii, 22, 24; Jer. xxiii, 5, 6; Micah v, 2. But the prince here spoken of by Ezekiel is not Christ, but a poor frail mortal. For (1.) he is commanded to offer a bullock as a sin-offering for himself. Eze. xlv, 22.

But Jesus Christ is himself the great sin-offering for the world. 1 John ii, 1, 2. (2.) He was to offer all manner of offerings for himself. Eze. xlv, 1-8. But Jesus Christ caused all this "to cease" at his death. Dan. ix, 27. (3.) God says to these princes, "Take away your exactions from my people." Eze. xlv, 9. But when Christ reigns, there will be nothing oppressive, for the officers will be pious, and the exactors righteous. Isa. lx, 17-19. (4.) And this prince is to have sons and servants to whom, if he will, he may give an inheritance. But that which he gives to his servants will return to the prince in the year of Jubilee. Eze. xlv, 10, 17. And he is forbidden to oppress the people. Verse 18. Surely, it would be blasphemous to apply this to our Lord Jesus Christ. Hence, Ezekiel is not predicting the future reign of Christ over the house of Israel.

2. Christ says, "the children of this world [for age] marry, and are given in marriage; but they which shall be counted worthy to obtain that world, [or age,] and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage." Luke xx, 35. Now hear Ezekiel: "Neither shall they [God's priests] take for their wives a widow, nor her that is put away; but they shall take maidens of the seed of the house of Israel, or a widow that had a priest before." Eze. xlv, 22. In the prediction of Christ, respecting that age, or world to come, he positively affirms that there shall be no marrying or giving in marriage there; but in Ezekiel we find the Lord's priests marrying, and have intimations, even that divorce and death are not unknown! Therefore it is evident that Ezekiel does not refer to the age to come. Certain it is that had those priests been "counted worthy to obtain that world," they would not be represented as marrying in it! And this, too, in the promised land, the very heart of the future kingdom!

3. And Christ adds: "Neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels." Luke xx, 36. And Paul testifies that at the last trumpet, "this mortal shall put on immortality," and death shall be swallowed up in victory. 1 Cor. xv, 51-54. But Ezekiel has deaths, even in the families of God's priests, and they themselves defiled by attending their burials, and obliged to offer for themselves a sin-offering!! See Eze. xliv, 25-27. Are such persons equal to the angels? Are they where they can die no more? Surely they are not. Then it is demonstrated that Ezekiel does not refer to the world or age to come.

That the sanctuary, priesthood and offerings, with the accompanying blessings, would have been realized in the Mosiac dispensation, had the twelve tribes of Israel accepted the proffered boon, we will now show. 1. It was to be fulfilled while circumcision was in force. Eze. xlv, 9. But that was abolished at the first Advent. Gal. v. 2; vi. 12; Col. ii. 11-13. 2. It was while divorce was allowed. Eze. xiv. 22. But that is now done away. Matt. v. 31, 32; xix. 8, 9. 3. The distinction between meats, clean and unclean, is recognized. Eze. xiv. 23, 31. But no such distinction is now recognized by the Bible. Rom. xiv. 4. Sacrifices, offerings, burnt offerings and sin-offerings, of bulls and goats, were then in force. Eze. xvi. But they are not now acceptable to God. Heb. x. 5. The feasts and the Jubilees were then in force. Eze. xlv. 21-25; xlv. 9, 11, 17. But they were nailed to the cross. Col. ii. 16. The Levitical priesthood was then in force. Eze. xl. 46; xlv. 15. But the priesthood of Melchisedec, which passeth not to another, has taken its place. Heb. v. ix. 7. "The middle wall of partition" then existed, as all these ordinances prove, as well as the acknowledged distinction between "the seed of the house of Israel" and the stranger. Eze. xlv. 22; xlvii. 22. But it is now broken down.—Eph. ii. But we leave the sanctuary offered to the twelve tribes that we may follow the history of Judah and Benjamin.

THE SANCTUARY REBUILT.

Cyrus, the king of Persia, in the first year of his reign, put forth a decree for the restoration of God's sanctuary which had so long been in ruins. Ezra i. 1-4. And in this decree he not only gave permission to the whole house of Israel to go up to the city of their fathers, where God had chosen to place his name, but he actually provided help for those who needed aid to go up. And yet, ten of the twelve tribes chose to remain in their iniquity, and dwell with the heathen. But we learn in verse 5, that the chief of the fathers of Judah and Benjamin, and the priests, and the Levites, and a few others, went up. The vessels of God's house, which had been in Sardan's sanctuary at Babylon, [Ezra i. 7, 8; v. 14; 2 Chron. xxvi. 7; Dan. i. 2,] were delivered to them to carry up to the temple of God which they were to rebuild at Jerusalem.

And in the second year of their coming unto the house of God at Jerusalem, with Zerubbabel for their governor, and Jeshua for their high priest, they laid the foundation of the temple of the Lord. Ezra iii. 8, 10. After many serious hindrances, it was completed in the sixth year of Darius, its building having occupied a period of twenty years.—Ezra vi. 16. The decree from which the 2300 days are dated did not go forth until the seventh year of the grandson of Darius. So that the sanctuary was in existence when that period commenced. Ezra vii.

This temple of Zerubbabel was but the temple of Solomon rebuilt, as we may learn from Ezra v. 11, though it seems to have been larger than that building. Ezra vi. 3, 4; 1 Kings vi. 2. Hence it was but a continuance of the pattern of the true, which Solomon had erected. And thus we understand Paul's language in Heb. ix, as referring to these buildings, which, as a whole, make up the sanctuary of the first covenant, when he pronounces that sanctuary a figure or pattern of the true.

While Zerubbabel was building the Lord's house, the prophets Haggai and Zechariah encouraged the builders. Ezra v. 1; vi. 14. Haggai promised that though it were not as rich in silver and gold as was the first house, yet the glory of this latter house should be greater than of the former, as the Desire of all nations would come to it. Hag. ii.

GOD DWELT IN THIS SANCTUARY.

"Therefore, thus saith the Lord; I am returned to Jerusalem with mercies: mine house shall be built in it, saith the Lord of hosts." Zechar. i. 10.—"Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion; for lo, I come, and I will dwell in the midst of thee, saith the Lord." Zechar. ii. 10. "And whose shall swear by the temple, sweareth by it, and by him that dwelleth therein." Matt. xxiii. 21.

Nehemiah calls this building the sanctuary, and declares that "we will not forsake the house of our God." Chap. x. 39. While God's house lay in ruins, Daniel prayed that God would cause his face to shine upon his sanctuary that was desolate. In answer to his prayer, the angel Gabriel is sent to inform him that at the end of 69 weeks from the going forth of the decree to restore and to build Jerusalem, the Messiah would come, and would finally be cut off. And after this, the city and the sanctuary, which we have now seen rebuilt, would be destroyed, and never again be rebuilt, but left in ruins till the consummation. Dan. ix. At the end of the 69 weeks, A. D. 27, the Messiah the Prince came, and began to preach. Mark i. 15.—Israel proceeded to "finish the transgression," for which God would cut them off from being his people, by rejecting the Messiah. Dan. ix. 24; John i. 11; Matt. xxiii. 32; 1 Thess. ii. 15, 16.

GOD FORSAKES THE SANCTUARY.

"O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not! Behold, your house is left unto you desolate." Matt. xxiii. 37, 38; Luke xiii. 34, 35. After uttering these words, Jesus departed from the temple, which was no longer God's habitation. And as he went out, he declared that it should be thrown down, and not one stone left upon another. Matt. xxiv. 1, 2. And what Gabriel and Jesus had thus predicted, the Romans in a few years fulfilled, and the "worldly sanctuary" ceased to exist.

DATES.—Moses erected the sanctuary, (according to the chronology in the margin,) B. C. 1490. It was forsaken at Shiloh, B. C. 1141. Solomon erected the sanctuary, B. C. 1005. It was forsaken of God, B. C. 588. Rebuilt by Zerubbabel, B. C. 515. Forsaken and left desolate, A. D. 31.

We have now followed the typical sanctuary to its end. And here let us pause for reflection and inquiry. Why did God ordain this extraordinary arrangement? The sacrifices offered in this building could never take away sins. Why then were they instituted? The priests which here minister ed were so imperfect that they had to offer for themselves. Why then was such a priesthood ordained? The building itself was but an imperfect, temporary structure, though finished to the perfection of human art. Why then was such a structure erected? Surely, God does nothing in vain, and all this is full of meaning. Nor will the student of the Bible be at a loss to answer these questions. The building itself was but a "figure of the true," a "pattern of things in the heavens." The priests which there ministered, served "unto the example and shadow of heavenly things," and the sacrifices there offered, continually pointed forward to the great sacrifice that should be made for the sin of man. These great truths are plainly stated in Heb. viii—x. We shall now pass from the shadow to the substance.

THE TYPICAL SANCTUARY GIVES PLACE TO THE TRUE

1. The sanctuary of the first covenant ends with that covenant, and does not constitute the sanctuary of the new covenant. Heb. ix, 1, 2, 8, 9; Act. vii, 48, 49. 2. That sanctuary was a figure for the time then present, or for that dispensation. Heb. ix, 9. That is, God did not, during the typical dispensation, lay open the true tabernacle; but gave to the people a figure or pattern of it—3. When the work of the first tabernacle was accomplished, the way of the temple of God in heaven was laid open. Heb. ix, 8; Ps. xi, 4; Jer. xvii, 12. 4. The typical sanctuary and the ordinances connected with it, were to last only till the time of reformation. And when that time arrived, Christ came, an high priest of good things to come by a greater and more perfect tabernacle. Heb. ix, 9-12. 5. The rending of the veil of the earthly sanctuary at the death of our Saviour evinced that its services were finished. Matt. xxvii, 50, 51; Mark xv, 38; Luke xxiii, 45. 6. Christ solemnly declared that it was left desolate. Matt. xxiii, 37, 38; Luke xiii, 34, 35. 7. The sanctuary is connected with the host. Dan. viii, 13. And the host, which is the true church, has had neither sanctuary nor priesthood in Old Jerusalem the past 1800 years, but has had both in heaven. Heb. viii, 1-6. 8. While the typical sanctuary was standing, it was evidence that the way into the true sanctuary was not laid open. But when its services were abolished, the tabernacle in heaven, of which it was a figure, took its place. Heb. x, 1-6; ix, 6-12. 9. The holy places made with hands, the figures or patterns of things in the heavens, have been superseded by the heavenly holy places themselves. Heb. ix, 23, 24. 10. The sanctuary, since the commencement of Christ's priesthood, is the true tabernacle of God in heaven. This is plainly stated in Heb. viii 1-6. These points are conclusive evidence that the worldly sanctuary of the first covenant has given place to the heavenly sanctuary of the new covenant. The typical sanctuary is forsaken, and the priesthood is transferred to the true tabernacle. Now, unless it can be changed back from the true to the type again, the old will never be rebuilt.

GABRIEL'S EXPLANATION OF THE SANCTUARY.

But the most important question in the mind of the reader is this. How did Gabriel explain the sanctuary to Daniel? Did he point out to him the transition from the "figure" or "pattern," to the "greater and more perfect tabernacle," the true holy places. We answer he did. 1. Gabriel explains to Daniel how much of the 2300 days belonged to Jerusalem and the Jews. "Seventy weeks have been cut off upon thy people, and upon thy holy city." Whiting's Translation. Dan. ix, 24. Then the whole of the 2300 days does not belong to Old Jerusalem, the place of the earthly sanctuary, nor do they all belong to the Jews, the professed people of God in the time of the first covenant. 2. For in that period of 70 weeks, the transgression was to be finished, that is, the Jewish people were to fill up their measure of iniquity, by rejecting and crucifying their Messiah, and were no longer to be his people or host. Dan. ix, 24; Matt. xxiii, 32, 33; xxi, 33-43; xxvii, 25.—3. Gabriel showed Daniel that the earthly sanctuary should be destroyed, shortly after their rejection of the Messiah, and never be rebuilt, but be desolate till the consummation. Dan. ix, 26, 27. 4. The angel brings the new covenant to Daniel's view. "He [the Messiah] shall confirm the covenant with many for one week." Dan. ix, 27; Matt. xxvi, 28. 5. He brings to Daniel's view the new covenant church or host, viz: the "many" with whom the covenant is confirmed. Verse 27. 6. He brings to view the new covenant sacrifice, viz: the cutting off of the Messiah, but not for himself. Verse 26. And also the Prince or mediator of the new covenant. Verse 26; xi, 22; Heb. xii, 24. 7. He brings to Daniel's view the new covenant sanctuary. Gabriel informed Daniel that before the close of the 70 weeks, which belonged to the earthly sanctuary, the Most Holy should be anointed. That this "Most Holy" is the true tabernacle in which the Messiah is to officiate as priest, we offer the following testimony:

"And to anoint the Most Holy;" kodush kodashim, the Holy of holies.—Adam Clark. Dan. ix, 24.

"Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people, and the city of thy sanctuary: that sin may be restrained, and transgression have an end; that iniquity may be expiated, and an overlasting righteousness brought in; that visions and prophecies may be sealed up, and the Holy of holies anointed." Houlignant's translation of Dan. ix, 24, as cited in Clark's Commentary.

"To anoint the Most Holy." Hebrew, literally 'Holy of holies.' Heaven itself, which Christ consecrated, when he ascended and entered it, sprinkling or consecrating it with his own blood for us." Lick's Restoration, page 89.

"And the last event of the 70 weeks, as enumerated in verse 24, was the anointing of the 'Most Holy,' or the 'Holy of Holies,' or the 'Sanctum Sanctorum.' Not that which was on earth, made with hands, but the true tabernacle, heaven itself, into which Christ, our high priest, is for us entered.

Christ was to do in the true tabernacle, in heaven, what Moses and Aaron did in its pattern. See Heb. vi; vii; viii; ix. And Ex. xxx, 22-30. Also Lev. viii, 10-15."—Advent Shield, No. I, page 75.

The fact is plain, then, that of the vision of 2300 days concerning the sanctuary, only 490 pertained to the earthly sanctuary; and also that the iniquity of the Jewish people would in that period be so far filled up, that God would leave them, and the city and sanctuary would soon after be destroyed, and never be rebuilt, but left in ruins till the consummation. And it is also a fact that Gabriel did present to Daniel a view of the true tabernacle, [Heb. viii, 1, 2,] which about the close of the 70 weeks did take the place of the pattern. And as the ministration of the earthly tabernacle began with its anointing, so in the more excellent ministry of our great High Priest, the first act, as shown to Daniel, is the anointing of the true tabernacle or sanctuary of which he is a minister. Ex. xl, 9-11; Lev. viii, 10, 11; Num. vii, 1; Dan. ix, 24.

It is therefore an established fact that the worldly sanctuary of the first covenant, and the heavenly sanctuary of the new covenant, are both embraced in the vision of the 2300 days. Seventy weeks are cut off upon the earthly sanctuary, and at their termination the true tabernacle, with its anointing, its sacrifice and its minister, are introduced. And it is interesting to notice that the transfer from the tabernacle made with hands, to the true tabernacle itself, which the Lord pitched and not man, is placed by Gabriel at the very point where the Bible testifies that the shadow of good things to come ceased, being nailed to the cross.—Col. ii, 14-17. Where the offering of bulls and goats gave place to the great sacrifice; [Heb. ix, 11-14; x, 1-10; Pa. xl, 6-8; Dan. ix, 27;] where the Levitical priesthood was superseded by that of the order of Melchisedec; [Heb. v-vii; Pa. cx;] where the example and shadow of heavenly things was terminated by the more excellent ministry which it shadowed forth. Heb. viii, 1-6. And where the holy places, which were the figures of the true, were succeeded by the true holy places in heaven. Heb. ix, 23, 24. In the first part of this article we saw that Gabriel did not explain the 2300 days and the sanctuary in Dan. viii. We now see that in Dan. ix, he explained both. With Gabriel's explanation of the sanctuary, and the time, we are entirely satisfied.

BY J. M. ANDREWS.

THE HEAVENLY SANCTUARY.

* Now of the things which we have spoken this is the sum: we have such an high priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens; a minister of the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man." Heb. viii, 1, 2. "A glorious high throne from the beginning is the place of our sanctuary." Jer. xvii, 12; Rev. xvi, 17; 1a. xi, 4. "For he hath looked down from the height of his sanctuary; from heaven did the Lord behold the earth." 1a. cii, 10.

THE HEAVENLY SANCTUARY HAS TWO HOLY PLACES.—The following testimony on this point is conclusive. We gather it from the Old and New Testaments, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established. 1. The tabernacle erected by Moses, after a forty days inspection of the one showed to him in the mount, consisted of two holy places, [Ex. xxvi, 30-33.] and is declared to be a correct pattern or model of that building. Ex. xxv, 8, 9, 40; compared with Chap. xxix, 32-43. But if the earthly sanctuary consisted of two holy places, and the great original from which it was copied, consisted of only one, instead of likeness, there would be perfect dissimilarity. 2. The temple was built in every respect according to the pattern which God gave to David by the Spirit. 1 Chron. xxviii, 10-10. And Solomon in addressing God says, "Thou hast commanded me to build a temple upon thy holy mount, and an altar in the city wherein thou dwellest, a resemblance of the holy tabernacle which thou hast prepared from the beginning." Wis. Sol. ix, 8.—The temple was built on a larger and grander scale than the tabernacle; but its distinguishing feature, like the tabernacle, consisted in the fact that it was composed of two holy places. 1 Kings vi; 2 Chron. iii. This is clear proof that the heavenly tabernacle contains the same. 3. Paul plainly states that "the holy places [plural] made with hands" "are the figures [plural] of the true." And that the tabernacle, and its vessels, are "patterns of things in the heavens." Heb. ix, 23, 24. This is direct evidence that, in the greater and more perfect tabernacle, there are two holy places, even as in the "figure," "example" or "pattern." 4. The Apostle actually uses the word holies, [plural] in speaking of the heavenly sanctuary. The expression "holiest of all," in Heb. ix, 8; x, 10, has been supposed by some to prove that Christ began to minister in the most holy place at his ascension. But the expression is not "hagia Hagion," holy of holies, as in chapter ix, 3; but is simply "Hagion" holies. It is the same word that is rendered sanctuary in Heb. viii, 2. In each of these three texts, [Heb. viii, 2; ix, 8; x, 10.] Macknight renders the word, "holy places." The Dowry Bible renders it "the holies." And thus we learn that the heavenly sanctuary consists of two "holy places."

VESSELS OF THE HEAVENLY SANCTUARY.—We have noticed particularly the vessels of the earthly sanctuary, and have cited divine testimony to show that they were patterns of the true in heaven. This is strikingly confirmed by the fact that in the heavenly sanctuary we find the like vessels.

1. The ark of God's testament, and the chernishim. Rev. xi, 10; Ps. xcix, 1.

2. The golden altar of incense. Rev. viii, 3; ix, 13.

3. The candlestick with the seven lamps. Rev. iv, 5; Zech. iv, 2.

4. The golden censer. Rev. viii, 3.

This heavenly sanctuary is called by Jesus "my Father's house;" [John xiv, 2:] by David, Habakkuk and John, "the temple of God in heaven;" [Ps. xi, 4; Hab. ii, 20; Rev. xi, 19:] God's "holy habitation;" [Zech. ii, 13; Jer. xxv, 30; Rev. xvi, 17:] "greater and more perfect tabernacle;" [Heb. ix, 11:] "the sanctuary and true tabernacle which the Lord pitched and not man." Heb. viii, 2.

THE TREADING DOWN OF THE SANCTUARY.

The agents by which the sanctuary is trodden under foot are the daily, or continual desolation, and the transgression, or abomination of desolation. Dan. viii, 13; xi, 31; xii, 11. These two desolations, as we have already seen, are Paganism and Papacy. It is often urged as a sufficient argument against the view of the sanctuary of God in heaven, that such a sanctuary is not susceptible of being trodden under foot. But we answer, this is not impossible, when the New Testament shows us that wicked men (apostates) tread under foot the minister of the heavenly sanctuary, our Lord Jesus Christ. Heb. x, 20; viii, 1, 2. If they can tread under foot the minister of that sanctuary, then they can tread under foot the sanctuary itself. It is not impossible that the Pagan and Papal desolations should be represented as treading under foot the heavenly sanctuary, when the same vision represents the little horn as stamping upon the stars. Dan. viii, 10. And when it is expressly predicted that the Papal power should war against the tabernacle of God in heaven. Rev. xiii, 5-7. The language of this vision, that these blasphemous powers should cast down the truth to the ground, stamp upon the stars, and tread under foot the sanctuary and the host, is certainly figurative, as it would otherwise involve complete absurdities.

Let us now briefly trace the manner in which Satan has, by Paganism and Papacy, trod under foot the sanctuary of the Lord. We have already seen that he has done this by erecting rival sanctuaries, where in the place of the only living and true God, he has established "new gods that came newly up." Deut. xxxii, 16, 17. In the days of the Judges and of Samuel, Satan's rival sanctuary was the temple of Dagon, where the Philistines worshipped. Judges xvi, 23, 24. And when they had taken the ark of God from Israel, the Philistines deposited it in this temple. 1 Sam. v. After Solomon erected a glorious sanctuary upon Mount Moriah, Jerusalem, who made Israel to sin, erected a rival sanctuary at Bethel, and thus drew away ten of the twelve tribes from the worship of the living God, to that of the golden calves. 1 Kings xii, 26-33; Amos vii, 13, margin. In the days of Nebuchadnezzar, the rival to the sanctuary of God was the temple of Nebuchadnezzar's god at Babylon.—And into this temple he carried the vessels of the Lord's sanctuary, when he laid it desolate. Dan. i, 2; Ezra i, 7; v, 14; 2 Chron. xxxvi, 7. At a still later period, Satan established at Rome a temple, or sanctuary of "all the gods." Dan. viii, 11; xi, 31.

After the typical sanctuary of the first covenant had given place to the true sanctuary of God, Satan baptized his Pagan sanctuary and heathen rites and ceremonies, calling them Christianity. Thenceforward he had at Rome a "temple of God," and in that temple, a being exalted above all that is called God or that is worshipped. 2 Thess. ii, 4. And this Papal abomination has trod under foot the holy city, [Rev. xi, 2; xxi, 2,] by persuading a large portion of the human family that Rome, the place of this counterfeit temple of God, was "the holy city," or "the eternal city." And it has trod under foot, and blasphemed God's sanctuary or tabernacle [Rev. xiii, 6; Heb. viii, 2] by calling its own sanctuary the temple of God, and by turning away the worship of them that dwell on the earth, from "the temple of God in heaven," to the sanctuary of Satan at Rome. It has trod under foot the Son of God, the minister of the heavenly sanctuary, [Heb. x, 20; viii, 2,] by making the Pope the head of the church, instead of Jesus Christ, [Eph. v, 23,] and by leading men to the worship of that "son of perdition," as one able to forgive past sins, and confer the right to commit them in the future, and thus turning men from him who alone has power on earth to forgive sins, and to pardon iniquity and transgression. Such has been the nature of the warfare which Satan has maintained against the sanctuary and the cause of God, in his vain attempts to defeat the great plan of redemption which God has been carrying forward in his sanctuary. In order to present the cleansing of the sanctuary of God in heaven, it is necessary to notice briefly

THE MINISTRATION AND CLEANSING OF THE EARTHLY SANCTUARY.

We have before shown that the earthly sanctuary consisted of two holy places, and that it was a pattern of the true tabernacle of God in heaven.—We shall now present, in a brief manner, the work of ministration in both those holy places, and also the work of cleansing that sanctuary, at the end of that ministration, every year, and shall prove that that ministration was the example and shadow of Christ's more excellent ministry in the true tabernacle.

The ministration in the earthly sanctuary was performed by the Levitical order of priesthood.—Ex. xxviii; xxix; Lev. viii; ix; Heb. vii. The act, preparatory to the commencement of the ministration in that earthly tabernacle, was the anointing of its two holy places, and of all its sacred vessels. Ex. xl, 9; xxx, 26-29; Lev. viii, 10. The entire work of the priests in the two holy places is summed up by Paul as follows: "Now when these things were thus ordained, the priests went always into the first tabernacle, accomplishing the service of God; but into the second went the high priest alone once every year, not without blood, which he offered for himself, and for the errors of the people." Heb. ix, 6, 7. The ministration in the earthly sanctuary is thus presented before us in two grand divisions. First, the daily service in the holy place, which consisted of the regular morning and evening burnt-offering, [Ex. xxix, 38-43; Num. xxviii, 3-8,] the burning of sweet incense upon the golden altar, when the high priest lighted the lamps every morning and evening, [Ex. xxx, 7, 8, 34-36; xxxi, 11,] the special work upon the Lord's Sabbaths, and also upon the annual sabbaths, new moons and feasts, [Num. xxviii, 11-31; xxix; Lev. xxiii,] and beside all this, the special work for individuals as they should present their particular offerings through the year. Lev. i-vii. And second, the yearly work, in the most holy place, for the sins of the people, and for the cleansing of the sanctuary. Lev. xvi. Thus each of the two holy places had its appropriate work assigned. The glory of the God of Israel was manifested in both apartments. When he entered the tabernacle at the first, his glory filled both the holy places. Ex. xl, 34, 35. See also 1 Kings viii, 10, 11; 2 Chron. v, 13, 14; vii, 1, 2. In the door of the first apartment, the Lord stood and talked with Moses. Ex. xxxiii, 9-11. In this place, God promised to meet with the children of Israel, and to sanctify the tabernacle with his glory. Ex. xxix, 42-44; xxx, 36. In the holiest, also, God manifested his glory in a special manner. Ex. xxv, 21, 22; Lev. xvi, 2.

In the first apartment, stood the priests in a continual course of ministration for the people. He that had sinned, brought his victim to the door of this apartment to be offered up for himself. He laid his hand upon the head of the victim to denote that his sin was transferred to it. Lev. i; iii.—Then the victim was slain on account of that transgression, and his blood, bearing that sin and guilt, was carried into the sanctuary, and sprinkled upon it. Lev. iv. Thus, through the year, this ministration went forward. The sins of the people being transferred from themselves to the victims offered in sacrifice, and through the blood of the sacrifices, transferred to the sanctuary itself.

On the tenth day of the seventh month, the ministration was changed from the holy place, where it had been continued through the year, to the most holy place. Lev. xvi, 2, 23-34. The high priest entered the holiest with the blood of a bullock, as a sin-offering for himself. Verses 3, 6, 11-14. He then received of the children of Israel two kids of the goats for a sin-offering. Upon these goats he cast lots; one lot for the Lord, and the other lot for the scape-goat. Verses 5, 7, 8. He next proceeded to offer the goat, upon which the Lord's lot fell, as a sin-offering for the people.

We shall now show that he offered this blood for two purposes: 1. "To make an atonement for the children of Israel, for all their sins." 2. To cleanse, or "make an atonement for the holy sanctuary." Let us read a portion of the chapter.— "Then shall he kill the goat of the sin-offering that is for the people, and bring his blood within the veil, and do with that blood as he did with the blood of the bullock, and sprinkle it upon the mercy-seat, and before the mercy-seat; and he shall make an atonement for the holy place, because of the uncleanness of the children of Israel, and because of their transgressions in all their sins; and so shall he do for the tabernacle of the congregation that remaineth among them in the midst of their uncleanness. And there shall be no man in the tabernacle of the congregation when he goeth in to make an atonement in the holy place, until he come out, and have made an atonement for himself, and for his household, and for all the congregation of Israel. And he shall go out unto the altar that is before the Lord, and make an atonement for it; and shall take of the blood of the bullock, and of the blood of the goat, and put it upon the horns of the altar round about. And he shall sprinkle of the blood upon it with his finger seven times, and cleanse it, and hallow it from the uncleanness of the children of Israel. And when he hath made an end of reconciling the holy place, and the tabernacle of the congregation, and the altar, he shall bring the live goat; and Aaron shall lay both his hands upon the head of the live goat, and confess over him all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and all their transgressions in all their sins, putting them upon the head of the goat, and shall send him away by the hand of a fit man into the wilderness; and the goat shall bear upon him all their iniquities unto a land not inhabited; and he shall let go the goat in the wilderness."— "And this shall be a statute for ever unto you; that in the seventh month, on the tenth day of the month, ye shall afflict your souls, and do no work at all, whether it be one of your own country or a stranger that sojourneth among you; for on that day shall the priest make an atonement for you, to cleanse you, that ye may be clean from all your sins before the Lord." "And he shall make an atonement for the holy sanctuary, and he shall make an atonement for the tabernacle of the congregation, and for the altar; and he shall make an atonement for the priests, and for all the people of his congregation. And this shall be an everlasting statute unto you, to make an atonement for the children of Israel for all their sins once a year." / verses 15-22, 29, 30, 33, 34.

We have here read several important facts. 1. In the tenth day of the seventh month the ministration was changed from the holy place to the holiest of all. Verses 2, 20-24. 2. That in the new holy place, blood was offered for the sins of the people to make an atonement for them. Verses 5, 9, 15, 17, 30, 33, 34; Heb. ix, 7. 3. That the two holy places of the sanctuary, and also the altar of incense were on this day cleansed from the sins of the people, which, as we have seen, had through the year been borne into the sanctuary and sprinkled upon it. Verses 10, 18-20, 33; Ex. xx, 10. 4. That the high priest, having by blood removed the sins of the people from the sanctuary, came them to the door of the tabernacle (Num.

xviii, 1; Ex. xxviii, 38) where the scape-goat stands, and putting both his hands upon the head of the goat, and confessing over him all the iniquities of the children of Israel in all their sins, he puts them upon the head of the goat, and sends him away, with all their iniquities, into a land not inhabited. Verses 6, 7-10, 20-22. The sanctuary was then cleansed from the sins of the people, and those sins were borne by the scape-goat from the sanctuary. The foregoing presents to our view a general outline of the ministration in the worldly sanctuary. The following scriptures show that that ministration was the example and shadow of Christ's ministry in the tabernacle in heaven:

"Now of the things which we have spoken, this is the sum: We have such an high priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens; a minister of the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man. For every high priest is ordained to offer gifts and sacrifices; wherefore it is of necessity that this man have somewhat also to offer. For if he were on earth, he should not be a priest, seeing that there are priests that offer gifts according to the law; who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things, as Moses was admonished of God when he was about to make the tabernacle; for, See (saith he) that thou make all things according to the pattern shewed to thee in the mount. But now hath he obtained a more excellent ministry, by how much also he is the mediator of a better covenant, which was established upon better promises." Heb. viii, 1-6; Col. ii, 17; Heb. x, 1; ix, 11, 12.

The facts stated in these texts are worthy of careful attention. 1. We have a High Priest in the heavens. 2. This High Priest is a minister of the sanctuary or true tabernacle. 3. As the earthly high priests were ordained to offer sacrifice for sins, so it is of necessity that our High Priest should have something to offer for us in the heavenly sanctuary. 4. When upon earth he was not a priest. 5. The ministry of the priests in that tabernacle, made after the pattern of the true, was the example and shadow of Christ's more excellent ministry in the true tabernacle itself. 6. The entire typical service was a shadow of good things to come. 7. In the greater and more perfect tabernacle, Christ is a minister of these good things, thus shadowed forth. With these facts before us let us now consider that more excellent ministry in the temple of God in heaven.

THE MINISTRATION AND CLEANSING OF THE HEAVENLY SANCTUARY.

At the close of the typical services, He of whom Moses in the law, and the prophets did write, Jesus of Nazareth, came and laid down his life for us.— The death of the Lord Jesus is the dividing point between the two dispensations, as it put an end to the typical services, and was the great foundation of his work as a priest in the heavenly tabernacle. On Jesus was laid the iniquity of us all, and he bore our sins in his own body on the tree. Isa. liii, 6; 1 Pet. ii, 24; Heb. ix, 28. He was raised from the dead for our justification, and ascended into heaven to become a great High Priest in the presence of God for us. Rom. iv, 25; Heb. ix, 11, 12, 24.

The ministration in the heavenly sanctuary is performed by the Melchizedec order of priesthood, in the person of our Lord. Ps. cx; Heb. v-vii.

We have already proved that the temple of God in heaven consists of two holy places, as did the earthly tabernacle; and that the ministration in the two holy places of the worldly sanctuary was the example and shadow of Christ's ministry in the true tabernacle. But it is contended by some that Christ ministers only in the most holy place of the heavenly sanctuary. Let us examine this point.

1. His anointing the most holy place of the two tabernacles, at the commencement of his ministration, may be urged as proof that he ministers only in the second apartment of the heavenly sanctuary. Dan. ix, 24. But this objection vanishes at once if we consider that before the Levitical priesthood began to minister in the earthly sanctuary, that entire building, the holiest as well as the holy place and all the sacred vessels, were anointed. Ex. xl 9-11; xxx, 23-29; Lev. viii, 10; Num. vii, 1. And when this anointing was accomplished, that ministration began in the first apartment. Lev. viii-x; Heb. ix, 6, 7. And this order, let it be remembered, was "the example and shadow of heavenly things."

2. It has been urged by some that the text, "this man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins, he ever sat down on the right hand of God," [Heb. x, 12,] forbids the idea of his ministering in the holy places. But no answer, that so far as the idea of sitting down is concerned, it would be equally proper to represent him as standing on the Father's right hand. Acts vii, 56. And if the Saviour is at "the right hand of the power of God" when descending from heaven, as he testifies respecting himself, [Matt. xxvi, 64; Mark xiv, 62; Luke xxii, 69,] then he certainly can be at the Father's right hand, in both the holy places. But we have direct testimony here. Paul says that Christ is a "minister of the sanctuary," Heb. viii, 2. That the word "hagion," here rendered sanctuary, is plural, no one can deny. It is literally rendered by the Downy Bible, "the holies." As translated by Macknight, [Heb. viii, 1, 2,] it reads thus: "Now of the things spoken the chief is, we have such a High Priest as became us, who sat down at the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens, a minister of the holy places, namely, of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched and not man." We draw two conclusions from the foregoing.—(1.) Our Lord can be a minister of the two holy places, and yet be at the Father's right hand. (2.) He must minister in both the holy places, or Paul's language that he is a minister of the holies or holy places, [plural,] is not true. An high priest that should minister simply in the holiest of all, is not a minister of the holy places.

3. But another argument to prove that Christ ministers only in the most holy place, has been urged by some, from the following text: "The Holy Ghost signifying this, that the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while as the first tabernacle was yet standing," Heb. ix, 8. "Having, therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus," Chap. x, 19. But as has been before remarked, the word rendered "holiest of all," is the same that is rendered "sanctuary" in chapter viii, 2, and is not "hagia hagion," holy of holies, as in chapter ix, 3, but is simply "hagion," holies, plural. The rendering of Macknight, which correctly translates the word in the plural, removes all difficulty. He translates these two texts as follows: "The Holy Ghost signifying this, that the way of the holy places was not yet laid open, while the first tabernacle still standeth." "Well then, brethren, having boldness in the entrance of the holy places, by the blood of Jesus." These texts, therefore, do not favor the doctrine that Christ is a minister of only one of the holy places. With a literal rendering of the word, giving it in the plural in our language, just as it was written by Paul, the objection to Christ's ministration in the two holy places of the heavenly sanctuary is entirely removed. The way into the holy places of the heavenly sanctuary was not laid open, while the ministration in the earthly tabernacle continued; but when that ministration was abolished, the way of the heavenly holy places was laid open, and we have boldness to enter by faith, where our High Priest is ministering for us.

It may be proper to add, that the phrase rendered, "into the holy place," in Heb. ix, 12, 25, and "into the sanctuary," in chapter xiii, 11, is the same that in chapter ix, 24 is literally rendered in the plural, "into the holy places." Macknight renders them all in the plural. Then the heavenly tabernacle, where our Lord Jesus Christ ministers, is composed of holy places, as really as was its pattern or image, the earthly tabernacle; and our great High Priest is a minister of those holy places while at the Father's right hand.

Let us now examine those scriptures which present our Lord's position and ministry in the tabernacle in heaven. In vision at Patmos, the beloved disciple has a view of the temple of God, the heavenly sanctuary: A door was opened in heaven.—This must be the door of the heavenly tabernacle, for it disclosed to John's view the throne of God, which was in that temple. Rev. iv, 1, 2; xvi, 17; Jer. xvii, 12. It must be the door of the first apartment, for that of the second apartment (which discloses the ark containing the commandments) is not opened until the sounding of the seventh angel. Rev. xi, 19. And the view, that John was looking into the first apartment of the heavenly sanctuary, when he saw the Lord Jesus take the book from the hand of him that sat upon the throne, is strikingly confirmed by what he saw before the throne.

He testifies that "there were seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, which are the seven Spirits of God." Rev. iv, 5; Zech. iv, 2. He also saw the golden altar of incense before the throne, and witnessed the ministration at that altar with the golden censer. Rev. viii, 3. In the earthly tabernacle, which was the pattern of things in the heavens, the golden candlestick with its seven lamps, and the golden altar of incense, were both represented, and, by God's express direction, placed in the first apartment. Num. viii, 2-4; Heb. ix, 2; Lev. xxiv, 2-4; Ex. xl, 24-27. The scene of this vision is the first apartment of the heavenly sanctuary. Here it was that John saw the Lord Jesus. Rev. v, 6-8.

Let us read Isaiah's description of this place.—"In the year that king Uzziah died, I saw, also, the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple. Above it stood the seraphims: each one had six wings; with twain he covered his face, and with twain he covered his feet, and with twain he did fly. And one cried unto another, and said, Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts: the whole earth is full of his glory. And the posts of the door moved at the voice of him that cried, and the house was filled with smoke. Then said I, Wo is me! for I am unclean; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts. Then flew one of the seraphims unto me, having a live coal in his hand, which he had taken with the tongs from off the altar." Isa. vi, 1-6.

That this was a view of the heavenly tabernacle, and not of the temple at Jerusalem, may be proved by comparing John xii, 39-41, with Isa. vi, 8-10. Words written by Isaiah, while looking into the temple of God, are quoted by John with the declaration that Isaiah spoke them while beholding Christ's glory. That John and Isaiah both beheld the same place is evident; both beheld the throne of God, and him that sits upon it; [Isa. vi, 1; Rev. iv, 2;] both beheld the living beings with six wings; [Isa. vi, 2; Rev. iv, 6-8;] each heard from these beings a like song; [Isa. vi, 3; Rev. iv, 8;] and both beheld the golden altar before the throne.—Isa. vi, 6; Rev. viii, 3; ix, 13.

That John and Isaiah both saw our Lord Jesus Christ we have already proved. And the scene of their visions was in the first apartment of the heavenly sanctuary, the place of the golden candlestick with its seven lamps, and the golden altar of incense. And in this apartment our High Priest commenced his ministration, like the priests in the example and shadow of heavenly things. In the shadow, each part of the work was many times repeated; but in the substance, each part is fulfilled once for all. Once for all, our Sacrifice is slain; [Rom. vi, 9, 10; Heb. ix, 25-28;] and once for all, our High Priest appears in each of the holy places. Heb. ix, 11, 12, 24, 25. Hence, our Lord must continue his ministration in the first apartment until the period arrives for his ministration within the second veil, before the ark of God's testament.

The sins of the world were laid upon the Lord Jesus, and he died for those sins according to the Scriptures. The blood of the Lamb of God, which was shed for our transgressions of God's law, is that by which our High Priest enters the heavenly sanctuary, [Heb. ix, 12;] and which, as our advocate, he offers for us in that sanctuary. Heb. xii, 24; 1 Pet. i, 2; 1 John ii, 1, 2. His great work, which began with the act of bearing the sins of the world at his death, he here carries forward by pleading the cause of penitent sinners, and presenting for them his blood which had been shed as the great sacrifice for the sins of the world. The work in the earthly sanctuary was essentially the same thing. The sins were there laid upon the victim, which was then slain. The blood of that sacrifice, bearing that guilt, was sprinkled, in the sanctuary to make reconciliation for the sinner.—Lev. iv, 4-6. And thus in the shadow of heavenly things, we see the guilt of the people transferred to the sanctuary itself. This can be easily understood. And it is a plain fact that its great design was to give an example of heavenly things. As the sin of him who came to God, through the offering of blood by the high priest, was, through that blood, transferred to the sanctuary itself, so it is in the substance. He who bore our sins at his death, offers for us his blood in the heavenly sanctuary. But when he comes again, he is "without sin;" [Heb. ix, 28;] his great work for the removal of sin is fully completed before he comes again.

We now inquire respecting the removal of the sins of the church, or host, from the sanctuary.—We have seen that only 400 of the 2300 years belonged to the earthly sanctuary, and that the remaining 1810 years, belong to the true sanctuary, which Gabriel introduces to Daniel in his explanation in chapter ix; consequently, the sanctuary to be cleansed from the sins of the church, or host, at the end of the 2300 years, is the heavenly sanctuary. We have also examined those portions of the Bible that explain how and why the earthly sanctuary was cleansed, and have seen that that cleansing was accomplished, not by fire, but by blood.—We have seen that that work was ordained for the express purpose of shadowing forth the work in the heavenly sanctuary. And we have also seen that the sins of those who come to God through our great High Priest are communicated to the sanctuary as was the case in the type. But we are not left without direct testimony on this important point. The Apostle Paul states the fact of the cleansing of the earthly and the heavenly sanctuaries, and plainly affirms that the latter must be cleansed for the same reason that the former had been.—He speaks as follows:

"And almost all things are by the law purged with blood; and without shedding of blood is no remission. It was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these. For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us." Heb. ix, 22-24. Two important facts are stated in this portion of scripture. 1. The earthly sanctuary was cleansed by blood. 2. The heavenly sanctuary must be cleansed by better sacrifice, that is, by the blood of Christ. It is plain, then, that the idea of cleansing the sanctuary by fire has no support in the Bible.

These words, as rendered by Macknight are very clear: "And almost all things according to the law, are cleansed with blood, and without the shedding of blood, there is no remission. There was a necessity, therefore, that the representations indeed of the holy places in the heavens, should be cleansed by these sacrifices; but the heavenly holy places themselves, by sacrifices better than these. Therefore Christ hath not entered into the holy places made with hands; the images of the true holy places; but into heaven itself, now to appear before the face of God, on our account." Heb. ix, 22-24. Then the fact of the cleansing of the heavenly sanctuary is plainly taught by the Apostle Paul in his commentary on the typical system. And this great truth, plainly stated, is worthy of lasting remembrance.

By many, the idea of the cleansing of the heavenly sanctuary, will be treated with scorn, "because," say they, "there is nothing in heaven to be cleansed." Such overlook the fact that the holy of holies, where God manifested his glory, and which no one but the high priest could enter, was, according to the law, to be cleansed, because the sins of the people were borne into it by the blood of sin-offering. Lev. xvi. And they overlook the fact that Paul plainly testifies that the heavenly sanctuary must be cleansed for the same reason. Heb. ix, 23, 24. See also Col. i, 20. It was unclean in this sense only: the sins of men had been borne into it through the blood of sin-offering, and they must be removed. This fact can be grasped by every mind.

The work of cleansing the sanctuary, changes the ministration from the holy place to the holiest of all. Lev. xvi; Heb. ix, 6, 7; Rev. xi, 10. As the ministration in the holy place of the temple in heaven began immediately after the end of the typical system, at the close of the sixty-nine and a half weeks, [Dan. ix, 27,] so the ministration in the holiest of all, in the heavenly sanctuary, begins with the termination of the 2300 days. Then our High Priest enters the holiest to cleanse the sanctuary. The termination of this great period, marks the commencement of the ministration of the Lord Jesus in the holiest of all. This work, as presented in the type, we have already seen was for a twofold purpose, viz: the forgiveness of iniquity, and the cleansing of the sanctuary. And this great work our Lord accomplishes with his own blood; whether by the actual presentation of it, or by virtue of its merits, we need not stop to inquire.

No one can fail to perceive that this event, the cleansing of the sanctuary, is one of infinite importance. This accomplishes the great work of the Messiah in the tabernacle in heaven, and renders it complete. The work of cleansing the sanctuary is succeeded by the act of placing the sins, thus removed, upon the head of the scape-goat, to be borne away for ever from the sanctuary. The work of our High Priest for the sins of the world, will then be completed, and he be ready to appear "without sin unto salvation." The act of placing the sins upon the head of the scape-goat, in the type, has already been noticed. Lev. xvi, 6, 7-10, 20-22. The following valuable remarks on this important point are from the pen of O. B. L. Crozier, written in 1846.

"THE SCAPE-GOAT.—The next event of that day, after the sanctuary was cleansed, was the putting of all the iniquities and transgressions of the children of Israel upon the scape-goat, and sending him away into a land not inhabited, or of separation. It is supposed by almost every one that this goat typified Christ in some of his offices, and that the type was fulfilled at the first Advent. From this opinion I must differ, because, 1. That goat was not sent away till after the high priest had made an end of cleansing the sanctuary. Lev. xvi, 20, 21. Hence that event cannot meet its antitype till after the end of the 2300 days. 2. It was sent away from Israel into the wilderness, a land not inhabited, to receive them. If our blessed Saviour is its antitype, he also must be sent away, not his body alone, but soul and body, for the goat was sent away alive, from, not to, nor into, his people; neither into heaven, for that is not a wilderness, or land not inhabited. 3. It received and retained all the iniquities of Israel; but when Christ appears the second time he will be 'without sin.' 4. The goat received the iniquities from the hands of the priest, and he sent it away. As Christ is the priest, the goat must be something else besides himself which he can send away. 5. This was one of two goats, chosen for that day, of which one was the Lord's, and was offered for a sin-offering; but the other was not called the Lord's, neither offered as a sacrifice. Its only office was to receive the iniquities from the priest, after he had cleansed the sanctuary from them, and bear them into a land not inhabited, leaving the sanctuary, priest and people, behind, and free from their iniquities. Lev. xvi,

7-10, 22. 6. The Hebrew name of the scape-goat, as will be seen from the margin of verse 8, is Azazel. On this verse, Wm. Jenks, in his Comp. Conn. has the following remarks: 'Scape-goat. See diff. opin. in Hoeckel. Spence, after the oldest opinion of the Hebrews and Christians, thinks Azazel is the name of the devil; and so Rosenmire, whom see. The Syriac has Azazel the angel (strong one) who revolted.'

7. At the appearing of Christ, as taught in Rev. xx, Satan is to be bound and cast into the bottomless pit, which act and place are significantly symbolized by the ancient high priest sending the scape-goat into a separate and uninhabited wilderness.—

8. Thus we have the scripture, the definition of the name in two ancient languages both spoken at the same time, and the oldest opinion of the Christians in favor of regarding the scape-goat as a type of Satan. In the common use of the term, men always associate it with something mean, calling refugees from justice, scape-goats. Ignorance of the law and its meaning is the only possible origin that can be assigned for the opinion that the scape-goat was a type of Christ.

Because it is said, 'The goat shall bear upon him all their iniquities into a land not inhabited,' [Lev. xvi, 22,] and John said, 'behold the Lamb of God, that taketh [margin, beareth] away the sin of the world,' it is concluded without further thought that the former was the type of the latter. But a little attention to the law will show that the sins were borne from the people by the priest, and from the priest by the goat. 1. They are imparted to the victim. 2. The priest bore them in his blood to the sanctuary. 3. After cleansing it from them on the tenth day of the seventh month, he bore them to the scape-goat. 4. The goat finally bore them away beyond the camp of Israel to the wilderness.

This was the legal process, and when fulfilled, the author of sins will have received them back again, (but the ungodly will bear their own sins,) and his head will have been bruised by the seed of the woman; 'the strong man armed' will have been bound by a stronger than he, and his house (the grave) spoiled of its goods, the saints. Matt. xii, 20; Luke xi, 21, 22."

The great work of atonement is now complete, and the work of our Lord as priest, accomplished. The sins of those who have obtained pardon through the great sin-offering, are, at the close of our Lord's work in the holy places, blotted out, [Acts iii, 19,] and being then transferred to the scape-goat, are borne away from the sanctuary and lost for ever, and rest upon the head of their author, the devil. The Azazel, or antitypical scape-goat, will then have received the sins of those who have been pardoned in the sanctuary, and in the lake of fire, will suffer for the sins which he has instigated. God's people, the host, will then be free for ever from their iniquity. "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still; and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still; and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still; and he that is holy, let him be holy still. And behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be." Rev. xxii, 11, 12. "And to you, who are troubled, rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." 2 Thess. i, 7, 8.

CAUSE OF OUR DISAPPOINTMENT.

Why were these disappointed, who looked for Jesus in 1844? This important question, we believe, can be answered in the most satisfactory manner. Our disappointment did not arise from mistaking the commencement of the 70 weeks. The argument by which the original date is sustained, is, as we have seen, invulnerable. Nor did our disappointment arise from a mistake in believing that the 70 weeks form a part of the 2300 days; for every fraction of that argument, as we have shown, still stands good. These two points being susceptible of the clearest proof, we were not mistaken in believing that the 2300 days would terminate in the seventh Jewish month, 1844. Neither did our disappointment arise from believing that at the end of the 2300 days the work of cleansing the sanctuary would take place. For it is plainly stated, "Unto 2300 days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed."

But when we said that this earth, or a part of this earth, was the sanctuary, and that Christ must descend from heaven at the end of the 2300 days, to purify the earth by fire, we looked for that which the Bible did not warrant us to expect. Here was the cause of our disappointment. For we have seen that there is no scriptural authority to support the view that any part of the earth is the sanctuary, or that the burning of the earth, and the melting of the elements, [2 Pet. iii.] is the cleansing of the sanctuary. By a multitude of witnesses, we have proved that the tabernacle of God is the sanctuary to be cleansed, and that its cleansing is a work performed in the holiest of all, with blood, and not with fire. Our disappointment, then, arose from a misunderstanding of the work to transpire at the end of the days.

Our evidence established two points: 1. The fact that the sanctuary should be cleansed at the end of the 2300 days, and that they would terminate at the seventh month, 1844. 2. The type is the example and shadow of heavenly things, as before us the work of the high priest in the seventh month, viz: his act of passing from the holy place to the holiest of all, to cleanse the sanctuary. We reasoned, that as the paschal lamb, which was slain on the fourteenth day of the first month, met its antitype in the death of the Lamb of God, on that day; [Ex. xii, 3-6, 46; 1 Cor. v, 7; John xviii, 28; xix, 36;] and the offering of the first fruits on the sixteenth day of that month, met its antitype in the resurrection of Christ, on that day, the first fruits of them that slept; [Lev. xxiii, 10-15; 1 Cor. xv, 20, 23; Matt. xxviii, 1, 2;] and the feast of Pentecost met its antitype on the day of its occurrence; [Lev. xxiii, 15-21; Acts ii, 1, 2;] so the cleansing of the sanctuary in the seventh month, [Lev. xvi.] at that time in the year when the 2300 days would end, we believed would meet its antitype at the end of that period.

Could we then have understood the subject of the heavenly sanctuary, our disappointment would have been avoided. Our evidence did not prove that our High Priest would descend from the holy place of the heavenly sanctuary, in flaming fire to burn the earth, at the end of the 2300 days; but so far from this, it did prove that he must, at that time, enter within the second veil, to minister for us before the ark of God's testament, and to cleanse the sanctuary. Dan. viii, 14; Heb. ix, 23, 24. Such has been the position of our High Priest since the end of the days, and this is the reason that we did not behold our King in 1844. He had then ministered in only one of the holy places, and the termination of the 2300 days marked the commencement of his ministration in the other. For believing in a literal sanctuary in heaven, consisting of two real holy places, and that our High Priest, while at the Father's right hand, is a minister of both these holy places, we are ranked as spiritualizers, by our enemies. From this unjust charge we appeal to the Judge of all the earth, who will do right.

When John, who saw the door of the first apartment of the heavenly tabernacle opened at the commencement of Christ's ministry, was carried in vision down the stream of time to "the days of the voice of the seventh angel," he saw the most holy place of God's temple opened. "And the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament; and there were lightnings, and voices, and thunders, and an earthquake, and great hail." Rev. xi, 19. Here, by the ark of God's testament, is where our High Priest ministers, since the close of the 2300 days. To this open door in the heavenly sanctuary, [Lev. iii, 7, 8; Isa. xlii, 22-25,] we invite those to come for pardon and salvation, who have not sinned away the day of grace. Our High Priest stands by the Mercy-seat (the top of the ark,) and here he offers his blood, not merely for the cleansing of the sanctuary, but also for the pardon of iniquity and transgression. But while we call men to this open door, and point them to the blood of Christ, offered for us at the mercy-seat, we would remind them of the law of God beneath that mercy-seat, which made the death of God's beloved Son necessary in order that guilty man might be pardoned. That ark contains God's commandments, and he that would receive the blessing of God, at the hand of our High Priest, must keep the commandments contained in the ark, before which he ministers. Many affirm that God has abolished his law; but this is so far from the truth, that that law occupies the choicest place in heaven. It is that "justice and judgment," which are the habitation of God's throne. Ps. lxxix, 14; xevii, 2; Rev. xi, 19.

Two of the three messages of Rev. xiv, had been given prior to the end of the days in 1844, as nearly all Advent believers once admitted. The third angel, with the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus, gives this last message of mercy, while our High Priest ministers for us before the ark containing the commandments. While he is thus ministering, the host, or church, are waiting the completion of the great work, the putting away of their sins. They are "in the last end of the indignation," which occupies a space of time, as is evident from Dan. viii, 19.

The close of the third angel's message is marked by the Son of man taking his position upon the white cloud. Rev. xiv, 14. The last message of mercy will then have closed, and there will be no intercessor between an offended God and guilty, offending man. The angels with the vials of God's wrath, who are now stayed by the ministration of our great High Priest, will then come out of the temple of God, and pour out the vials of unmixed wrath upon the heads of all the wicked.—The plagues, the earthquake, and the great hail, "every stone about the weight of a talent," will follow; the enemies of God will be destroyed, and the little horn will be broken without hand. Rev. xv: xvi; xi, 19; Dan. xii, 1; viii, 25. The sanctuary and the host will then be vindicated, and all opposing power overwhelmed in irretrievable ruin.

Beyond this time of trouble, such as never was, the scenes of the earth made new, rise before us.—In the midst of that Paradise of God, where his saints will ever remain, we behold his glorious sanctuary; [Eze. xxxvii; Rev. xxi, 1-4;] and here we leave it, content, if we may be of the number who shall serve God in that temple, for ever and ever.—Rev. vii, 13-15. The prophetic views of Moses, and of Nathan, respecting God's sanctuary, will then be fully realized; the Lord will reign for ever and ever, and Israel will be planted to be removed no more. Ex. xv; 2 Sam. vii.

Reader, would you escape the things that are coming on the earth? The warning voice of the third angel points out the way. Know for yourself that you have a personal interest in that work which our High Priest is consummating before the ark of God's testament, and when he shall come again, it will be without sin unto your salvation. We entreat you, heed not the voice of those who break the commandments, and teach men so, for they will soon receive their reward; but rather unite with those who teach and keep them, and you will have life eternal, and free admittance through the gates into the Holy City.

Questions by Mrs. Stone.

1. The Angel said to Daniel, "Unto 2300 days; then shall the Sanctuary be cleansed." If this period closed on the tenth day of the seventh month, 1844, how is it that the Sanctuary and host are trodden under foot up to the present time, when it is now 2308 days and a few months over?

2. Will the phraseology or meaning of the text, allow more than one prophetic day from the close of the 2300 days, to accomplish the cleansing of the Sanctuary?

I subscribe myself yours, wishing to know the whole truth,
Eden, Vt. ALBERT STONE.

Answers.

1. The event to transpire at the end of the 2300 days is the cleansing of the Sanctuary. That the tabernacle of God is the Sanctuary of the Bible, a multitude of texts directly testify. Ex. xxxvi, 1-6; Lev. iv, 6; xvi, 33; Num. iv, 16; Ps. lxxviii, 64, 69; Job. viii, 1, 2. That the cleansing of the Sanctuary is the work of a high priest, performed by blood, and not with fire is also a matter of certainty. Lev. xvi; Job. ix. The work of cleansing the Sanctuary is not that of a king taking vengeance on his adversaries, but that of a priest concluding his work in the tabernacle of God. Hence, this work must precede the second Advent, and be accomplished ere the priestly work of our Lord is closed in the Sanctuary of God. Until that point of time, the wrath of God is stayed by the intercession of our great High Priest. When that point is reached the sin of the host or church, having been transferred from the Sanctuary to the antitypical scape-goat, and the saints of God being all sealed, the wrath of God without mixture of mercy is poured out, and the adversaries of the Lord are destroyed with an utter destruction. The period of time in which the Sanctuary is being cleansed, we understand to be what the angel denominates "the last end of the indignation." Dan. viii, 19. That it occupies a space of time is evident from the form of expression used by Gabriel: "I will make thee know what shall be in the last end of the indignation."

2. We think there is nothing in Dan. viii, which limits the cleansing of the Sanctuary to one prophetic day. If the ministry in the holiest of all were proportioned to the length of time occupied by our Lord in ministering in the true apartment, several prophetic days must be required. And if the mighty events connected with that ministration be taken into the account, this will appear in the highest degree reasonable and just.

POSITION OF THE ADVENT HERALD ON THE SANCTUARY QUESTION.

A correspondent of the Herald writes as follows: [See Herald of April 16th.]

BRO. BLISS:—You are presenting constantly in various numbers of the Herald overwhelming, and indubitable proof derived from history, Ptolemy's Canon, various eclipses, etc., that the seventh year of Artaxerxes' reign dated in the year a. c. 457-8, holding each and every other date to be utterly unfounded. This may be correct.

Again, you still maintain as did the entire body of Adventists previous to 1843-4, that the seventh of Artaxerxes is the only true date for "the going forth of the commandment" mentioned in Dan. ix. 25, and for the commencement of the seventy prophetic weeks. And you will not for a moment allow of any other.

Furthermore, you have limited but once—(believe—and then in a monosyllable to J. M. Orrock, that the seventy weeks and 2300 years have different dates. Now, generally speaking, prima facie, each and all of your chronological deductions and arguments go to prove that the 2300 years ended in 1844. And there is a numerous class of persons scattered throughout the country who are characterized by keeping a "seventh day Sabbath," and who contend that the 2300 years run out in that year, and the heavenly Sanctuary then began to "be cleansed," who go to your writings and the Herald for all their proof. In their Advent Review and Sabbath Herald, their discourses, and in all their publications, assuming the connection between the seventy weeks and 2300 years—you are endlessly and copiously quoted to prove their position. And we up here in the country who have perpetually to combat the error, you have said do completely disarm, while our opponents every week go down to Boston to headquarters—where you furnish them with heavy weapons to fight us. What do you mean? Are the 2300 years ended? or do they reach till the Lord comes?

A full answer and explanation would very much oblige hundreds of careful and interested readers of the excellent Herald.
D. T. T.

We have not space to present the answer of the Editor, which occupies about two columns of that paper. We therefore refer to some of its leading features.—He first states that the 2300 years have not ended, and that they will extend to the coming of the Lord. He then attempts to prove that the land of Palestine is the Lord's Sanctuary; and that the cleansing of the Sanctuary is the event described in 2 Pet. iii. 12, viz: the molting of the elements, and the burning of the earth, with the works which are therein. This he puts forth as an absolute demonstration that the 2300 years extend to the coming of the Lord. He next asserts that Daniel could have had no idea of the heavenly Sanctuary; and that the idea of cleansing the heavenly Sanctuary originated with the Devil. As the commencement of the 70 weeks with the going forth of that decree, a. c. 457, is established by "overwhelming and indubitable proof," and as the intermediate dates, and final termination of that period of 400 days are established by such an array of evidence, that, to use the language of the Herald in this very article, an alteration of those dates "would hopelessly change all chronology, and effectually destroy its authority," the only alternative is to deny the connection of the 70 weeks and 2300 days. But to satisfy the most incredulous that the 70 weeks are not the first 400 days of the 2300, the Herald affirms that "the termination of the days cannot be in the past;" [because in that case the earth would have been burned before this;] and as all can understand that 1810 prophetic days,

(the number left after the 400 are cut off) could only extend from a. c. 34, where the 400 days terminated, to 1814, it will not do to admit that the two periods begin together; for the days in that case have ended, and yet, the earth is not burned!

Such is the general outline of the position of the Herald. To prove that the land of Palestine is the Sanctuary, the Editor omits almost every instance in which the word Sanctuary occurs in our English version of the Holy Scriptures, and presents an argument from the original Hebrew. This seems like a virtual admission that there is no tenable ground in the English Bible for the view that Palestine is the Sanctuary. Relative to the argument drawn from the Hebrew, we of course say nothing. We have only to remark that if the question, What constitutes the Sanctuary? can be answered from the English version of the Bible, it can be settled beyond all controversy that the tabernacle of God (typical and antitypical) is the only thing that God recognizes as His Sanctuary.

On the cleansing of the Sanctuary, the Herald first argues that the cleansing of the Sanctuary is its justification, and then, somewhat singularly, contends that this act of justifying the Sanctuary is performed by burning it up, with all the rest of the material globe! after which, new heavens and new earth are created. But admitting that the land of Canaan is the Sanctuary, and that the burning of the earth is the cleansing of the Sanctuary, there is not even then, a single testimony in the Holy Scriptures that the conflagration of our globe will occur at the second Advent. On the contrary, this event is evidently located among the closing scenes of the day of God. See Rev. xx; xxi. And as a matter of consequence the 2300 years cannot reach to that event.

But the idea of justifying a thing by consuming it in the fire, is very singular, and extraordinary indeed. Certain it is, that whether the Bible recognizes any such justification of a thing or not, the idea of cleansing or justifying the Sanctuary by fire, is never once hinted; the only method there recognized is by blood. Lev. xvi.

The assertion of Bro Bliss that Daniel could have no idea of the heavenly Sanctuary has been, we think, sufficiently met in former articles in the Review, in which we have shown that Gabriel in his explanation of the vision of the eighth chapter, did in chapter ix, bring to Daniel's view the anointing of the true tabernacle, as the closing event of the 70 weeks. We have cited various testimonies on this point; but perhaps that of Bro Bliss himself, as given in the Midnight Cry, April 13, 1843, may be as much to the point.—Speaking of the day of Pentecost, he says:

"Then also the Most Holy had been anointed—the last event of the 70 weeks; for then Christ had entered into the Holiest of all, and sprinkled it with his own blood."

Then according to the testimony of the Editor of the Herald, the heavenly Sanctuary was presented to Daniel's mind.

The statement of the Herald that the cleansing of the heavenly Sanctuary is a doctrine which originated with the Devil, directly charges Paul with writing, not by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, but under the direct influence of the Devil. For the Apostle establishes this doctrine in the most satisfactory manner. He testifies thus: "It was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these. For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us." Heb. ix, 23, 24.

But that the Advent Herald should deny the connection of the 70 weeks and 2300 days is that which causes us the greatest surprise. If this is to be considered as its future position, we think its conductors should no longer claim to be the advocates of the peculiar views of Wm. Miller. Whoever wrests from Mr. Miller the view that the 70 weeks are the first 490 days of the 2300, robs him of the great argument by which he aroused the world on time, and without which he would have been able to effect but little.—As the Herald chooses to deny the connection of these two periods, rather than to admit that we may have been mistaken respecting the Sanctuary, we would respectfully present the following questions for its consideration:

Was not Gabriel commanded to explain to Daniel that vision in which the period of 2300 days was given? Did not Gabriel on that occasion explain every part of the vision to Daniel, with the exception of the Sanctuary and 2300 days? Does not Daniel say, however, at the close of the chapter, that he was "astounded at the vision but none understood it?" If none understood it, had Gabriel fulfilled the divine mandate, "Make this man to understand the vision?" Did not that charge still rest upon him, accomplished only in part? Was not Daniel in Chap. ix earnestly seeking God, with reference to the Sanctuary? Does not the man Gabriel whom he had seen in the vision of Chap. viii, in answer to this prayer, say to Daniel, "I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding?" Does he not then charge him to understand the matter, and to consider the vision? Is not this a clear and unanswerable testimony, that Gabriel has now come to complete the charge given him in chapter viii, which was, "Make this man to understand the vision?" Does he not begin his explanation with the subject of time? Is not the phrase "Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people and upon thy holy city," literally rendered, "Seventy weeks are cut off upon thy people" &c? Have you not proved this point at length from the testimony of such men as Dr. Gill, Hengstenberg, Gieseler, and many other scholars of high standing, and also from the Septuagint and Vulgate? What are the 70 weeks "cut off" from? From nothing? or from indefinite space? As the great period of 2300 days had been given in the vision of chapter viii, is it not certain, when Gabriel comes to finish the explanation of that vision, and testifies that 70 weeks are cut off, that they are cut off from the only period which had been given, viz: the 2300 days? Is there then the least ground for a reasonable doubt that the 70 weeks are the first 490 days of the 2300? And as the commencement of the 70 weeks in a. c., 457—the termination of 69 of them in a. d. 27, of 69 and a half in the Spring of a. d. 31, and of the whole period in the Autumn of a. d. 34—is established beyond all controversy, can there be the least question that 1810 days (the number left after cutting off 490) would extend to the Autumn of 1844 and no farther?

And is it not true that Gabriel does explain the fact to Daniel, that only 400 of the 2300 days belong to the earthly Sanctuary? And does not Gabriel name the anointing of the heavenly Sanctuary as the last event of the 70 weeks? Does not the ninth chapter of Hebrews plainly and distinctly testify that about that time, the earthly Sanctuary was superseded by the heavenly, even as the Levitical priesthood gave place to that of the order of Melchisedec? If the ninth of Daniel is an appendix and explanation of the eighth, can the conclusion be avoided, that Gabriel did explain the transfer from the earthly Sanctuary to the heavenly, and that the 2300 days expired in 1844? If the ninth of Daniel is not an explanation of the eighth, how can the wise at the time of the end, understand the 2300 days, when no starting point for the period has ever been given? Finally, can any criticism set aside the fact that the Sanctuary of the first covenant was the tabernacle which Moses erected as the pattern of the true, (Heb. ix, 1-5,) and that the Sanctuary of the new covenant is the true tabernacle which the Lord pitched and not man? Heb. viii, 1-5.

THE CLEANSING OF THE SANCTUARY.

We are pleased to notice an article in the Advent Herald for April 3, headed, "The Atonement," written with evident reference to our views of the closing work in the heavenly Sanctuary. As we entertain no other feeling toward the conductors of the Advent Herald than that of respect, we are much gratified that they are now calling the attention of their readers to this subject. The article begins with a reference to a former argument in the Herald, (noticed in this number of the Review), that the mountain on which Jerusalem is built, is the Sanctuary to be cleansed at the end of the days. It next refers to our view, that the heavenly Sanctuary is the one to be cleansed, in fulfillment of Dan. viii, 14. In contending against this view, it candidly admits that the ninth chapter of Hebrews teaches the purification or cleansing of the heavenly Sanctuary, but declares that this event was to be accomplished at the commencement of Christ's ministration, and not at its conclusion. In the language of the Herald, "When were those heavenly things purified by the blood of Christ? is the question at issue."

The admission of this plain fact, that the heavenly Sanctuary, was, according to Paul, at a certain period, to be cleansed, we could have hardly expected. It seems to contrast somewhat singularly with the remark in the Herald for April 16, that "to talk about the cleansing of some heavenly Sanctuary which was never defiled," "is so absurd that the idea could only have originated in a device of Satan to confuse and mislead honest souls." As our brethren of the Herald have in two weeks so far advanced, that from declaring the doctrine of the cleansing of the heavenly Sanctuary a "device of Satan," they now admit the fact in distinct terms, and only contend that that event is located by the Bible at the commencement of Christ's ministration and not at its close, we are interested to continue the investigation with them a little longer.

Were it possible to show that the word Sanctuary applied to ten thousand different objects, there would, even then, be no chance for dispute relative to that object which God designates as his Sanctuary, and to which the prophecy of Daniel belongs. Paul has stated in explicit language what the Sanctuary of the first covenant was. Hence, we may obtain an exact idea of what was the Sanctuary, from the days of Moses to the first Advent. Does he state that it was mount Zion, the land of Canaan, the earth, or the church? Neither of these is named by Paul as the Sanctuary of that covenant; on the contrary all are omitted, and another definite object is presented, viz: the tabernacle which Moses erected as a pattern of the true in heaven. Read his statement in Heb. ix, 1-5. The Sanctuary of the new covenant is stated with equal distinctness, viz: the true tabernacle which the Lord pitched and not man. Heb. viii, 1, 2. There are but "two covenants" and the Sanctuary connected with each is so plainly and distinctly named in the New Testament that no effort of criticism can substitute something else in their place. Daniel's vision of the 2300 days begins in the period of the first covenant and extends across a large part of the gospel dispensation, or period of the second covenant, to the immediate vicinity of the second Advent. As a matter of consequence the vision of Daniel covers about 400 prophetic days of the period of the typical Sanctuary, and the remainder belongs to the antitypical Sanctuary, which at the end of that period took the place of the type.

The Herald freely admits the ministration of the Levitical priesthood in both the holy places of the earthly tabernacle, and, also, that the greater, and more perfect tabernacle in heaven has taken the place of that pattern. But it contends (if we do not mistake its meaning) that the holiest of all is the only part of the earthly tabernacle that was a pattern of the true tabernacle in heaven; and that the ministration in that apartment was the only part of the ministration in the earthly tabernacle that prefigured the ministration of Christ in heaven; and that, unlike the earthly high priest, who cleansed the Sanctuary at the close of his ministration, because the sins of the people had been borne there, our High Priest cleanses the heavenly Sanctuary at the very commencement of his ministry, and preparatory to his act of making intercession for us. As the antitype commenced when the type ceased, so Christ must then have begun his ministration in the holiest of all in heaven; the act with which he commences that ministration being the cleansing of the Sanctuary. Hence, "there has been no heavenly Sanctuary to purify" since our Lord's first act as High Priest.

From these views of the Herald we dissent, for the following reasons: 1. Because the entire building, viz: the two holy places, (and not merely the holiest of all,) is expressly stated to be the pattern of the true tabernacle. (1.) Moses, at the command of God, made a tabernacle consisting of two holy places, after the pattern showed to him in the Mount. Ex. xxv, 8, 9; xxvi, 33. (2.) David received the pattern of the temple "by the Spirit;" and Solomon erected the temple consisting of two holy places, after that pattern. 1 Chron. xxviii, 10-19; 2 Chron. iii. (3.) Paul testifies that these holy places were the figures [plural] of the true and patterns of things in the heavens. Heb. ix, 23, 24. (4.) The word rendered Sanctuary, [Heb. viii, 2,] and Holiest of all, [Chap. ix, 8; x, 19,] is plural signifying holies, or holy places; thus furnishing incontrovertible testimony that the heavenly Sanctuary does not consist merely, of the holiest of all.

2. We dissent from the position of the Herald that the ministration in the holiest of all was the only part of the work of the earthly priests that typified the work of our Lord in the heavenly tabernacle. (1.) We know of no evidence to sustain such a view. (2.) It is expressly stated that the ministration of the priests under the typical dispensation was "the shadow of good things to come;" "the example and shadow of heavenly things;" and that Christ ministers in the greater and more perfect tabernacle, a High Priest of those good things to come. Heb. viii, 5; ix, 11; x, 1. (3.) The holiest of all, containing the ark of God's testament is not opened until the sounding of the seventh angel. Rev. xi, 19.

We think these facts do completely disprove the view that there is but one apartment to the tabernacle in heaven, and that our Lord is a minister simply of one holy place. If we are correct in believing that the ministration in the earthly tabernacle was "the example and shadow" of Christ's more excellent ministry, then it is a certainty that Christ does not exactly reverse the order of that ministration! In other words, as the work of the earthly high priest was concluded by the act of cleansing the Sanctuary, and placing the sins, thus removed from it, upon the head of the scape-goat, we may not expect our High Priest to begin his work in the heavenly tabernacle by that act. If so, the work in the earthly tabernacle, instead of being the example and shadow of Christ's work, is exactly the reverse of it.

Nor is there the least intimation in Paul's commentary on the types, that the cleansing of the Sanctuary is to be before the Lord Jesus ministers in that building for our sins. On the contrary, Paul shows that the heavenly Tabernacle was to be cleansed for the same reason that the earthly Sanctuary had been, viz.: because the sins of the people had been borne there. Heb. ix, 23, 24. This fact incontrovertibly proves that the cleansing of the heavenly Sanctuary, like that of the earthly, occurs at the conclusion of the ministration therein.

The Herald quotes and comments on Heb. ix, 11, 12, 24, 28; x, 12-14; vii, 25, as proof that Christ commences his ministration in the true Tabernacle by purifying it with his own blood. We see no evidence whatever in these texts. It is true that Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and that by virtue of the blood which he then shed, he entered into the heavenly Tabernacle; but this does not furnish the first particle of testimony that he then cleansed the Sanctuary, or that indeed there could with any propriety be such an act.

The treading under foot of the heavenly Sanctuary is no more difficult, than the treading under foot of its minister, our Lord Jesus Christ. Heb. viii, 2; x, 29.

The concluding paragraph of the Herald confesses in distinct terms the fact of the cleansing of the heavenly Sanctuary, though it represents that event as transpiring at the commencement of Christ's ministration instead of its conclusion. It speaks as follows:

"We feel that an apology is due for broaching the subject, for it seems almost incredible that any could be found who could assume a position so contrary to Paul, that the heavenly Sanctuary was not purified at the death of Christ. But we suppose that mental idiosyncrasies will never cease." J. N. A.

The Sanctuary Question.

We are much interested in the investigation of this subject that has been going on recently, and anticipate that it will result in much good. We are happy to have those who do not agree with us, meet us on Bible ground. This the Herald seems disposed to do. Some others, who have made high professions of "free investigation," have met us with misrepresentations and bitter reproaches.

But we think the Herald of May 21st, in the following note, says too much.

"The Sabbath Herald puts to us several questions, because of our articles on the Sanctuary, a few weeks since. If that paper will publish those articles, and will promise to copy our answers, it will give us great pleasure to answer its questions."

It is true that the articles referred to by the Herald are not very lengthy, but it cannot reasonably be expected that we can quote much from the articles of those who differ with us, in the small Semi-monthly Review; much less, that we should promise to publish "answers" probably not yet written. But this we will promise, that as soon as the Review shall be issued weekly, it will publish what has appeared in the Herald on the Sanctuary question, if the Herald will promise to publish Dr. J. K. Andrews' articles published in the Review in reply to the Herald. The following is a recent article from the Herald, and Dr. Andrews' reply. Let both be carefully studied. And may the Lord lead his people into all truth.—Ed.

THE ANTITYPICAL TABERNACLE.

Every ordinance under the law had a significance, by which the Holy Ghost communicated important truths. And it is not improbable that the inspired teachers of the Jewish dispensation comprehended their meaning, as well as Paul who wrote at a later period. Whether they did, or not, is however foreign to the question under consideration.

The Sabbath Herald, has become not a little mystified respecting the significance of the Jewish Tabernacle; but as it exhibits a great appearance of sincerity in its reasonings we are not indisposed to show wherein, in our opinion, it has misconceived the subject.

The Jewish "Tabernacle" and "rooms of the ministry," are called by Paul, "the patterns of things in the heavens." Because the Jewish Tabernacle had its two apartments—the first called the "Sanctuary," (Heb. 9: 1.) and after the second veil, the tabernacle which is called the Holiest of all," (Ib. 9: 3.)—our Sabbath friends argue that "the heavenly things themselves," are comprised in two corresponding apartments; and they claim that at Christ's death, he entered into the first, and that he has within a few years gone into the second, to fulfill the counterpart of the inner Tabernacle.

We do not know just how material their views are of heaven; or whether their idea of a pattern leads them to believe that in heaven there are places thus curtained off; but their mode of speaking of these things makes them open to such suggestions. Therefore we will first explain what we understand by the earthly things being patterns of the heavenly.

They are not "patterns" in the sense in which one machine is modelled after another. If the word was used in that sense, the things in the heavens would be facsimiles of those on earth, and would in no respect take precedence of them. The word used is a metaphor, and conveys a corresponding meaning. The Jewish Tabernacle was a figure of the true; and by its observances were prefigured important truths connected with man's salvation. The ceremonies of the law, taught by a figure how man might approach to God and be saved. By the blood shed, was brought to view the shedding of the blood of Christ which was to take away sin. And by the Tabernacle, the place of these observances, was typified heaven, the place where Christ after he had offered himself, was to sit down at the Father's right hand to make intercession for sinners. (NOTE 1.)

The peculiarity of the Tabernacle in consisting of two apartments, was not without its significance.—"The priests went always into the first tabernacle, accomplishing the service of God. But into the second, went the high priest alone once every year, not without blood."—Heb. 9: 7. The distinction in the time and manner of the service in the two apartments teaches important lessons, if we may comprehend them. As the services of each, teach how we may have access to God, the two show that at one time man may approach in a manner different from what he might at a former time. We shall now proceed to show that at the death and ascension of Christ was fulfilled the significance of the "Holiest of all;" (v. 3d;) whence it follows that the worldly sanctuary, the services of the first apartment, signified the way of approach to God during the period anterior to his death. (NOTE 2.)

The way of salvation has been one in all ages, with this difference: Before the offering of the Great Sacrifice, the saints relied on a work to be done; since then, they trust in a work already accomplished. A way into the holiest of all was to be made manifest by the death and ascension of Christ: "The Holy Ghost this signifying, that the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest while as the first tabernacle was yet standing."—Heb. 9: 8. (NOTE 3.)

Previous to its manifestation, they approached God in expectation of it. As the priest at all times went into the first apartment of the tabernacle, so could the saints at all times approach God; but his going occasionally into the inner tabernacle, signified that there was to be a work performed in heaven, which should enable man to approach God in a more perfect manner. (NOTE 4.)

There can be nothing more holy than the "holiest of all;" and Christ's going into the holiest of all in heaven, can be typified only by the priests going into the holiest of all in the inner sanctuary. To typify it by the first apartment, is to set aside all consistency in the use of types. (NOTE 5.) And that Christ did go into the holiest of all, on his ascension, and not into some inferior relation to God, is expressly affirmed by the apostle: "Christ being come an high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say not of this building; neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us."—Heb. 9: 11, 12. (NOTE 6.) "For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true, but into heaven itself now to appear in the presence of God for us."—Ib. v. 24th.

The presence of God was symbolized by the cloud over the mercy-seat, between the cherubim in the inner tabernacle; consequently when it is affirmed that Christ does now appear in the presence of God for us, it affirms that he is where the service of the inner tabernacle signified his presence. (NOTE 7.)—And this is further shown by verses 25th and 26th, where the holy place where he has entered, is particularly contrasted with that where the high priest entered once a year. He entered into heaven, not "that he should offer himself often, as the high priest entereth into the holy place every year with the blood of others; for then must he often have suffered since the foundation of the world; but now once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself." He has done all that was typified by the yearly acts of the high priest. (NOTE 8.) And because of this,—because he hath consecrated for us a new and living way "through the veil," which closed the inner tabernacle, we may have "boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus."—Heb. 10: 19, 20. (NOTE 9.)

"Seeing then that we have a great High Priest, that is passed into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast our profession. For we have not an high priest that cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin. Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need." Heb. 4: 14-16. If our Sabbath brethren are correct, then Paul was entirely mistaken in supposing that the way into the holiest of all had been made manifest. But it is because it was then manifested that we may hope for salvation.

When the Jewish high priest had gone in with a sin-offering and finished his work in the inner tabernacle, his final act was to come out and bless the waiting congregation. This only is future in the antitype. "This man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins for ever, sat down on the right hand of God; from henceforth expecting till his enemies be made his footstool. For by one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified."—Heb. 10: 14. "As it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment: so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him he shall appear the second time without sin unto salvation."—Heb. 9: 27, 28.

Nothing can be more clear and positive than the teachings of the apostle respecting the work which Christ came to accomplish. It was nothing less than the entire fulfillment of the things signified by the inner tabernacle—the outer, being the way in which before that time man might approach his Maker. (Note 10.)

NOTE 1. We are gratified to see that the Herald is pursuing the investigation of the Sanctuary subject. We believe that good can hardly fail to result from a serious and attentive examination of the important truths embraced in this subject. We thank the conductors of the Herald for attempting, in a kind manner, to point out what they consider our error, and we beg them to listen with candor while we reply. The position and reasoning of the Herald, may, we believe, be correctly stated thus, in short: 1. There is no literal tabernacle of God in heaven; but heaven itself is the antitypical tabernacle. 2. Therefore there is no temple "curtained off" there, while heaven being the tabernacle of God. 3. Hence there cannot be two "holy places" in which our High Priest should minister for us. 4. Consequently our High Priest entered the only place of his ministration when he ascended; and, therefore, when it is said that the earthly tabernacle with its two apartments and the sacred vessels of the tabernacle were patterns of things in the heavens, the statement must be metaphorical, and cannot be literally true; for there are no such things there. 5. Finally, from all this it follows that the doctrine that Christ began to minister at his ascension in the first apartment of the heavenly Sanctuary, and in the second apartment at the end of the 2300 days, must be erroneous.—We believe that we have not misstated the position of the Herald—the reader can judge—and we will now take up its arguments separately as the notes are appended.

The root of the error into which our friends of the Herald have fallen, is found in the closing sentence of the paragraph to which this note is appended. The sentiment to which we refer is this, namely: that there is no literal tabernacle of God in heaven. "By the tabernacle," says the Herald, "was typified heaven." Here is the point, then, where we separate, namely: whether the temple of God where our High Priest ministers, is a real temple in heaven, or heaven itself. Let the error be on either side, here is the point where it commences. If we establish the fact of the existence of a real temple in heaven, then we shall have proved that the Herald, in denying it, has taken the first step in error, itself. We invite attention to the following testimony:

Rev. xi, 10. "And the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament."

Rev. xiv, 17. "And another angel came out of the temple which is in heaven."

Rev. xv, 5. "And after that I looked, and behold, the temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in heaven was opened."

Rev. xvi, 17. "And the seventh angel poured out his vial into the air; and there came a great voice out of the temple of heaven, from the throne, saying, It is done."

1st. xi, 4. "The Lord is in his holy temple, the Lord's throne is in heaven."

Heb. ix, 11, 12. "But Christ being come an High Priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building; neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood, he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us."

Heb. viii, 1, 2. "Now of the things which we have spoken this is the sum: We have such an High Priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens: a minister of the Sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle which the Lord pitched and not man."

Other testimony might be adduced, but we regard this as amply sufficient. If these texts can be set aside, any number of similar texts could, also, be explained away. Our views of heaven are sufficiently "material" to enable us to credit these testimonies. If the Herald admits the existence of a real temple in heaven, one that can be "opened" to use the Bible expression, then it believes in a place "curtained off" in heaven, as really as ourselves; but if it denies the existence of such a temple, then it contradicts a multitude of plain testimonies. As we have clearly proved that there is a greater and more perfect tabernacle in heaven, we now respectfully represent that it is the Herald that "has become not a little mystified," and not ourselves.

There is a literal temple in heaven, or there is not. If there is a literal temple there, then we are correct in believing that when Moses was commanded to construct the earthly tabernacle and its sacred vessels according to the pattern of that true tabernacle, it meant just what it plainly imported, namely: that he should make the earthly, as near like the one that had been showed to him, as an earthly object could be made like a heavenly one. On the other hand, if there is no literal temple in heaven, then the word "pattern" must be a metaphor, indeed, for it would be hard to construct an edifice, the model of one that did not exist, or to construct a model of heaven itself. But we have proved that God has a real tabernacle in heaven; consequently when it is stated that Moses made a tabernacle after that pattern, we understand that he actually made it like that building.

But the Herald says, that if the word, pattern, be understood in the sense of a model, then the heavenly things "would in no respect take precedence" of the earthly. We marvel that it should make such a statement. Could I not possess a correct pattern of Bunker hill monument, so small that it could sit on the table before me, so cheap that it could be purchased for a few shillings, and so frail that a fall to the floor would be its ruin? Might not a pattern of the house which you occupy be so correctly constructed that it would exhibit an accurate and just view of that building, and yet be no approach to it in size, beauty or value? Finally, might not Moses, with the Lord to help him, be able to construct a just model of the true tabernacle, and yet that true tabernacle be far greater, more perfect and glorious than the tabernacle of Moses? The answer to this is obvious.

NOTE 2. The Herald thinks that in understanding the two holy places in the pattern to have corresponding holy places in the true tabernacle, we are entirely mistaken. The true view according to that paper is this: The two apartments signify the two dispensations; the first apartment representing the Mosaic dispensation; the second, signifying the Christian. There is quite a difference here, certainly, and either the Herald or ourselves are here "not a little mystified." The position of the Herald is, however, in this respect quite consistent with itself: for if there is no temple of God in heaven, then it is very evident that there can be no literal holy places there, the counter-part of those in the earthly tabernacle. But the existence of a real temple in heaven being established by plain statements of the Scriptures, it follows that the starting point of the Herald is wrong, and its reason for calling the word pattern, a metaphor, entirely disproved. We will now present some of our reasons for believing that that real temple in heaven has two holy places. If we make this fact plain, we have disproved the Herald's second point.—The following testimony on this point is conclusive. We gather it from the Old and New Testaments, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established.

1. The tabernacle erected by Moses, after a forty days inspection of the one showed to him in the Mount, and under the strict charge to "make it according to the fashion that he had seen," [Acts vii, 44,] consisted of two holy places, [Ex. xxvi, 33,] and is declared to be a correct pattern or model of that building. Ex. xxv, 8, 9, 40, compared with chapter xxxix, 32-43. That the pattern showed to Moses was a representation of the heavenly Sanctuary, see Heb. viii, 1-5. But if the earthly Sanctuary consisted of two holy places, and the great original from which it was copied consisted of only one, instead of likeness there would be perfect dissimilarity. 2. The temple was built in every respect according to the pattern which God gave to David by the Spirit. 1 Chron. xxviii, 10-19. As the language of the Apocrypha, in repeating this sentiment, is quite remarkable, we quote it: "Thou hast commanded me [Solomon] to build a temple upon thy holy mount, and an altar in the city wherein thou dwellest, a resemblance of the holy tabernacle, which thou hast prepared from the beginning." Wisdom of Solomon ix, 8. The temple was built on a larger, and a scale more grand than the tabernacle; but its distinguishing feature, like the tabernacle, consisted in the fact that it was composed of two holy places. 1 Kings iv; 2 Chron. iii. This is clear proof that the heavenly tabernacle contains the same.

3. Paul plainly states that "the holy places [plural] made with hands" "are the figures [plural] of the true;" or as Macknight renders it, "the holy places made with hands, the images of the true holy places." The Apostle, also, testifies that the tabernacle and its sacred vessels are "patterns of things in the heavens." Heb. ix, 23, 24. This is direct evidence that in the greater and more perfect tabernacle there are two holy places, even as in the "figure," "pattern" or "image." 4. The Apostle actually uses the word holies, [plural,] in speaking of the heavenly Sanctuary. The expression in Heb. ix, 8; x, 19, is not "holy of holies" as in Heb. ix, 3, which is "Agiā, Agion;" but is simply, "hagion" holy places. It is the same word that is rendered Sanctuary in Heb. viii, 2. In each of these three texts, [Heb. viii, 2; ix, 8; x, 19,]

Macknight renders the word "holy places." The Douay Bible renders it "the holies." The heavenly Sanctuary consists of two "holy places." Consequently the Herald is incorrect, also, in its second position. It reasons ingeniously, but not well. No real temple in heaven, no real holy places in a temple there. These are its premises, and no wonder that it should conclude that the word pattern was a metaphor; or that the two holy places of the earthly tabernacle, were the figures of the two dispensations. But we have shown that its premises are false; and however carefully it may reason, its conclusions must be erroneous also.

NOTE 3. The paragraph to which this note is attached, further lays upon the argument of the Herald, which is on this wise: Our Lord at his ascension began his ministration in the hagion; wherefore, it follows that the ministration in the first apartment must have met its antitype before the death of our Lord; and hence, the ministrations in the two apartments of the earthly tabernacle signifies the Mosaic and Gospel dispensations. This is the Herald's chain of reasoning. Let us see if its first point is not erroneous; for it all grows out of that. To prove the first point, Heb. ix, 8, is quoted: "The Holy Ghost thus signifying, that the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while as the first tabernacle was yet standing."

But this text, we believe, does not furnish the proof that it is supposed to furnish. We have already remarked—and we think the Herald will not dispute the point—that the expression here is not "holiest of all," as in verse 3, but is simply holy places, plural. It is certain that Paul wrote the word in the plural, and if it be expressed in the English language, as written by the Apostle, the argument from this text is gone. We believe that Macknight's translation of this text is correct:—"The Holy Ghost signifying this, that the way of the holy places was not yet laid open, while the first tabernacle still standeth." Now say, Brother, does not this literal translation of the phrase completely remove the difficulty which you find in the text, with regard to us. We think that this truth shines out from the text with vivid distinctness, namely: that while the first tabernacle with its two holy places was standing—that is, while the typical dispensation lasted—the way into the greater and more perfect tabernacle was not laid open.—But when the typical dispensation ended, and the pattern was superseded by the true tabernacle, the way of the heavenly holy places was laid open, and we have boldness to enter where our High Priest is ministering for us.

We now examine the conclusion which the Herald draws from this part of its reasoning, namely: the idea that the antitype of the ministration in the first apartment occurred at the same time with that ministration itself. It will not be denied that the ministration in both apartments was the shadow of good things to come, and that that shadow did continue until the death of our Lord. In other words, it reached to the body, which is Christ, and expired with the actual commencement of the good things to come—the offering of the great Sacrifice. The shedding of blood that could take away sin, laid the foundation for a better ministration, and the shadow ceased in the presence of the substance. Col. ii, 14-17. The death of our Lord is the dividing point between the shadow and the substance. It was the end of one, and the beginning of the other.

The typical dispensation had an earthly tabernacle with two holy places, and a ministration in both those holy places. That tabernacle was the pattern of one in heaven, consisting also of real holy places; and that ministration in those holy places was "the example and shadow" of Christ's more excellent ministry in the true tabernacle of God. Now there is not the smallest ground for question—that we can see—as to the point when the Sanctuary of the first covenant was superseded by that of the new, and the ministration of the one Sanctuary done away by the existence of the more excellent ministry in the other. Heb. ix, 1-12; viii, 1-5. Now we ask in view of these facts, on what principle is the fulfillment of a large part of the shadow of good things to come, located in the very period of that shadow? On what principle of interpretation can it be shown that the antitype of the daily ministration existed cotemporary with that type and ceased with it?

One of three positions seems to be before the Herald. 1. To say that the ministration in the first apartment typified nothing. Or, 2. To say that it met its antitype cotemporary with its existence as a type. Or 3. To say, with us, that the shadow of good things to come as presented in the ministration of the two holy places, must meet its antitype since our High Priest has become a minister of those good things to come in the greater and more perfect tabernacle. The first of these positions charges God with folly. The second involves the absurdity of making the type and antitype exist parallel with each other. The third view we believe is consistent with itself, and in harmony with the whole Bible.

NOTE 4. The idea that the priests did not have that access to God, to obtain his blessing for the people, while ministering in the first apartment, that they had while ministering in the second, seems to be the argument on which the Herald relies, to prove that the ministration in the first apartment "signified the way of approach to God" in that dispensation. But this would make the ministration in the first apartment typify itself, and also typify the ministration in the second apartment; for the ministration in the two apartments was "the way of approach to God" before the death of Christ. Certainly this must be a mistaken view. We think that the Herald errs with reference to the work within the second apartment. For it is certain that the forgiveness of sins was freely promised in the ministration in the first apartment; and though it is promised in connection with the service in the second apartment, yet this was but a part of the object of that ministration. The closing up of the yearly round of service, and the cleansing of the Sanctuary, being its great design.

NOTE 5. The Herald says: "There can be nothing more holy than the 'holiest of all,' and Christ's going into the holiest of all in heaven, can be typified only by the priests going into the holiest of all in the inner Sanctuary. To typify it by the first apartment, is to set aside all consistency in the use of types."

These remarks are truthful; but the inconsistency pointed out, does not belong to us, for we do not understand that Christ began to minister in the second apartment when he ascended. Having, as we think, shown the unsoundness of the principle that would locate the antitype of the ministration in the first apartment, in the very period of that ministration itself, we remark that if our brethren of the Herald still contend that Christ began to minister in the second apartment at his ascension, they must adopt one of two positions. 1.—Take the position that Christ's going into the holiest in heaven, in the antitype of the service in the first apartment, which is the very position that they have here shown up. Or 2. They must take the position that the service in the first apartment meant nothing, and can have no antitype; a position which we think no one disposed to adopt.

NOTE 6. But the Herald offers further testimony in proof that Christ began to minister in the holiest at his ascension. As an express affirmation, it cites Heb. ix, 11, 12. "But Christ being come an High Priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building; neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood, he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us." We beg that careful attention may be bestowed on this text. In our opinion it does not even seem to prove the position of the Herald. 1. It does prove the existence of a greater and more perfect tabernacle; that is, greater and more perfect than the first tabernacle, with which it is here contrasted. 2. But it does not prove that Christ entered the most holy place of that tabernacle at his ascension. 3. Nor does the statement that he had obtained "eternal redemption for us" prove that he had fulfilled the type of the priests' entrance into the holiest. The act of obtaining redemption for man, was the death of our Lord upon the cross; though men must become partakers of this by coming to God severally through our High Priest. Heb. ix, 15; Rom. iii, 24, 25; Gal. iv, 4, 5; Col. i, 14; Eph. i, 7; Gal. iii, 13.

NOTE 7. The next argument of the Herald is drawn from these words: "For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true, but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us."—Heb. ix, 24. This text first of all implies that Christ has entered into real holy places, of which the earthly holy places were figures. Read this text with care, and it will save you from believing that the earthly holy places were figures of two dispensations. No, the holy places made with hands are the figures of the true holy places. Or as Macknight renders the sentence, "Christ hath not entered the holy places made with hands, the images of the true holy places."

But the "Herald" draws its argument from the text on this wise: The cloud that was above the mercy-seat in the holiest, symbolized the presence of God. Hence, when it is said that Christ has gone into the presence of God in the true holy places, it follows that he must have entered into the holiest of all.—We are free to admit the fact on which this argument is based, but do not agree with the conclusion drawn from this fact. If the holiest were the only apartment of the tabernacle where God manifested his presence and glory, and where that cloud was manifested, perhaps the conclusion of the "Herald" would be just. But it is a fact that when God entered the tabernacle at the first, his glory filled both holy places. Ex. xl, 34, 35. So, also, with the temple. 1 Kings viii, 10, 11; 2 Chron. v, 13, 14; vii, 1, 2. In the door of the first apartment, the cloud, symbolizing the divine presence, met with Moses, Aaron, Joshua and Israel. Ex. xxxiii, 9-11; Deut. xxxi, 14, 15; Num. xii, 5. And it was in the daily ministration that God promised to meet with Israel at the door of the tabernacle throughout their generations, and to speak with them there, and to sanctify the tabernacle with his glory. Ex. xxxix, 42-44; xxx, 36.

NOTE 8. The next argument of the "Herald" is drawn from verses 25, 26. "Nor yet that he should offer himself often, as the high priest entereth into the holy place every year with blood of others; for then must he often have suffered since the foundation of the world; but now once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself." From this text, the "Herald" argues that Christ at his ascension became the antitype of the priest in entering the holiest. To this we answer that instead of the ministration in the second apartment, it is the yearly round of ministration in both apartments that Paul here places in contrast with the work of Christ in the true tabernacle. In verse 24 the holy places, [plural] are not in contrast with the true holy places. In verse 25, where Paul contrasts the work in the typical tabernacle with that in the true, the same word, holy places, plural, is used, though in our version it stands in the singular. But Macknight and the Douay Bible both give it in the plural. It follows, therefore, that it is the yearly round in the two holy places, as in Chap. x, 1, and not the work in the holiest, merely, that Paul thus places in contrast with the work of our Lord in the true tabernacle. This shows that the antitype of the work in both the holy places, is to be found in the work of our Lord since his ascension. The two holy places [verse 24] have corresponding holy places in the true tabernacle. The work in the typical holy places [verse 25] has its corresponding work in the true holy places. The work in the earthly tabernacle was repeated once a year. But our great Sacrifice is slain once for all, and once for all completes his round of ministration in the true tabernacle.

NOTE 9. Heb. x, 19 which the "Herald" next quotes is also plural, holy places, and not holy of holies. As Macknight is certainly correct in translating the word in the plural, we give his rendering: "Well then, brethren, having boldness in the entrance of the holy places by the blood of Jesus." This text, instead of proving that Christ began to minister in the holiest at his ascension, actually proves the existence of holy places in the true tabernacle. Indeed, Brother, as the text now stands in our version, does it not prove the existence of another apartment in the heavenly Sanctuary?—How can there be a holiest of all there if there is but one apartment?

Note 10. As further proof that Paul was at entire disagreement with the "Sabbath brethren," the "Herald" adduces Heb. iv, 14-16. But this does not affirm anything respecting the heavenly tabernacle; and so far from disagreeing with this statement respecting the High Priest through whom we can come boldly to the throne of grace, we rejoice in the precious truth, that this has ever been the privilege of the children of God.

The "Herald" next asserts that the work of our Lord as Priest, in fulfillment of the types, lacks but the act of coming out to bless the people of God, to stand complete. This statement may, at this time be almost the precise truth; but we disagree with the evident idea of the "Herald," that such has been the case ever since the time of his ascension. Nor does the citation of Heb. x, 14, establish the fact that his work as Priest, in the heavenly tabernacle was all accomplished by his act of taking his place at the Father's right hand. He had indeed offered the one great Sacrifice which is able to perfect forever those who are sanctified through it. But his work in the two holy places was only commenced when he began to minister as a great High Priest at the Father's right hand. The version of Macknight renders Heb. viii, 1, 2, thus: "Now of the things spoken the chief is. We have such an High Priest as became us, who sat down at the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens, a minister of the holy places, namely, of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched and not man." Then our Lord while at the Father's right hand is a minister of the holy places, plural, the very point under discussion. And this great truth is further established by the statement, in verse 5, that the priests who ministered in the tabernacle which Moses made in all things according to the pattern of the true one, served unto the example and shadow of Christ's more excellent ministry.

The statement of Hebrews ix, 27, 28, we receive in its literal import with all joyfulness.

The commencement of the final work of our Lord in the heavenly Sanctuary, namely: the ministration within the second apartment to cleanse that Sanctuary [Heb. ix, 22, 23] being plainly marked by the termination of the 2300 days, we are now, with solemn and prayerful interest, looking for Him to appear the second time, who once was slain for us. The opening of the inner tabernacle of the Sanctuary in Heaven is located in the days of the voice of the seventh angel. Rev. xi, 19. The ministration of our Lord in that apartment will finish the great work of man's salvation, and the vials of the wrath of God will follow, to desolate a guilty world. Rev. x, 7; xv, 5.

"THE ANTITYPICAL TABERNACLE."

THE Advent Herald of July 30th has another article on this subject. It is written in reply to the remarks in the Advent Review of July 7th, on their previous article. As the Review gave the article of the Herald entire, we entertained the hope that the Herald in replying to us, would give its readers some general idea, at least, of the arguments of the Review. But in this we are much disappointed.—We are glad, however, that the Herald keeps this subject before its readers, as we trust that it will call the attention of some, at least, to the investigation of this question.

The Herald begins by declining the discussion respecting a literal tabernacle in heaven of which the Jewish was a copy. It says:

"We shall spend no time in the discussion of that question, because it is not material to the question at issue, and because the application of the scriptures quoted to sustain it, shows a want of knowledge of the nature and laws of symbols and tropes to which violence is thus done. The point at issue is whether Heb. ix teaches that Christ had entered on the work typified by the services of the inner apartment of the Jewish tabernacle; or whether it was on that only which was symbolised by the outer."

We will not call in question the sincerity of the writer, but the truthfulness of these remarks we are compelled to deny. We deny the violation of the "laws of symbols and tropes" in proving the existence of a literal temple of God in heaven. As proof on that point we presented without comment seven texts of scripture, from Revelation, Psalms and Hebrews. The texts from Revelation are the only ones where we could violate the laws of symbols, as the Psalm from which we quoted, and the book of Hebrews are not symbolic visions. We were not ignorant of the fact that Bro. Bliss, in applying the laws of symbols to the book of Revelation, explains the tabernacle in heaven to be heaven itself; and the New Jerusalem, which contains the throne of God and the Lamb, and the river and tree of life, he explains to be "the redeemed Church." Now we have no complaint to make against the acknowledged laws of symbols; we only claim that in these cases Bro. B. has misapplied them. We suppose that the Herald in charging us with the violation of the laws of symbols, reasoned on this wise: "All agents or objects seen in symbolic visions are symbols;" the book of Revelation is a symbolic vision; therefore the temple in heaven seen by John must be a symbol.

The reader will perceive at once that this same argument will prove that the Lord Jesus Christ, [Rev. i, 12-18,] the throne of God with him who sits upon it, [Rev. vi, 2, 3,] the whole company of the redeemed before the throne, with all the angelic host, [Rev. vii, 2-12,] the new heavens and new earth, and the river and tree of life, [Rev. xxi; xxii,] are all symbols.—All these objects are proved to be symbols by the same argument that proves the temple in heaven a symbol. Another admitted law of symbols will, however, explain all that is difficult on this point. It is this: "Symbols that are of such a nature, situation or relation, that there is nothing of an analogous kind that they can represent, symbolize agents, objects, acts, or events of their own kind. Example, Dan.

vii, 9." This law of symbols fully justifies us in believing that the representation of the temple in heaven, and of the New Jerusalem, and of the new earth, were symbols or representations of those glorious objects.

But we are not left to doubtful conclusions on this subject. That there will be a literal new heavens and new earth, as shown to John, is proved in the most positive manner by another Apostle, who certainly is not using symbolical language. I refer to him who said, "The heavens being on fire shall be dissolved and the elements shall melt with fervent heat. Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." 2 Pet. iii, 12, 13. We will say the same respecting the New Jerusalem. The book of Hebrews, which is not a symbolic vision, proves that there is a literal city for the saints. Chap. xi, 10. "For he [Abraham] looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." Surely this is a real city. Verse 16. "But now they desire a better country, that is, an heavenly; wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God; for he hath prepared for them a city." Chap. xii, 22, testifies that this city is the heavenly Jerusalem. We reject the view, therefore, that the New Jerusalem, which John saw, was a symbol of the redeemed saints, and believe it to be a faithful representation of that beloved city.

The book of Hebrews bears equally decisive testimony respecting the existence of the greater and more perfect tabernacle which the Lord pitched and not man. Chap. ix, 11-12; viii, 1-5. And the existence of the temple in heaven being established, we are constrained to believe that when John saw that temple with its ark, its censer and its altar, he had a just representation of that building of which Moses erected a pattern. The testimony of the book of Hebrews cannot be set aside as symbolic. But Bro. Bliss claims that the word "tabernacle" in Chap. viii, 2; ix, 11, and the word "pattern," in Chap. viii, 5; ix, 23, are metaphors. It is because we receive these words literally and not as metaphors that Bro. B. accuses us of having violated the laws of tropes. But we think that the Review of July 7th clearly proves that the Herald has no ground for calling these words metaphors. If there is any farther evidence that these words are metaphors, we kindly invite the Herald to present it. If not we shall be constrained to receive these statements in their literal import. To us, there would be greater propriety in calling the tabernacle which Moses erected, a metaphor, than in calling that a metaphor which Paul says was greater and more perfect, and built by God himself.

But the Herald thinks that the existence of a literal tabernacle in heaven, consisting of two holy places like the Jewish tabernacle, is not material to the question at issue; that is, it has no connection with the time of Christ's entrance into the holiest. The existence of a tabernacle in heaven consisting of two holy places, and the fact of Christ's ministration in those holy places, after the "example" of the Levitical priests in the earthly holy places, [Heb. viii, 5; ix, 1-7,] is actually all that has ever been claimed by the Review. It was because that the whole frame-work of the Herald's argument rested upon the denial of this doctrine, that this part of the subject was taken up at length in the Review of July 7th. We think that the unsoundness of the Herald's position on this point, was clearly shown in that paper; and we deeply regret that they did not either acknowledge the point or else show us our error. Its reasons for declining the discussion of this part of the question, we have here seen to be not valid. If the Herald will show just reasons for denying the existence of the temple of God in heaven, we will not prolong the discussion of this subject.

After declining the discussion of this part of the subject, the Herald re-states its former argument from Heb. ix and x, in proof that Christ began to minister in the holiest at his ascension. As we gave this argument entire, with a reply appended to each point in the Review of July 7th, we will not occupy space in presenting it a second time. But though our brethren of the Herald thus carefully state their own argument the second time, they omit every argument presented by the Review in reply, with the exception of a single item, viz: the fact that the word rendered "holiest of all" in Heb. ix, 8, is plural, literally signifying holy places. On this the Herald says:

"Admitting that point, it would still be true that when the Jewish tabernacle ceased to be significant, Christ would have entered into whatever the holy place signified, and therefore into that typified by the second as well as by the first."

We think the Herald draws very hasty conclusions from this text. Admitting this literal translation of the word, it would then follow that the two holy places of "the pattern" had corresponding holy places in the true tabernacle. And that the continuance of the "figure" or "pattern" through the typical dispensation, signified that the way of the true holy places was not yet manifested. The statement of Paul does not prove that the Lord Jesus began to fulfill the work in both apartments at the same time. On the contrary, it is in perfect accordance with his own statement in another place, viz: that the priests, in their ministration in the two holy places of the pattern, served unto the example and shadow of heavenly things; that is, of Christ's more excellent ministry in the true tabernacle.

The Herald presents in conclusion the criticism of a correspondent on the word rendered "holiest of all" in Heb. ix and x. The writer says:

"In Heb. ix, 3, 8, 12, 24, 25; and x, 19 and xii, 11, the plural of hagion is used in some one of its cases. To build a hypothesis on the use of this plural form in these cases, though it must, according to the usage of our own language, imply more than one object, will appear ridiculous to any one who is at all familiar with Hebrew, or with any of its cognate dialects, as Chaldee or Syriac."

The reason assigned is that "the Hebrew has a plural of excellence applied to objects that in their nature are singular." And that in the Septuagint and New Testament Greek, this Hebrew usage is followed in many instances. The writer cites Lev. xxi, 22, as an instance in which this plural of excellence, is in the original applied to each of the holy places. But he also shows that in other cases they are written in the singular as in English.

The writer of this criticism labored under a mistake in supposing that the view of Christ's ministration in the two holy places of the heavenly Sanctuary, grew out of the fact that the word hagion in Heb. ix, 8, is plural, literally signifying holy places. This is a mere item among many important facts on which our faith is based. The fact that the Herald, in replying to us, based its main argument on the expression

"holiest of all" in Heb. ix and x, made it perfectly proper that we should name the fact that the word is plural, simply signifying holy places, and that these texts are, therefore, in perfect harmony with the plain statements which we argue in behalf of our faith. But we are willing to receive with all candor, the facts presented in this criticism. We inquire then, does this criticism furnish a very firm foundation for the Herald's argument? The facts being given us by this writer, we may be allowed to judge of the amount of support which they furnish the Herald.—We will state the matter in few words, requesting the reader to observe the amount of argument presented.

1. In Hebrew and Greek, a plural of excellence is sometimes applied to each of the holy places.

2. Therefore the plural used in Heb. ix, 8, must be the plural of excellence, and a single apartment is all that is designated.

3. That single apartment is certainly the holiest. Does the fact named in the first statement, prove the points named in the second and third? By no means. All that can be claimed is, that in view of the fact named in the first statement, the second and third might perhaps be true. The second statement is pure assumption, but if we could add as a fact the second statement to the fact named in the first, the third statement would not even then be proved. Can this syllogism fortify the Herald with an invincible argument? We think not.

But let us look at this matter still farther. If any proof could be presented that a single apartment was all that Heb. ix, 8, designated, there would then be some reason to suppose that a plural of excellence is used in that text. But the reader will notice that in this text the word is used to designate the antitype of the two holy places, named in the six verses preceding; and that it evidently signifies the same as the greater and more perfect tabernacle named in verse 11. Hence there is perfect propriety in believing that the whole building of the temple in heaven—the true holy places—is here designated.

Doubtless the writer of the criticism knows whereof he affirms respecting "the plural of excellence."—But in citing Lev. xxi, 22, as an instance, "perfectly decisive," in which it is applied to each of the holy places of the earthly tabernacle, he has made an unfortunate selection; the reference there being not to the holy places of the tabernacle, but to the fact that a priest in whom was a blemish, should not be allowed "to offer the bread of his God," but yet should be allowed to eat that bread, both of the holy and the most holy. With regard to this bread consult Lev. ii, 1-3, 10; vi, 11-18; xxiv, 5-9; xxii, 10-12. No bread pertained to, or was offered in, the most holy place.

In conclusion, we present for consideration, some of the leading facts on which our faith is based.

1. The Bible many times names the tabernacle, temple, or sanctuary, in heaven; we therefore believe that such a building exists. Heb. viii, 1, 2; Ps. cii, 19; Jer. xvii, 12; Ps. xi, 4; Isa. vi, 1-6; Rev. xv,

5-8; 2 Sam. xxii, 7; Ps. xviii, 6; Rev. vii, 15; xi, 19; xiii, 6; xiv, 15, 17; xvi, 1, 17; Heb. ix, 11.

2. The Bible repeatedly testifies that the earthly sanctuary which consisted of two holy places [Ex. xxvi, 33; Heb. ix, 1-5,] was made by Moses in strict accordance with the pattern showed to him in the mount; [Ex. xxv, 8, 9, 40; xxvi, 30-33; Acts vii, 44,] which pattern was a representation of the heavenly sanctuary itself. Heb. viii, 1-5; ix, 23. We therefore believe that the heavenly tabernacle consists of holy places also; and to this agrees the fact that the word rendered "Sanctuary" in Heb. viii, 3, and "holiest of all" in Chap. ix, 8; x, 19, is plural, literally signifying holy places.

3. The Bible testifies that the holy places made with hands are "the figures of the true," in the greater and more perfect tabernacle. Heb. ix, 11, 12, 23, 24. We therefore feel compelled to reject the view that the two apartments of the Jewish tabernacle were the figures of two dispensations, and believe that they represent corresponding holy places in the true tabernacle.

4. The Bible testifies that the ministration in the earthly tabernacle—the yearly round of service in its two apartments—was the shadow of good things to come; [Heb. x, 1,] and that that shadow continued till the death of Christ. Col. ii, 14-17. We therefore reject the view that locates the antitype of the ministration in the first apartment, before the death of Jesus, in the period of the shadow itself, and believe that the antitype of the service in both apartments belongs to the period in which our Lord is the High Priest of good things to come, which were shadowed forth by that ministration. Heb. ix, 11. In other words, the holy places of the worldly sanctuary, and the ministration therein belong to the shadow; the true holy places, and the ministration in them belong to the good things to come. The death of Jesus is the dividing point between the two.—Hence the antitype of the service in both apartments belongs to the gospel dispensation.

5. The Bible further testifies that the Levitical priests ministered first in the holy place, and second, in the holiest of all. [Heb. ix, 6, 7,] their final act being the cleansing of the Sanctuary. Lev. xvi. And it further declares that this round of service is the "example" of Christ's more excellent ministry in the true tabernacle. Heb. viii, 5. Webster defines the word "example" thus:

"A pattern; a copy; a model; that which is proposed to be imitated. A pattern in morals or manners; a copy, or model; that which is proposed, or is proper to be imitated. 'I have given you an example that ye should do as I have done to you.'—John xiii."

We therefore believe that the Lord Jesus must perform his ministration in each of the holy places in the order of that service which Paul has called an example, as well as a shadow of Christ's more excellent ministry. In other words, his ministry must commence in the first apartment of the heavenly tabernacle, and end with the cleansing of the Sanctuary in the holiest of all. Heb. ix, 23; Dan. viii, 15; Rev. xi, 19.

The Herald exactly reverses the example, and teaches that Christ at his ascension entered into the holiest and began his work by cleansing the Sanctuary. We kindly, but urgently invite its conductors to re-examine this subject, and either to point out our error, or to acknowledge their own.

J. N. ANDREWS.

Under the necessity of choosing.

It is a fact not to be disguised, that the Advent people are now under the absolute necessity of yielding one of two long cherished positions. They must yield the view that the earth is the Sanctuary, or they must deny the connection between the 70 weeks and the 2300 days. For it is evident that if the 70 weeks are the first 490 days of the 2300, then the 2300 days have expired. And if the 2300 days have expired, it is certain that the earth is not the Sanctuary; for no part of the earth has as yet been cleansed.

The question, Which shall we yield? is fairly before the mind, and every Advent believer is now placed where a choice cannot be avoided. Before either view is yielded it will be well to carefully consider each. If we deny the connection between the 70 weeks and 2300 days, we must adopt the following conclusions: 1. That the great period of 2300 days, which God gave for the benefit of his people cannot be understood, as there is no starting point from which to commence it. 2. That Gabriel is a fallen angel; for in Dan. viii, he was charged to make the prophet understand the vision, and at the close of the chapter it is testified that none understood it. Hence it follows that if Gabriel in Dan. ix, where he explains what he omitted to explain in chapter viii, was not acting in obedience to the divine mandate, "Make this man to understand the vision," he never obeyed that precept, but fell from the favor of God. The absurdity of these two conclusions may be seen at a glance, and yet it is equally evident that they are necessary conclusions if the connection between the eighth and ninth chapters of Daniel be denied.

In addition to the above we may remark that the argument of Bro. Miller in proof of the connection of these two periods, which is familiar to all Advent believers, remains unanswered, and is confessed to be unanswerable. We therefore conclude that the connection between these two periods cannot be set aside, or explained away.

As we cannot yield the connection between the 70 weeks and the 2300 days, we now inquire whether it is possible for us to give up the idea that the earth is the Sanctuary. Does the Bible call the earth the Sanctuary? The word Sanctuary occurs 146 times in the Bible, and it is not applied to the earth in a single instance. Hence so far from there being any impropriety in yielding the view that the earth is the Sanctuary, it is evident that there never was any propriety in calling it such.

We now ask which position shall be yielded?—The connection between the 70 weeks and the 2300 days, which is fortified by unanswerable argument? or the view that the earth is the Sanctuary, for which there is no argument at all? J. N. ANDREWS.

THE SANCTUARY AND ITS CLEANING.

In 1844 the whole Advent body was disappointed with respect to the second advent of the Saviour. Since that disappointment many confessions have been made respecting that mistake. That a confusion of error should be made by all who then proclaimed the coming of the Lord, we think no one disposed to deny. Thus far we stand on common ground with all who profess the Advent faith. Now we ask why it was that those who then expected the Saviour were disappointed? It is at this point that a difference of opinion begins. Three answers have been returned:

1. Because the 70 weeks are not a part of the 2300 days.
2. Because the 70 weeks were not then dated from the true decree.
3. Because that the earth is not the Sanctuary.

Here are three confessions of error. Which one of them shall be adopted as the proper confession? Those who make the first of these confessions, acknowledge that the evidence sustaining the original date of the 70 weeks viz., v. s. 457 is not capable of being set aside; and that if the 70 weeks are the first 490 days of the 2300, "it is no clear that the 2300 days ended in the Autumn of 1844, as it is that the sun arose this morning." But if the 2300 days ended in 1844 it is demonstrated that no part of the earth is the Sanctuary, for as yet, no part of the earth is cleansed. It follows, therefore, that those who make the first of these confessions, viz., the denial that the 70 weeks are a part of the 2300 days, do it because they are not willing to yield the view that the earth or a part of it is the Sanctuary.

But how is it with those who make the second confession? They do not deny that the 70 weeks are a part of the 2300 days. They acknowledge that Gabriel in Dan ix, completed the charge given him in Dan, viii, 16, which was to make Daniel understand the vision; which according to verse 27 he did not accomplish in chapter viii. Compare chap. viii, 16. "And I heard a man's voice between the banks of Ulai, which called, and said, Gabriel, make this man understand the vision." Verse 27. "And I Daniel fainted, and was sick certain days: afterward I rose up, and did the king's business; and I was astonished at the vision, but none understood it." Chap. ix, 21-23. "Yea, whereas I was speaking in prayer, even the man Gabriel, whom I had seen in the vision at the beginning, being caused to fly swiftly, touched me about the time of the evening oblation. And he informed me, and talked with me, and said, O Daniel, I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding. At the beginning of thy supplications the commandment came forth, and I am come to show thee; for thou art greatly beloved: therefore understand the matter, and consider the vision." Consequently they admit that the 70 weeks which were "cut off," form the first 490 days of the long period in "the vision" which Gabriel was explaining; and that the remainder of the 2300 days extend 1810 days from the termination of the 70 weeks. But as the earth was not burned in 1844, they move the date of the 70 weeks forward thirteen years to the 20th of Antiochus, thus moving forward thirteen years, the date of the commencement of Christ's ministry, and of his crucifixion, and of the commencement of the gospel to the Gentiles. In doing this, however, they are not agreed among themselves; some of them contending that Christ was crucified in the Spring, A. D. 37, and others that he was crucified in A. D. 41. The 70 weeks are thus set forward because Christ did not come in 1844. Those who set them forward reason thus: the earth is the Sanctuary, and Christ must come and burn the earth in order to cleanse the Sanctuary. But besides the absurdity involved in dragging the date of the crucifixion thirteen years, this view has proved itself an entire failure, the year 1854 being the extreme point to which the days were extended.

It is apparent, therefore, that those who deny the connection between the 70 weeks and the 2300 days, and those who attempt to set the 70 weeks forward thirteen years, have each the same article of faith to which they tenaciously cling, which is the grand cause of each of these important errors. It is this doctrine that causes all the trouble, viz., that the earth is the Sanctuary, and that the cleansing of the Sanctuary is effected by the second coming of Christ. What mighty array of evidence, then, can be adduced to prove that the earth, or a part of the earth, is the Sanctuary, that men should be willing to yield almost anything else rather than acknowledge that in this they may have been mistaken? In examining the third confession we shall see.

The third confession is an acknowledgment that the Advent people were mistaken when they said that the earth was the Sanctuary, and that Christ must come and burn the earth in order to cleanse the Sanctuary. We have seen that those who make the first two confessions cling with tenacity to the view that the earth, or a part of it, is the Sanctuary. Hence they look upon those who make this confession as sinners above every other class of Adventists. But what are the reasons which sustain those who make the third confession?

1. They are unable to deny the connection of the 70 weeks and 2300 days, or to set the 70 weeks forward thirteen years. To do this would be to deny the plainest evidence.

2. But they confess that the earth is not the Sanctuary, because that the Bible never calls it by that name. The word is used in the Bible 146 times, but it is never applied to the earth.

3. The Old Testament, by a hundred plain testimonies, designates the tabernacle of the Lord as his Sanctuary. Even the two or three texts that are supposed to teach that some part of the earth is the Sanctuary, are readily reconciled with this cloud of witnesses.

4. The New Testament tells us that there are two covenants, and names with distinctness the Sanctuary of each. This covers all the ground and settles the Sanctuary question beyond all controversy. The Sanctuary of the first covenant was the tabernacle which Moses erected as a pattern of the true tabernacle. Heb. ix, 1-5. "Then verily the first covenant had also ordinances of divine service, and a worldly sanctuary. For there was a tabernacle made, the first, wherein was the candlestick, and the table, and the shew-bread; which is called the Sanctuary. And after the second veil, the tabernacle, which is called the holiest of all: which had the golden censer, and the ark of the covenant overlaid round about with gold, wherein was the golden pot that had manna, and Aaron's rod that budded, and the tables of the covenant; and over it the cherubims of glory shadowing the mercy-seat; of which we cannot now speak particularly." The Sanctuary of the better covenant is the true tabernacle itself, which the Lord pitched and not man, of which Moses erected a copy. Heb. viii, 1-6. "Now of the things which we have spoken this is the sum: We have such a high priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens; minister of the Sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched and not man. For every high priest is ordained to offer gifts and sacrifices: wherefore it is of necessity that this man have somewhat also to offer. For if he were on earth, he should not be a priest, seeing that there are priests that offer gifts according to the law: who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things, as Moses was admonished of God when he was about to make the tabernacle; for, See, saith he, that thou make all things according to the pattern shewed to thee in the mount. But now hath he obtained a more excellent ministry, by how much also he is the mediator of a better covenant, which was established upon better promises." The sixteenth of Leviticus plainly teaches that the Sanctuary of the first covenant was cleansed by blood at the conclusion of the yearly round.

of services, because the sins of the people had been borne there. The ninth of Hebrews teaches that the new covenant Sanctuary must be cleansed for the same reason, but with better sacrifices than the former. Verse 22-24. "And almost all things are by the law purged with blood; and without shedding of blood is no remission. It was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these. For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us.

If these plain testimonies are allowed, they settle the question that the earth is not the Sanctuary; that the Sanctuary is the tabernacle of the Lord; and that the tabernacle is cleansed with blood and not with fire; and that the work of cleansing the Sanctuary is the conclusion of the work of the High Priest before leaving the tabernacle of God. Consequently the cleansing of the Sanctuary precedes the revelation of our great High Priest.

This is the third confession. Is it not as fair and honorable a confession as the first or the second? It is not a confession that the 70 weeks are not a part of the 2300 days, or that the 70 weeks should be set forward thirteen years. Overwhelming evidence forbids such a confession. But it is a frank acknowledgment of erroneous views respecting the Sanctuary. In making this confession we do not reject the smallest portion of divine testimony, but on the contrary a multitude of testimonies constrain us thus to confess.

It is proper that we here point out the fact that we are not the class who refuse to confess their mistakes. Those who make either the first or the second confession are compelled thereby to deny the plainest evidence. And they do this rather than to admit that the earth is not the Sanctuary, notwithstanding their error respecting the Sanctuary has been exposed before them. Those who make the third confession, correct the real error of the Advent people; and they do it without sacrificing any part of the truth of God. The clearest evidence constrains them thus to act. The charge of refusing to confess the mistake in 1844, we think certainly returns upon those who make it. It is because they will not confess a manifest error, viz., that the Sanctuary is the earth or a part of it, that they are constrained either to deny the connection between Dan, viii, and ix, or to set the 70 weeks forward thirteen years. Had those, who the past year raised a false excitement on time, been willing to confess their error respecting the Sanctuary, they would have been saved from the disastrous position into which they led many. We would earnestly request such to examine their Bibles once more, and see what that testifies respecting the Sanctuary.

A few words may be called for at this time relative to the work of our great High Priest in cleansing the heavenly Sanctuary. This subject was clearly and thoroughly discussed in Harvest No. 7. Extended remarks therefore are not needed.

It has recently been denied by certain persons, that the Sanctuary is now being cleansed, although they profess firm faith in the termination of the 2300 days in 1844, and also acknowledge that the Sanctuary to be cleansed is the one of which Paul speaks in Heb. ix, 24. Their position is as follows:

1. The 2300 days do not extend to the cleansing of the Sanctuary, but to the antitypical day of atonement.
2. That there is a preliminary work to be done on that day, that has already occupied seven years, and that will be continued as long as human probation lasts.
3. And then the grand work of the day of atonement, the cleansing of the Sanctuary, will commence and will occupy seven days!

4. Finally that there is no probation when Christ ministers in the holiest.

We believe that we have stated this position correctly, though we can hardly see how a greater absurdity could be seriously put together. Let us notice each point in order.

1. This point is a direct contradiction of the Word of God. Dan. viii, 13, 14. "Then I heard one saint speaking, and another saint said unto that certain saint which awoke, How long shall be the vision concerning the daily sacrifice, and the transgression of desolation, to give both the Sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot? And he said unto me, Thirteen hundred and three hundred days then shall the Sanctuary be cleansed." Those who occupy this position insert at least eleven years between the termination of the 2300 days and the cleansing of the Sanctuary, and then mend the matter by contending that the 2300 days were not to extend to the cleansing of the Sanctuary, but to the antitypical day of atonement, a period which is nowhere mentioned in the Bible. If eleven years can be inserted between the termination of a prophetic period and the event which the prophet said should transpire at its termination, then no one can show why fifty years might not also be inserted with equal propriety. Such a position, though not intended by those who maintain it, directly charges the Author of the Bible with falsehood. This position is at the foundation of those that follow; their truthfulness may be judged of by this.

2. This second position is necessarily based upon the first. For it is by corrupting Dan, viii, 14, and making it read "then shall the antitypical day of atonement commence," instead of "then shall the Sanctuary be cleansed," that they are able to insert at least eleven years between the termination of the 2300 days and the event which the prophet said should transpire at their termination. But if we were to turn to the type and ask those who occupy this singular position, to prove that the various offerings mentioned in Numbers xxix as occurring on the tenth day of the seventh month, were to transpire on that day before the high priest entered the most holy place they would certainly be brought to a stand. For the Bible is silent on the point whether the burnt offerings &c. in question were offered before the work in the holiest or after that work. For aught that appears to the contrary, these offerings might have been made after the high priest came out of the holiest, at the time mentioned in Lev. xvi, 23, 24. Yet it is by assuming that the work mentioned in Num. xxix, 7-41 was prior to the work in the holiest that these persons become bold enough to corrupt the words of the prophecy. But if it could be proved that these offerings were prior to the work in the holiest that would then be no difficulty in showing that the conclusion drawn from this work is entirely erroneous.

For, first, the types of the Spring were fulfilled with reference to time. Now their fulfillment is recorded in the New Testament, so that we have a divine exposition of this part of the typical system. The pasover was killed on the fourteenth of the first month; the sheaf of first fruits was waved on the sixteenth; and the feast of weeks or Pentecost occurred on the fiftieth day from the offering of the first fruits. Lev. xlii. Each of these types was fulfilled exactly as to time. Christ our pasover was sacrificed for us on the fourteenth day of the first month. 1 Cor. v; John xviii, xix. He arose on the day of first fruits, the first fruit of them that slept. 1 Cor. xv. And the antitypo of the feast of weeks, or Pentecost, took place on that very day, in the out-pouring of the Holy Spirit. Acts ii. Now there was the same work of burnt offerings, &c., on the day of first fruits, and of the feast of weeks, that there was on the day of atonement. This may be seen by reading Lev. xlii.

10-21; Num. xxviii, 16-31. The fulfillment of these types shows us this fact: that the great events for which the passover, the day of first fruits, and the Pentecost, were respectively noted, met their antitype on the very days of the types. Mere preliminary and circumstantial offerings did not prevent the grand event of the day from meeting its antitype at the time pointed out in the type. Now if this principle, which is drawn from the manner of the fulfillment of the types at the first advent, be applied to the work on the tenth day of the seventh month, it will remove all ground of objection. The grand work on the day of atonement was performed in the holiest. The tenth day of the seventh month of some year, is the point at which its antitype must be realized. One word should be added relative to typical fulfillment, viz., that the antitype commences on the day of the type, but may extend forward a great distance. We are still feeding on Christ our passover; we are still keeping the feast of unleavened bread; and the Holy Spirit which came down on the day of Pentecost as the antitype of the feast on that day still abides with the Church of Christ. Read carefully 1 Cor. v, 7, 8; John xiv, 16. As of the work in the holiest on the day of atonement. Its antitype must commence at that time, and of course must occupy a space corresponding to its magnitude and importance.

But, second, if we are to have a long preliminary work preceding the cleansing of the Sanctuary, that work must transpire before the 2300 days end. How any one can fail to see this is a mystery to me. If the 2300 days ended in 1844, then this supposed preliminary work had transpired prior to that time. But if the preliminary work is now going on, the 2300 days have not ended. But the evidence that the 2300 days have ended is unanswerable. Therefore the cleansing of the Sanctuary must now be transpiring. And as a consequence all reasoning to the contrary is fallacious.

3. Relative to the third point named in this theory a few words should be offered. It is this: that the antitype of the preliminary work of the day of atonement occupies many years, while the grand work itself is performed in seven days! According to this theory the Saviour ministers in one apartment of the temple in heaven more than 1800 years, and in the other seven days! If two such absurdities as these are a part of the divine plan, they look like a sad reflection on the wisdom of God. But let us consider this point once more. The sins of all the people of God for 6000 years have been brought before Jehovah in his Sanctuary. Now all this work of removing the sins of the people of God from the Sanctuary and the blotting out of all their transgressions requires according to this view seven days! And those who hold it admit that this work of removing the sins of God's people from the Sanctuary, is the cleansing of the Sanctuary, but deny that the 2300 days reach to the commencement of the work!

4. But human probation must close when our Lord enters the holiest. Who said so? It is not in the type, nor is the antitype thus explained in the New Testament. If it be said that the work in the holiest was not the offering of blood for particular individuals, but for all the people, we answer that the other offerings out of which so much is now being made were precisely of the same character. They were not offered by individuals, but like the daily morning and evening sacrifices were offered in behalf of the whole people. So that there is just as much mercy implied in the sin offering in the holiest as in the other offerings on that day. If it be said that the work in the holiest was to cleanse the Sanctuary, we answer, that this is but a part of the truth. It was also for the sins of the people. The priest just as much made atonement for the sins of the people on that day, as he did for his own sins. Read carefully Lev. xvi; Heb. ix, 7. And this two-fold work of the high priest seems fitly to typify the two-fold work of our Lord in the most holy place. For the sins of the whole church for 6000 years may be disposed of as individual cases, and all the while that the great work is being accomplished, the blood of Jesus still may avail for us in the presence of God. This would be in accordance with the two-fold character of the type.

But it will be asked if the offering of the high priest in the holiest could avail for a sin committed while he was there before God. On this point the Bible is silent. But no argument in favor of this new theory can be raised here. For as far as we know in the whole work of the year the transgression preceded the offering. That is, this was at least as much the case in one apartment as the other. How then is it with our Lord? He shed his blood before entering the tabernacle in heaven at all. And that blood once shed avails for sins committed before or after his death. So that a moment's reflection will show that this objection bears equally against forgiveness being found in either apartment.

Finally, great stress is laid on Lev. xvii, 3-5 to prove that the only place for forgiveness is the first apartment. If the reader will examine verses 1-7 he will see that the great design of this statute was to prevent the people from sacrificing in the fields to devils. This chapter in no way contradicts the testimony of the preceding chapter, that the high priest with the blood of sin offering did make atonement in the holiest because of the transgression of the people in all their sins. The chapter has manifestly no reference to the subject for which it is quoted.

But let us look at the matter. What is the antitype of all the ancient sacrifices? We answer, the one offering of the Son of God. This like those sacrifices was not in the tabernacle but in the court of the tabernacle. Our Lord was slain on Calvary by sinners, even as sinners slew the offerings in the court of the tabernacle. But we have now no such thing to do. Our Lord died once for all. If others wish to crucify the Son of God afresh, they alone must bear the responsibility.

In conclusion we quote the New Testament to show that the blood of Jesus avails for us in both the holy places of the heavenly tabernacle. Heb. x, 19, &c. Or as rendered by Macknight: "Well then, brethren having boldness in the entrance of the holy places, by the blood of Jesus," &c. Let either of these translations be correct, the words are a complete refutation of the doctrine that probation closes with our Lord's entrance within the second veil. Thank God, we have boldness to enter there by the blood of Jesus.

THE CLEANSING OF THE SANCTUARY.

Does this Work Commence at the end of the 2300 days?

The subject of the Sanctuary has been the cause of much discussion among the professed believers in the immediate second advent. It was once believed by most of them that the earth was the Sanctuary, and that the burning of the earth as predicted by Peter, was the cleansing of the Sanctuary which was to transpire at the end of the 2300 days. The disappointment which those who entertained this faith were subjected to, has led many of them to investigate the testimony of the Scriptures relative to this question, for themselves. This has resulted in convincing some at least that the truth is not the Sanctuary, because that God has never called it such, and consequently that the burning of the earth has nothing to do with the cleansing of the Sanctuary. And they have further seen that the tabernacle of the Lord is his Sanctuary, or habitation; that during the typical dispensation the pattern of the true tabernacle, by the will of God, existed in the midst of his chosen people. See Ex. xxv, and a multitude of parallel scriptures. And that at the close of the typical dispensation the true tabernacle of God in heaven and the more excellent ministry of our great High Priest in that tabernacle took the place of the pattern and shadow. Heb. viii; ix. The tabernacle of God is therefore the subject of prophecy as the Sanctuary of the Bible. That this Sanctuary is to be cleansed with blood is plainly stated in Heb. ix. And this is precisely the nature of the cleansing referred to in Dan. viii, 14. For the word rendered "cleansed" in this text, is in the margin rendered "justified," and signifies, not the removing of physical uncleanness, but the removing of sin and iniquity. This is an important fact, and one that of itself goes far toward proving that the cleansing of the Sanctuary in Dan. viii and Heb. ix are the same.

But a singular question is now being discussed, and an effort being made to overthrow the faith of some. The doctrine is now advanced that the 2300 days do not extend to the cleansing of the Sanctuary. If this is the truth of God, then the prophecy of Daniel cannot be a part of Divine truth for the one is in direct contradiction to the other. But this view cannot be truth for two reasons. 1. It is not supported by the Bible. 2. It is directly opposed by the words of inspiration.

1. This doctrine that the cleansing of the Sanctuary does not commence at the end of the 2300 days is not supported by the Bible. For the only means that we have of knowing when the work of cleansing the Sanctuary commences is by the termination of that great prophetic period. "Thy word," says a man of God, "is a lamp to my feet and a light to my path." The light from that lamp shines with cleanness upon the termination of the 2300 days as the time for the cleansing of the Sanctuary. To deny the commencement of that work at the termination of that period is as unreasonable as it would be to deny the commencement of Christ's ministry at the termination of the sixty-nine weeks; the death of Christ at the termination of the sixty-nine and a half, or the turning of the apostles to the Gentiles at the expiration of the seventy weeks. Dan. ix. God had said that these events should transpire at the times specified. To insert the eighth part of a century between the termination of the sixty-nine weeks and the commencement of the ministry of Jesus of Nazareth, or to insert the same period between the expiration of the sixty-nine and a half weeks and the crucifixion of Christ would prove that Jesus was not the true Messiah, because he did not occupy his place at the predicted time; or if Jesus was the true Messiah then the prophecy of Daniel was not divinely inspired because the true Messiah did not appear until long after the period predicted by Daniel. None can deny that one of these conclusions must result from the addition of twelve years to the prophetic periods of Dan. ix. Why an addition of twelve years to the prophetic period of Dan. viii would not be equally fatal to the truth of that prophecy, we cannot see.

But it is said that there was other work performed on the day of atonement besides the cleansing of the Sanctuary; and as this might have been earlier in the day than the cleansing of the Sanctuary, it is claimed that there must be a long period between the expiration of the 2300 days and the cleansing of the Sanctuary, in which the antitype of that work may be fulfilled. This is reasoning from unlike to unlike. For that which appears in the conclusion is not a necessary deduction from the premises. For, we ask, how does it follow that there must be many years inserted between the end of the 2300 days and the event which the prophet said should transpire at their termination, when there is no authority for inserting such period except an inference drawn from the fact that there were other services performed on the day of atonement besides the cleansing of the Sanctuary?

There were other services performed on the day of the passover besides the slaying of the paschal lamb—the type of Christ's death. Now the prophet as we have already seen, foretold the death of Christ at the termination of the sixty-nine and a half weeks. But the principle of interpretation which we are examining would correct the prophet and say, "No, the sixty-nine and a half weeks extend to the antitypical day of passover, and after years of preparatory work, the Messiah was cut off." This is precisely the kind of reasoning which is applied to the day of atonement; but if it is applied to the day of the passover it proves as we have already shown either that Daniel was a false prophet or that Jesus was not the Messiah.

But this doctrine should be further examined. It will necessarily lead those that hold it, into the greatest absurdities. We must according to this theory have the antitype of the offerings mentioned in Num. xxix, 7-11, between the ending of the 2300 days and the cleansing of the Sanctuary. What then did the slaying of those sacrifices typify? We answer, the death of the Son of God. See Heb. ix; x. This cannot be disputed. And we may add that whenever blood was shed in the typical system, for the sins of men, it pointed directly to the death of our Lord Jesus Christ. But as Christ was to die once for all, there could be but one of these sacrifices that should typify the death of Christ, as to its time, and that was the passover. This was always sacrificed on the fourteenth day of the first month—the day of Christ's death. But let us return to the offerings made on the day of atonement. If there are to have distinct antitypes, and that too, after the 2300 days have ended, it unavoidably follows that our Lord must again be put to death! The victims were slain in the court of the tabernacle. Hence our Lord must according to this doctrine return to earth and die in a manner similar to that in which he died at the first, and after that return to heaven and complete the work in the holiest of all! This absurdity is not all. Our Lord must die as many times as there were different times of offering sacrifices specified in the law. He must indeed offer himself often, instead of once for all. Let those who now occupy the position here discussed, seriously consider the conclusions which follow from their own premises.

2. We have shown the unscriptural character of this position. But we will quote in conclusion the words of inspiration which directly meet and demolish the fabric which ingenious men are trying to rear. "And he said unto me, Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the Sanctuary be cleansed." Dan. viii, 14. Brethren, let us not be carried about with divers and strange doctrines.

The Sanctuary.

THE Seventh-Day Adventists have a definite position on the subject of the Sanctuary. In this thing there is a striking contrast between them and all other Advent bodies, who, on this question, are in a state of complete confusion. Now this fact is not a little remarkable. For if we go back to the time when the great disappointment threw the whole Advent body into perplexity, we shall find that that disappointment arose from the view then prevalent among them concerning the Sanctuary. The S. D. Adventists, having carefully reviewed the whole ground, have a definite position to offer which they consider a complete explanation of the subject.

Moreover, the view that they have to present of the Sanctuary subject is the great central doctrine in their system; for it inseparably connects all the points in their faith, and presents the subject as one grand whole.

Our Advent friends who differ from us have nothing to offer in exchange on which they themselves are agreed. And unless we greatly misjudge, they have never yet attempted fairly to answer our views of the Sanctuary. Will they give this matter more serious thought in time to come?

THE OPENING OF THE TEMPLE IN HEAVEN.

BY ELD. J. W. ANDREWS.

TEXT.—"And the temple of God was opened in Heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament; and there were lightnings, and voices, and thunderings, and an earthquake, and great hail." Rev. xi, 19.

This text pertains to the closing events of the gospel dispensation. It is therefore particularly worthy of the study of all who desire an acquaintance with the Advent faith. It is especially interesting to those who desire to understand the grounds of difference between the Seventh-day and first-day Adventists, for it embraces the very facts which lie at the foundation of that difference.

The temple of God in Heaven is the grand central theme of discussion in the doctrines peculiar to the Seventh-day Adventists. It certainly does not thus engage the attention of other Adventists. In fact, its very existence seems to be virtually unknown, or even positively disbelieved by the most of them. There must be a serious error with one or the other of these two classes. Candid men are never willing to continue in error. The truth of God is always important—sometimes it is of vital consequence. Error is always injurious, and often it is fatal. Why should pride of opinion, or party spirit, or the study of our own convenience, or worldly advantage, be allowed to avert our better judgment in sacred things?

The temple of God in Heaven is a theme of prophecy. Why should it not be worthy of our study? The opening of that temple is an event connected with the closing scenes of human probation. Ought not such an act to arrest the attention of the people called Adventists? It is evident that the prophecies relating to the end of this dispensation do not confine themselves to the things that exist upon our earth. In there nothing worthy of our attention except the things which transpire among the nations of the earth?

We are interested in the heavenly temple because we have a great High Priest therein. We are interested in that High Priest because he alone can make atonement for our sins. We are interested in that atonement because we can in no otherwise approach the mercy-seat from which God dispenses forgiveness and pardon to sinful men. We are interested in thus coming to the mercy-seat because that beneath it in the ark lies God's perfect rule of right, which we have transgressed, and by which we are condemned.

The High Priest must have a space of time to close up his great work of 6000 years. Why should we not have interest to study the nature of that closing work? That the Judgment, so far as deciding the cases of the righteous and determining who shall have eternal life is concerned, must be past when Jesus descends to raise his saints, those who believe in two resurrections, as do all the Seventh-day Adventists, and as did all Adventists once, must of necessity admit. For the resurrection of the righteous while the wicked are left for 1000 years, shows that their cases have been decided. Again, as all Adventists hold that the righteous alone shall be raised to immortality, this very fact is sufficient to prove that the Judgment, in the decision of the cases of the righteous, is past before the Saviour descends, even if all mankind are raised at the same point of time. And that class who hold to the serious error that the wicked are never to be raised, must virtually hold that the cases of the righteous have been acted upon and decided before their resurrection. The resurrection of the saints is thus shown to be declarative of their righteousness and of the decision of the Judgment in their favor, even as the resurrection of Christ was declarative of the fact that he was innocent in the Father's sight, and accepted of him. Rom. i, 4; iv, 25. There are some Adventists, however, who are so unwilling to admit this investigative judgment before the advent, that they affirm that the righteous are raised with mortal bodies, and, after standing before God in judgment, and having their cases examined, they are changed to immortality. Yet the language of the Bible is as explicit as it can be that they are "raised in incorruption," "raised in glory," "raised in power," "raised with a spiritual body," "raised incorruptible." 1 Cor. xv, 42-52.

There must be, therefore, a space of time for this investigative judgment. Of this there can be no doubt. And so the concluding work of the High Priest, and the opening work of the Judgment, are of necessity blended together. Now we can see how pertinent to the circumstances of our case is the great Advent message, "Fear God, and give glory to him; FOR THE HOUR OF HIS JUDGMENT IS COME." Rev. xiv, 6, 7. If this message is expected, because of its reference to the Judgment, to introduce the advent of the Son of God, it must lead to severe disappointment. Other angels with other great truths follow before the Son of Man sits upon the white cloud. Yet to sustain such a declaration, definite time must be used to mark the hour of God's Judgment.

Now the Seventh-day Adventists believe that the great proclamation of 1843-4 was in fulfillment of this most solemn announcement, "The hour of his Judgment is come." In their view the prophetic periods mark the work of Christ in the heavenly temple, and indicate by their termination the opening of this investigative judgment in the case of the righteous dead. They have, therefore, never engaged in the work of setting new times for the advent of Jesus. They have found better employment. They have turned their attention to the subject of the sanctuary to be cleansed at the end of 2300 days. They have found the Bible to be full of the sanctuary. They have found it to be the center of the typical system, and the center of the great work of salvation for lost man. They find the subject of atonement, and especially its concluding events, to be wonderfully illustrated by the Bible doctrine of the sanctuary. So also of the opening of the great judgment work.

Our first-day Advent brethren have never yet given this subject a candid hearing. They will not allow its discussion in their papers, nor will they listen to this in their congregations. There are, indeed, honorable exceptions; but this unexcusable course is true of the greater part. If their papers would fairly state the views of the Seventh-day Adventists on the sanctuary subject, the case would be very different. As it is, they are passed over in silence, or distorted by misrepresentation. Certainly this is to be regretted. If the subject is not worth the attention of these papers, then much of the Bible is unworthy of their notice, for a very large portion of the Scriptures is filled with this theme.

They have, however, found what they consider more worthy of their study than the Bible sanctuary. The fixing of new times for the coming of Jesus has been with many of them almost a steady source of excitement, and it has largely furnished the staple of their preaching. No candid man can deny that this reiterated time-setting has been exceedingly deleterious to the Advent doctrine before the public.

They are giving, as they claim, the first angel's message. With the fact before them that a second and a third proclamation follow the first, they profess to be looking daily for the advent of Jesus, and yet pass over these two proclamations with silent contempt, or with outspoken words of scorn and derision. Suppose that those who are now interested in the third angel's proclamation are entirely mistaken in their application of the prophecy. What of that? This message is in the Bible. If the proclamation relative to the hour of God's judgment is now receiving its fulfillment, it is entirely inconsistent to look for the advent of Jesus (11) the real third angel's message is heard by the world. Come, brethren, be candid. Do not forever be re-adjusting the prophetic periods, and calling all this jarring work the first angel's message. If it has not yet been rightly given, we pray you give us the right time for the opening of God's investigative judgment. Then when you have done this, let your work stand because it is wrought in God, and be pleased then to give us the true second and third proclamations. When will such kind of work as yours bring the coming of Jesus? If the first angel's message is to be fulfilled by this endless re-adjustment of prophetic times, how is there ever to be room for the third message, and who is ever to give it? Is it not time there was a change in this business? Has God given prophetic times? Indeed he has. Did he give it to be understood? Undoubtedly he did. And did he design that it should be preached? We cannot doubt this. In fact, the great proclamation, "The hour of his judgment is come," must be sustained by the use of the prophetic periods. And when that message is given in God's time and order, the prophetic periods will be given right. Then the men who stand in the counsel of God will not feel themselves called of God to undo their work and do it over again, but they will follow on to know the Lord. And to the first message rightly given they will seek to add the light of the second and the third. Should the termination of the prophetic periods given in the preaching of the first message fail to bring them to the revelation of the Son of God, as it surely must in simply ushering in the investigative judgment, then as candid men, they will be constrained to examine the Bible upon the sanctuary and its cleansing, and to learn whether this does not shed the needed light upon the judgment work to which the first angel introduces us.

Why are our Advent brethren so utterly averse to the study of the heavenly sanctuary? It contains within its sacred enclosure our dear, divine Redeemer. Why should it not be a precious subject of meditation to them? Shall I name the real reason? Is it not because it contains the ark of God's testament? Yet the existence of that ark in the sanctuary is the very cause of Jesus' being there to plead for us. Why should you not even look to the ark of God with instant interest? Is not the top of that ark the mercy-seat? And whence is it that pardon comes to us but from the blood of sin-offering there sprinkled? Guilty man cannot consent to part with the mercy-seat. What then is the trouble with the ark of God? Is it not found in the fact that it contains the great original of God's law? The ark would be well enough if it were only empty. The mercy-seat would be entirely satisfactory were it not for the objectionable thing beneath that mercy-seat. And why should you object to the law of God? Is it not perfect, spiritual, holy, just, and good? In fact, if there were no law of God which condemns there would be no occasion for a mercy-seat whence pardon is obtained. If there were no law of God, there would be no atonement, no High Priest, no mercy-seat, no pardon, and, in short, no sanctuary. A priest implies a sin-offering; a sin-offering implies guilt; guilt implies law transgressed; the law is the rule of right that reveals sin, and makes the sanctuary, the priesthood, and the atonement, necessary. It is therefore the law of God existing before the first advent of Jesus Christ that demands the atonement, and the priesthood, and the sanctuary, that sinful man may be pardoned.

What fault then can you find with the moral law beneath the mercy-seat? Is it not exactly this, that its fourth precept commands men to observe the Creator's rest-day? And so because of the Sabbath of the Lord, men reject the law of God; and because of the law of God, they take no delight in the ark of his testament; and because of the ark, they cannot endure the idea of the heavenly sanctuary.

Yet why should the Bible Sabbath be thus despised? Is it not the holy of the Lord, and memorial? Isa. lviii, 13. Was it not made for man before he lost his innocency? Mark ii, 27; Gen. ii, 1-3; Ex. xx, 8-11. Did it not originate in Eden, and is it not to be observed by all flesh in Eden restored? Isa. lxvi, 22, 28. Does it not commemorate the creation of the heavens and the earth? And is it not a part of the moral law? Ex. xx.

The subject of the heavenly sanctuary leads inevitably to the observance of the fourth commandment. For this very reason, to many persons it is utterly distasteful. And may we not here have a clew to the slight which is put upon the third angel's warning voice. He brings to view the commandments of God, as well as the faith of Jesus. And as the sanctuary is treated with neglect and scorn, because it contains God's law; and the third angel's proclamation is despised because it so solemnly enforces the commandments. My brethren, these things ought not so to be.

1. Is there a real temple of God in Heaven? The repeated testimonies of the Bible clearly establish the fact. "There came a great voice out of the temple of Heaven, from the throne," Rev. xvi, 17. We may as well deny the existence of the throne, as to deny the temple which contains it. Again we read: "The temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in Heaven was opened; and the seven angels came out of the temple, having the seven plagues. . . . And the temple was filled with smoke from the glory of God, and from his power; and no man was able to enter into the temple, till the seven plagues of the seven angels were fulfilled." Rev. xv, 4, 6, 8. The temple in Heaven is here called "the temple of the tabernacle of the testimony," the testimony within the ark giving name to the building, as it did to the earthly tabernacle. Compare Ex. xxv, 10, 21; xvi, 34; xxxi, 18; xl, 20; xxxiv, 29; xxxii, 16; xxxviii, 21; Num. i, 50, 58;

ix, 16; x, 11; xvi, 4, 10. This is a very significant fact. It indicates that the law of God within the ark was the great fact which made an atonement, a priesthood, and a sanctuary, necessary for sinful men. The testimony of God, contained within the ark, made the existence of the sanctuary a necessity, and hence gives name even to the temple in Heaven.

The Bible contains many testimonies respecting the heavenly temple. "I saw also the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple." Isa. vi, 1. "But the Lord is in his holy temple; let all the earth keep silence before him." Hab. ii, 20. "Be silent, O all flesh, before the Lord; for he is raised up out of his holy habitation." Zech. ii, 13. "The Lord is in his holy temple, the Lord's throne is in Heaven: his eyes behold, his eyelids try the children of men." Ps. xi, 4. "In my distress I called upon the Lord, and cried unto my God; he heard my voice out of his temple, and my cry came before him, even into his ears. Then the earth shook and trembled; the foundations also of the hills moved and were shaken, because he was wrath." Ps. xlii, 6, 7. "Hear, all ye people; hearken, O Earth, and all that therein is; and let the Lord God be witness against you, the Lord from his holy temple. For, behold, the Lord cometh forth out of his place, and will come down and tread upon the high places of the earth. And the mountains shall be molten under him, and the valleys shall be cleft, as wax before the fire, and as the waters that are poured down a steep place." Micah i, 2-4. These testimonies are amply sufficient to establish the real existence of the heavenly temple. We shall, however, find much further evidence, as we examine other branches of this subject.

2. The temple in Heaven, with its sacred furniture, was the great original copied by Moses in the construction of the tabernacle and its contents.

(a.) Everything was to be made according to the pattern shown in the mount. Thus, when the tabernacle was commanded, God said: "According to all that I shew thee, after the pattern of the tabernacle, and the pattern of all the instruments thereof, even so shall ye make it." Ex. xxv, 9. And after enjoining the construction of the ark, and mercy-seat with its cherub on either end, and the table of show-bread, and the golden candlestick with seven branches, he charges Moses again: "And look that thou make them after their pattern which was shewed thee in the mount." Verse 40. These words are quoted and emphasized by Paul. Heb. viii, 5. The following texts, which state this same charge, or refer to the fact that the tabernacle and its furniture were made after the model given to Moses, are worthy of study by us. Ex. xxvi, 30; xxxix, 43; Num. viii, 4; Acts vii, 44. And the temple of Solomon, which contained the essential features of the tabernacle of Moses, was constructed according to the pattern which God gave David. 1 Chron. xxviii, 11-19.

(b.) But we are expressly informed by the New Testament that the earthly sanctuary was made after the pattern of the heavenly. Thus, in quoting what God enjoined upon Moses relative to the construction of the tabernacle like that which he showed him, he uses it as proof that that building and its service were the example and shadow of heavenly things. Heb. viii, 5. But in chap. ix, 21-23, he declares that the tabernacle and the vessels of the ministry were "patterns of things in the heavens." And, in verse 24, he testifies that "the holy places made with hands are the figures of the true;" or, as MacKnight renders the sentence, "the holy places made with hands, true, IMAGES OF THE TRUE HOLY PLACES."

(c.) The testimony of the Apocrypha is certainly very explicit, and, as it exactly corroborates the words of Paul, it is worthy of our attention. Thus we read, Wisdom of Solomon, ix, 8: "Thou hast commanded me to build a temple upon thy holy mount, and an altar in the city wherein thou dwellest, a resemblance of the holy tabernacle which thou hast prepared from the beginning."

3. There is not only a real temple in Heaven, the model, or original, after which the earthly was constructed, but it has also the holy things which were copied in the earthly sanctuary.

(a.) The golden altar of incense stood in the first apartment of the earthly sanctuary. It was made like the one which God showed Moses. And thus we read of the altar in the heavenly temple: "And another angel came and stood at the altar, having a golden censer; and there was given unto him much incense, that he should offer it, with the prayers of all saints, upon the golden altar which was before the throne." Rev. viii, 4.

(b.) The golden candlestick with its seven lamps. This represented the "seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, which are the seven spirits of God." Rev. iv, 5. Such is their appearance in the heavenly sanctuary. And the seven lamps of fire represent them just as the two cherubim of gold on the mercy-seat represent the two living cherubim in the temple above.

(c.) The mercy-seat and cherubim. The mercy-seat had a cherub on either end, and the whole, like the candlestick with its seven lamps, was one solid piece of beaten gold. This was made according to the pattern showed to Moses. But in the heavenly temple the cherubim are real, living beings. Thus we read, Ps. xcix, 1: "The Lord reigneth; let the people tremble: he sitteth between the cherubim; let the earth be moved." And again, Ps. lxxxi, 1: "Thou that dwellest between the cherubim, shine forth." From this position upon, or over, the mercy-seat, God shone forth in majesty in the earthly sanctuary; Ex. xxv, 22; 1 Sam. iv, 4; 2 Sam. vi, 2: and so, in the sanctuary above, from between the living cherubim.

(d.) The ark of God's testament. This was the central object of the earthly sanctuary. It contained the law of God. So the whole work of atonement by the high priest pertained to this ark, or rather to what it contained. And hence the one object of chief importance in the temple of Heaven is the ark of God. "The temple of God was opened in Heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament." The ark in the temple is that before which our High Priest ministers. The law which condemns man, and makes an atonement necessary, must be found therein. And this law, being that which caused the Son of God to come down to die for man, is not a code enacted since his advent, but one which existed before that event. In a word, it is the moral law of God. And thus we have (a.) A real temple of God in Heaven, with real, sacred things, all like the earthly sanctuary, but infi-nately more glorious and exalted. (b.) A real High Priest, whose service in the heavenly temple the earthly priests shadowed forth by their ministration. (c.) But the same moral law which was deposited in the earthly sanctuary. The earthly sanctuary, with sacrifices of lambs, could not make atonement before it; and hence the heavenly sanctuary, and the priesthood of the Son of God.

4. This temple of God in Heaven is the real sanctuary of the Bible.

The tabernacle erected by Moses, which afterward gave place to the temple of Solomon as being an enlargement of itself, and not a different thing in its essential character—this building, I say, is represented as the Lord's sanctuary about one hundred and twenty-five times. The texts are so numerous that I cannot attempt to quote them. Even Cruden, unbridged, does not give near all of them. In a few texts, heathen temples, as the rivals of God's temple, are spoken of as sanctuaries; and, in a very few texts, the word is used figuratively, with reference to something closely connected with this sacred structure. So the land of Canaan, being the place where the sanctuary was located, is called the mountain of the sanctuary. Ps. lxxviii, 64, 69; 2 Chron. xx, 7, 8. But everything pertaining to the earthly sanctuary indicated that it was not the real temple of God. It did not exist for its own sake at all. It was the figure of the true temple of God. Its sacrifices and its priesthood all pointed to the sacrifice and the priesthood of Jesus Christ. It could not, therefore, be the real substance which is of such priceless value to the people of God. So the Old Testament itself often cites us from the earthly tabernacle, or temple, to the temple of God in Heaven. The sanctuary of the Bible, however, like the priesthood of the Bible, or the atonement of the Bible, may be said to embrace two parts—the typical, and the real. We are interested in both, but chiefly in the real and the true, for this is the actual subject of promise and of prophecy.

The Old Testament contains so vast a number of testimonies relative to the sanctuary that it is not possible to quote them all. It is a relief, therefore, to find the whole subject presented in few words, plain, simple, and direct, by the apostle Paul. He tells us (a.) That there are two covenants. Gal. iv, 24. (b.) That the first covenant had a sanctuary, and then names that sanctuary in language that cannot be misunderstood: "Then verily the first covenant had also ordinances of divine service, and a worldly sanctuary. For there was a tabernacle made; the first, wherein was the candlestick, and the table, and the shew-bread; which is called the sanctuary. And after the second veil, the tabernacle which is called the Holiest of all; which had the golden censer, and the ark of the covenant overlaid round about with gold, wherein was the golden pot that had manna, and Aaron's rod that budded, and the tables of the covenant; and over it the cherubim of glory shadowing the mercy-seat; of which we cannot now speak particularly." Heb. ix, 1-5. There is no mistaking this language. This building, erected by Moses, was the sanctuary of the first covenant. So we know that nothing else, during that period, could bear the name, unless in some remote, or figurative, or secondary, sense. And the sanctuary of the covenant must be the sanctuary of prophecy for that period of time. During that period, the earth, the land of Canaan, the city of Jerusalem, and the church of God, are excluded, each and all, by this definite statement of what actually constituted the sanctuary of that time. But that sanctuary was only a representation of something greater and more perfect. Heb. ix, 9-11. The covenant to which it belonged has gone, and with it has gone the typical, or shadowy, sanctuary. Are we without a covenant and a sanctuary? By no means. The first covenant has given place to one established upon better promises. Now Paul tells us what the sanctuary of the new covenant is.

(c.) Thus he states the subject of the new covenant sanctuary: "Now of the things which we have spoken, this is the sum: We have such an High Priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens; a minister of the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man. For every high priest is ordained to offer gifts and sacrifices; wherefore it is of necessity that this man have somewhat also to offer. For if he were on earth, he should not be a priest, seeing that there are priests that offer gifts according to the law; who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things, as Moses was admonished of God when he was about to make the tabernacle: for, See, saith he, that thou make all things according to the pattern shewed to thee in the mount. But now hath he obtained a more excellent ministry, by how much also he is the mediator of a better covenant, which was established upon better promises." Heb. viii, 1-6.

The sanctuary of the new covenant is here defined in very explicit language. It is the temple of God in Heaven. It is the building of which Moses erected a copy. It is the tabernacle which the Lord pitched, and not man. The sanctuary of the new covenant is not, therefore, to be found upon the face of our earth. But though our sanctuary is in Heaven, our High Priest is there also, and his blood, offered at the mercy-seat, is accepted in the sight of the great Law-giver.

Even the Old Testament speaks in distinct terms of this heavenly sanctuary. Thus Jeremiah says: "A glorious high throne from the beginning is the place of our sanctuary. Jer. xvi, 12; Rev. xvi, 17. And the Psalmist says: "This shall be written for the generation to come; and the people which shall be created shall praise the Lord. For he hath looked down from the height of his sanctuary; from Heaven did the Lord behold the earth." Ps. cii, 18, 19.

We have therefore a clear understanding of the sanctuary of the old covenant, and the sanctuary of the new covenant. One was a pattern of the other. The sanctuary of the old covenant does not exist. It had answered its full purpose when the new covenant sanctuary was reached. It shall therefore never exist again. But the sanctuary of the new covenant does exist. This sanctuary is the one which concerns and interests the people of God. In that God's law is kept. Over it is our mercy-seat. Upon that mercy-seat is presented our sin-offering. And there stands our High Priest to plead our cause. If it could be shown that there were many things to which the term sanctuary could be applied—but it cannot—even then this must be the sanctuary of prophecy. The sanctuary of the new covenant must be the "something" to which the prophecies relating to the times of the new covenant apply. The new-covenant sanctuary is the real sanctuary of the Bible, as much as Christ is the real Priest of the Bible, or his atonement the great atonement of the whole Bible.

6. The sanctuary to be cleansed at the end of the 2300 days, must be the new covenant sanctuary.

Does any one inquire the grounds of this statement? If so, here is the answer: The 2300 days extend to the very concluding events of the gospel dispensation. They cover the period of the Persian, Grecian, and Roman, empires, almost entire. They end in the expiring events of the new-covenant dispensation. The prophecy relates to the sanctuary and the host. The host is unquestionably the true people of God. The sanctuary, therefore, to be cleansed, is the sanctuary of the church of Christ in the last days of this dispensation. Is old Jerusalem, or Palestine, or the earth, or even the tabernacle of Moses, our sanctuary? No, indeed. Our sanctuary is where our High Priest is. As the 2300 days embrace the gospel dispensation almost entire, the sanctuary to be cleansed at their end must of necessity relate to the real sanctuary, and in fact, the only sanctuary existing at that time. One sentence may express the whole truth: The sanctuary of the new covenant must be the sanctuary of those prophecies which relate to the people of God in new-covenant times.

6. The 2300 days do not all belong to the earthly sanctuary.

This declaration can be clearly proved. And if it be proved, it does of itself establish the last proposition. Undoubtedly many first-day Adventists would rise up against this statement that the earthly sanctuary is not the subject of prophecy during the entire 2300 days. But if they have not so far departed from the original Advent faith that they deny Dan. ix, 20-27, as being a key to the vision of the 2300 days and the sanctuary, it would not be difficult to convince them of its truth. The angel speaks of the city, Jerusalem, and of the sanctuary, the temple in old Jerusalem. He tells Daniel how much of the 2300 days belong to that place. He says, "Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people and thy holy city, to finish the transgression," etc. Dan. ix, 24. The word rendered determined signifies literally, in Hebrew, "cut off." So it is certain that the entire 2300 days do not belong to old Jerusalem and the Jews. Seventy weeks, i. e., 490 days, belong to them, and then, their measure of iniquity being full, they are cut off from being the people of God, and their city and sanctuary left to them desolate.

7. The anointing of the heavenly sanctuary is introduced among the closing events of the seventy weeks.

Sixty-nine of these weeks reach to the Messiah or anointed One. Verse 26. When Jesus at his baptism was anointed of the Holy Ghost he began very shortly thereafter to preach, saying, "The time is fulfilled," Mark i, 9-10; Acts x, 37, 38. There remained one week which was especially appropriated to the people of Israel. In the midst of this seventieth week Christ was nailed to the tree. Dan. ix, 27; Col. ii, 14. Connected with their great sin-offering is named another thing, which, indeed, is closely united to it. The most holy is to be anointed. Now this is literally the holy of holies. This cannot refer to Jesus for it is an unmistakable reference to the sanctuary. It cannot refer to the earthly sanctuary; for just before the time for this anointing Jesus told the Jews that their house, i. e., the temple was left to them desolate. Matt. xxiii, 38. The earthly sanctuary was no longer the sanctuary of the Lord.

But what does this anointing of the holy of holies signify? We have only to turn back to the dedication of the earthly sanctuary in order to clearly understand this thing. There we learn that before Aaron was inducted into the work of priesthood, the sanctuary itself had to be anointed. Moses having set up the sanctuary anointed the entire building, the holy place, and the holy of holies, and the holy vessels, with the holy anointing oil. And when he had also consecrated Aaron and his sons, then their priesthood began. See Lev. viii, 10, 11. There is then but one thing, to which the angel could refer, when he spoke of the anointing of the holy of holies. It was the heavenly sanctuary receiving its consecration preparatory to the priesthood of Christ therein. And thus at the very point where the earthly sanctuary ceases to be the subject of prophecy, the heavenly sanctuary is introduced, and with it the prophecy is filled out.

8. But how can the heavenly sanctuary be trodden under foot? Not literally indeed. Even the earthly sanctuary was not thus trodden down only on a very few occasions. And the host, i. e., the church or people of God, who are joined with the sanctuary in being trodden down, have not been literally trodden in the dust. But we do read concerning the minister of the heavenly sanctuary, that apostates do tread him under foot. See Heb. x, 29. In the same manner certainly on the sanctuary, of which he is a minister, he is trodden under foot. The papal power blasphemes the name of God, and his tabernacle, and them that dwell in Heaven. Rev. xiii, 6, 8.

9. But the new-covenant sanctuary is to be cleansed. This to some persons is an astonishing statement. But it is a matter of direct revelation, and it is capable of being sustained by reason also. If it be still denied that the sanctuary to be cleansed in the end of the new-covenant dispensation, at the end of the 2300 days, is the new-covenant sanctuary, it nevertheless cannot be denied that the new covenant sanctuary is to be cleansed, and that too in close proximity to the end of the 2300 days. In that case there are two sanctuaries to be cleansed about this time. One, the heavenly sanctuary; the other, who can tell what? But the new-covenant sanctuary is the sanctuary of the host, and that is the sanctuary of Dan. viii, 13, 14.

The sanctuary of the first covenant was cleansed every year; for one year made a complete round of service therein. When a victim was offered in sacrifice the sinner laid his hand upon its head to denote the transfer of the guilt from himself to the victim. Then that victim is slain because of that guilt, and its blood bearing that guilt is sprinkled upon the sanctuary or before it by the high priest. Lev. iv. So the guilt is removed from the sinner to the sanctuary, and thus the work went on through the year.

But on the tenth day of the seventh month there was a special work of atonement, where the sins were removed from the sanctuary, and the sanctuary being cleansed, the sins were placed upon the head of the scapegoat, to be borne into a land not inhabited. Lev.

xvi. This completed the round of services in the example and shadow of heavenly things.

Now the apostle tells us that the heavenly sanctuary is to be cleansed for the very same reason that the earthly one was. Thus we read:

"It was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the Heaven should be purified with these; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these." Heb. ix, 23.

The earthly sanctuary with its two holy places, and its sacred vessels constituted this pattern of things in the Heaven. It was cleansed yearly as described in Lev. xvi. The heavenly sanctuary is to be cleansed for the same reason, but with the blood of a better sacrifice, i. e., the blood of Christ. Now this cleansing process came every year at the conclusion of the complete round of service in the sanctuary. As this round was a shadow, it could be and was repeated year after year. We have the antitype once for all. The cleansing must of necessity stand at the conclusion of our Lord's work in the heavenly temple. It is the great antitype of Lev. xvi. When his work is accomplished the antitypical sanctuary shall receive the sins of the righteous, and be cast into an uninhabited land, i. e., the desolated earth during the one thousand years. Rev. xx.

The Septuagint uses the very word in Dan. viii, 14, for the cleansing of the sanctuary that Paul uses in Heb. ix, 23, for the cleansing of the heavenly sanctuary. It is therefore certain that the work in the one case is precisely identical with that in the other. It is evident that the two are accomplished at the same time. And may I not say that the sanctuary of Dan. viii, 14, is indisputably the sanctuary of the new covenant?

10. Finally the heavenly temple is made the subject of prophecy under circumstances of time, and place, and character, that indicate the actual performance of this very work. "The temple of God was opened in Heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament." This is an event which transpires under the sounding of the seventh angel. Rev. xi, 16-19. It is therefore in the right time to correspond with the cleansing of the sanctuary at the end of the 2300 days. The most holy place of the heavenly temple is opened, which indeed is that very apartment where the principal work relative to cleansing the sanctuary was to be wrought. Lev. xvi. It is followed by the pouring out of the plagues. For Rev. xv, 5-8: xvi, 1-21, is really an expanded vision of what is stated in Rev. xi, 19. The temple in Heaven is opened in both cases, and while the one glances over everything from that opening of the temple till the seventh plague is poured out, the other tells us that after the temple was opened the seven angels come out, and pour out the plagues. But both conclude with the same events, the earthquake such as never was, and the great hail.

So it is certain that the opening of the heavenly temple is the precursor of the close of probation. It is the signal for the performance of our Lord's final work. When that is wrought then there is no longer an intercessor, and the wrath of God without one element of mercy desolates our guilty world. The third angel gives warning of the approach of these last plagues. Compare his words with Rev. xv: xvi. His message is given while the High Priest performs his last work of mercy for sinful men.

The heavenly sanctuary should not be despised by Adventists. Our attention is called to it by the explicit language of prophecy relating to the close of human probation. Moreover the light which shone upon them as they came up to their great disappointment in the seventh month 1844, clearly pointed to the heavenly sanctuary. They reasoned from the Levitical types that Jesus must come on the tenth day of the seventh month at the end of the 2300 days. The argument really proved that he could not thus come, because of the great antitypical work in the sanctuary of the new covenant. Would it not be well to candidly examine the sanctuary of the Bible? Is it not possible that the time in the first angel's message was right? May we not be even now in the hour of God's judgment? Is there no way of telling what is in the heavenly ark? Should it prove to be the law of God would you not think it very dangerous to disobey it?

THE ORDER OF EVENTS IN THE JUDGMENT.

NUMBER ONE.

Eccl. iii, 17. "I said in mine heart, God shall judge the righteous and the wicked; for there is a time there for every purpose and for every work."

The Judgment of the great day is an event certain to transpire. "He hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained." Acts xvii, 31. What God hath appointed is sure to arrive in due time. The resurrection of Christ is an assurance to all men of the final Judgment. It is not the fact of the Judgment, however, but the order of its work that, at this time, engages our attention. The work to be accomplished is of immense magnitude. The Judgment relates, 1. To all the righteous. 2. To all the wicked. 3. To all the evil angels. The number of cases, therefore, to be acted upon at this grand tribunal exceeds our powers of conception. We must not, however, suppose that there will be any difficulty on the part of the Judge in acting upon every case individually. Far from this, "There is a time there for every purpose and for every work." The Judgment, indeed, pertains to an immense number of beings; yet every one of them shall give account of himself to God. Rom. xiv, 12. It will not relate to so vast a number as to make it otherwise than a strictly personal matter. Nor will there be ought of confusion or disorder in that final reckoning. God has plenty of time for the work, and he has no lack of agents to do his bidding. That he has order in this work, the Scriptures clearly teach.

1. The righteous are to judge the wicked; yet the righteous are themselves to pass the test of the Judgment. Whence it follows that the Judgment must pass upon the righteous before they can sit in judgment upon the wicked.

This is a very important proposition. That it is truthful, we know from the express testimony of the Scriptures.

1 Cor. vi, 2, 3: "Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world? and if the world shall be judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the smallest matters? Know ye not that we shall judge angels? how much more things that pertain to this life?"

Rev. xx, 4: "And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them: and judgment was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark: upon their foreheads, or in their hands: and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years."

Dan. vii, 21, 22: "I beheld, and the same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them: until the Ancient of Days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High; and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom."

Here is the exalted work of the saints in the Judgment. They are to take part in the examination of the cases of all wicked men and fallen angels. But this is not to be till they have been changed to immortality, and exalted to thrones of glory. They do not, therefore, have their cases decided at the same time with the wicked. We believe the reader will acknowledge the justice of this reasoning. Let us state another proposition:

2. The trump of God sounds as the Saviour descends from Heaven. When that trump is heard, all the righteous are, in the twinkling of an eye, changed to immortality. There can be no examination after this to determine whether they shall be counted worthy of eternal life, for they have already laid hold upon it. From this it follows that the examination and decision of the cases of the righteous takes place before the advent of Christ. The resurrection of the righteous to immortality is decisive proof that they have already passed the test of the Judgment, and have been accepted of the Judge. That they are thus raised to immortality, the following texts plainly teach:

1 Cor. xv, 42: "So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption."

Verses 43: "It is sown in dishonor; it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness; it is raised in power."

Verses 44: "It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body. There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body."

Verses 51, 52: "Behold, I show you a mystery: We shall not sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed."

These passages are perfectly convincing. The resurrection of the saints is to immortal life, and they are made immortal in the very act of the resurrection. The decision of their cases is, therefore, passed before their resurrection, for the nature of their resurrection is declarative of their eternal salvation. But the fact, that the decision of the judgment in the case of the righteous, precedes the advent, is proved by another proposition, as follows:

3. The righteous are raised before the wicked have their resurrection. This shows that the examination of their cases takes place before they are raised, for the final discrimination is made in the very act of raising the just and leaving the unjust to the resurrection of damnation.

Rev. xx, 5, 6: "But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years."

Luke xx, 35, 36: "But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage; neither can they die any more; for they are equal to the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

Phil. iii, 11: "If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." (Literally "the resurrection out from the dead ones.")

1 Cor. xv, 22, 23: "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order; Christ the first fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming."

There is a resurrection which bears the inspired designation of the "first resurrection." All who have part in this resurrection are pronounced "blessed and holy." On them, "the second death hath no power." This resurrection is out from among the dead. Paul earnestly labored to attain unto it. It is to be at the coming of Christ. Only those who are Christ's shall have part in it. All that have part in it are the children of God, because they are the children of the resurrection to life. These facts clearly prove that the examination of the cases of the righteous precedes their resurrection at the advent of Christ; that event being really declarative of their innocence in the sight of God, and of their eternal salvation. Such as are accepted of God are resurrected; the others sleep till the resurrection to damnation. These facts are decisive proof that the righteous are judged before they are resurrected.

But we have a still more explicit statement yet to notice. Says our Lord: "But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead," &c. Then it is certain that the act of accounting worthy to obtain the resurrection from among the dead, and a part in the world to come, does precede the resurrection of the righteous. But this act of accounting men worthy of a part in the kingdom of God is the very act of acquitting them in the Judgment. The investigative Judgment in the cases of the righteous is, therefore, past when they are resurrected. As the resurrection of the just is at the advent of Christ, it follows that they pass their examination, and are counted worthy of a place in the kingdom of God before the Saviour returns to the earth to gather them to himself.

THE ORDER OF EVENTS IN THE JUDGMENT.

NUMBER TWO.

We have seen that the resurrection of the saints to immortal life is declarative of their final acceptance before God. Whatever of investigation is requisite for the final decision of their cases, must take place before the Saviour in mid-heaven utters the word of command to his angels, "Gather my saints together to me." Ps. l, 6; Matt. xxiv, 31. The act of accounting them worthy must precede all this. The saints alone are to be caught up to meet Christ in the air. 1 Thess. iv, 17. But the decision who these saints are, who shall thus be caught up, rests not with the angels who execute the work, but with the Judge who gives them their commission. We cannot, therefore, avoid the conclusion that the investigation in the cases of the righteous precedes the coming of the Saviour. Let us now consider an important proposition.

1. This period of investigative Judgment is ushered in by a solemn proclamation to the inhabitants of the earth; and this investigative work embraces the closing years of human probation. This is a very important statement. But it is susceptible of being clearly proved.

Rev. xiv, 6, 7: "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his Judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters."

The gospel of Christ is "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Rom. i, 16. No other gospel than this can be preached, not even by an angel from Heaven. Gal. i, 8. Whence it follows that the angel of Rev. xiv, 6, 7, preaching the everlasting gospel, represents some part of the great gospel proclamation. It is a part of that preaching which is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. This fact alone is decisive that this proclamation concerning the hour of God's Judgment must be made while human probation still lasts. Two other solemn announcements follow. And it is evident that the human family are still upon probation when the third angel declares that "If any man worship the beast . . . the same shall drink the wine of the wrath of God. . . . Here is the patience of the saints." This is a consecutive prophecy, as several expressions plainly indicate. And it is to be observed that the Son of Man is seen upon the white cloud after all these solemn proclamations have been made.

That this announcement of the hour of God's Judgment precedes the advent of Christ, and is addressed to men while yet in probation, the fourteenth chapter of Revelation clearly proves. That this is not some local judgment is proved by the fact that "every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people," are concerned in it. It is evidently that part of the judgment work which precedes the coming of Christ, and as has been already shown, this is the work of determining who shall be accounted worthy to have part in the resurrection to immortal life, and, we may add, who also of the living shall be accounted worthy to escape the troubles that shall come in the conclusion of this state of things, and to stand before the Son of Man. Luke xx, 35; xxi, 36.

2. When the sins of the righteous are blotted out they can be no more remembered. They are blotted out before Christ comes. There can be, therefore, no act of calling them to account for their sins after the advent of Christ. Thus we read:

Acts iii, 19, 20: "Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you."

Mr. Wesley, in his "Notes on the New Testament," gives a different translation, which may be more accurate:

"Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, that the times of refreshing may come from the presence of the Lord, and he may send to you Jesus Christ, who was before appointed."

Albert Barnes, in his "Notes on the Acts," speaking of these two translations, says: "The grammatical construction will admit of either." Page 67. One of these represents the blotting out to be when the times of refreshing arrive; the other makes it the cause of that refreshing. But neither of them gives the idea that this blotting out takes place when the sinner turns to God. Both of them throw it into the future. Each of them represent it as preceding the second coming of the Lord. But this is especially true of the latter translation, which follows the original in using a conditional verb respecting Christ's advent; not as though that were a doubtful event, but rather as if his coming to the personal salvation of the ones addressed, depended upon their having part in the refreshing; and as if that refreshing was to come in consequence of the blotting out of sins.

The sins of the righteous are blotted out before the coming of Christ. They cannot be called to give account of their sins after they have been blotted out; whence it follows that whatever account the righteous render to God for their sins must be before the advent of the Saviour, and not at, or after, that event.

3. The sins of men are written in the books of God's remembrance. The blotting out of the sins of the righteous does therefore involve the examination of these books for this very purpose. That the sins of men are thus written, is plainly revealed in the Scriptures.

Jer. li, 22: "For though thou wash thee with nitre, and take thee much soap, yet thine iniquity is marked before me, saith the Lord God." And thus Moses speaks of the guilt of Israel: "Is not this laid up in store with me, and sealed up among my treasures?" Deut. xxxii, 34. And Paul speaks in the same manner: "But after thy hardness and impenitent heart treasurest up unto thyself wrath against the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God; who will render to every man according to his deeds." Rom. ii, 5, 6. These statements of wrath being treasured up can have reference only to the fact that God takes notice of men's sins and that every sin is marked before him. To this fact all the texts which speak of the blotting out of sins must have reference. Thus David prays that God would blot out his transgressions. Ps. li, 1, 9. And Nehemiah, and David, and Jeremiah, pray respecting certain persons, that their sin may not be blotted out. Neh. iv, 5; Ps. cix, 14; Jer. xlviii, 23.

And Isaiah, in prophetic language, speaks of this blotting out as if it were a past event, just as in the next verse he speaks of the new creation, and the final redemption. Isa. xlv, 22, 23. And in the previous chapter he speaks in a similar manner of this blotting out as necessary in order that the sins of the people of God be no more remembered. Isa. xlvi, 25. These texts plainly imply that the sins of men are upon record, and that there is a time when these are blotted out of the record of the righteous. But the existence of these books and their use in the Judgment is plainly revealed. Thus Daniel says: "The Judgment was set, and the books were opened." Dan. vii, 10. And John says: "And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened; and another book was opened, which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works." Rev. xii, 12.

It is evident that the utmost importance is attached to the blotting out of the sins of the righteous from these books. When they are blotted out they can never rise up in the Judgment against those who committed them; for men give account to God only for those things contained in the books. It is therefore certain that no individual can have his sins blotted out until the close of his probation. But when this work is wrought there must be an examination of the books for this very purpose.

4. The book of life is to be examined before the resurrection of the just. The words of Daniel render this point perfectly clear:

Dan. xii, 1: "And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people; and there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time; and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book."

We have seen from other texts that the investigation and decision of the Judgment in the cases of the righteous precedes the advent of the Saviour. We have also seen that there is a time before the coming of Jesus when the sins of the righteous are blotted out from the books of God's remembrance. This is decisive proof that these books are subjected to examination before the Saviour comes again. But we have now another important fact. The book of life is examined before the deliverance of the saints. Daniel says: "At that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book." The book must, therefore, be examined before the resurrection of the righteous to immortal life. This is a convincing proof that the investigation of the cases of the righteous precedes the first resurrection. This book is referred to in the following passages: Ex. xxxii, 32, 33; Ps. lxxix, 28; lxxxvii, 8; Isa. iv, 3; Eze. xlii, 9; Dan. xii, 1; Luke x, 20; Phil. iv, 3; Heb. xii, 23; Rev. iii, 5; xii, 8; xvii, 8; xx, 12, 15; xxi, 27; xlii, 19.

The book of life is the final means of determining the cases of the righteous in the Judgment; for all are delivered who are at the time of deliverance found written in it. But before this book is made the final source of appeal, it is itself to be tested by the books of God's record. For all the names which are entered in this book of life, of those who fail to overcome, are to be blotted out. Yet it is the record of these persons' lives that is to cause their names to be stricken from the book of life. Ex. xxxii, 32, 33; Ps. lxxix, 28; Rev. iii, 5. We must, therefore, conclude that before the final examination of the book of life in the case of the righteous, there is a prior examination of the books of God's record to determine, (1) Whose record of repentance and of overcoming is such that their sins shall be blotted out; and, (2) To ascertain from this book who have failed in the attempt to overcome, and to strike the names of all such from the book of life. When the books of God's remembrance are thus examined, and the sins of the overcomers blotted out, and the names of those who have not succeeded to overcome are removed from the book of life, that book becomes the final test, and an examination of its pages concludes the work of investigation preparatory to the deliverance of the saints.

THE ORDER OF EVENTS IN THE JUDGMENT.

NUMBER THREE.

We have seen that though the book of life is the final book of reference to determine who shall have part in the first resurrection, yet it must itself first be examined by the book of God's remembrance for the removal of every name that has not completed the work of overcoming.

1. The book called the "book of remembrance" is written expressly for the righteous, and is the book which shall determine, in their case, the decision of the Judgment. This book is particularly referred to in the following passages:

Mal. iii, 16-18: "Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another: and the Lord hearkened and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name. And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him. Then shall ye return and discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not."

Ps. lvi, 8: "Thou tellest my wanderings: put thou my tears into thy bottle: are they not in thy book?"

Neh. xiii, 14: "Remember me, O my God, concerning this, and wipe not out my good deeds that I have done for the house of my God, and for the offices thereof."

The book of God's remembrance mentioned in these texts pertains only to the righteous. Yet it appears to be a different book from the book of life. For though that book belongs alone to the righteous, it seems to be simply the record of their names (Luke x, 20; Phil. iv, 8; Rev. xiii, 8; xiii, 8; xvii, 8), while the book of remembrance is the record of their good deeds. Mat. iii, 16-18; Ps. lvi, 8; Neh. xiii, 14. But should we conclude that the book of life is identical with the book of God's remembrance, it will not essentially change this argument. For it would still follow that the record of the good deeds of the righteous, if it shows that they have overcome all their faults, and perfected the graces of the Spirit of God in themselves, is that which determines that their names shall be retained in the book of life, and their sins blotted out of the books which record them. But if the record be not such that God can accept, then their names must be removed from that book (Ex. xxxii, 32, 33; Ps. lxxv, 28; Rev. xiii, 8), and the record of their good deeds also be blotted out, so as no more remembered. Neh. xiii, 14; Rev. xiii, 8.

The book of God's remembrance contains the names of all who enter the service of God, and of such only. Yet not every one of these does follow on to know him. Many that set out to overcome do not complete the work. That record, however, will show just how far they advanced in overcoming, and how and when they failed. As it contains simply the good deeds of the righteous, it will show their acts of repentance, confession, obedience, and sacrifice recorded therein. When the work is complete then this record shows them prepared for the examination of the Judgment. This, therefore, is the book out of which the names of the righteous are to be decided, and from whose record they are to be accounted worthy of that world and the resurrection from the dead.

2. The justification of the righteous in the Judgment must precede that resurrection which is called "the resurrection of the just." Our Lord speaks of the resurrection of the righteous by this designation. Luke xiv, 14: "Paul states that this resurrection shall be at the coming of Christ. 1 Cor. xv, 23, 51-54; 1 Thess. iv, 16-18."

Mat. xli, 38, 39: "But I say unto you, That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of Judgment. For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned."

The justification of the Judgment must be when the righteous are accounted worthy of a part in the first resurrection. But before they are thus justified in the Judgment they give an account of their words. And this being true, it follows that God preserves a record of the words which we speak; also that our evil words are not blotted out until this account has been rendered. But the acquittal and the blotting out do, of necessity, precede the gift of immortality to the righteous at the advent of our Lord.

3. The decision of the Judgment in the case of the righteous must be when the blotting out of their sins takes place.

Ecc. xii, 14: "For God shall bring every work into Judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil."

God brings the conduct of men into the Judgment by means of books of record. They are judged "out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works." Rev. xx, 12, 13.

But the sins of the righteous are blotted out before the coming of the Lord. Acts iii, 19, 20. And it is manifest that their sins cannot be brought into the Judgment after they are thus blotted out. But the righteous are to be judged as really as are the wicked. Ecc. iii, 17. It follows, therefore, that their Judgment must be at the time of the blotting out of their sins. For then there is an end made forever of the record of their transgressions. Now it is manifest that when this final work is wrought, it will pertain only to those who have fully repented of their sins, and have perfectly accomplished the work of overcoming. This work of blotting out sins brings our Lord's priesthood to an end. He must be priest till then. He is not needed as priest after that. But when our Lord does blot out the sins of his people he must present their cases individually before his Father and show from the "book of remembrance" that they have severally repented of their sins, and have completed their work of overcoming. Then the Father accepts the statement thus made and the evidence thus presented in the case of each one, and bids the Son to blot out the record of that person's sins. This is manifestly the very time and occasion at which the righteous are accounted worthy of the resurrection to immortality. Their sins are thus brought into the Judgment through their High Priest, and vanquish with the righteous render account of their sins to the Father. This account being accepted, their sins are blotted out, and themselves pronounced just before God. This is the justification of the Judgment.

4. There is a time for blotting out the names of some from the book of life, and of confessing the names of the others before the Father.

Rev. iii, 6: "He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels."

The time of blotting out names from the book of life precedes the deliverance of the saints. For at the time of that event every one shall be delivered "that shall be found written in the book." Dan. xii, 1. Thus the fearful threatening of Ex. xxiii, 22, 23; Ps. lxxix, 28; Rev. xxi, 19; is executed in the removal of names from this book before the coming of Christ. Those who overcome are the ones who have their sins blotted out. But those who fail to overcome have their names stricken from the book of life. The examination of their record must, therefore, precede both these acts of blotting out, for the express purpose of determining whether they shall have their sins blotted out, or have their names removed from the book of life. We have seen that it is at this very point that the righteous give account of their sins through their High Priest, who, from the book of God's remembrance, shows that they have repented, confessed, forsaken, and overcome, their sins. Also that they are thus acquitted and justified in order that they may have a part in the resurrection to immortality. Here is also the very act of the Saviour in confessing the names of his people before his Father and the holy angels, that shall close our Lord's priesthood and place his people where they shall be forever free from all their sins. For when the book of God's remembrance is found to prove that the person under examination is an overcomer, it is then the part of the Saviour to confess his name before his Father and the holy angels, and the part of the Father to give judgment that that person's sins be blotted from the record. Surely it is of some account to us that we have part in the fulfillment of the promise, "I will confess his name before my Father and before his angels." Matt. x, 32; Luke xii, 8; Rev. iii, 6.

5. The righteous are not done with their sins till they have rendered account in the Judgment. Eccl. iii, 17; xli, 14; Matt. xii, 36, 37. The only account that they can render is to show that they have made perfect work of repentance and of overcoming. This must be done before they are blotted out of the record above. Our Advocate with the Father must hold his office till he has saved his people from their sins. 1 John ii, 1; Matt. i, 21. He cannot close this work till he has seen them accepted in the Judgment. Whence it follows that his office of Advocate will constrain him to confess their names before the tribunal of his Father, and to show that their sins should be removed from the books.

6. When our Lord has thus finished his work as priest, his people are prepared to stand in the sight of God without an atoning sacrifice. The following texts make this very clear:

Nicah vii, 18, 19: "Who is a God like unto thee, that pardoneth iniquity, and passeth by the transgression of the remnant of his heritage? He retaineth not his anger forever, because he delighteth in mercy. He will turn again, he will have compassion upon us; he will subdue our iniquities; and thou wilt cast all their sins into the depths of the sea."

And David, using the past for the future, as is frequent in the prophets, says: "As far as the east is from the west, so far hath he removed our transgressions from us." Ps. ciii, 12.

Jeremiah, in the promise of the new covenant, says: "I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more." Chap. xxxi, 34.

Paul, quoting Jeremiah, says: "Their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more." Heb. viii, 12.

Isa. xliii, 25: "I, even I, am he that blot out thy transgressions for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins."

Jer. i, 20: "In those days, and in that time, saith the Lord, the iniquity of Israel shall be sought for, and there shall be none; and the sins of Judah, and they shall not be found; for I will pardon them whom I reserve."

When these prophetic declarations are accomplished we shall no longer need an Advocate, Intercessor, Mediator, or High Priest. Our sins will never after that exist even in the record of the court of Heaven. Our lost innocence will then have been recovered, and we shall then be like to the angels of God who walk in their original uprightness.

7. The accomplishment of this work of blotting out the sins of those who overcome is marked by a declaration of awful solemnity:

Rev. xxi, 11, 12: "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still; and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still; and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still; and he that is holy, let him be holy still. And, behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be."

These words virtually announce the close of our Lord's work as High Priest. They cannot be uttered till he, as our Advocate, has secured the blotting out of the sins of his people at his Father's tribunal. Yet we have seen that this work of blotting out is accomplished before he comes the second time without sin unto salvation. Heb. ix, 27, 28. The text under consideration is in exact harmony with these facts. The solemn announcement, "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still, . . . and he that is holy, let him be holy still," is followed by these words: "And, behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be." The final work of our Lord for the removal of his people's sins does therefore precede his return in the clouds of heaven to reward every man according to his works.

THE ORDER OF EVENTS IN THE JUDGMENT.

NUMBER FOUR.

God the Father is in his own right the Supreme Judge of men and of angels. He purposes to bring all mankind into Judgment. Yet this work is only done in part by himself in person. It is by Jesus Christ that God is to perform the larger part of this immense work. The following proposition is worthy of serious consideration:

1. God the Father opens the Judgment in person, then crowns his Son king, and commits the Judgment to him.

Dan. vii, 9-14: "I beheld till the thrones were cast down, and the Ancient of Days did sit, whose garment was white as snow, and the hair of his head like the pure wool; his throne was like the fiery flame, and his wheels as burning fire. A fiery stream issued and came forth from before him; thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him; the Judgment was set, and the books were opened. I beheld then, because of the voice of the great words which the horn spake, I beheld even till the beast was slain, and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flame. As concerning the rest of the beasts, they had their dominion taken away; yet their lives were prolonged for a season and time. I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of Days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed."

The Ancient of Days represents God the Father. That one like the Son of Man, who comes to the Ancient of Days, is none other than our Lord Jesus Christ; Matt. xxvi, 64; Mark xiv, 61, 62. It is, therefore, not the Son, but the Father who sits in Judgment as described in this vision. Those who stand in his presence either to minister, or to wait, are not men, but angels. This is a very important fact. Every student of the Bible is aware that the book of Revelation is a wonderful counterpart to the book of Daniel. The very phraseology respecting those in the presence of the Ancient of Days, is made use of in the Revelation, and with the evident design of showing who are the persons intended by Daniel.

Thus John says: "And I beheld, and I heard the voice of many voices round about the throne, and the beasts, and the elders; and the number of them was ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands." Rev. v, 11.

Daniel describes the opening scene of the final Judgment. The Father presides as Judge. The angels of God are present as ministers and witnesses. At this tribunal the Son of Man presents himself to receive the dominion of the world. Here he is crowned King of kings, and Lord of lords. But men are not present to witness this part of the Judgment, or to behold the coronation of Christ. It is the Father and the Son and the holy angels who compose this grand assembly. Our Lord cannot act as Judge, so long as he ministers as high priest to make intercession for them that come to God through him. Heb. vii, 24, 25. Nor can he act as Judge until he is clothed with kingly power; for it is by virtue of his authority as king that he pronounces the decision of the Judgment. Matt. xxv, 31, 40. The coronation of our Lord at the Judgment-seat of his Father marks the termination of his priesthood, and invests him with that sovereign authority by which he shall judge the world.

2. The Ancient of Days does not hold the session of the Judgment, described in Dan. vii, upon this earth.

Those who think this session of Judgment by the Father is to transpire upon our earth, understand that the "ten thousand times ten thousand" who stand before him, are the vast multitude of the human family, standing at his bar for judgment. But as this vision represents the Son as coming to the Father when he is thus seated in Judgment, it follows that if the Father is already upon this earth judging its inhabitants when the Son of God comes the second time, then the Father does not send his Son to the earth, but he comes first, and then the Son comes and joins him. Yet Peter said of the Father concerning Christ's second advent: "He shall send Jesus Christ." Acts iii, 20.

It would also follow that instead of the Son of Man coming to gather his saints from the four quarters of the earth, he comes to find all mankind gathered at his Father's bar. But we do know that when the Saviour comes he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and shall gather his elect from the four winds, even from the uttermost parts of the earth. Matt. xxiv, 31; Mark xiii, 27; 2 Thess. ii, 1.

But should this difficulty be avoided by adopting the truth that those who stand before the Ancient of Days are angels, so those certainly must be who minister unto him, it follows that our Lord in coming back to our earth thus preceded by his Father and the holy angels, comes unattended and alone. But this cannot be true; for when Jesus comes again it will be with all the holy angels. Matt. xxv, 31; xvi, 27; 2 Thess. i, 7, 8.

Again, the Saviour is crowned king at the Judgment-seat of the Father. But that Judgment-seat cannot be upon our earth, else the Saviour would have to return to this earth to be crowned; whereas he receives his kingdom while absent, and returns as King of kings, sitting upon the throne of his glory. Luke xix, 11, 12, 16; Matt. xxv, 31; 2 Tim. iv, 1; Rev. xix, 11-16.

It is certain, therefore, that the Judgment scene described in Dan. vii does not transpire upon our earth. Indeed, were it true that immediately preceding the descent of the Saviour to our earth, God the Father should himself descend in his own infinite majesty, and summon mankind to his bar, and enter into Judgment with them, the subsequent advent of Jesus would hardly be taken notice of at all by men. But such is not the truth in the case. Matt. xxiv, 29-31; xxv, 31, 32; Mark xiii, 26, 27; Luke xxi, 26-27, 36; 1 Thess. iv, 14-18; 2 Thess. i, 7-10.

3. This session of the Judgment by the Ancient of Days precedes the advent of Christ to our earth.

When our Lord comes again he is a king seated upon his own throne. Matt. xxv, 31; Luke xix, 11, 12, 16;

Rev. xix, 11-10. But the tribunal of the Father is the very time and place where his coronation occurs. Dan. vii, 7-14. It must then precede his advent.

When he comes the second time it is "in the glory of his Father." Matt. xvi, 27; Mark viii, 38; Luke ix, 26; 2 Thess. i, 7, 8. But it is when the Father sits in Judgment that he gives this glory to his Son. Dan. vii, 14. Indeed, the very majesty of the Father as displayed at this tribunal, will attend the Son when he is revealed in flaming fire to take vengeance on his enemies. 2 Thess. i, 7-10; Ps. i, 8-6; Matt. xxiv, 30, 31; Matt. xxi, 31. We are certain, therefore, that the revelation of Christ in his infinite glory is subsequent to that tribunal at which that glory is given to him.

On this occasion the Father is judge in person, and the Son presents himself to receive the kingdom. But when the Son of Man comes to our earth, having received the kingdom, he acts as judge himself. 2 Tim. iv, 1. But it is evident that our Lord's work as judge is at a later point of time than that Judgment scene at which the Father presides. We are certain, therefore, that the tribunal of Dan. vii, 9-14, precedes the descent of our Lord from Heaven. 1 Thess. iv, 14-18.

4. The coming of the Son of Man to the Ancient of Days, is not the same event as his second advent to our world.

This has been proved already in the examination of other points. Thus it has been shown from the coronation of Christ, that the second advent must be at a later time than the Saviour's act of coming to his Father in Dan. vii, 13, 14, to receive the kingdom. Again, to make this the second advent, we must have God the Father and the host of his angels here upon our earth when the Saviour comes again. But this, as has been shown, involves the contradiction of the plainest facts. We cannot, therefore, doubt that the coming of Jesus to the Ancient of Days as he sits in Judgment, is an event preceding his second advent to our earth.

5. The coming of the Ancient of Days, in this vision of Daniel's, is not to this world, but to the place of this Judgment scene. With regard to the place of this tribunal we will speak hereafter. We have already proved that this session of the Judgment precedes the second advent, and that it is not held upon our earth. This fact establishes the truthfulness of this proposition.

6. The destruction of the little horn does not take place at the time when the Ancient of Days sits in Judgment, but at a point still later when the Son of Man descends in flaming fire.

We have proved that when our Lord comes to this earth the second time, he comes as king, and must therefore come from the tribunal of his Father; for at that tribunal the kingdom is given to him. But the Man of Sin, or little horn, is destroyed by the brightness of Christ's coming. 2 Thess. ii, 8; i, 7-10. Whence it follows that the destruction of the little horn is not at the Father's Judgment-seat, but at the advent of his Son, at a still later point of time. But were it true that the Judgment scene of Dan. vii is opened by the personal revelation of God the Father to the inhabitants of our earth, we may be sure that there would be no Man of Sin left to be destroyed afterward by the brightness of the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.

We have already proved that the destruction of this wicked power is when Christ comes to our earth; and that he does not thus come till he has first attended in person this tribunal of his Father. And to this statement agree the words of verse 11: "I beheld ~~thus~~ became of the voice of the great words which the horn spake: I beheld even ~~till~~ until the beast was slain, and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flame." It appears that even while this grand tribunal was in session, the attention of the prophet was called by the Spirit of God to the great words which the horn was speaking. "I beheld then because of the voice of the great words which the horn spake." But Daniel does not represent his destruction as coming at once even then. He says: "I beheld even ~~till~~ until the beast was slain, and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flame." The period of time covered by this "till" is thus filled up: The Son of God comes to his Father's Judgment-seat and receives the dominion, and the glory, and the kingdom; then descends to our earth in flaming fire, like that which comes forth from before his Father, and by the brightness of his advent destroys the little horn. 2 Thess. i, 11. It is when our Lord thus comes, that this wicked power is given to the burning flame.

And this is really the very point marked in verses 21 and 22 for the termination of the war against the saints. "I beheld, and the same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them: until the Ancient of Days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High, and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom." But, even while the Most High sits in Judgment to determine the cases of his saints, the little horn is, according to verse 11, uttering great words against God. When, however, the saints have passed the test of this examination, and are counted worthy of the kingdom of God, their Lord, being crowned king, returns to gather them to himself. It is at this very point of time, the advent of the Lord Jesus, that judgment is given to the saints of the Most High, as is proved by comparing 1 Cor. vi, 2, 3, with 1 Cor. iv, 5. And thus we have marked again the advent of Christ as the point of time for the destruction of this wicked power.

7. The destruction of the little horn is not the same event as the taking away of his dominion. Compare verses 11 and 20. The one follows after the sitting of the Ancient of Days in Judgment; but the other precedes it by a certain space of time. Yet, if we read the chapter without strict attention, we would be very likely to conclude that ~~not the little horn alone, but each of the first three horns and their dominions~~ all ~~were~~ were taken away at the Judgment-seat, verses 11, 12, 20. This, however, cannot be. For the dominion of the first beast was taken away by the second, though his life was spared; and so of each one to the last. But the little horn has a special dominion over the saints for "a time and times and the dividing of time," or 1260 prophetic days (see verse 25; Rev. xii, 6, 14), which is taken away at the end of that period. There remains even then a space of time to "the end," during which, his dominion is continued and destroyed. He wars against the saints, however, and prevails until the judgment is given to the saints at the advent of Christ (1 Cor. iv, 6; vi, 2, 8; Rev. xx, 4); when he is given to the burning flames. Verse 11; 2 Thess. ii, 8.

8. The coronation of Christ at the Judgment-seat of the Father is the same event as the standing up of Michael. Compare Dan. vii, 13, 14; xii, 1. For Michael is Christ, and his standing up is his beginning to reign. Michael is the name borne by our Lord as the ruler of the angelic host. It signifies, "He who is like God." See Dr. A. Clarke on Dan. x, 13, and Jude 9. This must be our Lord. See Heb. i, 8. He is called the archangel. Jude 9. This term signifies prince of angels, or chief of the angelic host. See Dr. A. Clarke on Jude 9; also Barnes' notes on the same; also Watson's Theological Dictionary. But this is the very office of our divine Lord. Heb. i. Michael is the great prince that standeth for the children of God. Also he is called our prince. See Dan. x, 21; xii, 1. But this can be no other than Christ. Acts v, 31.

The standing up of Michael is his assumption of kingly power. See the use of this term in Dan. xi, 2, 3, 4, 7, 20, 21. But it is Jesus who takes the throne of the kingdom, and not an angel. Dan. vii, 13, 14; Ps. ii, 6-12. Our Lord receives his dominion at his Father's judgment-seat. Dan. vii. A great time of trouble follows, at which Christ delivers every one found written in the book. This is a plain reference to the examination of the books shown in the previous vision. Compare Dan. xii, 1; vii, 9, 10. This shows that the judgment scene, of Dan. vii, relates to the righteous, and that it precedes their final deliverance at the advent of Christ. The thrones of Dan. vii, 9, will be noticed hereafter.

THE ORDER OF EVENTS IN THE JUDGMENT.

NUMBER FIVE.

Our Lord has three grand offices assigned him in the Scriptures in the work of human redemption. When he was upon our earth at his first advent, he was that prophet of whom Moses spoke, in Deut. xviii, 15-18. See also Acts iii, 22-23. When he ascended up to Heaven, he became a great High Priest, after the order of Melchisedec. Ps. cx; Heb. viii, 1-6. But when he comes again, he is in possession of his kingly authority, as promised in the second Psalm. It is by virtue of this office of king that he judges mankind. Matt. xxi, 27, 40. The transition from our Lord's priesthood to his kingly office, precedes his second advent. Luke xix, 11, 12, 15. It takes place when his Father sits in Judgment, as described in Dan. vii, 9-14.

1. The nature of the words addressed by the Father to the Son, when he crowns him king, shows that coronation to be at the close of his priestly office.

Ps. li, 9-11. "Yet have I set my king upon my holy hill of Zion. I will declare the decree; the Lord hath said unto me, Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee. Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel."

It is manifest that the giving of the heathen to the Son by the Father, is not for their salvation, but for their destruction. It could not, therefore, take place at the ascension of Christ, when he entered upon his priesthood, but must be when the work of that priesthood is finished. Daniel has placed the coronation of Christ at the Father's judgment-seat. And to this fact the words of the second Psalm perfectly agree. The priesthood of Christ is closed when the scepter of iron is placed in his hands. The number of his people is made up, the work for their sins is finished, and their salvation rendered certain, when all the rest of mankind are delivered into his hands to be broken by the scepter of his justice. But this cannot be till our Lord, as priest, has blotted out our sins, at the tribunal of his Father. For when the wicked are given into the hands of Christ, to be destroyed, it is plain that there is no farther salvation for sinners. When our Lord accepts the iron scepter of justice, he can no longer fill the office of priest, to make atonement for sin. His whole priestly office is finished when he is thus crowned by his Father. But this coronation, which is described in Dan. vii, 9-14, is simply the transition from the priesthood of Christ to his kingly office. It is plain that our Lord's priesthood is brought to a conclusion at the time when the Ancient of Days sits in Judgment. We need him as priest to confess our sins at that tribunal, and to show from the record of our lives that we have perfected the work of overcoming, so that our sins may, by the declaration of the Father, be blotted out, and our names retained in the book of life. But when the people of God have thus passed the decision of the investigative Judgment, their probation is closed forever, and their names being found in the book of life, when all that have but partially overcome, by Stephen's testimony, they are prepared for the standing up of Michael to deliver his people, and to destroy all other with the scepter of his justice.

2. The priesthood of Christ continues till his enemies are given him to be destroyed.

Ps. cx, 1-7. "The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool. The Lord shall send the rod of thy strength out of Zion; rule then in the midst of thine enemies. Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power, in the beauties of holiness from the womb of the morning; thou hast the dew of thy youth. The Lord hath sworn, and will not repent. Thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchisedec. The Lord at thy right hand shall strike through kings in the day of his wrath. He shall judge among the heathen, he shall fill the places with the dead bodies; he shall wound the heads over many countries. He shall drink of the brook in the way: therefore shall he lift up the head."

The words of verse 1, "Sit thou at my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool," and of verse 4, "Thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchisedec," are addressed by God, the Father, to Christ, when he enters upon his priestly office, and are equivalent to saying that in due time he should have his enemies given him to destroy, viz., at the close of his work of intercession. For this reason it is, that Paul represents him as sitting at the Father's right hand, in a state of expectancy. Heb. x, 13. But the words of the second Psalm, bidding him ask for the heathen, to destroy them, cannot be uttered till he finishes his work of intercession. It appears that our Lord announces the close of his intercession, by saying, "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still; and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still; and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still; and he that is holy, let him be holy still." Rev. xxii, 11. In response to this declaration of the Intercessor, announcing to his Father the close of his work, the Father bids the Son ask of him the heathen that he may devote them to utter destruction. And in fulfillment of the Son's request, the Father crowns him king, as described in Daniel vii, 9-14, as he sits in Judgment, and commits the Judgment into his hands.

3. Christ, as our high priest or intercessor, sits at the right hand of the Father's throne, i. e., he occupies the place of honor in the presence of one greater, till he is himself crowned king, when he takes his own throne.

The position of the Saviour as high priest cannot be one invariable, fixed posture of sitting. Indeed, although Mark says (chap. xvi, 19) concerning our Lord "that he was received up into Heaven, and sat on the right hand of God," yet it is said of Stephen that "he being full of the Holy Ghost, looked up steadfastly into Heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God, and said, Behold, I see the heavens opened, and the Son of Man standing on the right hand of God." Acts vii, 55, 56. Some time after this, Saul of Tarsus had an actual interview with Christ, that like the other apostles he might be a witness in person to the fact of his resurrection. 1 Cor. ix, 1; xv, 8; Acts ix, 3-5, 17, 27; xxi, 6-8, 14; xxvi, 16, 18.

The fact that Stephen saw our Lord standing at his Father's right hand; and that after this, Jesus did personally appear to Saul to constitute him a witness of his resurrection, which, in order to be an apostle, he must be, is not inconsistent with the mandate of the Father, "Sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool."

The Hebrew word yashav, rendered sit in Ps. cx, 1, is used an immense number of times in the Old Testament, and is in a very large portion of those cases rendered dwell. Thus (Gen. xiii, 12) "Abram dwelt in the land of Canaan, and Lot dwelt in the cities of the plain." Again (Gen. xiv, 10), "And thou shalt dwell in the land of Goshen." Also, "David dwelt in the country of the Philistines." 1 Sam. xxvii, 7. These examples could be extended to great length. And kindred uses of the word are very numerous. But it is to be observed that Abraham, and Lot, and Jacob, and David, the persons spoken of in these texts who dwelt, or as rendered in Ps. cx, 1, who sat in the places named, were not, during the time in which they acted thus, immovably fixed to those several places, but were capable of going and returning during the very time in question. And the Greek word kathiso, used in the New Testament for Christ's act of sitting at the Father's right hand, though more generally used in the sense of sitting, is also used precisely like yashav in the texts above. Thus it is used in Acts xviii, 11, where it is said of Paul, that "he continued there [at Corinth] a year and six months." But though that was Paul's abiding place during that period, it is every way probable that he visited other places for occasional preaching during the time.

When our Lord went away, it was not simply that he should act as intercessor for his people. He also had another work to do. He says: "In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself: that where I am, there ye may be also." John xiv, 2, 8. We cannot doubt that this work is wrought under our Lord's personal inspection; and it is performed during the period that he is at the Father's right hand.

The expression, "right hand," is especially worthy of attention. In defining the Hebrew word yahmeen, i. e., right hand, Gesenius says: "To sit on the right hand of the king, as the nearest place of honor, e. g., spoken of the queen (1 Kings ii, 19; Ps. xlv, 9.); of one beloved of the king and vicegerent of the kingdom. Ps. cx, 1."

When our Lord spoke of going away to intercede for his people, he said: "I go unto the Father; for my Father is greater than I." John xiv, 26-28. In fulfilling his office of intercessor, or high priest, he has the highest place of honor in the presence of a greater, assigned him; for he sits on the right hand of his Father's throne. He is not, however, to sustain this relation always. It lasts while he pleads for sinful men. When it ceases, the suppliant are to be made his footstool, and the dominion, and glory, and kingdom, being given him, he sits down upon his own throne. Rev. iii, 21. This gift of the throne to Christ, is when the Father sits in Judgment, as we have seen from Dan. vii, 9-14. We can well understand, that at this tribunal the question is determined as to who has overcome, and, that being settled, all the others are given to Christ to be broken with his iron scepter. The determination of the cases of the righteous in showing that they have perfected the work of overcoming, and that they are worthy to have their sins blotted out, is the final work of our Lord as high priest. When this is accomplished, his priesthood is closed forever, and he assumes his kingly throne to judge his enemies and to deliver and reward his saints.

4. The Saviour, being crowned king at the close of his priestly office, begins the exercise of his kingly power by delivering his people, and by bringing to trial, and pronouncing judgment upon, and executing, his enemies.

The one hundred and tenth Psalm, though it speaks very distinctly of the priesthood of Christ, enters even more largely into the exercise of his kingly office. It very clearly reveals the fact that our Lord acts as judge by virtue of his kingly authority. Thus verse 1 assigns to him as priest, the place of honor at his Father's right hand, limiting his priesthood, however, by an event which changes his office from priest to king. Verse 2 states the very act of making Christ king, and making his enemies his footstool. Thus it says: "The Lord shall send the rod of thy strength out of Zion; rule thou in the midst of thine enemies." The first clause of this verse is parallel to Ps. ii, 6: "Yet have I set my king upon my holy hill of Zion." The heavenly Zion (see Heb. xii, 22; Rev. xiv, 1) is the place of Christ's coronation. The last clause is the very words of the Father to the Son, when he crowns him king. This is sufficiently obvious from our common English version. But it is made still more evident from the French translation of David Martin, in which the two clauses are connected by the words, "in saying." Thus: "The Lord shall transmit out of Zion the scepter of thy strength, in saying: Rule in the midst of thy enemies."

Our Lord being thus inducted into his kingly office, and proceeding to the exercise of his power against his enemies, the next verse states the sympathy of his people with this work: "Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power, in the beauties of holiness from the womb of the morning: thou hast the dew of thy youth." Instead of "the day of thy power," Martin's French Bible reads, "The day that thou shalt assemble thy army in holy pomp." This is the time when the Son of Man descends in power and great glory, and the armies of Heaven, i. e., all the holy angels, attend and surround him. Matt. xxiv, 30, 31; 1 Thess. iv, 16-18; Rev. xix, 11-21. The people of God are to unite with Christ in his rule over the nations of wicked men. Rev. ii, 26, 27; Ps. ii, 6-9. The morning, of this verse, must be the morning of the day which it mentions. One of the earliest events of that day is the resurrection of the just, when, like their Lord, they are born from the dead to life immortal. Rev. xx, 4-6; Luke xx, 35, 36; Col. i, 18; Hosea xiii, 13, 14; 1 Cor. xv, 42-44, 51-54.

The fourth verse of this Psalm confirms the priesthood of Christ with an oath. His prophetic office is the subject of solemn promise. Dent. xviii, 15-18. His priesthood is established by an oath. Ps. cx, 4. His kingly office is the subject of a fixed decree. Ps. ii, 6, 7. But the forever of his priesthood, as expressed by this verse, is limited by the fact that at a certain point of time he is to cease to plead for sinful men, and they are to be made his footstool.

It is important to observe that there are in this Psalm two Lords, the Father and the Son. One in the original is called Jehovah; the other is called Adonai. The word Lord in small capitals is used for Jehovah. But the Lord at his right hand (verse 1) is Adonai, the Son. So we read of the Son in verse 5; "The Lord at thy right hand shall strike through kings in the day of his wrath." This will evidently be in the battle of the great day of God Almighty. Rev. vi, 15-17; xix, 11-21, Isa. xxiv, 21-25.

Our Lord does not thus destroy his enemies by virtue of his kingly office until he has first judged them, for one of the first acts of his kingly power is to proceed to the judgment of his enemies. He represents himself as judging by reason of his kingly office. Matt. xxv, 84, 40. It is in the exercise of this power that he judges his enemies. So verse 6 reads thus: "He shall smite among the heathen, he shall fill the places with the dead bodies; he shall wound the heads over many countries." This is his work in the day of his power, and to this work his people shall consent. Verse 8. This is indeed the great day of his wrath, and none will be able to stand except those whose sins are blotted out. The wicked kings of the earth shall fall before him when he is King of kings and Lord of lords.

Instead of saying, as does our version, "He shall wound the heads over many countries," Martin's Bible uses the singular number, and says, "the owner who rules over a great country." This is a plain allusion to Satan. The Hebrew word rendered wound in this text is by Gesenius defined thus: "To smite through and through; to dash in pieces; to crush." And such will be the punishment of Satan when the God of peace shall bruise the prince of darkness under the feet of his people. Rom. xvi, 20; Gen. iii, 15; 1 John iii, 8; Heb. ii, 14.

These passages clearly mark the transition from the priesthood of Christ to his kingly office. Human probation closes with the priesthood of Christ. Those who are found in their sins after our Lord has taken his kingly power, must be destroyed as his enemies. His priesthood terminates when he has obtained the acquittal of his people, and secured the blotting out of their sins at the tribunal of his Father. Then and there he is crowned king; and from that coronation scene he comes as king to our earth to deliver all who at that examination of the books are accounted worthy to have part in the world to come, and in the resurrection of the just. Dan. vii, 9, 10; xli, 1; Luke xx, 35, 36; xxi, 36.

THE ORDER OF EVENTS IN THE JUDGMENT.

NUMBER SIX.

The righteous dead are "accounted worthy" of a part in the resurrection to immortal life before they are resurrected from among the dead. Luke xx, 35, 36; Phil. iii, 11; 1 Cor. xv, 23; Rev. xx, 4-6. They awake with the likeness of Christ. Ps. xvii, 15. We may be certain, therefore, that the investigation and decision of their cases is an accomplished fact prior to their resurrection; for that event is declarative of their final justification in the Judgment.

But Luke xxi, 26, uses the same expression both in Greek and in English, respecting those that are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord, that Luke xx, 35, 36, uses respecting those who are asleep. As the latter, before their resurrection, are "accounted worthy" to be made like the angels, so the former are "accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man." Luke xxi, 26. The things that shall come to pass before the deliverance of the saints, are the events of the time of trouble such as never was. Dan. xii, 1. And those who are accounted worthy to escape these things, are also worthy to stand before the Son of Man at his appearing.

This act of accounting worthy does, therefore, relate to their eternal salvation, and is performed before they enter that great time of trouble at which they are to be delivered; for that does not commence until the standing up of Michael, which is but another term for the coronation of Christ, or the beginning of his reign upon his own throne. But Michael, or Christ, does not take his throne till he has finished his work as priest at the tribunal of his Father. It is at that tribunal that the righteous dead are accounted worthy of the resurrection to immortality, and the righteous living are accounted worthy to escape the anguish of the time of trouble, and to stand before the Son of Man. Those only can be accounted worthy of this, whose record in the book of God's remembrance shows them to have been perfect overcomers. The Saviour, while yet high priest, confesses the names of such before his Father, and the holy angels, and secures the blotting out of their sins. Those who shall be resurrected to immortality, and those who shall escape the things coming upon the earth and stand before the Son of Man, are severally counted worthy of this before the priesthood of Christ is closed. We cannot therefore doubt, that with both these classes the investigation and decision of the Judgment is passed before the Saviour takes the throne of his glory and begins the destruction of his enemies.

The righteous dead come first in the order of the investigative Judgment; and while their cases are being examined and decided, probation continues to the living.

It is certainly most natural that the cases of the righteous dead should be the first to come up in the investigative Judgment, for their names stand first in the book of God's remembrance. Reason would therefore teach us that these cases must earliest come into account before God. But we are not left simply to the reasonableness of this order of events. We have direct proof that probation to the living continues after the Judgment hour has actually arrived.

Rev. xiv, 6-14: "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his Judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel, saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication. And the third angel followed them, saying with a loud voice, If any man worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand, the same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb: and the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever: and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the beast and his image, and whomsoever receiveth the mark of his name. Here is the patience of the saints: here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus. And I heard a voice from heaven, saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them. And I looked, and behold a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat like unto the Son of Man, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle."

The first angel ushers in the hour of God's Judgment by a solemn announcement to all the inhabitants of the earth that it has actually commenced. But the second and third angels, who follow this proclamation, deliver their messages in the Judgment hour itself, and they address themselves to men still in probation. We have already learned that God the Father sits in Judgment, as described in Dan. vii, before the advent of our Lord to this earth. And in Rev. xiv, the fact that the hour of God's Judgment has come is announced to the inhabitants of the earth by a mighty proclamation. The Judgment scene of Dan. vii is closed by the coronation of Christ. And the Judgment hour of Rev. xiv is followed by our Lord's being seen upon the white cloud with a crown upon his head; a proof that his priesthood has then given place to his kingly office. Each of these pertains to the closing events of this dispensation. There can be, therefore, no doubt that the hour of God's Judgment announced in Rev. xiv, is the time when God the Father sits in Judgment, as described in Dan. vii, 9-14.

While the Judgment hour of Rev. xiv is passing, two solemn proclamations are made to men still in probation. And the Judgment scene of Dan. vii is for the very purpose of closing our Lord's priesthood, and of crowning him King of kings. But the closing work of Christ as priest pertains to the acquittal of his people at his Father's tribunal, the blotting out of their sins, and the decision accounting them worthy of that world and the resurrection to immortality. Our Lord cannot do this for people in a state of probation. His first work must therefore relate to the righteous dead. And while their cases are severally passing under examination and decision, the living righteous are being prepared for the close of their probation, and for the decision of the investigative Judgment by the proclamation of the third angel. This work being accomplished, and the living righteous being counted worthy to escape the things coming upon the earth, and to stand before the Son of Man, our Lord is crowned king, and takes his seat upon the white cloud, with a crown of pure gold upon his head.

THE ORDER OF EVENTS IN THE JUDGMENT.

NUMBER SEVEN.

THE priesthood of Christ began when he presented himself before the Father at his ascension as our Advocate. It cannot terminate till he has secured the acquittal of his people, and the blotting out of their sins in the investigative Judgment. Then his enemies, at his request, will be given him to destroy. His Father shall crown him king upon his own throne, saying to him, "Rule thou in the midst of thine enemies." Ps. cx, 1, 2; Dan. vii, 9-14; Ps. ii, 6-9; Acts iii, 19-21; Isa. xlv, 22, 23. His entrance upon the priesthood was marked by the outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost. John xvi, 7; Acts i, 4; ii, 1-4, 16-18. The blotting out of sins, which terminates his priesthood, brings the people of God to the refreshing, from the presence of the Father, which precedes his act of sending his Son from Heaven. Acts iii, 19-21.

As a priest our Lord presents the merits of his blood in behalf of all who come to God through him. Heb. vii, 25. Even the cases of the people of God who lived during the period of the Old Testament, have to be noted upon by Christ as priest. Heb. ix, 18. They can only have redemption through his blood; and the blotting out of their sins can only be effected through his priestly work. Heb. ix and x.

The whole multitude of the redeemed appear before the throne in raiment that has been washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb. Rev. vii, 13, 14. The work of our High Priest in behalf of his people involves an immense number of individual cases. He has not only borne the sin of all these, but he makes intercession for them, and finally obtains the blotting out of their sins on showing from the record that they have completed the work of overcoming. Our Lord does not continue in his priestly office to all eternity. When he comes again it is without sin unto salvation. But he does not leave his labor unfinished. He brings every part of this immense work to a conclusion before he lays it down. The following proposition is both reasonable and scriptural:

There is a period of time at the close of this dispensation devoted to the finishing of the work of human probation, i. e., to the completion of Christ's work as priest, and of his gospel as the means of salvation.

Rev. x, 7: "But in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God should be finished, as he hath declared to his servants the prophets."

The mystery of God is defined in the following passages:

Eph. iii, 3-9: "How that by revelation he made known unto me the mystery, as I wrote afore in few words; whereby, when ye read, ye may understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ, which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit; that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel."

Col. i, 26-28: "Even the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations, but now is made manifest to his saints: to whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; whom is Christ in you the hope of glory: whom we preach, warning every man, and teaching every man perfect in Christ Jesus."

The mystery of God is therefore seen to be the work of salvation for fallen man through the gospel of Christ. It is that which unites Jews and Gentiles in one body as fellow-heirs, having Christ in them the hope of glory. The finishing of the mystery of God is the accomplishment of the work of the gospel. This must have a two-fold bearing. 1. Upon the priesthood of our Lord, to bring it to a close by completing all its immense work. 2. Upon the preaching of the gospel to the inhabitants of the earth, in causing the proclamation of its final closing messages of warning.

This work is not closed instantaneously, for a space of time is devoted to its completion. And the finishing of this work pertains both to heaven and to earth; to the priesthood of Christ, and to the proclamation of his gospel to men. But the priesthood of Christ, as we have seen, is finished at the time when the Ancient of Days sits in Judgment; and it is while that Judgment is in session that the latest messages of warning are addressed to men. Rev. xiv, 6-14. We do therefore understand that the period of time devoted to the finishing of the mystery of God is precisely that space occupied by the Father in the work of the investigative Judgment.

It is not stated that the mystery of God shall be finished when the seventh angel begins to sound; for this would denote instantaneous completion. But it is said, "In the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound," etc. This shows beyond dispute that a period of time is devoted to this work. The days of this prophecy are prophetic days, i. e., years, as are those of the fifth and sixth angels. Rev. ix. These years which are devoted to this finishing of human probation begin with the sounding of the seventh angel. They are the earliest years of his voice. The sounding of the seventh angel begins, therefore, with the opening of that investigative Judgment that finishes human probation, that determines the blotting out of the sins of the overcomers, that accounts them worthy of the world to come, that terminates the priesthood of Christ, and that witnesses the completion of the preaching of the gospel of the grace of God.

But is not the last trumpet of John's series of seven the same as Paul's last trumpet? The reasons which forbid their identity are perfectly conclusive. The seventh trumpet is the last of a series, no one of which is literally heard by the inhabitants of the earth. It is the accomplishment of certain events that indicates the transition from one of the seven angels to another. The seventh is like each of the preceding six in that it is the trumpet of an angel, and in that it is a symbolic and not a literal trumpet. Rev. viii, ix, x, xi. But the trumpet which awakens the dead, is not blown by an angel, but by the Son of God himself. It is not a symbolic trumpet, for it is literally heard by the inhabitants of the earth. Matt. xxiv, 31; Zech. ix, 14-16; 1 Thess. iv, 14-17. It is called the last trumpet because that when the Almighty descended upon mount Sinai, in glory and majesty like our Lord's second advent (Ex. xix, 16-19; Heb. xii, 16-27; Matt. xvi, 27; 2 Thess. i, 7, 8), the trumpet of God was heard as it will be once more when the dead are resurrected. 1 Cor. xv, 51, 52; Ex. xix, 16-19.

The commencement of the seventh angel's voice, as we have seen, is the signal for the opening of the investigative Judgment; and human probation continness for a term of days, i. e., years, after that voice begins. But the trumpet of God is not sounded till after that investigative Judgment has determined the cases of all the righteous; for when it is heard, every one that has been accounted worthy of a part in the resurrection to immortality, is, in an instant, made immortal. We conclude, therefore, that the seventh angel begins to sound before the advent of Christ, and that the first years of his sounding are devoted to the finishing of the work of human probation.

The events under the sounding of the seventh angel, though not given in chronological order, are, from their nature, not difficult to be arranged in the order of their occurrence.

1. In the days, i. e., years, of the beginning of the voice of the seventh angel, the work of human probation is finished. Rev. x, 7. This, as we have seen, involves the closing up of the immense work of our High Priest. It also requires the proclamation of the final warnings to mankind.

2. The most holy place of the temple in Heaven is opened. Rev. xi, 19. This is the place where our Lord's priesthood is finished, and, as we shall hereafter see, is the place where the Ancient of Days sits in judgment.

3. While Christ is finishing his priesthood at the tribunal of his Father in the holiest of the heavenly temple, the judgment of the righteous dead takes place. Rev. xi, 18.

4. The coronation of Christ is announced by the great voices in Heaven, and by the words of the twenty-four elders. Rev. xi, 16-17. This succeeds the close of his priesthood. When Christ begins his reign, he is invested by the Father with that power which Satan usurped from Adam the first. The reign of the second Adam is the re-establishment of the empire of God in this revolted province. Christ does not take his own throne to rule his enemies with a rod of iron till he has closed up his priestly office at his Father's right hand.

5. The wrath of God comes upon the wicked when Christ begins to rule them with the iron scepter of his justice. It comes in the seven last plagues. Rev. xi, 18, 19; xiv, 9-11, 18-20; xv; xvi; xix, 11-21.

6. The anger of the nations comes in consequence of the work of the unclean spirits under the sixth plague, who incite them to the battle of the great day of God Almighty. Rev. xi, 18; xvi, 13, 14; xix, 19-21.

7. The giving reward to the servants of God is at the resurrection of the just. Rev. xi, 18; Luke xiv, 14; Matt. xvi, 27.

8. The final destruction of them that corrupt the earth is at the end of the 1000 years in the second death. Rev. xi, 18; xx, 7-9.

The events of the seventh trumpet do therefore extend over the whole period of the great day of Judgment. The mighty proclamation which ushers in the seventh angel and the investigative Judgment, and the work in the second apartment of the heavenly temple for the completion of our Lord's priestly office, will be considered next.

The Order of Events in the Judgment.

NUMBER NINETEEN.

We have learned that there is a space of time at the beginning of the voice of the seventh angel, which is employed in closing up the work of human probation. During this period the living righteous conclude their probation, and are accounted worthy to stand before the Son of Man. Luke 21: 26. This is the time of the dead that they should be judged, i. e., the time when the righteous dead are accounted worthy of a part in the first resurrection. Luke 20: 26, 28; Rev. 11: 18. It is when the Ancient of Days sits in judgment that Christ is crowned king; and this same event takes place under the sounding of the seventh angel. Dan. 7: 9-14; Rev. 11: 16-17. This shows that the judgment scene of Dan. 7, is in the days of the seventh angel, and that the judgment of the dead here brought to view is at the Father's tribunal. Two things next claim our attention. 1. The mighty proclamation which heralds the Investigative Judgment at the beginning of the voice of the seventh angel. 2. The opening of the most holy place of the heavenly temple for the session of that judgment.

The second and third woes come in consequence of the voices of the sixth and seventh angels. Rev. 8: 13. There is a short space of time between the second and third woes, and hence such space must exist between the close of the sixth angel's voice and the commencement of the seventh. Rev. 11: 14. The termination of the hour, day, month, and year of the sixth angel, marks the conclusion of the second woe, Aug. 11, 1840, Rev. 8: 15. See the work on the "Seven Trumpets," published at the ADVENT REVIEW Office.

At the close of the sixth angel's voice a mighty angel descends from Heaven to herald the sounding of the seventh trumpet. He has a little book open in his hand; and he places his right foot upon the sea, and his left foot on the earth, and cries with a loud voice, as when a lion roareth. Then seven thunders utter their voices, but John is forbidden to write what they utter. The angel having made proclamation to the inhabitants of the earth, lifts his hand to Heaven and swears that time shall be no longer; but that in the days of the beginning of the seventh angel's voice the mystery of God should be finished as he hath declared to his servants the prophets. Rev. 10: 1-7.

His act of placing one foot upon the sea, and one upon the land, implies that his proclamation pertains to all the dwellers upon the globe. He cries with a mighty voice like the roar of a lion; but it is a voice that gives instruction and warning to mankind. For he has a little book open in his hand; a fact which indicates that its contents form the subject of his proclamation. When he has finished his announcement, he confirms it with a solemn oath. The words of this oath give a definite idea of the nature of his proclamation.

1. That it relates to the definite time of some grand event.
2. That this event is the sounding of the seventh angel.
3. That this proclamation is based upon the prophecies.

The book of Daniel contains the prophetic periods which mark the very events of the seventh angel's voice. Among the earliest of these events are the opening of the second apartment of the heavenly temple (Rev. 11: 19); the judgment of the righteous dead (Rev. 11: 18); the finishing of the mystery of God (Rev. 10: 7); and the coronation of Christ for the destruction of his enemies. Rev. 11: 16-18; Ps. 2: 6-9. The prophecy of Daniel reveals this very session of the Investigative judgment, at which Christ is crowned king upon his own throne (Dan. 7: 9-14); and the final work in the Sanctuary of God for the closing up of human probation (Dan. 8: 14); and marks the very time for the beginning of this grand work.

The book of Daniel must therefore be that book out of which the angel makes his proclamation of definite time; for this book alone contains the prophetic period, unless, indeed, we add the book of Revelation, which is but a second edition of the prophecy of Daniel. Now it is a remarkable fact that the book of Daniel was by divine direction closed up and sealed till the time of the end, when the wise were to understand. Dan. 12: 4-10. The same power which placed the seal upon it must be employed to take it off. It was by the agency of the angel of God that this book was closed up; and it is by the same means that the seal is removed. And hence when the angel descends to herald the work under the seventh trumpet, that prophecy which reveals the very events of that trumpet, and mark the time of their commencement, is open in his hand. Having made his announcement therefrom, he swears that time shall be no longer, i. e., that the events predicted shall transpire where he then stands at the end of the periods contained in the little book.

The time to the finishing of the mystery of God must be the burden of the proclamation of this mighty angel; for the oath which he utters to confirm his proclamation plainly indicates its nature. He swears that time should be no longer; but that the mystery of God should be finished in the days at the beginning of the seventh angel's voice. But if there were a space of time between the oath and the voice of the seventh angel, the words of the oath could not be true. The time to which he swears must be the time contained in the little book, which reaches to the events of the seventh angel's voice.

That this oath uttered by the angel with the open book relates to prophetic time, is farther evident from the record of the oath which was uttered at the time when that book was sealed up; for the man clothed in linen, standing at a time when the prophetic periods all lay in the future, solemnly attests with an oath the time contained in the sealed book. Dan. 12: 4, 7. But the angel of Rev. 10, having the book open in his hand, first proclaims their termination and then swears to the truth of his announcement. His oath marks the end of the time in question. It certainly does not mark the end of time considered as duration measured by days, or years; for the closing words of the oath speak of days yet future under the seventh angel. Nor does it mark the end of human probation; for the words of the oath place this also yet future under the sounding of the seventh angel. Verse 7.

Moreover after the eating of the book by John, who in this personates the church at the time of the fulfillment of this prophecy, he was bidden to prophesy again before many peoples and nations; a clear proof that there is a message of mercy and of warning to men after the oath of the angel that time shall be no longer. Verses 7-11. We must therefore conclude that this oath has reference to the time which the angel had announced from the book open in his hand. This oath is the complement of that in Dan. 12. In that, the man clothed in linen swears to prophetic time yet to be; in this, the angel, having made solemn proclamation from the open book, lifts his hand to Heaven and swears to the accomplishment of the time.

There is indeed a criticism on the original which gives it a very different meaning. Instead of "there should be time no longer" some render it "the time shall not yet be." See Barnes' Notes on Revelation, p. 200. Those who give this translation involve the action of the angel in great absurdity. They understand that the descent of this mighty angel symbolizes the reformation of the sixteenth century. And as the most prominent reformers taught that the end was not far distant (See Barnes' Notes on Revelation, pp. 202, 298), these expositors assert that the angel swears to the error of their teaching. But this cannot be, for it makes this symbolic angel utter a solemn oath in contradiction of his own testimony.

What has been said is quite sufficient to show that the work of the mighty angel of Rev. 10 is of the same nature with that of the angel of Rev. 14: 6, 7. His message is uttered while the living are yet in probation. It is termed the everlasting gospel because it is that which contains the good news of the coming kingdom of God. Like the mighty proclamation of the angel of Rev. 10 which pertains to all the dwellers upon the globe, this also is addressed to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people. As the angel of

Rev. 10 proclaims definite time connected with the seventh angel's voice, so this angel says with a loud voice, "Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come." There must be definite time to mark the proclamation of this angel; and as men are addressed while yet in probation, that time must be the prophetic periods of the Bible. And herein have we a parallel to the case of the angel of Rev. 10 with the open book in his hand, swearing to the fulfillment of time. That relates to the sounding of the seventh angel and the finishing of the mystery of God; this relates to the session of the investigative judgment, which, as we have seen, is the same work. As a further work of prophesying remains after the angel of Rev. 10 swears that time shall be no longer, so in Rev. 14 after the angel has announced that the hour of God's judgment is come, the like work remains to be performed.

The period designated as the hour of God's judgment, or the days when the mystery of God is to be finished, is not therefore ushered in by the advent of Christ, for his work is preparatory to that event. But it is announced to the inhabitants of the earth by solemn proclamation, based on definite time and confirmed by an immutable oath. The time must therefore be given rightly. Whenever, in fulfillment of Rev.

14: 6, 7, the announcement is made, "The hour of his judgment is come," the time must be truthfully given. And certainly when the angel of Rev. 10 swears to the fulfillment of time, that time must there expire. Yet in each case there is a further work of prophesying or proclaiming truth to the children of men.

These scriptures can never have their fulfillment by a succession of time messages, each disproving the truth of its predecessor, and each being in turn disproved by the one which succeeds it. When God gives these announcements they will be rightly given, though they are to be followed by the proclamation of other truths before the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Those time-movements which follow the genuine, and which repeat themselves again and again in the persistent effort to fix the time of Christ's advent, may possibly have some connection with the thunders which John was forbidden to write, but they never can be in fulfillment of the solemn announcement, "The hour of his judgment is come," or of the solemn oath that time should be no longer. For these later time-movements are but a succession of efforts made to fix the definite time of Christ's advent, though that is not revealed in the Bible, and though each movement is based upon the failure of all which have preceded it. But the genuine is given for the purpose of announcing the investigative judgment, and its truthfulness being attested by the oath of the angel, it will never be retracted to make way for successive announcements of the time of Christ's revelation. The opening of the heavenly temple and the final work therein will be next considered.

The Order of Events in the Judgment.

NUMBER NINE.

THE investigative judgment, the finishing of the work of human probation, the close of Christ's priesthood, and his coronation upon his own throne, are events which transpire in the days of the voice of the seventh angel when he begins to sound. They precede the revelation of Christ in the clouds of heaven, and are preparatory to that grand event. The field of vision during this closing period of human probation is not simply the earth, where indeed the fierce battle between truth and error is being fought, but the temple of God in Heaven is opened to our view, and becomes the theme of prophetic discourse. Rev. 11: 10; 15: 5.

We have learned that the priesthood of Christ must continue till he has secured the acquittal of his people at the tribunal of his Father, where their sins are blotted out, and themselves accounted worthy of eternal life. It is at this very time and place that the Saviour changes from his priestly, to his kingly, office. Hence, wherever our Lord closes his priestly office, there must be the place of the judgment session described in Dan. 7.

The finishing of the mystery of God involves the opening of the second apartment of the temple in Heaven, wherein is the ark of God's testament. This is the place where our Lord finishes his priesthood, and hence this apartment of the heavenly temple must be the place of that tribunal at which the righteous are acquitted, their sins blotted out, and themselves accounted worthy of the kingdom of God. The temple of God in Heaven, and especially its second apartment, is therefore worthy of our most attentive study. The Scriptures contain many explicit testimonies to the existence of the heavenly temple.

Ps. 11: 4: "The Lord is in his holy temple, the Lord's throne is in Heaven: his eyes behold, his eyeside try, the children of men."

2 Sam. 22: 7, 8. "In my distress I called upon the Lord, and cried to my God: and he did hear my voice out of his temple, and my cry did enter into his ears. Then the earth shook and trembled; the foundations of heaven moved and shook, because he was wroth." See also Ps. 18: 6, 7.

Isa. 6: 1-4: "In the year that king Uzziah died I saw also the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple. Above it stood the seraphims; each one had six wings; with twain he covered his face, and with twain he covered his feet, and with twain he did fly. And one cried unto another, and said, Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts: the whole earth is full of his glory. And the posts of the door moved at the voice of him that cried, and the house was filled with smoke."

Micah 1: 2, 3: "Hear, all ye people; hearken, O earth, and all that therein is: and let the Lord God be witness against you; the Lord from his holy temple. For behold the Lord cometh forth out of his place, and will come down and tread upon the high places of the earth."

Rev. 11: 19: "And the temple of God was opened in Heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament; and there were lightnings, and voices, and thunderings, and an earthquake, and great hail."

Rev. 14: 17, 18: "And another angel came out of the temple which is in Heaven, he also having a sharp sickle. And another angel came out from the altar, which had power over fire."

Rev. 15: 5: "And after that I looked, and, behold, the temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in Heaven was opened."

Rev. 16: 17: "And the seventh angel poured out his vial into the air; and there came a great voice out of the temple of Heaven from the throne, saying, It is done."

Many other texts might be quoted in which this building is mentioned either as God's temple, tabernacle, sanctuary, or holy habitation. To some of these texts we shall refer in the further study of this subject.

The heavenly temple consists of two holy places. This is proved by many conclusive arguments. The first of these is drawn from the statements respecting the tabernacle erected by Moses. When God called Moses into the mount to receive the tables of the law (Ex. 24: 12), he first bade him make a sanctuary that he might dwell among them, and that the priests might minister in his presence. Ex. 25: 28; 27: 28. He also bade him make an ark to contain the tables of the law, to be placed in the second apartment of the sanctuary. This building consisted of two holy places (Ex. 26), and both itself and its sacred vessels were made like the pattern showed in the mount.

Ex. 25: 8, 9: "And let them make me a sanctuary; that I may dwell among them. According to all that I show thee, after the pattern of the tabernacle, and the pattern of all the instruments thereof, even so shall ye make it."

Heb. 8: 5: "Who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things, as Moses was admonished of God, when he was about to make the tabernacle: for, See (saith he) that thou make all things according to the pattern shewed to thee in the mount." See also Ex. 25: 40; 26: 30; Acts 7: 44.

The tabernacle thus constructed was a pattern of the heavenly temple. Thus Paul bears testimony:

Heb. 9: 23, 24: "It was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these. For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true [the images of the true holy places, MacKnight's translation]; but into Heaven itself now to appear in the presence of God for us."

This establishes one plain, incontrovertible argument that the heavenly temple has two holy places. The temple erected by Solomon furnishes the second argument, and it is of the same character as that drawn from the tabernacle. The temple was a larger and grander building than the tabernacle, and differed from it in being an immovable structure; but it was constructed on the same plan in that it was an edifice consisting of two holy places, with sacred vessels of the same kind, and occupied with the very same ministration, as that which had previously served in the tabernacle. 1 Kings 6: 7; 8; 2 Chron. 3: 4; 5. This building with its two holy places was a pattern of the heavenly temple, as the words of David and of Solomon declare:

1 Chron. 28: 11, 12: "Then David gave to Solomon his son the pattern of the porch, and of the houses thereof, and of the treasures thereof, and of the upper chambers thereof, and of the inner parts thereof, and of the place of the mercy-seat, and the pattern of all that he had by the Spirit, of the courts of the house of the Lord, and of all the chambers round about, of the treasures of the house of God, and of the treasures of the dedicated things."

Verse 19: "All this, said David, the Lord made me understand in writing by his hand upon me, even all the works of this pattern."

Wisdom of Solomon 9: 8: "Thou hast commanded me [Solomon] to build a temple upon thy holy mount, and so after in the city wherein thou dwellest, a resemblance of this HOLY TABERNACLE which thou hast prepared from the beginning."

This is a second decisive argument that the heavenly sanctuary has two holy places. The third is drawn from the fact that the plural term "holy places" is used in the designation of the greater and more perfect tabernacle.

Thus when Paul says, as expressed in our common version (Heb. 8: 2), "A minister of the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man," it is literally in the original, "a minister of the holy places." And thus also when we read respecting the heavenly temple, "The Holy Ghost thus signifying, that the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while as the first tabernacle was yet standing," it is literally in the Greek, "the way of the holy places." Heb. 9: 8. So also where we read of the greater and more perfect tabernacle in verse 12, that Christ "entered in once into the holy place," it is also literally holy places. Again in verse 24 we read in our common version the same thing, literally rendered, "the holy places made with hands, the figures of the true," which last word is plural in the original, showing that there are holy places in the heavenly temple. And again in Heb.

10: 19, the term holiest is not, in the original, holy of holies as in chap. 9: 3, but simply holy places. These passages form a most convincing argument that there must be two holy places in the heavenly temple. A fourth argument is found in the fact that each of the two holy places of the heavenly temple is definitely set forth in the description of that building not made with hands.

The first apartment is identified by the things which it contains. When John was called in vision to ascend to the place of God's throne, the heavenly temple, a door was opened in Heaven, and the throne of God was revealed to his view. This is manifestly the door of the heavenly temple, for the throne of God which it discloses to view is within that temple. Ps. 11: 4; Rev. 10: 17. That it was the first apartment of that temple into which he looked, is evident from what he saw therein. Rev. 4: 6. "And out of the throne proceeded lightnings, and thunders, and voices; and there were seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, which are the seven Spirits of God." Here is a plain reference to the seven lamps which burned in the first apartment of the earthly sanctuary. Lev. 24: 2-4.

And again, when the seven angels receive the seven trumpets, the scene of vision is still the first apartment of the heavenly sanctuary. Thus we read:

Rev. 8: 2, 3: "And I saw the seven angels which stood before God; and to them were given seven trumpets. And another angel came and stood at the altar, having a golden censer; and there was given unto him much incense, that he should offer it with the prayers of all saints upon the golden altar which was before the throne."

The golden altar stood in the first apartment of the sanctuary, i. e., in the same room with the candlestick on which were the seven lamps. Ex. 40: 24-26. The place of God's throne at the time when the book with the seven seals was delivered to Christ, and also when the seven trumpets were given to the seven angels, is the first apartment of the heavenly sanctuary. But when the seven vials are delivered into the hands of the seven angels who have the duty of pouring them out, the second apartment of the heavenly temple is opened, and they come out from thence to execute the wrath of God upon men. This opening of the holiest takes place under the seventh trumpet.

Rev. 16: 5-7. "And after that I looked, and, behold the temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in Heaven was opened; and the seven angels came out of the temple, having the seven plagues, clothed in pure and white linen, and having their breasts girded with golden girdles. And one of the four beasts gave unto the seven angels seven golden vials full of the wrath of God, who liveth forever and ever. And the temple was filled with smoke from the glory of God, and from his power; and no man was able to enter into the temple till the seven plagues of the seven angels were fulfilled."

This opening of the heavenly temple which is followed by the pouring out of the unmingled wrath of God, is an event connected with the closing up of human probation. And it is certain that we have in this case, the opening of the holiest of all, here called the tabernacle of the testimony. The expression, "tabernacle of the testimony," is a familiar term taken from the Old Testament, and is precisely equivalent to "tabernacle of the ten commandments." In proof of this, take the use of this term in the Bible. We begin with the first use of the Hebrew word, yehduoth, and trace it through the books of Moses. Thus it occurs for the first time in Ex. 10: 84. "Aaron laid it up before the testimony." That is to say, he laid up the pot of manna before the ark of the ten commandments. See Heb. 9: 4. The next is Ex. 25: 16. "Thou shalt put into the ark the testimony which I shall give thee." This was the ten commandments. See Ex. 31: 18; Deut. 10: 4, 5. Again, Ex. 25: 21, "In the ark thou shalt put the testimony," i. e., the ten commandments. See 1 Kings 8: 9. And now the ark itself takes its name from what was put in it. Ex. 25: 22: "The two cherubims which are upon the ark of the testimony." Ex. 26: 34: "And thou shalt hang up the veil under the tabes, that thou mayest bring in thither within the veil the ark of the testimony; and the veil shall divide unto you between the holy place and the most holy. And thou shalt put the mercy-seat upon the ark of the testimony in the most holy place." Here we have the ark of the ten commandments assigned to the most holy place of the tabernacle, and the mercy-seat placed over the ark. Presently we shall find that this testimony gives name to the tabernacle itself. As we read onward we find in Ex. 27: 21; 40: 6, 26, 86; 31: 7, 18; 82: 16; 84: 29, the terms "testimony," "tables of the testimony," "ark of the testimony," each time, by testimony, meaning definitely the ten commandments. The term, "tabernacle of testimony," occurs for the first time in Ex. 38: 21. Thus we see that the testimony of the Almighty given name to the tables on which it was written; to the ark in which the tables were placed; and to the tabernacle itself, whose second apartment received the ark.

Next, we thrice read of the ark of the testimony, Ex. 25: 10; 26: 35; 40: 3, 5. And now we are brought to the ark of Moses in setting up the sanctuary. It is said, Ex. 40: 20: "He took and put the testimony into the ark," i. e., he put the law of God therein. Then he placed the ark itself within the tabernacle, and covered the ark of the testimony by hanging up the second veil, Ex. 40: 21. In Lev. 16: 13, the mercy-seat is said to be upon the testimony. In Lev. 24: 3, the veil which hides the ark is called the veil of the testimony. Next, we read of the tabernacle of the testimony in Num. 1: 50, 52. Next, of the ark of the testimony, Num. 4: 5; 7: 89; Josh. 4: 16. Next, of the tent of the testimony, Num. 9: 15, and of the testimony itself, Num. 17: 10. Next, of the tabernacle of witness, or testimony (for the two words are synonymous), Num. 10: 11; 17: 7, 8; 18: 2. In all these texts it is certain that the ten commandments are called the testimony, and that they give name to the tables, to the ark, to the veil, and to the tabernacle, especially to the second apartment.

This term has therefore a well-defined meaning in the Scriptures. By the testimony, the tables of the testimony, the ark of the testimony, the veil of the testimony, and the tabernacle of the testimony, are meant respectively the ten commandments (Ex. 31: 18); the tables of the ten commandments (Ex. 32: 15); the ark of the ten commandments (Ex. 40: 20); the veil of the ten commandments (Ex. 40: 21; Lev. 24: 3); and the tabernacle of the ten commandments, Num. 9: 15; 10: 11. The term, "tabernacle of witness," or "testimony," does therefore definitely signify the tabernacle of the ten commandments. Now it is remarkable that this term occurs twice in the New Testament. In Acts 7: 44, the tabernacle of witness, i. e., of the ten commandments, is mentioned, referring to the earthly sanctuary. And in Rev. 16: 6, the heavenly sanctuary is designated by this same term, the temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in Heaven; and we have proved conclusively that this is equivalent to the temple of the tabernacle of the ten commandments in Heaven.

This text is therefore a plain reference to the most holy place of the heavenly temple, and to the law of God deposited therein; which gives name to the building. This apartment of the heavenly temple is opened just prior to the pouring out of the plagues. But we have a second statement of the opening of the most holy place of the temple in Heaven. Thus we read of the events under the seventh trumpet:

Rev. 11: 19: "And the temple of God was opened in Heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament; and there were lightnings, and voices, and thunders, and an earthquake, and great hail."

Here is disclosed to our view the second apartment of the heavenly temple, and here is shown the grand, central object, which gives name to the tabernacle itself. It is the ark of God, sometimes called the ark of the covenant, or testament (Num. 10: 88; Heb. 9: 4) and sometimes the ark of the testimony, Ex. 25: 22. It is because the heavenly temple contains the ark of God's testimony that it is itself called the tabernacle of the testimony in Heaven. And the ark itself is not empty; it contains what Rev. 11: 19, calls God's testament, and what Rev. 16: 6, calls "the testimony in Heaven." And these two terms must signify the ten commandments, and cannot signify anything else.

The existence of the temple in Heaven, and the fact that it has two holy places like the sanctuary of the first covenant, have been clearly proved. The judgment work in the second apartment remains to engage our attention.

The Order of Events in the Judgment.

SUMMER TERN.

When Paul says in Rom. 2:6, that God "will render to every man according to his deeds," he adds in the next verse this important statement: "To them who by patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory, and honor, and immortality, eternal life." Now it is manifest that this work of rendering to every man according to his deeds can only be wrought after the examination of those deeds in the judgment. It must be in consequence of the decision of the judgment that the things promised are rendered to men. It is also evident that the gift of immortality is one of the things thus rendered. As the righteous receive this gift in the very act of being resurrected from the grave, it is certain that the decision of the judgment passes upon them before the voice of the archangel and the trumpet of God awaken them to immortal life.

This part of the judgment work takes place where our Lord finishes his priesthood; for his last work as priest is to secure the acquittal of his people, and to obtain the decision that their sins shall be blotted out. We have learned from the Scriptures that the heavenly temple has two holy places. A further examination will evince the fact that there are two parts to the ministration of Christ; and that his last work is at the tribunal of his Father, in the tabernacle of the testimony, where it is determined who shall receive immortality.

The Levitical priests served "unto the example and shadow of heavenly things." Heb. 8:5. The most important part of the service pertaining to the earthly sanctuary was that which was performed within the second apartment on the tenth day of the seventh month. Lev. 16. This is generally considered as typifying the events of the whole gospel dispensation. But we think the evidence conclusive that this chapter is a typical representation of that part of our Lord's work which is embraced in the hour of God's judgment, or in the days of the voice of the seventh angel when he begins to sound.

The sixteenth chapter of Leviticus is devoted solely to the work of finishing the yearly round of service in the earthly sanctuary. This was wrought on the great day of atonement, and was of the most impressive character. First, the high priest was solemnly admonished that he was such only in a typical sense and not such in reality. For on this day, which was by far the most impressive of all, and when he entered the most holy place of the sanctuary, he must put on the plainest and humblest dress, laying aside that splendid dress which the law prescribed for him to wear on other occasions. Lev. 16:4, compared with Ex. 28. He was also to make a public acknowledgment of his own sinfulness by proceeding to offer a sin-offering for himself. Lev. 16:3, 5, 11-14. No part of this can be typical of our Lord's work, for it was expressly designed to impress upon the mind the infirmity and sinfulness of the high priest.

But this being accomplished, the high priest entered upon that work which directly shadowed forth the work of atonement. He took from the congregation of the children of Israel two kids of the goats for a sin-offering. Lev. 16:5. On these two goats he was to cast lots; one lot was for the goat to be sacrificed, and one for the scape-goat. Then he slew the goat upon which the lot fell for a sacrifice, and with his blood he entered into the second apartment of the sanctuary. This blood he sprinkled before the mercy-seat and upon it. He did this for two purposes: 1. To make atonement for the people; 2. To cleanse the sanctuary by removing from it the sins of the people of God. Then the high priest returned into the first apartment and cleansed the altar from the sins of the people. The sanctuary being cleansed, the high priest comes out of the door of the building and having caused the live goat to be brought, he lays both his hands upon his head and confesses over him all the transgressions of the children of Israel in all their sins. These he puts upon the head of the goat and sends him away by the hand of a fit man into the wilderness. And the goat thus sent bears away all their iniquities into a land not inhabited. Lev. 16:7-10, 15-22.

The work of the high priest on the day of atonement was not his whole work in putting away sin. While the ministration was confined to the first apartment which was for the whole period of the year but this day, the priest offered the blood of sin-offering in that apartment to make reconciliation, i. e., to begin the work of atonement. Lev. 4. It was by this very work that the sins were transferred to the sanctuary through the blood of sin-offering. The high priest on the day of atonement takes up this unfinished work and completes it. The business of the day is to finish the great work of atonement for the people of God, and to remove their sins from the sanctuary, and place them upon the head of the scape-goat. The work in the second apartment of the earthly sanctuary does not therefore represent the whole gospel dispensation, but simply that part of it devoted to the finishing of the mystery of God in the days of the seventh angel's voice when he begins to sound; in other words, it is the work embraced in that period of time denominated the hour of God's judgment.

There was a period in "the example and shadow of heavenly things" devoted to the finishing of the high priest's work. There is such a period devoted to the finishing of the work of Christ in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, at the conclusion of the gospel dispensation. That work in the "shadow of good things to come," was accomplished in the second apartment of the earthly sanctuary. This work in like manner is wrought in the second apartment of the sanctuary in Heaven. It is a remarkable fact that the opening of the second apartment of the temple in Heaven is an event located under the seventh angel's voice, i. e., in the very time when the work of probation is to be finished. Rev. 10:7; 11:16-19.

The opening of the second apartment of the heavenly temple is with manifest reference to the accomplishment of the events which transpire in the finishing of the mystery of God. These are, 1. The session of the judgment by the Ancient of Days. Dan. 7:9-14; Rev. 11:18; 14:6, 7. 2. The conclusion of the priesthood of Christ at this tribunal in the blotting out of sin. Acts 3:19, 20. 3. The coronation of Christ. Rev. 11:16-17; Dan. 7:13, 14; Ps. 2:6-9. 4. Then the pouring out of the vials of the wrath of God. Rev. 11:18; 16:10.

The Saviour's priesthood terminates in the second apartment of the heavenly sanctuary. But the very occasion on which it terminates is that of the blotting out of the sins of his people, when the Father sits in judgment. Again, the blotting out of the sins of the people of God is the very counterpart of that work in the holiest of the earthly sanctuary, whereby the sins were removed from the sanctuary to be placed upon the head of the scape-goat. The session of the investigative judgment must therefore take place in that apartment of the heavenly temple which witnesses the conclusion of our Lord's priesthood. And hence we understand that the opening of that apartment of the temple in Heaven which contains the ark of the testament is for the session of the judgment described in Dan. 7. The position of the Father during this session of the investigative judgment in the second apartment of the "greater and more perfect tabernacle," is evidently alluded to in the following texts:

Zech. 2:13: "Be silent, O all flesh, before the Lord; for he is raised up out of his holy habitation."

Hab. 2:20: "But the Lord is in his holy temple; let all the earth keep silence before him."

The Father enters the second apartment that he may sit in judgment. Dan. 7. The Son presents himself at his tribunal that he may finish, as high priest, his great work of atonement for the dead and the living. While the judgment of the righteous dead is going forward probation remains to the righteous living. And hence it is that after the hour of God's judgment has come, the third angel proclaims the latest message of mercy to the world of mankind. But when the sins of the righteous dead have been blotted out, and the righteous living have been prepared for the close of their probation by the work of the third angel, the Son of God terminates his priesthood, and takes his place as king upon the great white cloud. Rev. 14: 6-14.

The Order of Events in the Judgment.

SUMMER ELEVEN.

The act of blotting out is not the only event in the final disposal of the sins of those who overcome. The removal of their sins from the sanctuary, at the conclusion of the high priest's work therein, is followed by a most remarkable transaction. The sins thus removed from the temple of God are placed upon the head of the scape-goat. But our Lord Jesus Christ cannot be typified by this goat; for the sins of men were laid upon him before the work of his priesthood began in the sanctuary; but the scape-goat receives the sins from the sanctuary after the whole work of the priest is completed therein. The sins thus placed on the scape-goat never pass from him to any other being or object.

But those goats which were slain in sacrifice for sin, had the sins of the people laid on them: before the high priest entered the sanctuary to sprinkle the blood of sin-offering before God. Indeed, it was by this very means that the sins of the people were transferred to the sanctuary. This work represents the sacrifice of the Son of God for us, and his ascension to Heaven to plead the cause of his people. But when his work therein is accomplished, and the sins of the people of God are removed thence (see Heb. 9: 22, 23), that being who receives them at the hand of our High Priest to bear them to a land not inhabited, can be no other than Satan; the author of sin. The fulfillment of this will be when Satan, at the commencement of the 1000 years, is confined to the desolated earth, his dreary prison during the long space between the two resurrections. Rev. 20: 1-7.

That the ancient people of God understood the scape-goat to represent not Christ, but Satan, the following testimonies will show. It will be seen, moreover, that there is direct evidence that Satan is intended in the very signification and use of this word.

Charles Beecher, in his work entitled, "Redeemer and Redeemed," pp. 60-70, says:

"Two goats were to be presented before the Lord by the high priest. They must be exactly alike in value, size, age, color,—they must be counterparts. Placing these goats before him, the high priest put both hands into an urn containing the golden lots, and drew them out, one in each hand. On the one was engraven, La Yahuwah (for Jehovah), on the other, La Azazel (for Azazel).

"The goat on which the lot La Yehovah fell was slain. After its blood had been sprinkled in the holy of holies, the high priest laid his hands on the head of the second goat, confessed the sins of the congregation, and gave him to a fit man to lead away and let go in the wilderness; the man thus employed being obliged to wash his clothes and person before returning to the congregation."

Mr. Beecher states two views respecting the meaning of this term, Azazel, each of which he shows to be manifestly untrue. He then gives his own view as follows:

"The third opinion is, that Azazel is a proper name of Satan. In support of this, the following points are urged: The use of the preposition implies it. The same preposition is used on both lots, La Yehovah, La Azazel; and if the one indicates a person, it seems natural the other should, especially considering the act of casting lots. If one is for Jehovah, the other would seem for some other person or being; not one for Jehovah, and the other for the goat itself.

"What goes to confirm this is, that the most ancient paraphrases and translations treat Azazel as a proper name. The Chaldee paraphrase and the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan would certainly have translated it if it was not a proper name, but they do not. The Septuagint, or oldest Greek version, renders it by δυναμειος, a word applied by the Greeks to a malignant deity, sometimes appeased by sacrifices.

"Another confirmation is found in the Book of Enoch, where the name Azazel, evidently a corruption of Azazel, is given to one of the fallen angels, thus plainly showing what was the prevalent understanding of the Jews at that day.

"Still another evidence is found in the Arabic, where Azazel is employed as the name of the evil spirit.

"In addition to these, we have the evidence of the Jewish work, Zohar, and of the Cabalistic and Rabbinical writers. They tell us that the following proverb was current among the Jews: 'On the day of atonement, a gift to Sammael.' Hence Moses Gurundinen-see feels called to say that it is not a sacrifice, but only done because commanded by God.

"Another step in the evidence is when we find this same opinion passing from the Jewish to the early Christian church. Origen was the most learned of the Fathers, and on such a point as this, the meaning of a Hebrew word, his testimony is reliable. Says Origen: 'He who is called in the Septuagint δυναμειος, and in the Hebrew Azazel, is no other than the devil.'

"Lastly, a circumstance is mentioned of the Emperor Julian, the apostate, that confirms the argument. He brought as an objection against the Bible, that Moses commanded a sacrifice to the evil spirit. An objection he never could have thought of, had not Azazel been generally regarded as a proper name.

"In view, then, of the difficulties attending any other meaning, and the accumulated evidence in favor of this, Hengstenberg affirms with great confidence that Azazel cannot be anything else but another name for Satan.

"The meaning of the term, viewed as a proper name, was stated in 1877, by Spencer, Dean of Ely, to be Powerful Apostate, or Mighty Receder."

Mr. Beecher, on the seventy-second page of his work, states that Prof. Dush considers Azazel to be a proper name of Satan.

Gesenius, the great Hebrew lexicographer, says:

"Azazel, a word found only in the law respecting the day of atonement. Lev. 16: 8, 10, 20. . . . By this name is probably to be understood originally some idol that was apposed with sacrifices, as Saturn and Mars; but afterwards, as the names of idols were often transferred to demons, it seems to denote an evil demon dwelling in the desert and to be placated with victims, in accordance with this very ancient and Gentile rite. This name Azazel is also used by the Arabs for an evil demon."

Milton represents Azazel as one of the fallen angels, and the standard-bearer of Satan:

"That proud honor claimed
Azazel as his right, a cherub tall;
Who forthwith from the glittering staff unfurled
The imperial ensign." — Paradise Lost, b. 1.

The "Comprehensive Commentary" has the following important remarks:

"Scape goat. See different opinions in Bochart. Spencer, after the oldest opinions of the Hebrews and Christians, thinks Azazel is the name of the devil; and so Rosenmüller, whom see. The Syriac has Azazel, the angel (strong one) who revolted."

"Cassell's Illustrated Bible" speaks thus of the scape-goat:

"We offer the following exposition as much more likely, and much more satisfactory: That Azazel is a personal designation for the evil one."

Certainly, these are very important testimonies to show that Satan is typified by the scape-goat. To show the reasonableness of that act which rolls back upon Satan the sins of the people of God, and also to define the nature of the act, let us carefully state the case. Every sin committed by men is instigated by Satan. This part of the transgression is the sin of Satan alone, and belongs solely to him whether men repent or not. But consenting to the tempter, and obeying him, is the sin of the one tempted. This part of the transgression will, in the case of all who avail themselves of the work of our High Priest, be placed upon the antitypical scape-goat, Satan, and he will have to bear the full punishment of all such sins.

One of the most important events, therefore, in the opening of the great day of judgment, is that of placing the sins of the overcomers upon the head of the great author of sin. The fallen angels will, no doubt, share with their great leader in this fearful burden of guilt. Satan and his angels are reserved to the judgment of the great day. And one of its first events after the righteous are made immortal, is that they are exalted to sit in judgment upon the fallen angels. Jude 6; 2 Pet. 2:4; 1 Cor. 6:2, 8.

The Order of Events in the Judgment.

NUMBER TWELVE.

It is remarkable that each of the visions of Daniel bring to view either the coronation of Christ or that event which immediately precedes it, the close of his priesthood. Thus in Daniel 2: 44, we read:

"And in the days of these kings shall the God of Heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people; but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever."

But in the seventh chapter the very manner and place of this event are given us. Thus when the prophet describes the act of the Father in taking the place of judgment, he represents the Son as being crowned at that tribunal:

Dan. 7: 13, 14: "I saw in the night visions, and behold one like the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of Days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed."

How the kingdom thus set up in the days of these kings shall break in pieces all the wicked kingdoms of earth, is very plainly stated in Rev. 19: 11-21.

The coronation of our Lord is very distinctly marked in Daniel's fourth vision, as recorded in chapters 10-12. Thus we read:

Dan. 12: 1: "And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people: and there shall be a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time; and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book."

The standing up of Michael is simply the commencement of the reign of Christ, as has been shown in a former article. This is followed by the great time of trouble which will be briefly noticed hereafter. But the third vision of Daniel, which says not one word respecting the coronation of our Lord, does distinctly mark that event which directly precedes it, viz., the closing act of his priesthood. Here is the record:

Dan. 8: 13, 14: "Then I heard one saint speaking, and another saint said unto that certain saint which spake, How long shall be the vision concerning the daily sacrifice, and the transgression of desolation, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot? And he said unto me, Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed."

Here is an event to transpire in the conclusion of this vision; in other words it occurs in the end of the gospel dispensation. The sanctuary to be cleansed at the conclusion of the new covenant dispensation, must be the sanctuary of the new covenant. A sanctuary implies of necessity a priesthood. The cleansing of the sanctuary is that event which completes the work of the priest who ministers therein. When, therefore, we read of the cleansing of the sanctuary at the end of the twenty-three hundred days, we understand that this is the closing event of the priesthood of the Son of God. It is of necessity a work which brings human probation to a close and marks the transition from the priesthood to the kingly office of the Saviour.

Paul tells us that there are two covenants, the old and the new. Gal. 4: 24. He tells us that the sanctuary of the old covenant was the tabernacle which Moses made like that one showed him in the mount. Heb. 9: 1-6; 8: 5; Ex. 26: 8, 9, 40. This tabernacle was a pattern of the heavenly temple. Heb. 9: 23, 24; Rev. 11: 19. When the temple was erected, some five hundred years after the time of Moses, a larger and grander building, indeed, that also was a pattern of the temple of God in Heaven. 1 Chron. 28: 11, 12, 19; Wisdom of Solomon 9: 8. But the sanctuary of the new covenant is this heavenly temple itself. Here are the words of Paul defining the new covenant sanctuary to be the temple of God where our High Priest is ministering for us.

Heb. 8: 1, 2: "Now of the things which we have spoken this is the sum: We have such a high priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens; a minister of the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man."

The temple of God in Heaven is, therefore, not only the great original which Moses and Solomon copied in erecting the tabernacle, and the temple, each in its period being the sanctuary of the old covenant, but the heavenly temple is certainly the new-covenant sanctuary. David and Jeremiah each mention this sanctuary in Heaven.

Ps. 102: 19: "For he hath looked down from the height of his sanctuary; from Heaven did the Lord behold the earth."

Jer. 17: 12: "A glorious high throne from the beginning is the place of our sanctuary." Comp. Rev. 16: 17.

No one will dispute that "the sanctuary" in the days of Moses was the tabernacle. Nor will they deny that 500 years later this gave place to the temple which was thence-forward, till its destruction, the sanctuary of the old covenant. It will also be freely admitted that with the new covenant came the great antitype of all this, viz., the temple of God in Heaven, which is the real sanctuary of the Lord. But it will be denied, by many, that this sanctuary of God in Heaven is brought into the vision of the prophet.

The ninth chapter of Daniel is a key to the eighth.

A literal rendering of Dan. 9: 24, informs us that "Seventy weeks are cut off upon thy people and upon thy holy city." Then it is certain that not all the vision pertained to old Jerusalem. The period of 490 years belonged to that city, the place of the earthly sanctuary. But the remainder, viz., 1810 years, counting wholly within the gospel dispensation must pertain only to the sanctuary of the New Testament. And it is remarkable that the very verse which tells us how much of the vision pertained to the earthly sanctuary does present to our view the sanctuary of the new covenant in close connection with the introduction of the new covenant. Dan. 9: 21, 27. For one of the last events in the period of 70 weeks is the anointing of the most holy. This is not the anointing of the Saviour, for the term is literally, in Hebrew, the holy of holies; a plain reference to the sanctuary itself. This anointing was performed in the earthly sanctuary when the ministration therein began. Lev. 8: 10, 11. The anointing of the holy of holies at the end of the 70 weeks, cannot relate to the earthly sanctuary, which was no longer the sanctuary of prophecy, but must relate to the heavenly tabernacle which then became the sanctuary of prophecy. Its anointing was an event preparatory to Christ's ministering therein, just as the earthly sanctuary was anointed in both its holy places before the Levitical ministrations commenced in it. We cannot, therefore, doubt that the last 1810 years of Daniel's 2300 relate to the sanctuary of the new covenant.

The objection that this sanctuary cannot be trodden down is met by the fact that the New Testament plainly declares that Christ, the minister of this sanctuary, is trodden under foot of wicked men. Heb. 10: 29; 8: 1, 2.

The further and final objection that it cannot in the very nature of the case ever be cleansed, is fully answered by the expressive language of Paul, who states that the heavenly sanctuary is to be cleansed for the same reason that the earthly one was. Heb. 9: 22, 23. In a former article we have seen that the cleansing of the earthly sanctuary marked the conclusion of the yearly round of service. Lev. 16. The services of the heavenly sanctuary are performed once for all. The cleansing of the sanctuary must therefore have its antitype only once, and that at the close of the priesthood of Christ. The 2300 days mark the time of that event. When this work is entered upon by our Lord, it is the concluding work of his priesthood, and the period for the finishing of human probation.

This work finishes our Lord's priesthood preparatory to his coronation. It takes place in the second apartment of the sanctuary. Lev. 16; Rev. 11: 19. As the session of the judgment by the Ancient of Days is the very place where the transition from Christ's priesthood to his kingly office takes place, we cannot err in placing the cleansing of the sanctuary in Dan. 8: 14, in the closest connection with the blotting out of sins at the Father's tribunal. Dan. 7: 9-14; Acts 3: 19, 20. , § 8

The Order of Events in the Judgment.

NUMBER THIRTEEN.

We have established the fact by many indubitable proofs that the investigation and decision of the cases of the righteous precede their resurrection in the likeness of Christ. In establishing the fact that the cases of the righteous are thus decided before the sounding of the trumpet of God, we do really establish the fact that the cases of the wicked are also virtually decided at the same time. For when we have shown that all who are to have immortality are accounted worthy of it before their resurrection, it necessarily follows that though the actions of the wicked are not examined in detail until the saints sit with Christ in the judgment during the 1000 years, yet the wicked are, by the decision in the case of the righteous, left, as worthless and useless, to the resurrection of the unjust and to the devouring fire.

The next event in the great day of God is the destruction of the living wicked by the seven last plagues. As these do not come until the wicked are accounted unworthy of the kingdom of God, their destruction comes as a part of the judgment work, and after the virtual decision of their cases. The fact is many times revealed in the Bible that before the final deliverance of the saints there comes a time of trouble such as never was. This is plainly marked as lying between the decision in the case of the righteous at the close of their probation, and the event of their deliverance.

Thus, according to Daniel, the deliverance of the saints does not take place until the existence of a time of trouble such as never was. And this time of trouble comes in consequence of the close of our Lord's intercession and the assumption of his kingly office. Dan. 12:1. The wrath of God against sin is neither stayed nor mitigated after the Son of God comes to plead for sinful man.

The closing work of Christ's priesthood is in the second apartment of the heavenly sanctuary. This is opened under the sounding of the seventh trumpet. Rev. 11:19. It is after the temple is thus opened in Heaven that the seven angels pour out the seven last plagues. Rev. 16:1-8. But these plagues fill up the wrath of God which is threatened by the third angel. Rev. 16:1, compared with 14:10. And the third angel gives the final message of mercy and warning to mankind, before the Son of Man sits upon the white cloud. Rev. 14:14. So it is apparent that while Christ is finishing his work in the sanctuary, and while the third angel is giving the last message of mercy to man, the seven last plagues are withheld, though pending ready to be poured out. But when the work of probation is closed, and the intercession of Christ in Heaven, and the voice of warning upon earth, are ended, then men drink the wine of God's wrath without any mixture, from the cup of his indignation.

That which constitutes this wrath is the seven last plagues. They are by this term distinguished from those plagues inflicted under the six trumpets. Rev. 9:20, 21. They are represented as the wrath of God without mixture, i. e., they have no element of mercy mingled with them. They are poured out into the cup of God's indignation. This is an awful expression to indicate that men at that time fall into the hands of the living God. This fearful execution of God's judgment is witnessed before the deliverance of the saints; for not less than six of the plagues are poured out prior to the advent of Christ. Rev. 16:12-15.

This same period of trouble is brought to view in Rev. 7, and located between the opening of the sixth and seventh seals. Before the four winds are loosed, the servants of God are sealed. The seal is placed upon them, that the destroying angel may not cut them down. Compare Eze. 9 with Rev. 7. This is a plain proof that the saints must continue upon the earth for a certain space after the time of trouble commences. The fact that all who are sealed at the commencement of this time of trouble, are afterward seen standing upon Mount Zion with the Lamb, is proof that their probation closes with the commencement of this scene of trouble. Compare Rev. 7:4; 14:1. In other words they are then accounted worthy to escape the things that are to come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man. Luke 21:36. The very time when they are thus accounted worthy to stand before the Saviour, is at the close of our Lord's priesthood; and the time of trouble itself comes when that priesthood is exchanged for his kingly office.

Probation does therefore close before the entrance of the people of God upon this great time of trouble. One of these events immediately following the close of probation, and therefore constituting a feature of the time of trouble, is what the Bible calls "the hour of temptation." Thus we read:

Rev. 3:10, 11: "Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth. Behold, I come quickly; hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown."

The keeping of the word of Christ's patience especially pertains to the period of the third angel. Rev. 14:12. Those who keep this word are to be kept from the hour of temptation, while all others are to be taken captive by it. This shows that the saints are upon the earth during this period; and that when it commences, those who are unprepared are hopelessly lost.

But this season of unrestrained temptation is also brought to view by Paul, when describing the state of things existing just before our Lord's return. Thus he says:

2 Thess. 2:9-12: "Whose coming is after the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie: that they all might be damned who believed not the truth but had pleasure in unrighteousness."

When God sends men strong delusion to believe a lie that they all might be damned, it must be after the righteous have accomplished their work of overcoming, and after the Saviour has ceased to plead. The only way that God sends this strong delusion is by withdrawing his Spirit when men have sinned away the day of grace; thus leaving them a prey to the unrestrained power of the devil.

Now it is remarkable that the third angel brings to view this same period of Satan's mighty working.

It is the work of the third angel to give warning of the things that are to come to pass upon the earth at the close of human probation.

When he warns us against the worship of the image, and the reception of his mark, it is in direct reference to the fact that the two-headed beast is to make such an image and to require men to worship it on pain of death. Rev. 14: 9-12; 18: 11-16. And we do learn that this image is made in consequence of the miracles that are to be wrought. Compare Rev. 13: 13, 14; 16: 18. One of these miracles will be the bringing down of fire from heaven. This lies before us in the time of trouble. It is no wonder that those who are not kept by the power of God should be deceived by this fearful delusion.

It is at the close of the work of intercession that the Lord is represented as putting on the garments of vengeance for the destruction of his enemies. Isa. 63: 16-18. And when the enemy (Satan) shall come in like a flood, in the strong delusion, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him. Verse 19. It is also at the close of our Lord's priestly work that the prophecy of Amos meets its fulfillment:

"Behold the days come, saith the Lord God, that I will send a famine in the land; not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord; and they shall wander from sea to sea, and from the north even to the east, they shall run to and fro to seek the word of the Lord, and shall not find it." Amos 8: 11, 12.

The third woe comes by reason of the voice of the seventh angel. Rev. 8: 13. The seven last plagues come under the seventh trumpet. Rev. 11: 16-19; 15: 6-8. The seven plagues which fill up the wrath of God do therefore constitute the third woe. The people of God will not be removed from the earth till after six of the plagues have been poured out. They must witness the fearful scenes of the time of trouble. But the seal of the living God will be their protection, so that though a thousand fall at their side and ten thousand at their right hand, it will not come nigh them. Ps. 91: 1-10. The situation of the saints during the outpouring of the plagues will be like that of Israel during the plagues upon Egypt.

These dreadful calamities which will come upon our earth before the people of God are taken from it, may be mentioned as the loosing of the four winds; the pouring out of the vials of God's wrath in pestilence, famine, and earthquakes, and in the battle of the great day of God Almighty. It will be the hour of temptation for all the wicked world, when Satan shall exert his utmost power. To the wicked it will be the time of trouble such as never was; to the righteous it will be the time of Jacob's trouble, at which, in answer to their cry day and night, like the importunate widow, they will be delivered. Jer. 30: 6-7; Gen. 32; Luke 18: 7, 8.

In view of this awful scene which must be witnessed by the people of God, Zephaniah calls upon all the meek of the earth to seek righteousness and meekness. And he adds, "It may be ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger." Zeph. 2: 1-3. If they do their best in seeking God it is but barely possible that they will escape. And our Lord beseeches his people to watch and pray always, that they may be accounted worthy to escape the things coming on the earth, and to stand before the Son of Man. Luke 21: 34. If, therefore, this great time of trouble is to come upon our world after the close of Christ's intercession and before the deliverance of the saints, of what vast consequence is that final message of warning which reveals these great facts!

The Order of Events in the Judgment.

NUMBER FOURTEEN.

THE fact that the resurrection of the righteous is declarative of their acceptance in the sight of God, and, therefore, proof that the investigation and decision of their cases precede that event, has been very distinctly stated by some of the clearest minds in the Advent ranks. The late Sylvester Bliss, for many years editor of the Advent Herald, thus states the case:

"We are inclined to the opinion that the judgment is after death and before the resurrection; and that before that event the acts of all men will be adjudicated; so that the resurrection of the righteous is their full acquittal and redemption—their sins being blotted out when the times of refreshing shall have come (Acts 3: 19); while the fact that the wicked are not raised [for 1000 years], proves that they were previously condemned." Advent Shield, p. 806, published in 1845.

He saw the fact perfectly distinct that there can be no trial of the righteous after they have been made immortal. But it is very evident that he did not well understand when and how the examination of their cases should take place. Elder Josiah Litch, one of the ablest writers in the early history of the Advent movement, states this subject even more distinctly than Mr. Bliss. In his Prophetic Expositions, written in 1842, on pp. 40-54, he uses the following language:

THE MEANING OF THE TERM 'JUDGES.'

"1. It is used in the Bible in the sense of a trial according to law and evidence; the idea being drawn from a civil or criminal court. . . .

"2. It signifies a penal judgment; or the execution of judgment.

"The terms are both used in reference to the judgment of the human race. All men will be brought to trial, or into judgment, and all their deeds and their moral characters will be examined, and their everlasting states will be determined by the evidence produced from God's books, including the book of life, which will decide the moral character and everlasting destiny of each individual of Adam's race. If their names are found in 'the book of life,' they will be saved; and if not found there, they will be cast into the lake of fire, the second death. But the degree of reward or punishment will be graduated by what each one has done. . . .

THE TRIAL MUST PRECEDE THE EXECUTION.

"This is so clear a proposition that it is sufficient to state it. No human tribunal would think of executing judgment on a prisoner until after his trial; much less will God. He will bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good or evil.

"But the resurrection is the retribution or execution of judgment; for they that have done good shall come forth to the resurrection of life. 'We look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ: who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body.' 'In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed.' Here is clearly a retribution in the resurrection. It will be administered when the saints are raised. But no more certainly than they that have done evil will come forth damned, or 'to the resurrection of damnation.' They will come forth to shame and everlasting contempt. The saints will be raised and be caught up at once to meet the Lord in the air, to be forever with the Lord. There can be no general judgment or trial after the resurrection. The resurrection is the separating process, and they will never be commingled again, after the saints are raised, no matter how long or short the period to elapse between the two resurrections; it is all the same so far as the separation which the resurrection produces is concerned. If there is no more than a second which elapses between the two resurrections, the separation it makes is final.

"These two senses of the judgment are recognized in Rev. 20: 12. 'And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened; and another book was opened, which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works.' This is the trial of the dead in the invisible and spiritual world, where Jesus Christ comes in the clouds of heaven. The only evidence on which the trial proceeds is, the books and the book of life.

"They tell the whole story, and we must abide the issue of the trial on that testimony. The dead, as dead, were judged. Then follows, in the next verse, the penal judgment, in connection with the resurrection: 'The sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them, and they were judged [judgment was executed on them] every man according to their works.' There is no reference here to a trial or to the opening of the books; but simply a penal judgment. Judgment will be executed, finally, on each party; the righteous and the wicked, each one at the time of their resurrection; the righteous at the first resurrection, and the wicked at the final resurrection.

"GOD, THE 'ANCIENT OF DAYS,' WILL PRESIDE IN THE TRIAL.

"1. Daniel 7: 9, 10, presents the Ancient of Days coming on his throne of fiery flame; the judgment is set and the books opened. He is distinct from the Son of Man, spoken of in verse 13, when he comes to the Ancient of Days.

"2. Revelation 20: 12, tells us it is God, before whom the dead stand and are judged.

"THE SON OF MAN WILL EXECUTE THE JUDGMENT.

"Thus the Saviour declares, John 5: 27: 'And hath given him authority to execute judgment also, because he is the Son of Man.' Also 2 Cor. 5: 10: 'For we must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in his body according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad.'

"Also Paul's testimony in the Acts of the Apostles: God 'hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that Man whom he hath ordained, whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead.' What we are assured of by the resurrection of Christ, is the execution, in the resurrection, of a righteous judgment on all men.

"THE TIME OF THE TRIAL OF THE DEAD."

"Is it under the opening of the sixth seal of Revelation sixth chapter, where the servants of God are sealed. And under the seventh seal (chap 8:1) when there is silence in Heaven about the space of half an hour; when the great Mediator ceases to plead for sinners, the day of grace ends; then the judgment or trial will proceed on the living inhabitants of the earth. That done, Christ will appear in the clouds of heaven, and come to the Ancient of Days and the scene of trial, to announce the verdict with a shout, and deliver all his saints as soon as they are declared innocent, or justified, and raise them to eternal life in the twinkling of an eye. We are now justified by faith; we must, however, be declared justified at the day of judgment, before the effects of the fall will be taken away, and the saints be restored to God's perfect image and glory.

"THE 26TH CHAPTER OF MATTHEW."

"This chapter does not, as has been supposed, describe the great trial, but the separation between the righteous and wicked, which will be accomplished by the resurrection of the just. And when the separation is accomplished, Christ will address each party, and show why he has made this separation. But through the whole scene, he acts the part of the executor of judgment. [Query. Did the judgment, or trial of the dead, begin to sit when they took away the Papal dominion in 1798? See Dan. 7: 26, compared with Dan. 7: 9, 10.]"

The reader cannot fail to be deeply interested in these extracts from Bliss and Litch. We do not indorse every idea. Indeed, there is a degree of confusion in the language which shows that the subject was not wholly clear. Thus while Elder L. teaches that the session of the judgment must be before Christ comes, and even thought it might have commenced at the end of the 1260 days, he seems also to teach that Christ comes to this tribunal when he descends to earth. This cannot be as has been fully shown in a former article.

But this reasoning of Elder Litch, relative to the investigation and decision of the cases of the righteous before the resurrection is weighty and conclusive. It is worthy of notice that he places this judgment of the righteous at the tribunal of the Father, as presented in Dan. 7. He believed that this part of the judgment work was to be fulfilled while the living were yet in probation; for he suggested that it commenced in 1798 with the ending of the 1260 years. These able writers saw the fact that this work must take place before the resurrection of the just, but they did not see the time and place for the work. They did not see the heavenly sanctuary, and therefore had no clear idea of the concluding work of human probation, as presented to us in the Saviour's ministration before the ark of God's testament. The temple of God in Heaven reveals the very nature of this work, and the prophetic periods mark its time. The proclamation of the angel that the hour of his judgment is come, and his solemn oath to the time, gives to mankind the knowledge of this great work, and the certainty that the present is the time of the dead that they should be judged. This doctrine is of the highest practical importance. It shows that we are now in the antitype of the great day of atonement. Our business should be the affliction of our souls and the confession of our sins.

The Order of Events in the Judgment.

NUMBER FIFTEEN.

At the ascension of our Lord, he entered the heavenly temple and sat down upon his Father's throne, a great High Priest after the order of Melchisedec. Ps. 110: 1, 4; Heb. 8: 1, 2. But when he returns in his infinite majesty as King of kings, he sits upon his own throne, and not upon that of his Father. He speaks thus of his descent from Heaven:

Mat. 25: 31: "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory."

It is evident, therefore, that there is a space of time at the conclusion of our Lord's work in the temple in Heaven, in which his priestly office is exchanged for his kingly dignity; and this transition is marked by his relinquishing his place upon the throne of his Father, and assuming his own throne. The judgment session of Dan. 7: 9-14 is the time and place of this transition. Our Lord plainly distinguishes these two thrones:

Rev. 8: 21: "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne."

The Saviour's reception of his own throne preparatory to his second advent, is described in Ps. 45. As Ps. 110 makes prominent his priestly office upon his Father's throne, so Ps. 45 describes his kingly office and work upon his own throne.

Ps. 45: 1-7: "My heart is inclining a good matter; I speak of the things which I have made touching the King; my tongue is the pen of a ready writer. Thou art fairer than the children of men; grace is poured into thy lips; therefore God hath blessed thee forever. Gird thy sword upon thy thigh, O most Mighty, with thy glory and thy majesty. And in thy majesty ride prosperously, because of truth, and meekness, and righteousness; and thy right hand shall teach thee terrible things. Thine arrows are sharp in the heart of the king's enemies; whereby the people fall under thee. Thy throne, O God, is forever and ever; the scepter of thy kingdom is a right scepter. Thou lovest righteousness and hatest wickedness; therefore God, thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows."

This personage who is fairer than the sons of men, can be no other than the King in his beauty (Isa. 63: 17), who is to be admired in the day of his advent by all them that believe. 2 Thes. 1: 10. The time when he rides forth for the destruction of his enemies is presented in Rev. 19: 11-21.

The words of Paul establish the fact that this Psalm relates to Christ, some of its words being addressed to him by his Father when he invests him with his kingly office and throne. Thus Paul quotes and comments:

Heb. 1: 8, 9: "But unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, O God, is forever and ever: a scepter of righteousness is the scepter of thy kingdom. Thou hast loved righteousness and hated iniquity; therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows."

The relation of these two thrones to the work of our Lord is very important to be understood. As a priest after the order of Melchisedec, who was both priest and king (Gen. 14: 18-20; Ps. 110: 1, 4; Heb. 7: 1-3), the Saviour has had a joint rule with his Father upon the throne of the universe. Zech. 6: 12, 13. His office of priest-king continues till his Father makes his enemies his footstool. Then he delivers up the kingdom which he has shared with his Father to him alone, that God may be all in all. 1 Cor. 15: 24-28. His reign upon the throne of his Father ends with all his enemies' being given to him for destruction.

The throne given him when his priesthood ends is that which he inherits as David's heir. On that throne he shall reign over the immortal saints for endless ages. Luke 1: 32, 33; Isa. 9: 6, 7. Upon the throne of the Father he had a joint rule as priest-king; upon his own throne his people have a joint rule with him. The first ends, that God may be all in all; the second is a reign that shall continue forever.

The Saviour closes his priesthood with the acquittal of his people at his Father's bar. For the act of God, the Father, in sitting as Judge, enables the Son to appear as the advocate of his people, and to obtain decision in their favor. That acquittal involves the virtual condemnation of all others. The last act of the Father in the work of the judgment in Dan. 7, is to crown his Son king, that he may execute its decision. It is at the close of this session, therefore, that our Lord terminates his office of priest-king upon his Father's throne, and takes his own throne to execute the decision of the Father. For it is the part of the Son to show from the record of the books who have overcome, and to confess the names of such before his Father. Rev. 8: 6. It pertains to the Father to give decision that such persons shall have immortality. And the execution of the judgment will consist in making these persons immortal, and in destroying all the rest. The decision of the judgment does therefore rest wholly with the Father. But the execution of the judgment pertains alone to the Son, who is crowned king at his Father's tribunal for this very purpose.

The distinction between these two relations sustained by the Father and the Son to the work of the judgment, is made very plain by our Lord's words in John 5: 22-30. This chapter takes up the judgment work just where the prophecy of Daniel leaves it. The Father having rendered decision, and having anointed his Son king, it pertains to the Son to execute the judgment; a work which he distinctly acknowledges in John 5. In this chapter our Lord uses these remarkable words:

Verses 22, 28: "For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son; that all men should honor the Son even as they honor the Father."

Now it is certain that God, the Father, must sit in judgment to fulfill Dan. 7: 9, 10. But if we read forward in these words of our Lord to verses 26, 27, we shall see what he means in verse 22.

Verses 26, 27: "For as the Father hath life in himself; so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself; and hath given him authority to execute judgment also, because he is the Son of Man."

It is therefore not the decision of the judgment, but its execution, that the Father had by promise even then given to his Son. And this execution will be effected by the accomplishment of the words which follow:

Verses 28, 29: "Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming in the which all that are in their graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation."

That our Lord is simply carrying out the judgment of his Father in the work which he thus performs, is distinctly taught in the next verse:

Verne 30: "I can of mine own self do nothing: as I hear, I judge; and my judgment is just; because I seek not mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent me."

Christ's part of the judgment work is its execution. His work is just, because he first hears the Father's decision, and then carries it out, doing only the Father's will in all this work. We conclude this article with the following direct proof that the decision of the judgment, which is the Father's part of the work, is past when our Lord comes again in the clouds of heaven. The execution of the judgment must be preceded by the investigation and decision of the cases which are judged. Now it is distinctly stated that the coming of Christ is to execute the judgment; whence it follows that the decision of the judgment is made by the Father before he sends his Son in the clouds of heaven. Thus we read of his second advent:

Jude 14, 15: "And Enoch also, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of these, saying, Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousands of his saints, to execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him."

The term saints, or holy ones, is applied to angels, as well as to men. Dan. 8: 18. These ten thousands of his saints are the host of heavenly angels that shall escort our Lord on his return to our earth. Matt. 26: 51. Enoch does, therefore, distinctly state the object of the second advent. It is to execute the judgment. And this fact constitutes a convincing proof that the decision of the judgment precedes our Lord's return. That event is therefore "the revelation of the righteous judgment of God." Rom. 2: 5. And the very act of giving immortality is one part of the work of rendering to every man according to his deeds. Rom. 2: 6, 7. The judgment of God does, therefore, precede the advent of his Son from Heaven.

When the events of Christ's advent are mentioned in the Scriptures, it is not merely those which happen at the very point when he descends from Heaven, but also those which happen in consequence of that event. The execution of the judgment must cover 1000 years. Rev. 20. But the advent of Christ lies at the foundation of this whole work. And when men find just retribution meted out to them for all their sins they will surely be convinced of their ungodly deeds and of their hard speeches.

The Order of Events in the Judgment.

NUMBER SIXTEEN.

Two coming of the Son of Man in his glory, attended by all his holy angels (Matt. 25:31), and the riding forth of the King of kings upon the white horse, followed by the armies of Heaven, when Heaven itself is opened (Rev. 19:11-16), must be one and the same event. When Jude describes the second advent, or rather when he quotes Enoch's description of that event, he says, "Behold the Lord cometh with ten thousands of his saints, to execute vengeance upon all." Verses 14, 15. Our Lord's description of this grand event in Matt. 25:31-46, and of the things consequent upon it, relates wholly to the execution of the judgment, and the convicting of the ungodly of all their evil deeds and hard speeches. And it is certain that the revelation of the King of kings, followed by the armies of Heaven, is for this very purpose; for it is said (Rev. 19:11), "In righteousness he doth judge and make war."

It being true that these representations of Christ's advent are each statements of one and the same event, it is worthy of notice that the chain of events in Matt. 25:31-46, and the chain of events in Rev. 19:11-21, have each, as their second link, the gathering of the nations before Christ. In Matt. 25:32, we have simply the statement of the fact, "And before him shall be gathered all nations." But in Rev. 19:19, we have the occasion of this gathering stated: "I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together to make war against Him that sat on the horse, and against his army."

The gathering of the nations mentioned in these two texts must be identical, as each gathering is at the same time as the other, and both are connected with the same event, viz., the advent of Christ. The nature of this gathering is presented in the following passages:

Rev. 16:13, 14: "And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. For they are the spirits of devils working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty."

Rev. 19:19: "And I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together to make war against Him that sat on the horse, and against his army."

Ezek. 38:8, 9: "Therefore, wait ye upon me, saith the Lord, until the day that I rise up to the pray: for my determination is to gather the nations, that I may assemble the kingdoms, to pour upon them mine indignation, even all my fierce anger; for all the earth shall be devoured with the fire of my jealousy. For then will I turn to the people a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the Lord, to serve him with one consent."

These texts clearly indicate that the gathering of the nations is effected not by the good angels of God, but by the evil angels of Satan. The mighty working of the devil, even after men have passed the day of grace, is plainly his final desperate struggle before he is bound. This great gathering of the nations is, in the providence of God, for the purpose of pouring on them the fierceness of his wrath in their terrible destruction. The battle of the great day of God Almighty is the very scene of treading the wine-press of the wrath of God. Rev. 19:11-15. The central point of this great slaughter is the valley of Jehoshaphat near Jerusalem. Joel 3:2, 9-12. The city (Rev. 14:10, 20) near which this wine-press is trodden must, therefore, be old Jerusalem. But the slain of the Lord in the great battle shall be from one end of the earth to the other. Jer. 25:30-32.

The separation of the sheep and the goats (Matt. 25:32) must be at the same time as the separation of the wheat and tares (Matt. 13:30, 40, 41); and of the good and bad fishes (Matt. 13:48, 49); and of the wheat and chaff. Matt. 3:12. This separation of the righteous and the wicked is effected in the manner stated in the following texts:

Matt. 24:31: "And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other." See also Mark 13:27.

1 Thess. 4:16, 17: "For the Lord himself shall descend from Heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord."

But the angels who perform this work, do it under the express order of Christ. Thus we read:

Ps. 80:4-6: "Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence: a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him. He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people. Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice."

And the Saviour who gives this order is simply executing the judgment already determined by the Father. John 5:22, 27; Dan. 7:9-14. Indeed, the saints are made immortal before the angels bear them away from our earth; for the sounding of the trumpet is the signal for the angels to descend from Christ to gather his saints. Matt. 24:31. But the saints are changed to immortality in an instant at the sounding of the last trumpet. 1 Cor. 15:51, 52.

The decision of the judgment has, therefore, been rendered before even the separation of the two classes described in Matt. 25:32. For the gift of immortality is a part of the righteous judgment of God in rendering to every man according to his deeds. Rom. 2:6-8. And in particular, the resurrection which makes a part of mankind equal to the angels (Luke 20:36, 38); which makes them immortal (1 Cor. 15:51-54); which allows them to be blessed, and holy, and incapable of the second death (Rev. 20:6); and which shows that they were that part of the dead which belonged to Christ (1 Cor. 15:23; 1 Thess. 4:10); this resurrection which our Lord terms the resurrection of the just (Luke 14:14); is, in the expressive language of Paul, declared to be the "justification of life." Rom. 6:18. This free gift of God, which is open to all men, like the gift of grace and righteousness in the previous verse, will be shared by those only who accept the grace and righteousness offered in the gospel; and will only be conferred on them after they have been pronounced just in the judgment. For the change to immortality, which precedes the act of the angels who are sent by Christ to separate the two classes, is demonstrative of the fact that those changed in this manner have already been pronounced just in the decision of the judgment. The resurrection to immortality is, therefore, the "justification of life." Our Lord does not pronounce the decision of that judgment which he thus begins to execute, until he has conferred upon his saints the gift of immortality. And when he does it, it is in words which imply that the Father has already rendered decision in favor of the saints. Matt. 25:34.

The Order of Events in the Judgment.

NUMBER SEVENTEEN.

THE separation of the sheep and goats is effected by the angels. Matt. 18: 40. It must, therefore, be accomplished when the saints are caught up to meet Christ in the air. Matt. 24: 31. The placing of the righteous upon the right hand, and the wicked upon the left, cannot, therefore, have reference to the right and left sides of the Saviour. It must signify the exaltation of the one class in his presence, and the rejection of the other class to shame and final ruin. Even if we place the separation of the two classes at the end of the 1000 years, when all the righteous are within the city, and when all the wicked surround it on every hand, we shall still be compelled to interpret these words as above. Rev. 20: 7-8.

Thus we find this term used in many places. At the right hand of the Lord are pleasures for evermore. Ps. 16: 11. God saves by his right hand those that put their trust in him. Ps. 17: 7. The right hand of the Lord holds up his servants. Ps. 18: 35. His right hand is used for his saving strength. Ps. 20: 6. The right hand of the Lord gave Canaan to Israel. Ps. 44: 8. Christ is the man of the Father's right hand. Ps. 80: 17.

And as Christ, at the Father's right hand, was a joint ruler with his Father upon his throne (Ps. 110: 1, 4; Zech. 6: 13, 18), so the saints, when they are placed at Christ's right hand, sit down with him upon his throne, as once he thus sat down upon the throne of his Father, that they may be joint rulers with him, and may co-operate with him in the judgment. To sit at the right hand is the highest place of honor in the presence of one greater. Quintus says: "To sit on the right hand of a king, as the monarch zachor or monarch, s. g., spoken of the queen (1 Kings 2: 19; Ps. 45: 9); of one beloved of the king and viceroy of the kingdom. Ps. 110: 1."

When the saints enter Christ's presence they are immortal. They will be like him, for they will see him as he is. 1 John 3: 2. They will behold his face in righteousness when they awake with his likeness. Ps. 17: 15. One of the first events that follows the entrance of the saints into Christ's presence is thus stated:

2 Cor. 5: 10: "For we must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad."

Though our Lord comes to execute the judgment (John 5: 22, 27; Jude 14: 15; 2 Tim. 4: 1; Matt. 25: 31-46; Acts 10: 42; 17: 31; Ps. 50: 8-6), and though he makes his people immortal before he gathers them into his presence (1 Cor. 15: 51, 52; Matt. 24: 31; 1 Thess. 4: 16, 17), yet it is certain that every one, even of the righteous, shall stand at the judgment-seat of Christ. Rom. 14: 10. It is not, however, that their cases may be decided for salvation or for perdition, but "that every one may receive the things done in his body." Even all the wicked shall stand thus in his presence, that they may receive for their deeds of evil, which have not been repented of; and so, neither pardoned nor blotted out. But the wicked will not stand thus before Christ till the resurrection of the ungodly at the end of the 1000 years. The righteous will appear at Christ's judgment-seat, that they may receive the reward of well doing; and at a later time all the wicked shall stand in his presence, that they may hear their sentence and receive their just reward. In executing the judgment, our Lord is to reward every man according to his works. Rev. 22: 12; Matt. 16: 27. Then the Lord, the righteous judge, will give to Paul a crown of righteousness. 2 Tim. 4: 8. To all his saints he will in like manner give crowns, but of very different brightness, (1 Cor. 15: 41, 42;) and assign to each a reward proportionate to their labors and responsibilities. Luke 19: 16-18.

When the Saviour, in the work of executing the judgment, which has been already determined by the Father, pronounces the heavenly benediction upon his people, he does it in his Father's name. Thus we read:

"Then shall the king say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world; for I was an hungared, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick, and ye visited me; I was in prison, and ye came unto me."

This plainly indicates, 1. That the record of their good deeds has been already examined. 2. That this examination has been made in the Father's presence, by whom they have been pronounced innocent; and upon whom his blessing has been conferred. The saints will have boldness in the day of judgment (1 John 4: 17); for their sins are all blotted out before the Saviour comes to act as priest; and they are made immortal before they stand at Christ's judgment-seat; and when they thus stand before him, it is not to have decision rendered whether they shall be saved or lost, but it is to hear the Saviour enumerate their good deeds, and to receive from him their great reward. Matt. 25: 34-40.

When invited to inherit the kingdom, it is said to be that prepared for them from the foundation of the world. This cannot signify that they are at once to inherit the new earth; for the new earth cannot exist till the sentence has been passed upon the wicked, and executed upon them; as the lake of fire, where the wicked are punished, is our earth in its final conflagration. 2 Pet. 3: 7-18; Mal. 4: 1-3; Prov. 11: 31; Rev. 20: 21. Indeed, the new earth can hardly be said to have been prepared from the foundation of the world. But Paradise, which contains the tree of life, and is now in the third heaven (2 Cor. 12: 2-4), was prepared for mankind in their innocency when the earth itself was founded (Gen. 2: 8-15; 3: 1-24), and is to be given as a part of the overcomer's reward, and will be reached by their entrance within the walls of the heavenly Jerusalem. Rev. 2: 7; 22: 2, 14. Paradise, the blissful abode of our first parents, and rendered infinitely more glorious by being now situated within the New Jerusalem itself, being that place from which Adam the first was expelled, will be that place to which Adam the second will first introduce the saved of the human family. The giving of the kingdom to the saints begins with the capital of that kingdom, but will not be finished till they take the kingdom under the whole heaven, to possess it forever, even forever and ever. Dan. 7: 18, 27; Rev. 21. The Saviour's act of giving the kingdom to his saints is a part of the work of executing the decision of the Father respecting his people; for it is the Father's good pleasure to give them the kingdom. Luke 12:32.

When our Lord was about to leave his disciples to go to his Father, he told them that he would go to prepare a place for them, and would then return and receive them unto himself, that where he was, they might be also. John 14:2, 3. And on this very occasion he told Peter that he could not follow him then, but should follow him afterward. That is, when he should have completed the preparation of the place, he would return for Peter and for all the saints, and they should follow him thither. John 18:86. Thus it is that our Lord is the forerunner, and his entrance is, therefore, the pledge that his people shall afterward follow him. Heb. 6:20. In this connection let us notice,

1 Thess. 4:14: "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."

Many read this text as teaching that at the second advent, Christ will bring the souls of his sleeping saints from Heaven. But let it be observed, 1. That Heaven is not a place of soul-sleeping. 2. That the sleep of the saints is in the dust of the earth. Dan. 12:2. 3. That the sleeping ones cannot be brought from Heaven, for they are not there when Christ descends for his people. 4. That they cannot be brought to our earth at that time, for they are at that moment asleep in his dust. 5. The one who brings the saints is God the Father. 6. To bring them, he must do one of two things: either he must come with his Son at the second advent, and take along with him as he thus comes his sleeping saints, or else he brings his saints to himself by sending his Son to awaken them, and then to take them into his presence. 7. Two reasons forbid the idea that the Father brings the sleeping saints to the earth. One is, that the Father does not come to our earth, but sends his Son (Acts 8:20); and the other is, that the sleepers are not in Heaven, but already within the bosom of the earth. Isa. 20:10. 8. We cannot, therefore, avoid the conclusion that the act of bringing the saints is into his own presence. 9. The saints are to be brought according to a certain example, which is the resurrection of Christ. 1 Thess. 4:14; Heb. 13:20. 10. The very act of bringing the saints by God the Father, is wrought by sending his Son after them, as described in this chapter, and by this means taking them into his presence. So that this chapter brings to view the great fact taught in our Lord's promise that he would go into the Father's presence to prepare a place for his people, and then return after them, to take them to this prepared place. So Christ will present his saints unblameable in holiness before his Father as he bears them up with him to the heavenly Jerusalem. Compare John 14:2, 3; 1 Thess. 3:13; 4:14.

That the Saviour takes his people to the house of the Father, the New Jerusalem, immediately after he has made them immortal, and invited them in the Father's name to share Paradise with him, is further proved by what is said respecting the marriage supper. This is eaten directly after the saints are received into Christ's presence. Luke 12:36, 37. But the marriage supper must be eaten where the bride is. The saints are the invited guests. But the bride, the Lamb's wife, is that holy city, the New Jerusalem. Rev. 19:9; 21:2, 9, 10; (Gal. 4:26-28; Isa. 61.

The saints are in the Father's presence, near the throne of God, when they eat the marriage supper of the Lamb. Rev. 19:1-9; Luke 12:36, 37; 22:16-18. Our Lord does, therefore, introduce his saints to the holy city, and to the presence of his Father, where they eat the marriage supper, in the kingdom of God. This is the grand celebration of our Lord's assumption of his own throne and of his royal city, the metropolis of his everlasting kingdom. When this is past, the great work of the judgment upon the wicked remains to be entered upon by Christ and his saints.

The coronation of Christ is for the execution of the judgment. Dan. 7:9-14; Ps. 110; 45:1-7; 2:6-9. Our Lord makes his people sharers with him in the judgment work. That they may be such, he exalts them to participate with him in his kingly dignity. Rev. 3:21; 2:26, 27. This exaltation is given them in the morning of the great day. Compare Ps. 49:14, 16; 110:3; 80:6; Isa. 21:11, 12; Rom. 13:11, 12.

They are to sit with Christ in the judgment, but not to determine who shall be saved or who lost. God the Father has already pronounced the decision who shall have immortality, and the Son has executed that decision by immortalizing his saints. And thus all others are counted unworthy of eternal life, and must receive the second death as their portion. But there are degrees of punishment. Some shall receive greater damnation than others. Luke 20:47; Rom. 2:6, 8, 9; Luke 12:47, 48.

Bear it in mind, therefore, that the saints have not the determination of the salvation or damnation of any one in their hands. The Father has decided this when he made them immortal and left all the others as unworthy. Also bear in mind that God keeps books of record (Isa. 65:6, 7; Jer. 2:22; Dan. 7:10; Rev. 20:12), and that he weighs men's actions, so that they are set down for their true amount. 1 Sam. 2:3. If the reader will do this, it will not seem strange to him to learn that the immortal saints, with Christ at their head, should be commissioned by the Father to determine the measure of punishment which each wicked man shall receive.

As we have already shown that the final perdition of the wicked is determined by the Father before he makes his saints immortal, if we now clearly prove that the glorified saints are to sit with Christ and determine the measure of guilt of each sinful man, it will be a most convincing proof that there is to be a resurrection of the unjust, that God may inflict tribulation and anguish upon every soul of man that doeth evil. Rom. 2:6-9.

The Order of Events in the Judgment.

NUMEROUS EVIDENCES.

When our Lord says to those at his right hand, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world," he takes his saints into the presence of his Father (compare John 18:36; 14:1-8; 1 Thess. 4:14-17; Rev. 19:1-9), to the Paradise of God, once here upon earth (Gen. 2:8, 9; 3:22-24), now in the third Heaven (2 Cor. 12:2-4), within the heavenly Jerusalem itself. Compare Rev. 2:7; 22:3, 14. Here they sit down with him at his table and eat the marriage supper. Rev. 19:1-9. These things being accomplished, the work of judgment is committed to the saints, a work so vast that we may well conceive the long period which lies between the two resurrections, to be requisite for its accomplishment. Rev. 20:4-6. The sitting of the saints in judgment upon the wicked, must begin after they have heard the words of Christ approving them in his Father's name, and before the sentence, "Depart ye cursed," is pronounced by the Saviour upon those who shall be thus judged. This judgment by the saints is thus presented in the Scriptures:

Dan. 7:21, 22: "I beheld, and the same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them; until the Ancient of Days came, and judgement was given to the saints of the Most High; and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom."

1 Cor. 4:4: "Therefore judge nothing among the time, until the Lord come, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts: and then shall every man have praise of God."

1 Cor. 6:1-3: "Dare any of you, having a matter against another, go to law before the unjust, and not before the saints? Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world? and if the world shall be judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the smallest matters? Know ye not that we shall judge angels? how much more, things that pertain to this life?"

Rev. 20:4-6: "And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgement was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshiped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. (This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years."

According to the first of these texts, the saints of the Most High are to have the judgment work committed to them. But before this is placed in their hands, they are themselves to be judged by God the Father. And this very act of determining who are worthy to be saved, really determines that all the others are unworthy of eternal life. The judgment work of the saints cannot, therefore, relate to the separation or separation of those who are judged by them, but solely to the determination of the measure of their guilt. The second of these texts, in forbidding the work of judgment "before the time," plainly implies that when that time does come, then this work is to be done by those who are at present forbidden to do it. And the time is fixed when this prohibition expires. For it is thus limited: "Until the Lord come." That they will not err in the judgment which they will then perform, is guaranteed in the further statement that the Lord shall bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and make manifest the counsels of the heart. And this will no doubt be accomplished by placing in their hands the books of record which contain an accurate statement of the deeds of those to be judged by them. Barnes, in his notes on this text, makes this remark: "'And then shall every man have praise of God.' The word here rendered praise (εὐλογία) denotes in this place reward, or that which is due to him; the just sentences which ought to be pronounced on his character. It does not mean, as our translation would imply, that every man will then receive the divine approbation—which will not be true; but that every man shall receive what is due to his character, whether good or evil. So Bloomfield and Bretschneider explain it."

The third text states, in the most explicit manner, "that the saints shall judge the world." As it occurs in the same epistle which forbids this judgment "before the time until the Lord come," it is manifest that this is a work which the saints enter upon immediately after they have been exalted to reign with Christ. The nature of the judgment which the saints are to decide is clearly determined by two facts: 1. It is rendered by the saints after the Lord has brought to light the hidden works of darkness, and made manifest the counsels of the hearts. 2. It is said in this same passage, and in the same manner, that the saints "shall judge angels," meaning of course those angels that have sinned whose cases are thus stated:

2 Pet. 2:4: "For if God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgement."

Jude 6: "And the angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, he hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgement of the great day."

These two facts are decisive as to the nature of the judgment which the saints are to engage in when exalted at Christ's right hand. They are not to be judges over men in a state of probation, something as the ancient judges of Israel were raised up to rule over God's ancient people; but their judgment is to be rendered in the case of wicked men, when the Lord brings "to light the hidden things of darkness," and it is to be exercised alike in the case of sinful men and fallen angels. It is not a judgment to determine the guilt or innocence of the parties to be judged; for the guilt of the angels was virtually pronounced to be unpardonable when they were cast out of heaven, and delivered to chains of darkness, i. e., to utter despair, and to the hopeless bondage of their own sins. And the best condition of wicked men has, before their judgment by the saints, already been determined by the resurrection and translation of the just, leaving all others as unworthy of eternal life. This judgment of the saints is, therefore, simply designed to determine the measure of the guilt of wicked men and fallen angels. As their rejection from the kingdom of God is determined by God the Father before they are thus judged by the saints, this judgment by them for the determination of the measure of each man's guilt, is a most convincing proof that God designs, in rendering to every man according to his deeds, to inflict tribulation and anguish upon every soul of man that doeth evil. Rom. 2:6-9.

Dr. Bloomfield says of 1 Cor. 6:2: "Upon the whole, there is, after all, no interpretation that involves less of difficulty than the common one, supported by some Latin Fathers, and, of modern divines, by Luther, Calvin Erasmus, Bese, Oomsen, Crellius, Wolf, Jeremy Taylor, Doddridge, Pearce, Newcome, Scott, and others, by which it is supposed that the faithful servants of God, after being accepted in Christ, shall be in a certain sense, assessores judicii, by concurrence, with Christ, and being partakers of the judgment to be held by him over wicked men and apostate angels; who are, as we learn from 2 Pet. 2:4; Jude 6, reserved unto the judgment of the last day."

And Dr. Barnes speaks thus: "Grotius supposes it means that they shall be first judged by Christ, and then act as assessors to him in the judgment, or join with him in condemning the wicked."

But the fourth text relative to this judgment by the saints is very remarkable. It shows that the resurrection of the just precedes the work of judgment by them. It elevates them to thrones of judgment, where they live and reign with Christ, during the period between their own resurrection and that of "the rest of the dead." It assigns the space of time occupied in this vast work; viz., a thousand years, a period none too long for this examination of the books containing the deeds of all wicked men and fallen angels, even though all the saints engage in it, as we have learned that they do.

There is in this statement respecting the thrones, an evident allusion to Dan. 7:9, which speaks of thrones being "set down," or more correctly rendered "were placed," as many able critics inform us. These thrones were placed for the judgment work, when entered upon, as we have seen, in the second apartment of the heavenly temple by God the Father. And when the judgment is given to the immortal saints, and they are able to enter the temple after the outpouring of the plagues (Rev. 16:6), it appears that they sit upon the thrones thus placed for them, and with the Saviour at their head finish the work of the judgment as indicated in the text examined. They are in this exalted state, priests to God and Christ, not as mediators with them in behalf of wicked men, but as worshipers of God and the Lamb, even as Christians in their mortal state are a royal priesthood to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God, by Jesus Christ. 1 Pet. 2:5, 9.

The Order of Events in the Judgment.

NUMBER NINETEEN.

THE reason why so vast a period as 1000 years intervenes between the resurrection of the righteous and the resurrection of the wicked, is now made very apparent. The work committed to the saints, demands no less a period than that assigned it by the Holy Scriptures. It is that they examine the books of God's record to determine the measure of guilt of each wicked man, and of every fallen angel. To this great exhibition the psalmist refers in these words:

Ps. 149: 4-9: "For the Lord taketh pleasure in his people; he will beautify them with salvation. Let the saints be joyful in glory: let them sing aloud upon their beds. Let the high praises of God be in their mouth, and a two-edged sword in their hand; to execute vengeance upon the heathen, and punishments upon the people; to bind their kings with chains, and their nobles with fetters of iron; to execute upon them the judgment written: this honor have all his saints. Praise ye the Lord."

The saints have no participation in the work of the judgment, until the coming of the Lord. 1 Cor. 4: 5. The decision of every case is made by God the Father before he sends his Son to execute the judgment. Dan. 7: 9-14, compared with Jude 14, 15. It is the execution of the judgment, therefore, that pertains to the Son. John 5: 22, 27. And that work which is given to the Son, he shares with his saints. For when he sits in his own throne, all his saints shall sit down with him in it, as he once thus sat down with the Father. And that power which the Father gives him over the nations when he receives his own throne, he shares with his saints when he exalts them to his right hand to unite with him in the execution of the judgment. Compare Ps. 2: 6-9; Rev. 2: 26, 27. The most important part of this work is the determination of that measure of guilt which pertains to each individual of the lost. God the Father having pronounced them unworthy of eternal life, it is then the business of the saints to determine that measure of anguish which their respective lives have demanded. This Psalm is worthy of careful study.

1. When the meek are beautified with salvation, it will be by the change to immortality. They will bear the image of the second Adam, as in this life they bear that of the first. 1 Cor. 15: 47-49. Compare also Isa. 58: 17, with 1 John 3: 2.

2. This beautifying of the saints, and exalting them to glory precedes their participation in the judgment, mentioned in verses 7-9 of this Psalm.

3. The two-edged sword in their hand is doubtless the same as that which proceeded out of the mouth of Him whose name is called the Word of God. Rev. 19: 11-15.

4. And if we consider this Psalm from verse 8 to verse 9, we shall see that the work of the immortal saints in the judgment of the wicked is effected by the examination of the book of God, the sharp sword which they hold in their hands (Eph. 6: 17; Heb. 4: 12), and the written record of their evil deeds. So that the record of their lives will be compared with the rule given them to govern their conduct, and the measure of their guilt determined thus.

A brief survey of Rev. 20 may now be in place. We understand the events of this chapter, as stated in verses 1-11, are given very nearly in strict chronological order; and that verses 12-15, cover the same ground, though they necessarily begin at a point somewhat earlier than the binding of the dragon, and the resurrection of the just.

For there can be no doubt that the judgment scene of Rev. 20: 12, is precisely identical with that of Dan. 7: 9, 10. In the one case it is God the Father sitting in judgment with the books opened before him. In the other, it is the Ancient of Days who takes the position of judge, and before whom the books are opened.

It has already been shown that God the Father thus sits in judgment before the advent of Christ; and that at this tribunal our Lord acts as advocate for his people, and closes his priesthood with securing their acquittal, and the blotting out of their sins. He determines every case, deciding who shall have eternal life, and thus counting all others unworthy of it. Then he commits the execution of the judgment to the Son, who, in fulfillment of this work, makes his saints immortal, and associates them with himself in the judgment of the wicked. When God thus commits the judgment to his Son, and the Son ceases forever his work of intercession, the words of Ps. 70: 7-9, will be found true:

"Thou, even thou, art to be feared: and who may stand in thy sight when once thou art angry? Thou didst cause judgment to be heard from Heaven; the earth feared, and was still, when God arose to judgment to save all the meek of the earth. Selah."

When the Son of God shall thus save all the meek of the earth, he will raise them up from the dust to inherit the throne of his own glory. 1 Sam. 2: 8; Matt. 25: 31-33; Rev. 3: 21. But the adversaries of the Lord will be broken to pieces; out of Heaven will he thunder upon them (Rev. 16: 18); he will render desolation in strict justice in the case of all men, and then clothe his anointed King with strength to execute that decision. 1 Sam. 2: 10. Indeed, it is because that the Son loves righteousness, and hates iniquity, that he is anointed to do this work. Ps. 45: 7; 2: 6-8. His arrows will be sharp in the heart of the King's enemies (Ps. 45: 4, 5), and none will escape his just indignation of wrath. Rom. 2: 6-9.

The session of the judgment by God the Father, is to determine who shall have part in the resurrection of the just. Now it is of especial interest that the dead are represented as standing at this tribunal. The session of the Father's judgment being an event that precedes the advent of his Son, the dead have their cases brought into the judgment in the books which are brought forth, and in particular the righteous dead appear in the person of their Advocate. They do not personally stand as dead men at the Father's judgment-seat, for that is in the heavenly temple; but they are judged by the Father while dead, as if they were personally present at his bar; and all who have secured the services of the only Advocate in the court of Heaven, by obeying the gospel while they lived, will have decision rendered, that the Spirit of God shall quicken them to immortality. 1 Pet. 4: 6.

This judgment work begins with the saints who render account through their High Priest; and if they are scarcely accounted worthy of eternal life when weighed in the balances of the sanctuary, what will be the end of those who have no Advocate in the judgment, but who come up to it with all their sins standing against them in the book of God? 1 Pet. 4: 17, 18. Verily, the ungodly will not stand in the judgment. Ps. 1: 6.

When the Ancient of Days was shown to Daniel in vision, sitting in judgment, preparatory to the advent of his Son to execute that judgment, the words of the little horn spoken at that very time, attracted the prophet's attention: "I beheld thus because of the voice of the great words which the horn spake." Dan. 7: 11. The Hebrew word rendered "then" is very emphatic in its signification of "at that time." Cassinus renders it "at that time, thereupon, then." And it is especially worthy of notice, that at this very time, the head of the Romish apostasy has assembled at Rome, the entire body of popish bishops, almost equal in number to Belshazzar's lords (Dan. 5), and he expects, and requires of them to pronounce him infallible! It is evident, indeed, that for this very purpose he has assembled them, and there is little doubt that they will obey his behest. We are likely, therefore, very soon to hear the great words of the little horn which even arrested the attention of the prophet while in vision, he beheld the tribunal of the Father.

The judgment of God the Father, in Rev. 20: 12, in which the cases of the dead are decided, must precede that event which is mentioned in verse 6 in these words: "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power." Now it is this very session of the Father's judgment which determines who are worthy to have a part in this resurrection to immortality, and which leaves all the others to the second death at the resurrection of the unjust.

The binding of Satan precedes the resurrection of the just. This seems plain enough from Rev. 20, but it is very plainly taught in our Lord's parable of binding the strong man, and spoiling his house. Matt. 12: 29; Mark 3: 27; Luke 11: 21, 22. He is evidently bound before the complete slaughter of the wicked in the battle of the great day.

Every mention of the bottomless pit, or deep, or abyss, both in the Old Testament and in the New, seems plainly to refer to our earth, or some part of it, in some form, or at some time. And in the most emphatic sense, after our earth has been turned upside down by the awful convulsions of the great day, and made utterly desolate, we understand it to be fully fitted to constitute the place of Satan's confinement, termed in this prophecy the bottomless pit. A strong confirmation of this view, is found in the fact that this expression is used in the Septuagint in Gen. 1: 9, where the earth while yet without form and void, is spoken of as the deep; Greek, the bottomless pit. And the Hebrew original signifies the same. And it is predicted that our earth shall be reduced to this condition again. Jer. 4: 23.

This binding of the devil we understand to be at the very time when, as the antitypical scape-goat, he receives the sins of the righteous. Lev. 16. And our earth in its utter desolation is the land not inhabited, where he shall remain with this terrible load of guilt upon him, while the saints sit in judgment upon the fallen angels, and upon all the members of the human family who would go on still in their sins.

The Order of Events in the Judgment.

NUMBER TWENTY.

THE judgment of wicked men, and of evil angels, by the saints, during the thousand years, will solve to their minds, by means of the examination of the books of God's remembrance, the providence of God which has seemed dark and mysterious. For God will then lay open the hidden springs of human conduct, and bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and make manifest the counsels of the heart. 1 Cor. 4:5.

The course of those who have diligently used the comparatively small measure of light which has been granted them, will come up to condemn those who have been favored with great light and have neglected it. Matt. 12:41, 42; Luke 11:31, 32.

And in like manner those who have been cut off in their sins, as a warning to others, and who would have repented had as great light been granted them as those who have lived at a later time have enjoyed, will come up in this examination to condemn most fearfully those who have had the example of their fate, and had seen greater light than they, and yet have not repented. Matt. 11:21-23; Luke 10:13.

But even those wicked men who have been thus cut off by God's judgments as an example to those that after should live ungodly, shall come up in the judgment for the complete punishment of their sins. But their case shall be more tolerable in the judgment than that of those who have had the example of their punishment, and have had far greater light than they were favored with, and yet have refused to repent. Matt. 10:15; 11:22, 24; Luke 10:12, 14. Thus, even the mitigating circumstances are taken into the account in the judgment of the wicked, as certainly as are those of an aggravating character. Surely God is, in the highest sense, just and righteous.

The record of the righteous, as we have seen, is passed upon by the Father when he counts them worthy to have part in the resurrection to immortality; and by the Son when they stand before him to receive according to their labors and sacrifices in the cause of God. And that record will show in the case of every one who is able to stand in the judgment so perfect a work of repentance, and confession, and reparation of wrongs done toward others, that not one sinful man can rise up in the judgment against them. Isa. 54:17.

The judgment, by the saints, of Satan and his angels and of wicked men being accomplished, it appears that, just before the thousand years expire, the holy city with its immortal inhabitants descends upon our earth, upon a place prepared for it. See Zech. 14:4, 5.

At the termination of the thousand years all the wicked dead hear the voice of the Son of God and come forth. John 5:28, 29. The unjust have their resurrection. Acts 24:15. "The rest of the dead" live again. Rev. 20:5. They come forth from the depths of the ocean and from the caverns of earth; for the sea gives up the dead, and hades gives them up also. And they come forth alive, for death itself gives them up. Rev. 20:13.

And now Satan is loosed for his final work. He begins it just where he left it off. He had gathered the nations to the great battle, when he was bound and they were cut off. Rev. 19. Now, after they have been "many days" in the "prison," the time comes for Satan to visit them as they are loosed from it for their execution. Isa. 24:21, 23; Eze. 38:8, 9. He resumes his work by tempting them to capture the city of God. Rev. 20:7-9. And thus, by the direct action of Satan, all the wicked, with himself and his angels at their head, stand in the presence of Christ, for the execution of the judgment.

As the righteous stand in Christ's presence immediately after they are made immortal, that they may each receive according to their labor (2 Cor. 5:10; Matt. 16:27), so do the wicked thus stand in his presence after the second resurrection. As the righteous cannot receive punishment for their sins after they have been blotted out, it follows that those who stand before him to receive for their evil deeds are the wicked, who stand thus in his presence, after the examination of their cases by his saints, during the thousand years.

We may safely conclude that many who go down to their graves self-deceived, will come up in the second resurrection really expecting to be saved, and quite unaware that it is the resurrection of the unjust. We think this is the very time when our Lord's words shall have their fulfillment:

Matt. 7:22, 23: "Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity."

And now, for the first time, all the members of the human family are congregated in one vast assembly. The wicked see the righteous in the kingdom of God, and realize that they themselves are thrust out. And when the wicked realize the mercy which they have slighted, and the infinite sacrifice made for their salvation in the death of God's only Son, and remember their persistent continuance in sin till God could bear no longer, every knee will bow in deepest abasement, acknowledging that God is just, and that their ruin was caused by themselves alone, while the throne of God is forever clear.

And as both classes behold the final result of faithful obedience, and of persistent sin, they will, with one mind and voice, declare, "Verily, there is a reward for the righteous; verily, he is a God that judgeth in the earth." Ps. 68:11. And now the Son of God pronounces the awful sentence: "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." Matt. 25:41.

And now, after the example of Sodom and Gomorrah, fire comes down from God out of Heaven and devours them. Rev. 20:9; 2 Pet. 2:6; Gen. 19:24-28. It is the burning earth that constitutes the great lake of fire in which the wicked shall experience the second death. 2 Pet. 3:7-12; Mal. 4:1-3; Prov. 11:81. Satan and his angels shall share this furnace of fire with wicked men; for, indeed, it was originally prepared for them. Matt. 25:41; Isa. 30:33.

Finally, the earth shall be not only melted, but dissolved. 2 Pet. 3:10, 11. Such shall be the intense action of the devouring fire, that the earth itself, being reduced to a gaseous condition, shall flee away from the presence of Him that sitteth upon the great white throne, who is doubtless God the Father. Rev. 20:11. Then he that sitteth upon the throne shall say, "Behold, I make all things new." Rev. 21:5. And all the elements that were dissolved in the devouring fire shall unite again to form the earth. The New Jerusalem shall have place upon the new earth, and the glory of God shall fill the earth as the waters fill the sea. The saints shall bear the image of the second Adam, as now they bear that of the first, and shall live for endless ages. Sin, being thus struck out of existence, in the utter destruction of all evil doers, shall never rise up again to mar the handiwork of God. The universe shall be as clean as it was before the rebellion of Satan, and

GOD SHALL BE ALL IN ALL.

The Sanctuary of the Bible.

A RECENT article in the World's Crisis headed "Our High Priest," and designed to show that our views of the sanctuary and of the work of Christ as High Priest therein are false, demands a brief notice. When men are on the side of truth they can afford to be candid. In fact, they cannot be uncandid, for that is to be so far untruthful. But if candor demands that we fairly state the views which we profess to refute, then this article in the Crisis is not candid.

All Christians are necessarily interested in the subject of the sanctuary; that is to say, all are concerned in the great work therein accomplished for those who come to God through Christ. But in an especial sense all Adventists are interested in this subject; for the cleansing of the sanctuary at the end of the 2300 days, is one of the great events to which they have looked forward with intense interest. The Seventh-day Adventists believe that they have the Bible doctrine of the sanctuary. They have never yet been able to get the subject before the first-day Adventists to any considerable extent. It is rarely mentioned in their papers, and when it is mentioned it is always in a way to give a false or perverted view of it, or in such manner that the evidence from the Scriptures in its support is suppressed.

The word sanctuary occurs in the common version of the Scriptures one hundred and forty-six times. With a very few exceptions, every one of these instances relates to the tabernacle erected by Moses or to the temple built by Solomon, which superseded the tabernacle, but which was only an enlargement and continuation of that temporary building, or to the temple of God in Heaven, which was the great original of the one on earth. These three structures are in an important sense only one; for the tabernacle and the temple were temporary buildings made after the pattern of the heavenly sanctuary, and designed to represent it while the typical system lasted. Ex. 25: 8, 9, 40; 1 Chron. 28: 11-19; Heb. 8: 1-5; 9: 9, 23, 24.

The very few instances in which the word sanctuary is used that do not refer to the typical or antitypical tabernacle are generally either instances in which God is compared to a sanctuary (Isa. 5: 14; Eze. 11: 16) or in which the temples of idolatrous worship are called sanctuaries, as the rivals of God's temple, (Isa. 16: 12; Amos 7: 9, 13, margin) even as false deities are called gods, though no one is thereby misled as to the real meaning of the term God.

Such being the facts with regard to the word sanctuary, the Seventh-day Adventists believe that there is no chance for successfully controverting the view that the earthly and heavenly temples or tabernacles, the centers of the typical and antitypical worship, or rather the places where the typical and the real atonement is accomplished by the priests of each dispensation, do constitute the sanctuary of the Bible. A multitude of plain testimonies confirm this doctrine. To state the case briefly we may affirm:—

1. There are two covenants, the first from Mount Sinai, the second from mount Zion. Gal. 4: 24-26.

2. These two covenants cover the entire period from Moses to the present time, and thus cover the 2300 days.

3. The sanctuary of the first covenant Paul expressly declares to be the tabernacle or temple made by the hands of man. Heb. 9: 1-6.

4. The sanctuary of the second or better covenant is also plainly set forth by Paul as the true tabernacle pitched by God himself whereto our great High Priest is entered. Heb. 8: 1-6.

These two sanctuaries, as we have shown, are really one. The sanctuary of prophecy must be the sanctuary which pertains to God's covenant with his people. We cannot be mistaken in this. If the 2300 days of Daniel's prophecy end in the latter part of the new-covenant dispensation, then the sanctuary to be cleansed at the end of that period must be the new-covenant sanctuary. Will any one attempt to deny such a proposition?

But how did Daniel himself understand the subject of the sanctuary? The ninth chapter of Daniel is plainly an exposition of the unexplained portions of the eighth chapter. That is to say, Gabriel, being commanded in the vision of chapter eight to explain what was there shown to Daniel, attended to this duty till the prophet, under the view of the destruction of the mighty and holy people, and of the death of the Prince of princes, fainted and was sick. Dan. 8: 24-27. Thereupon, Gabriel desisted for the time, but; in answer to Daniel's prayer, came again in the manner related in chapter nine, and completed his work, explaining the sanctuary and giving the key to the reckoning of the 2300 days.

In this explanation he sets forth the rebuilding of the city of Jerusalem, and the rejection and death of the Messiah, and then predicts the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple by the Romans in these words: "The people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary." Dan. 9: 26. By the sanctuary.

beyond all dispute, is here meant the temple. We know from this that in Daniel's vision the sanctuary of the first covenant is recognized by name as the sanctuary. His prophecy extends forward over the whole new-covenant dispensation. His predicted cleansing of the sanctuary occurs in the very conclusion of that dispensation. Now, does this prediction relate to the cleansing of the sanctuary of the old covenant some 1800 years after that sanctuary and that covenant have ceased to exist? It does not look very consistent; for the prediction that the sanctuary shall be cleansed must pertain to that which is the sanctuary of God's covenant when that prophecy is to be fulfilled. But in the last days of this dispensation, the sanctuary of the new covenant is the only sanctuary of God, and must be the sanctuary of this prophecy.

We are not, however, left to such facts as these. The angel told Daniel just how large a portion of the 2300 days belonged to old Jerusalem. "Seventy weeks [490 days] are determined [literally, cut off] upon thy people, and upon thy holy city."

Then the entire vision of 2300 days does not pertain to the earthly sanctuary, but only 490 days of it. Now it is remarkable that this 490 days ends in close proximity to the point where the typical system gave place to the good things to come, and where the earthly sanctuary gave place to the heavenly. And it is also remarkable that at this very point the angel introduces the heavenly sanctuary. For in naming the closing events of the seventy weeks, he specifies the anointing of the most holy. This is literally the holy of holies.

The typical system prescribed that before the service in the earthly sanctuary commenced, the entire building should be anointed by Moses. Ex. 40:9; Lev. 8:10. Now this anointing predicted at the end of the typical system cannot relate to the earthly sanctuary, which Christ said was left desolate (Matt. 23:38), but must relate to the antitype, even to the heavenly sanctuary. So that the first 490 days of Daniel's vision pertains to the earthly sanctuary, and as that period expires, the heavenly sanctuary is introduced, and the remainder of the vision pertains to the new covenant and relates to the sanctuary of that covenant.

The cleansing of the sanctuary in the typical system was a well-understood work of the Levitical priesthood, at the conclusion of the yearly round of service, by which all the sins that had been borne into the sanctuary by the act of the priests in making atonement for sin were removed therefrom and placed on the head of the scapegoat. Lev. 16. Now, it is a fact of deep interest that Paul asserts the cleansing of the heavenly sanctuary for the same reason that the earthly sanctuary was cleansed. It is also very remarkable that the Greek word used by the Septuagint in its version of Dan. 8:14, for "cleansed" is the same one used by Paul for the cleansing of the heavenly sanctuary in Heb. 9:23. So that the act in each case may be fairly considered identical.

These facts cannot be denied; why, then, should they be despised? The cleansing of the sanctuary predicted in Daniel is to take place in the closing part of the gospel dispensation. But the sanctuary of this dispensation is in Heaven. Moreover, the sanctuary of the new covenant is to be cleansed for the same reason that the sanctuary of the first covenant was cleansed. This cleansing takes place of necessity as our High Priest closes up his work, so that the heavenly sanctuary is cleansed at the very time that this takes place with the sanctuary of Daniel. But Daniel's prediction that the sanctuary shall be cleansed must meet its fulfillment in the cleansing of the sanctuary described by Paul; for the two statements relate to the same time, and the sanctuary of St. Paul is the new-covenant sanctuary, and the only sanctuary in existence at the end of the 2300 days.

Vague ideas of the temple of God constitute the best objections to the work in the heavenly sanctuary above set forth. Many suppose that there is no temple in Heaven; others assert that, though there is a temple, it can have only one apartment. But the Bible is very explicit in its statements that there is a temple of God in Heaven, and that the earthly sanctuary, with its two holy places, was a pattern of the heavenly. Ex. 25; Heb. 8 and 9; Rev. 11:19; 16:17.

The Saviour at his ascension entered the presence of God, and sat down at his right hand. The glory of God was manifested in both apartments of the earthly sanctuary; for it was not only revealed between the cherubim, but also at the door of the first apartment. Ex. 29:42. The Saviour at his ascension is certainly represented in the first apartment of the heavenly sanctuary. John saw the throne of God, and Jesus near to that throne. Before the throne he saw seven lamps of fire which he was told were the seven spirits of God. Rev. 4 and 5. And when the Lamb had opened the book with seven seals, John saw an angel come and stand at the golden altar before the throne, having in his hand the golden censer. Rev. 8:3, 4. Now the seven lamps and the golden altar were both in the first apartment. Ex. 25:31-40; 26:35; 40:2-5.

But at the sounding of the seventh angel, the temple of God is opened in Heaven and the ark of his testament is seen. Rev. 11:19. That is to say, the second apartment of that temple is opened, for it is in that apartment that the ark of God's testament was kept. Lev. 16. At the same time it is said that the time of the dead is come that they should be judged. Rev. 11:13.

This must pertain to the investigative judgment, which precedes the resurrection of the just. Luke 20:35. In this part of the judgment the Father sits as Judge, and the Son here closes up his priesthood and receives his kingdom. It is announced by the proclamation of Rev. 14:6, 7, that the hour of God's judgment is come. It is marked by the ending of the prophetic periods. This judgment scene takes place within the second apartment by the ark of God. Rev. 11:13, 19. The scene is described in Dan. 7:9-14, where the Ancient of Days sits in judgment, and the Son of man approaches his throne and closes his priestly work by being crowned King of kings. Here is the place for the blotting out of sins as each case is examined before God; and this blotting out of sins is the grand idea of cleansing the sanctuary of God. Now Christ does not approach the Father in the manner described in Dan. 7:13, 14, at his ascension, for the Father did not then sit in judgment; nor does he thus approach him in coming to our earth at the second advent, for the Father is not here on earth when the Son descends; and, moreover, the Son comes to our earth as King (Matt. 25:31; Luke 19:12, 15), and it is at this tribunal that he receives his kingdom and glory. There is but one consistent view that can be taken of this judgment scene in Dan. 7 at which Christ is crowned, and that is, that it is the work of investigative judgment in the second apartment of the heavenly sanctuary.

The Crisis refers to this prophecy of Dan. 7:9-14, as proving that we do not believe that Christ entered his Father's presence till the end of the 2300 days in 1844, because we say that it was not fulfilled till then. Now, we might fairly retort by asking the Crisis whether it holds that God the Father did thus sit in judgment at Christ's ascension? Of course it does not. Then it actually has the same difficulty to solve that it so unfairly urges against our views; for it will be obliged to place the fulfilment of Dan. 7:13, 14, as late as we have it. We believe the scene transpires within the second vail; but we also believe that Christ had entered the Father's presence when he ministered in that apartment in which was seen the seven lamps and the altar of incense.

The Crisis quotes Paul with reference to Christ's entrance within the vail. Heb. 6:19, 20. From this, it argues that Christ at his ascension entered within the only vail which pertains to the sanctuary, and, of course, entered into the presence of God. But Paul recognizes two vails in Heb. 9:3. That Christ while ministering in the first apartment was actually in the presence of Him who sat upon the throne, we firmly believe. The editor of the Crisis, in treating the subject as though we deny that Christ entered his Father's presence at his ascension, does what he ought to know better than to do.

Christ's entrance into Heaven does not imply necessarily his entrance into the second apartment of the temple. The expression, "holiest of all," in Heb. 9:8, and "holiest" in Heb. 10:19, are in the original "holy places," in the plural. The editor of the Crisis speaks sincerely of this subject. Yet he will find his Bible full of it. We respectfully ask him, before writing further upon this subject, to procure one of the sanctuary works published at this Office, and give it a candid perusal. If he will do so, he will not again treat this subject as he has in the article under consideration. Nor will he think it unreasonable that we so strongly urge that a knowledge of this subject is of the highest importance to those who would understand and work the work of God. We do not say others who do not understand this subject cannot receive God's blessing, but we do say that those who are workers with Christ need to understand the sanctuary of the Bible.

THE SANCTUARY OF THE BIBLE.

BY REV. J. N. ANDREWS.

THE eighth chapter of Daniel is a prophecy of wonderful interest; for it gives the prophetic history of the world from the rise of the Persian Empire till the final destruction of all earthly kingdoms by the God of Heaven. The succession of earthly empires was presented to the prophet under the symbols of a ram, a goat, and a little horn that became exceeding great. And when these had been shown to him, he was told by the angel Gabriel that the ram represented the kingdom of Media and Persia; and that the goat was the kingdom of Grecia; and the horn which became exceeding great, though not called by name, was identified by several decisive facts, among which are these: That it should be the great destroyer of the people of God, and that it should put to death the Prince of princes. These facts show that the Roman power is intended.

In connection with these symbols which represent the great empires that have since arisen, the prophet learned the duration of his vision. For he heard Gabriel ask Michael, "How long shall be the vision concerning the daily sacrifice, and the transgression of desolation to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot?" And Michael, who answered the question to Daniel, said: "Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." Verses 13, 14.

Now, it is plain that the period of twenty-three hundred days cannot be understood to mean so many literal days; for this would not make quite seven years, and would cover only a very small part of the duration of one of the three great empires of this vision. But we should remember that in this vision the great empires of the world are represented by symbols, and thus are given on a scale which brings them distinctly before the eye of the observer. It is necessary that the time should be given on a scale that corresponds with this in order not to involve an absurdity. For the Persian, Grecian, and Roman Empires have in all continued between 2000 and 3000 years. Now when these empires were represented by beasts, if the time that the empires were to continue was given without a corresponding abatement, then we should have these beasts living a thousand years apiece! This would be absurd. But it would not be absurd to represent them as living and acting that number of days.

The days must therefore represent longer periods of time. If we compare spiritual things with spiritual, we shall find the key to the interpretation of these days.

For the different inspired writers were all led by the same Spirit of truth. They were like so many workmen engaged in building a temple. If we can find the rule which governed one of them, we shall find that same rule governing all the rest in like circumstances. Now God gave this rule to Ezekiel in the interpretation of the symbols of his own vision: "I have appointed thee each day for a year." Eze. 4:6. We shall find in Gabriel's explanation of this vision of Daniel given in the ninth chapter, that the days in Daniel's prophecy are so many years.

This period of two thousand and three hundred days was certainly given for the benefit of the people of God. But it cannot benefit them unless they are able to understand it. We have indeed ascertained that it must be two thousand and three hundred years. But if we do not know when this period commences, we shall be none the wiser for having the period given in Daniel's prophecy. But there is a certain great event to take place when this period expires and God designed to give his people knowledge of the time. The event is called the cleansing of the sanctuary. We shall find the subject one of very deep interest when we come to examine the Bible to learn what it teaches respecting the sanctuary and its cleansing.

But the date of this great period is not given in the eighth chapter of Daniel. In that chapter, however, the commandment is given by Michael thus: "Gabriel, make this man to understand the vision." Verse 16. And yet, in verse 27, he tells us that he "was astonished at the vision, but none understood it." The angel in explaining to him this vision set before him the destruction of the mighty and the holy people, and the cruel death of the Son of God. The prophet could bear no more, for he "fainted and was sick certain days;" so Gabriel reserved the remainder of the explanation till another time.

But in the ninth chapter we find Daniel earnestly seeking God with reference to his sanctuary. Verses 3, 17. He seems to have connected his own vision of the sanctuary with that of Jeroniah respecting the desolation of the temple at Jerusalem. Verse 2. His mind was upon the subject of time. He knew that the seventy years of Jeroniah's prophecy were just expiring, and he was intently studying that period, doubtless in connection with the period which Michael told him marked the cleansing of the sanctuary. It was necessary that he should now be made to understand the reckoning of the great period revealed to him in his vision of the eighth chapter.

And so while he was engaged in importunate prayer for the people of God and for his sanctuary, the angel Gabriel touches him, saying, "I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding." Verse 22.

And calling attention to the vision which he had been commanded to explain to him, he says: "Therefore understand the matter, and consider the vision." Verse 23, compared with chapter 8:16.

Thereupon he gives to Daniel the key to the reckoning of his great period. "Seventy weeks," says he, "are determined upon thy people and upon thy holy city," etc. Verse 24. The word determined does not express the full sense of the Hebrew word used by the angel. The word spoken by the angel was "cut off." The translators, not seeing the propriety of such a word in this place, for they did not note the fact that the ninth chapter is the key to the eighth, and so thought nothing of the long period in that chapter, could not understand how the seventy weeks could be said to be cut off, and so they departed from the literal meaning, and said that seventy weeks were "determined," that is, appointed, upon thy people and thy city. But with the prophet, the case was different. The angel had bidden him "consider the vision." And nothing was more natural when told that seventy weeks were cut off than that he should recur to the long period revealed to him without a date in that vision.

This shorter period being cut off from that long period gives us the key to the reckoning of that period from which it is cut off. When we ascertain the date of the seventy weeks, we have also ascertained the point from which the twenty-three hundred days are to be reckoned. And this date the angel next gives us.

"Know therefore," said Gabriel, "and understand that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem unto the Messiah the Prince shall be seven weeks and threescore and two weeks." Verse 25. The commandment for the restoration of Jerusalem, which city then lay in ruins, is the event which marks the commencement of this period. Cyrus gave the Jews permission to return and build the temple, but did not say anything respecting the city itself. Ezra 1. This decree Darius renewed when the Jews were hindered by their enemies, and he provided means for the expense of finishing the temple. Ezra 6. But Artaxerxes added to the work of Cyrus and Darius the full restoration of the city to its ancient privileges, and the re-establishment of the law of God as the law of the city; and he authorized the rebuilding of its walls. Ezra 7:11-26; 9:9. The commandment is the prophetic commandment of the God of Heaven (Isa. 44:26-28; 45:

13), and was carried into effect by Cyrus, Darius, and Artaxerxes, whose successive action is recognized as the legal establishment of that commandment by the authority of the Persian Empire. Ezra 6:14.

The decree of Artaxerxes, which marks the going forth of the commandment, was in the year B. C. 457 (see margin of Ezra 7), a date which has been established by the infallible testimony of many eclipses. Sixty-nine weeks, or 483 prophetic days, extend from this date to the Messiah, that is, to Christ. This period was fulfilled in exactly 483 years, which proves that we have made no mistake in reckoning Daniel's days as years, nor in fixing their date at B. C. 457.

It was in the fall of A. D. 27, just 483 full years from the going forth of the commandment in B. C. 457, that our Lord began his ministry. And this was the announcement which he made: "THE TIME IS FULFILLED." Mark 1:15. He did in these words refer to the sixty-nine weeks which marked the commencement of his ministry, and he announced the fulfilment of that period. For the period extends not simply to the birth of the Saviour, but to his anointing, which took place at his baptism, the word Messiah signifying the anointed one. See John 1:41; Acts 10:40, 41; Luke 3:21, 22; 4:14-21.

The sixty-nine weeks did, therefore, end with the beginning of our Lord's ministry in the fall of A. D. 27. One week of the seventy remained in which the covenant was to be confirmed with many. Verse 27. In the midst of this week, the sacrifice and oblation were to cease. This must signify that he should take these away by becoming himself the great sacrifice for sin which these typified. Heb. 10:1-13; Col. 2:14-17. And so it was that our Lord preached during three years and a half until the spring of A. D. 31, when he was crucified for the sins of men. This date, Dr. Hales, one of the most distinguished of chronologists, establishes by conclusive evidence. See his "Analysis of Chronology," second edition, vol. 1, pp. 94-100. There remained of the period which was specially assigned to the Jews three and a half prophetic days to complete the seventy weeks. The termination of this period in A. D. 34 marked the close of the exclusive work for the Jews, and the commencement of the work for the Gentiles in the conversion of Saul, who was at once commissioned to them. Acts 26:15-17. Here ended the seventy weeks which were cut off from the 2300 days. When these 490 days were finished, there remained 1810 days before the time should come for the cleansing of the sanctuary. As the 490 ended in the fall of A. D. 34, the remaining 1810 days ended in the fall of 1844.

In the great Advent movement under the preaching of William Miller and his fellow-laborers, the evidence was brought out with great clearness that the 2300 days would end in 1844. He believed that the sanctuary to be cleansed is our earth. He found no testimony in the Bible that the earth is the sanctuary, but he did find that the earth is to be purified by fire (2 Pet. 3:7-13), and so he inferred that this was the sanctuary which Michael said should be cleansed at the end of the 2300 days. He therefore concluded that this period was given to mark the time of Christ's coming. And as it was sufficiently evident from the several great lines of prophecy in Daniel and Revelation, and from the signs of the times, that the advent of Christ was at the doors, the time was preached in connection with the signs with very great solemnity and power.

But though it could be clearly shown that the 2300 days actually ended in 1844, the Advent people were doomed to a great disappointment. The ending of the 2300 days was not the time appointed of God for the coming of Christ, nor for the burning of the earth. But the great advent disappointment made it necessary that two important questions should be carefully studied.

1. What is the sanctuary of the Bible?

2. What is meant by the cleansing of the sanctuary?

The fact that the cleansing of the sanctuary is an event located in prophecy in the very conclusion of one of Daniel's great prophetic chains, shows that it is an event of deep interest to mankind. And as we live at a time when the 2300 days are in the past, we are most deeply concerned to understand the nature of the work called the cleansing of the sanctuary.

The Bible is full of the subject of the sanctuary, and we shall find it a theme of intense interest if we give it careful study. The Bible doctrine of the sanctuary is this: That the sanctuary is the place where the High Priest stands to offer blood before God for the sins of those who come to God through him. The central object in the sanctuary is the ark which contains the law of God that man has broken. The cover of this ark was called the mercy-seat, because mercy came to those who had broken the law beneath it, when the high priest sprinkled the blood of sin-offering upon it, provided they accompanied his work by repentance and faith. Last of all was the work of cleansing the sanctuary when the high priest by blood removed the sins of the people from the sanctuary into which they had been borne by the ministration of the priests before God. We now invite attention to the testimony of the Bible respecting the sanctuary.

1. There are two covenants; the first, or old covenant, extends from the time of Moses to the death of Christ; the second, or new covenant, begins at the death of Christ and extends forward to the consummation. Gal. 4:24-28; Heb. 8:7-13; Luke 22:20.

2. The first covenant had a sanctuary which was the tabernacle erected by Moses. Heb. 9:1-7.

3. The new covenant has a sanctuary which is the temple of God in Heaven, into which our High Priest entered when he ascended up on high. Heb. 8:1-5.

4. When Moses erected the tabernacle, he was commanded by God to make it according to the pattern which he showed to him; and this pattern must have been a representation of the temple of God in Heaven, for the earthly sanctuary is declared to be a pattern of the heavenly. Ex. 25:9, 40; Heb. 8:5; 9:23.

5. The earthly sanctuary consisted of two holy places; the first of which contained the table of shew-bread, the candlestick with seven lamps, and the golden altar of incense; and the second contained the ark of God's testament with the tables on which the ten commandments were written by the finger of God, and over which was the mercy-seat with the cherubim of glory overshadowing it. Ex. 40:18-23; Heb. 9:1-5.

6. The temple of God in Heaven is not only spoken of as the original from which the earthly sanctuary was copied (Heb. 9:23, 24; 1 Chron. 28:11, 12, 19), but it is also spoken of as consisting of holy places, in the plural. See Heb. 8:2; 9:8, 12, 24; 10:19, in each of which verses the original is holy places, in the plural, and they are so rendered in various translations.

The word sanctuary in the Bible, except in the few cases where it is used figuratively, refers always to the place where the high priest ministers before God for the sins of the people. It was first the tabernacle erected by Moses; then it was the temple built by Solomon, which was a more glorious structure than the tabernacle, but with the same two holy places; and when the typical sacrifices ended in the death of Christ, who is the true sin-offering, the earthly sanctuary, or holy places, ceased to be the center of God's worship, and Christ entered the temple in Heaven as a great High Priest—the minister of the sanctuary and of the true tabernacle which the Lord pitched, and not man. The temple of God in Heaven is the sanctuary from which the psalmist says the Lord beheld the earth (Ps. 102:19), and which Jeremiah speaks of as being where the throne of God is found. Jer. 17:12; Rev. 16:17.

The ministration in the earthly sanctuary could not actually take away sins, for it had only the blood of bulls and goats to offer. Heb. 10:4. It was ordained for the purpose of instructing men with reference to the work of Christ, and of encouraging them to look forward to his work. It is a shadow or representation of the service of Christ in the sanctuary of God in Heaven. Heb. 8:5; 10:1; Col. 2:17. It took one year to complete the round of service in the earthly sanctuary, at the end of which the cleansing of the sanctuary took place. The round of service was repeated each year, even as a shadow is renewed each day. But the ministration of Christ which casts this shadow fills out each part of the work once for all, and is not repeated. We shall therefore find the study of the service in the earthly sanctuary full of instruction as to the work of Christ in the sanctuary above.

The ministration in the first apartment occupied the entire year, with the exception of one day, which was devoted to work in the second apartment, or most holy place, to close up the work which had been wrought in the first apartment. The work in the first apartment was on this wise: When a man repented of his sin he brought a sin-offering to the priest to the door of the sanctuary. Then he confessed his sin to the priest, and put his hand upon the head of his offering to indicate the transfer of the guilt from himself to his offering. Then the victim was slain because of that guilt thus transferred to it, and the blood, representing the life of the victim, was taken by the priest and carried into the sanctuary and sprinkled there before God. This act was the offering of the life of an innocent victim in the place of the life of him who had broken the law of God, and it was the transference of that man's guilt from himself to the sanctuary of God. See Lev. 4 and the parallel scriptures. This was the most important feature of the work in the first apartment, and by it the guilt of the penitents was transferred from themselves to the tabernacle.

On the tenth day of the seventh month, which was called the day of atonement, the ministration was transferred to the second apartment, or most holy place. Lev. 16. By God's direction, the high priest on this day caused two goats to be brought to the door of the sanctuary. On these he was to cast lots. One was for the Lord, the other was for Azazel. Then he slew the goat upon which the Lord's lot fell, and took his blood to present it before God as a sin-offering in the most holy place, sprinkling it upon the mercy-seat. He did this for two purposes: 1. To make atonement for the people. 2. To cleanse the sanctuary by removing from it the sins of the people of God. Lev. 16:15-19.

The sanctuary being cleansed, the high priest comes out of the building, and having caused the other goat to be brought, which was for Azazel, he lays both his hands upon his head, and confesses over him all the transgressions of the children of Israel in all their sins. These he puts upon the head of the goat and sends him away by the hand of a fit man into the wilderness. And it is said that "the goat shall bear upon him all their iniquities unto a land not inhabited." Verses 20-22.

The work of the high priest on this great day of atonement was for the purpose of completing the work which had been partially accomplished in the first apartment. By the work in that apartment, the sins had been transferred to the sanctuary through the blood of sin-offering. By the work in the second apartment, the sanctuary is cleansed and the sins of the people of God blotted out. Such was the work in the earthly sanctuary, and such was the cleansing of the sanctuary as set forth in the example and shadow of heavenly things.

The earthly sanctuary was only made as the pattern of the sanctuary in Heaven. Heb. 8 and 9. Itself and its services pertained only to the first covenant. Heb. 9:1. With the introduction of the new covenant came the real sanctuary of God, the tabernacle which the Lord pitched, and not man. Heb. 8:1, 2. While the first tabernacle stood, it signified that the way into the holy places of the heavenly temple was not opened. Heb. 9:8. But when our Lord ascended on high, he became a great High Priest, and by his own blood he entered the temple of God. Verses 11, 12. The order of his ministration is clearly indicated by the service in the two apartments of the earthly sanctuary. Heb. 8:5; 9:8-12; 10:1. And we are able to trace the ministration of Christ in these two apartments of the temple above in the New Testament.

Thus, when John looked into the temple of God in Heaven, he saw the Father sitting upon the throne, and before the throne were seven lamps burning. Rev. 4. In this place also he saw the Son of God. Rev. 5. Before the throne also stood the golden altar of incense. Rev. 8:3. These things do clearly mark the first apartment of the heavenly sanctuary, and show that this was the place where our Lord began his ministration as our High Priest.

But there is a time when his ministration is to be within the second apartment. This is marked in John's statement of the events under the seventh trumpet: "And the temple of God was opened in Heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament." Rev. 11:19. The ark marks the second apartment as the seven lamps and the golden altar of incense do the first. The second apartment is therefore opened under the seventh angel, and the days (or years) at the beginning of his voice constitute the period in which the mystery of God or work of the gospel for fallen man is finished. Rev. 10:7; Eph. 3:4-6. It is certain, therefore, that as there was a time each year devoted to the finishing up of the round of service in "the example and shadow of heavenly things" so is there such a period in the conclusion of Christ's ministration, when once for all our High Priest finishes his work of priesthood; and as this work in the former dispensation took place in the second apartment, so also under the new covenant does this work find its accomplishment within the second vail by the ark of the ten commandments. The work in the second apartment of the earthly sanctuary does not therefore represent the work of the whole gospel dispensation, but only of that part of it devoted to the finishing of the mystery of God.

The work within the second apartment was for the cleansing of the sanctuary, and this was performed by the high priest with blood, and when it was accomplished the sins of the people were blotted out. It was, therefore, an event of the greatest importance to the people of God. The heavenly sanctuary is to be cleansed, and for the same reason that the earthly sanctuary was cleansed. So Paul testifies in Heb. 9:23. The same word which Paul uses to express the purification in this text is used in the Septuagint version of Daniel 8:14, for cleansing. The prophecy of Daniel shows us that the sanctuary of God is cleansed in the last days of the new covenant dispensation. The sanctuary of the new covenant is in Heaven. Heb. 8:1, 2. This heavenly sanctuary is to be cleansed, for Paul affirms it. Heb. 9:23. The time marked for its cleansing is that fixed by John for the opening of the temple in Heaven and for the finishing of the mystery of God. Rev. 11:19; 10:7. The cleansing of the sanctuary is the removal from it of the sins of the people of God that had been borne into it by the High Priest, and their blotting out from the record that stands against the saints, preparatory to their being placed upon the head of the scape-goat, or Azazel.

Now this Azazel, as the word is in the original, or scape-goat, as some translations render it, can be no other than Satan. For the being that receives the sins of the righteous after the High Priest has finished his work in the sanctuary, can be no other than Satan, the author of sin. The word Azazel was understood by the ancient people of God to mean Satan. When, therefore, the goat was sent into a land not inhabited, it represents the fact that Satan at the conclusion of Christ's work as priest shall be cast into the bottomless pit. Rev. 20.

The treading under foot of the sanctuary is not performed by literally trampling it in the dust. It is trodden under foot in the same manner that men are represented as treading under foot the Son of God who ministers in that sanctuary. Heb. 10:29.

But does Daniel's vision really take in the heavenly sanctuary? We know that the earthly sanctuary as understood by him was the temple of God. Dan. 9:17, 26. His view was in exact harmony with that of Paul in Heb. 9:1-5. And ought we not to understand that the entire 2300 days belong to the temple in old Jerusalem? Such is the view taken by some, and yet it is not at all in harmony with the statement of Gabriel. The entire period of 2300 days does not belong to old Jerusalem; for Gabriel said, "Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people, and upon thy holy city." The words literally translated from the Hebrew are, "Seventy weeks are cut off upon thy people, and upon thy holy city." Dan. 9:24. So we have the highest authority for saying that only 490 of the 2300 days pertain to the earthly sanctuary. And it is worthy of notice that the actual transition from the earthly sanctuary to that of the new covenant, which is the heavenly, is in close proximity to the end of the 490 days.

And this is not all. Gabriel introduces the heavenly sanctuary itself, for the last event mentioned under the seventy weeks is the anointing of the most holy. In the Hebrew, this is the anointing of the holy of holies. This cannot mean Christ, but must mean the sanctuary of God. It cannot mean the earthly sanctuary, for that was left of God at this very time (Matt. 23:38), and was with all the typical system here set aside. The anointing of the sanctuary was that which prepared the way for the ministration therein. Lev. 8:10. The ministration in the earthly sanctuary was now finished, and that in the heavenly was about to commence. The sanctuary, therefore, which at this time was anointed was that which at this very point took the place of the earthly sanctuary. It was the temple of God in Heaven which Gabriel thus brings to Daniel's view. The 2300 days do, therefore, embrace the closing period of the earthly sanctuary and the entire history of the ministration in the sanctuary of the new covenant. They end in the last days of the new covenant dispensation, and the cleansing of the sanctuary is the consummation of the work of our great High Priest therein.

The nature of that work we will now briefly indicate. The work of the judgment is divided into two parts. The first part is the investigative judgment, which takes place in the heavenly sanctuary, God the Father sitting in judgment. The second part is the execution of the judgment, and is committed wholly to Christ, who comes to our earth to accomplish this work John 5:22-27; Jude 14, 15. It is while the investigative judgment is in session that the cleansing of the sanctuary takes place. Or, to speak more accurately, the cleansing of the sanctuary is identical with the work of the investigative judgment.

This part of the judgment is described in Daniel 7:9-14. God the Father sits upon the throne of judgment. Those who stand before the Father are the angels. Compare Rev. 5:11. It is not upon earth, for the Father does not come to our earth. It is before the second advent of Christ, for Christ comes to our earth as a king sitting upon his own throne (Matt. 25:31, 34; Luke 19:12, 15; 2 Tim. 4:1), but this tribunal of the Father is the very place where he is crowned king. Dan. 7:13, 14. It is the time and place where our Lord concludes his priestly office, and must, therefore, be in the second apartment of the sanctuary above. Rev. 10:7; 11:15, 18, 19.

When the Saviour comes, he gives immortality to the righteous dead. 1 Cor. 15:23, 51-53; 1 Thess. 4:15-17. The rest of the dead are left until the resurrection of the unjust. Rev. 20. But those who are thus made immortal were previously accounted worthy of that great salvation. Luke 20:35. There can be no examination afterward to ascertain whether they shall be saved or lost, for they are put in possession of eternal life at the moment when the trumpet sounds. And such, also, is the case with the living righteous. They are changed to immortality in the same moment with the dead in Christ. 1 Thess. 4:15-17. These are previously judged worthy of this great salvation (Luke 21:36), and can never afterward be subjected to trial for the determination of this point. The decision who shall have eternal life has, therefore, been made before Christ descends to execute the judgment.

The books are examined before the deliverance of the saints. Dan. 12:1. The opening of the books is described in Dan. 7:9, 10. The book of life shows who have ever set out in the service of God. Luke 10:20; Phil. 4:3. The book of God's remembrance shows the record of their faithfulness in his cause, and whether they have made clean work in overcoming. Mal. 3:16. Other books contain the record of men's evil deeds. Rev. 20:12, 13.

As the object of this final work in the sanctuary is to determine who are worthy of everlasting life, no cases will come before this tribunal except those who have had their names entered in the book of life. All others are left out of this investigation as having never become partakers in Christ's atoning work. The investigation will determine who have overcome their sins; and these will have their sins blotted from the record, and their names retained in the book of life. It will also determine who have not overcome and these will have their names blotted from the book of life, Rev. 3:5, and their sins will be retained in the record, to be visited with retribution in the resurrection to damnation.

The righteous need a high priest until their sins are blotted out. They cannot be blotted out till the Judgment; for God has decreed to bring every work into judgment whether good or evil. Eccl. 12:13, 14; 3:17. He certainly cannot bring any record into judgment after he has blotted it out. The blotting out is therefore the last act of our High Priest, and is done when the Father has accounted each person worthy of this; which will only be when the High Priest has shown from the record in the book of God's remembrance that he has actually overcome. The blotting out of sins (Acts 3:19) is therefore the great work which brings our Lord's priesthood to a conclusion. As this is an individual work, it evidently begins with the first generation of the righteous, and so comes down to the last, that is, to those who are alive at the coming of Christ. It is the time of the dead that they should be judged. Rev. 11:18, 19. The first angel gives notice to the inhabitants of the earth that the hour of God's judgment has come. Rev. 14:6, 7. The living are still in probation when this solemn announcement is made to mankind.

The proclamation of the third angel, which is made while Christ is closing up his work in the sanctuary, is designed to prepare the living for the decision of the Judgment. When the cases of the living are reached, probation closes up forever. The decree goes forth from the throne of God, "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still; . . . and he that is holy, let him be holy still." Rev. 22:11. The sins of the overcomers being blotted out, and the sanctuary cleansed, the Son of God is no longer needed as a great High Priest. He therefore ceases from that office forever and becomes a king for the deliverance and glorification of his people, and for the destruction of all transgressors. Dan. 7:13, 14. Satan, the author of sin, receives its dreadful burden when the work in the sanctuary is closed and will bear it with him to the lake of fire.

It is of infinite consequence to us who live in the time when Christ is closing up his priesthood, that we understand the work which he is performing, and that we so walk in the light as to share in his great salvation.

The Sanctuary.

A CONSIDERABLE period has elapsed since I received a copy of Bro. Smith's volume entitled, "The Sanctuary." This is the first moment that I have seen in which to speak a word concerning this book. Every person who has studied the doctrines which distinguish us as a people knows well that the subject of the Sanctuary is the central doctrine in our system. Here we see the true relation between the law and the gospel; here we find the law of God; here also the mercy-seat; here is represented the sacrificial death of Christ, and here his intercession for us in the presence of his Father, before the law of God, which we have broken. Here also is the blotting out of sins, the Judgment and acquittal of the just, and the final return of the sins of the just upon the head of Satan. The subject is worthy of a noble volume, and this volume is well worthy of the subject. When one of the adversaries of Galileo denied the existence of the moons of Jupiter, the astronomer invited him to look through his telescope and see them for himself. His adversary refused, saying, "How then could I afterwards deny their existence?" It seems to me that all our adversaries would be compelled, in like manner, to yield their opposition if they would read this book.

J. N. ANDREWS.

DEAR BROTHERS AND SISTERS:—In regard to the past, I would say, that though quite young, I was in the message of 1843-44, and have ever believed that they meant something. In all the bustling and dividing which followed the passing of that time, I gave but little attention to the subject till after the Washington N. H., conference last Fall. Since then an examination of the arguments of our position has fully decided me to go with the remnant, who keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus. We now see where we are, and O the beauty and the harmony of God's Word! Therefore I look into our position, the clearer, more beautiful, and harmonious it grows, and not the least the past. We all now see the cause of our disappointment,—why the Lord did not come as we expected,—the work was not accomplished, the picture was incomplete, the Sanctuary was yet to be cleansed, and the third messenger give his warning.

I know that some ridicule the idea of a heavenly Sanctuary, &c., claiming that the earth, or the land of Palestine is the Sanctuary. But Moses being about to build a Sanctuary, was admonished of God to make all things according to the pattern showed him in the Mount, [Ex. xxv, 8, 40; Heb. viii, 8,] which Paul says, [Heb. ix, 24,] were figures of the true. Now was the earth or the land of Palestine shown Moses for a pattern in the Mount? Or was the Sanctuary which Moses built, a figure of the earth or Palestine? Then, certainly, they are not the true Sanctuary of which that of Moses was a pattern. Now we have such an high Priest  in the heavens, a minister of the Sanctuary, and of the true Tabernacle which the Lord pitched and not man, [Heb. viii, 1, 2,] our mediator [1 Tim. ii, 5] and a propitiation for our sins.—1 John ii, 2. But we very much fear that those who look to the land of Palestine for the Sanctuary with no better mediator than can there be found, will come off sadly as a statement when Jesus leaves the Most Holy Place.

The work is speedily and resolutely moving on; the last link in the chain, the third angel's message, is being fast developed—the third and last cry is being taken to warn the world of its condition, and the harvest is fast ripening for the sheaf of Almighty God. I rejoice that at this critical time, when the Arch-enemy of mankind is abroad in the field with all his forces, to blind and deceive the nations, and making his last, desperate effort to hold them in error, till the unchangeable sentence is passed, "He that is filthy let him be filthy still," I was brought to see the glorious light of truth, and turn away from polluting the Sabbath of the Lord, which a corrupt church and a wicked world are trampling under foot.

Truth seems clustering more thickly around us, and shining with a clearer light, as we approach the end; and if any have doubts in regard to what is to come, let them look to the past, and take that as a guaranty for the future; there we see chains of prophecy commenced, and now in the progress of fulfillment, and we have the sure Word of God where they will terminate, and it seems to me that one may so reasonably shut his eyes at noon-day, and deny that there is a sun in heaven, as to deny them. That the days of time are numbered and almost finished is written out in unerring characters, all about us. The sun, moon, and stars have proclaimed it; the political agitation of the world at the present moment, proclaims it,—and the moans and disappements of the last days, proclaim it. Enough has been given to awake people to their situation, and there are now left them but two alternatives; either to arouse themselves and give heed to the third angel's message, and refuse the mark of the beast, or be aroused by the wrath of God, to drink the unmingled cup of his displeasure; and that, soon; "for yet a little while, and he that shall come, will come, and will not tarry."

Yours in that "little while,"
Rochester, June, 1853.

T. SMITH.

THE SANCTUARY.

BY ISAIAH SMITH.

WHAT is that proverb that ye have in the land of Israel, saying, The days are prolonged, and every vision faileth? Thus saith the Lord God, I will make this proverb to cease. . . . The days are at hand and the effect of every vision. Eze. xii, 22, 23.

The history of the Advent movement as it stands in the past is well understood. All are acquainted with the expectations of those who were looking for the Lord at the end of the 2300 days, and their grievous disappointment at the passing of that time in 1844. What was the cause of that disappointment? Is the great question which has arisen in the minds of all those who were interested in the Advent faith. And there have been found multitudes, who, not willing to wait patiently the solution of the mystery, not content to rest till God should prove his "own interpreter," and make all plain, have been ready to deny the hand of God in their past experience, and exclaim, The days are prolonged and every vision faileth. But there are others who have lived on, unwilling to deny the Divine Agency in the past movement, in whose minds this question may even yet remain unanswered; who see as yet no good reason, why, at that time they did not realize their hope. Let us then examine, briefly, the reasons on which those hopes were based.

It is well known that the main pillar on which rested the proclamation of time, was the great prophetic chain of 2300 days, given to the Prophet, in Dan. viii. In the vision of that chapter, four things were presented to the Prophet: the ram, the he goat, the little horn, and the period of 2300 days. Daniel sought for the meaning of the vision, and Gabriel was commanded to make him understand it. Verses 15, 16. He therefore proceeds to explain the symbols of the ram, the goat and little horn, in plain terms which none could fail to understand; yet, says Daniel, at the end of the chapter, I was astonished at the vision, and none understood it. There was only one point which the Angel had omitted to mention; and that was, Time; hence that was what troubled Daniel, and what none understood. But Gabriel must explain this also; for he had received his commission, Make this man to understand the vision; and he must fulfill it. Therefore he says in chap. ix, 22, I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding. . . . Understand the matter and consider the vision. He then commences his explanation upon the very point which he omitted in chap. viii; namely, Time. Seventy weeks, said the Angel, are determined, (literally, cut off—Hebraists all admit that the word rendered determined signifies cut off,) upon thy people and upon thy holy city, &c. Verses 25-27. Know therefore and understand that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem, unto the Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks and three score and two weeks: the street shall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times. And after threescore and two weeks (from the seven weeks, allowed for the building of Jerusalem) shall Messiah be cut off, but not for himself. . . . And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week: and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease, &c.

The first question which arises, is, Are the seventy weeks a part of the 2300 days? We learn that they are from the following facts: 1. The same person whom Daniel saw at the beginning, appears the second time to give him understanding, and refers back to the vision, which can be none other than that of chap. viii. 2. He explains the very point which he there omitted; namely, Time. 3. He informs us that seventy weeks are cut off; and there is no period given from which they can be taken, but the 2300 days. Hence it follows that the seventy weeks are the first 490 days of the 2300, and the two periods commence together. The commencement of the seventy weeks, we are told by the Angel, is from the going forth of a commandment to restore and build Jerusalem; therefore that is the starting point for the 2300 days. But when did the commandment go forth? In Ez. vii, we find a commission to him from king Artaxerxes, and a copy of the letter commencing with these words: "Artaxerxes, king of kings, unto Ezra the priest, a scribe of the law of the God of heaven, . . . I make a decree," &c. This decree gave permission to all the people of Israel of their own free will to go up to Jerusalem, and commissioned Ezra to restore the worship of God, and the services of the temple, and to set magistrates and judges who should judge all the people beyond the river, and execute judgment, whether unto death, or to banishment or to confiscation of goods, or to imprisonment. This was in the 7th of Artaxerxes. Verse 8. The 7th of Artaxerxes, as is clearly established, was A. D. 457. For full and explicit testimony on these points, the reader is referred to a work on the Sanctuary and 2300 days, by J. N. Andrews. See also Blin's Analysis of Sacred Chronology.

We have here found a decree which went forth 457 B. C.; but is it the one referred to in Dan. ix. We will test it by the prophecy Unto the Messiah the Prince, says the prediction, shall be seven weeks and threescore and two weeks—69 weeks or 483 days. Messiah the Prince is Jesus Christ. reckoning from 457 B. C., 483 years bring us to A. D. 27, where we find Christ commencing his public ministry, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying, "The time is fulfilled." No time can here be referred to, but the 69 weeks which were then fulfilled. This fixes the fact that the days are prophetic; that is, a day for a year. Num. xiv. 34; Eze. iv, 6. We also see that it harmonizes perfectly with the conditions of the prophecy. But further. He was to confirm the covenant with many for one week. (Seven years.) This of course was the last or seventieth week. In the midst (or middle) of this week he was to cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease. The sacrifice and oblation were Jewish ordinances connected with that typical dispensation. Christ did cause them virtually to cease at his crucifixion; for he was their antitype. But was the crucifixion in the midst of the week? We find by a mass of testimony that it took place in the Spring of A. D. 31; and this is just one half of a week or three and a half years from the Autumn of A. D. 27, where consequently the 69 weeks ended and the 70th commenced. Here in the Spring of A. D. 31, the cross is immovably fixed. Three and a half years more remain, the last half of the week, for confirming the covenant; which was done by the apostles—those who heard him. Heb. ii, 3.

From the harmony of these applications, we conclude that we have found the true starting point. Let us then take a brief retrospect, and see how we stand. From that decree we trace down through the course of time 483 years, which were to extend to the Messiah the Prince, and we find the Messiah the Prince himself proclaiming, "The time is fulfilled." Pass on three and a half years more to the midst of that week, and behold the cross on Calvary. As the Angel had predicted, the sacrifice and oblation are made to cease; for the great sacrifice, their antitype is offered up: the Messiah is cut off, but not for himself. Three and a half years more pass away, and the Jews have formally rejected Christ and Christianity by persecuting his disciples, the apostles have turned to the Gentiles, [Acts xiii, 46,] the seventy weeks allotted to the Jews and Jerusalem have ended; and we find ourselves in the Autumn of A. D. 34. Thus is the prophecy and the vision of the 2300 days sealed up or made sure; [Dan. ix, 24,] and thus is given into our hand the great key by which to unlock the whole.

It is contended by some that the permission given to Nehemiah, in the 20th of Artaxerxes is the decree from which to reckon. To this view, there are, we think, some serious objections. First, we find no privileges granted to Nehemiah or any one since the captivity, so ample as those to Ezra. Second, is it not evident from the first two chapters of Nehemiah that it was the work of Ezra which he went up to repair? It appears that certain men of Judah came of whom he made inquiries "concerning the Jews that had escaped, which were left of the captivity, and concerning Jerusalem." And they said unto him, "The remnant that are left of the captivity there in the province are in great affliction and reproach: the wall of Jerusalem also is broken down and the gates thereof are burned with fire." Why was the wall broken down and the gates burned with fire? The facts are these: From the time that Ezra went up, to the last act of Nehemiah in obliging the Jews to put away their strange wives, the work met with continued opposition from the Samaritans; and thus was the prediction fulfilled, "The street shall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times." Would it not be improper to refer the language of Nehemiah to the destruction of the city by Nebuchadnezzar, when we recollect that he reduced it to ruins 144 years previous to that time?

But there is another view presented by some, which is this: that the wall was not actually built till Nehemiah went up; consequently to him must have been given the decree for the building of Jerusalem. Whether or not the building of the wall was delayed till that time, we shall not now pretend to say, but contend that even if this was the case it affords no argument in favor of the commission to Nehemiah being the decree from which to reckon. The decree from which the seventy weeks were to be dated, not only gave authority for constructing what is called the wall, but for restoring as well as rebuilding the city. Any one must see that Jerusalem is restored when the people return there, re-establish their city polity, and recommence their regular offerings and the observance of their daily worship. For this restoration of Jerusalem the decree granted to Ezra made ample provision. The power of Ezra being unlimited by it, he was empowered to proceed at any time with its construction. And even if there was a delay of thirteen years in the erection of the wall, it is no argument against the validity of the decree which authorized it; for it does not affirm that the wall shall be built in troublous times, as soon as the decree should be given for its construction. All it affirms is, that there would be troublous times when it should be built.

Was any decree granted to Nehemiah? We find no evidence of any. Says Nehemiah, (ii, 6,) "It pleased the king to send me," &c. There is no evidence that this permission was any thing but verbal. When he had obtained the king's consent, he requested letters from the king to the governors beyond the river, for the means of conveyance to Jerusalem, and one to the keepers of king's forest for timber. A decree would of course have been addressed to him, as was the case with Ezra; but those letters were not so addressed: they were directed to the king's subordinates; they are nowhere called decrees; and if they were they would constitute a series of decrees, and not one decree, as the prophecy contemplated. Of so little importance were they considered by the Holy Spirit, that the inspired penman has preserved no copy of them, but simply stated their import. In contrast with these, the decree to Ezra was one decree, and was expressly called a decree. It was directed, not to the king's subordinates, but to Ezra himself; and a full copy of it has come down to the present time.

There is no evidence of such a decree ever being addressed to Nehemiah. The decree having been given to Ezra, all that Nehemiah needed was simply permission to go up and complete what Ezra had begun. Thus he might under the same decree by subsequent permission, go up and build the wall.

Third, reckoning from Nehemiah's commission, in the 20th of Artaxerxes, s. c. 445-4, and 483 years would expire, A. D. 39-40. There were to extend to the Messiah the Prince. But we find upon examination that the Messiah was revealed thirteen years before; that he had accomplished the work given him to do, had been offered upon the cross, had risen from the tomb and ascended into heaven long before those years expired, which, according to this view, could extend only to his manifestation. That cannot therefore be the date from which to reckon. The baptism of Christ, A. D. 27, and his crucifixion, A. D. 31, are dates which are clearly settled. They are "established by a mass of testimony which cannot be easily invalidated." Now these must be proved to be incorrect, or the world must admit that there can be no other date for the going forth of the commandment to restore Jerusalem, than s. c. 457. It is of no use for men to turn the declarations of prophecy into a lie, and wrest the Scriptures for the sake of a human theory.

We see then by all just and true reckoning that the first 400 years of the 2300, terminated in the Autumn of A. D. 34. Hence it is an easy matter to find the termination of the whole period. There yet remain 1810, which added to A. D. 34, bring us to the Autumn of A. D. 1844.

There was therefore no discrepancy in the reckoning of time. The days did end, as we then believed they would, in 1844. The promise was that then should the Sanctuary be cleansed. We believed that the earth was the Sanctuary, that it would be cleansed by fire at the revelation of the Lord Jesus; but the Lord did not come, the earth was not burned, and the days ended. Now what is the matter? Has God's Word failed that we did not realize our hope? Has he proved slack concerning his promises? Has he told us what to expect, and then failed to perform it? Before we adopt this conclusion, let us pursue our investigation a little further. The subject of Time being settled, there is left but one more point for consideration; and that is, the Sanctuary. Since the reckoning of time was correct, if an explanation of our disappointment can be found, it must be here. Let us then inquire, What is the Sanctuary? What is the nature of its cleansing, and how is it to be accomplished?

THE SANCTUARY.

BY DEIAN SMITH.

1. WHAT IS THE SANCTUARY?—Our only aim being Bible truth, the Bible shall answer our inquiry. In the book of Exodus, we find our instructions respecting what is called the sanctuary. In chapter xxiv, we learn that Moses went into the cloud that covered Mount Sinai, while the glory of the Lord rested upon it; and Moses was in the Mount forty days and forty nights. Here the Lord gave him directions in regard to building the sanctuary. Hence the sanctuary is something to be built. This we may learn from chapter xxv. "And the Lord spake unto Moses saying, Speak unto the children of Israel, . . . and let them make me a sanctuary; that I may dwell among them. According to all that I show thee, after the pattern of the tabernacle, and the pattern of all the instruments thereof, even so shall ye make it." The sanctuary, then, was the habitation of God. Let us now examine the plan of it, and the instruments thereof, which were made according to the pattern shown Moses in the mount. In chapter xxxvi, we find these facts: that the tabernacle consisted of upright boards set in sockets of silver; each board was ten cubits long and a cubit and a half wide; on the north side, and on the south side, were twenty boards each; hence the tabernacle was thirty cubits in length, (or about 55 feet, a cubit being nearly 22 inches,) ten cubits, about 18 feet, in height, and about the same width. All these boards were overlaid with gold; and five bars, (also overlaid with gold,) running the length of the sides of the building, through golden rings fixed in these boards, joined them all together. The whole structure, then, had the appearance of being solid gold. The tabernacle had four coverings; and in it was hung up a veil, of blue and purple and scarlet and fine twined linen, of cunning work, which divided between the holy place, and the most holy; and at the east end there was also another veil, or hanging which was called the door of the tent or tabernacle.

The instruments or vessels of the sanctuary which were made according to their patterns, were these: 1. The ark; which was a small chest of wood overlaid with pure gold within and without. Its length was two cubits and a half, and a cubit and a half the height and the breadth of it. This was to contain God's testimony, or testament: the ten commandments written on two tables of stone. Ex. xxv, 10-17. Its position in the sanctuary was within the second veil, in the most holy place. Ex. xxvi, 33, 34. 2. The mercy-seat; which was the cover of the ark. On either end of this stood a cherub; and the cherubim stretched forth their wings on high, covering the mercy-seat; and their faces were one towards the other. The mercy-seat and the cherubim were one solid work of beaten gold. Ex. xxv, 17-23. 3. The table of show-bread. This was about three and a half feet in length, two and a half feet in height and two in width: it was for the purpose of keeping show-bread always before the Lord: [verse 23-31:] it was placed in the first apartment of the sanctuary, or holy place. Ex. xxvi, 35. 4. The golden candlestick. This was solid work of beaten gold, about the weight of a talent: it contained seven lamps: its place was in the first apartment. Ex. xxvi, 35. 5. The altar of incense. This was about two feet square, and three and one half in height: it was overlaid with gold, and was used for the purpose of burning incense before the Lord: its position was before the veil in the holy place. Ex. xxx, 1-7. 6. The golden censor, was used by the priests to burn incense before the Lord. Lev. xvi, 12. 7. The altar of burnt offering. Ex. xxvii, 1-8. This altar was placed without the door of the tabernacle: [chap. xl, 6:] it was about nine feet square, and 5½ feet in height: it was overlaid with brass, and was used for the purpose of offering up sacrifices to God. 8. The brazen laver; which was a vessel containing water for the use of the priests. Verse 7. Around the whole was then reared the court of the tabernacle.

The construction of the sanctuary, with all its parts is particularly described in Exodus, chapters xxxvi-xxxix. The building with all the instruments thereof is now complete: the tabernacle overlaid with gold, with its richly wrought coverings; and within that tabernacle the veil dividing between the holy and most holy place; within the veil the ark containing God's testimony or ten commandments, called the ark of his testament, and thereon the mercy-seat, with its cherubim of beaten gold; in the holy place the golden altar of incense, the golden candlestick with its seven lamps, and the table of show-bread;—this is the building which God commanded to be erected that he might dwell among his people: this was his habitation: this was his sanctuary. "Then a cloud covered the tent of the congregation, and the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle." Ex. xl, 34. God had now taken possession of his dwelling.

The history of this building may be traced through the period of the children of Israel's sojourn in the wilderness, till they carried it with them into the promised land, and it was set up at Shiloh. Josh. xviii, 1. It is called the Lord's tabernacle; [xxii, 10:] the sanctuary of the Lord; [xxiv, 20:] the house of God; [Jud. xviii, 31:] the temple of the Lord; [1 Sam. i, 9; iii, 3:] and God calls it "my habitation, or tabernacle, margin. 1 Sam. ii, 32. This was at length succeeded by the temple erected by Solomon, which differed from the tabernacle principally in being an enlargement of that plan, and in being a permanent instead of a temporary building. Everything in the temple being finished, we read that "they brought up the ark of the Lord, and the tabernacle of the congregation, and all the holy vessels that were in the tabernacle, even those did the priests and the Levites bring up." "And the priests brought in the ark of the covenant of the Lord unto his place, into the oracle of the house, to the most holy place, even under the wings of the cherubims." 1 Kings viii, 4, 6. "And it came to pass when the priests were come out of the holy place, that the cloud filled the house of the Lord." Verse 10. Thus the Lord took possession of the temple, and this thenceforward was the sanctuary. This was destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar and suffered to remain desolate through the 70 years' captivity. It was afterwards rebuilt by Zerubbabel; and finally destroyed by Titus in A. D. 70. Since then, it has never been rebuilt; consequently since that period there has been no sanctuary on this earth. But it must somewhere be in existence; for at the end of the 2300 days it is to be cleansed; and these days as we have already seen could not terminate earlier than A. D. 1844. Where then shall we now look for the sanctuary?

The tabernacle and instruments, as we have seen, were made according to the pattern shown Moses in the mount. By this we learn that there is a pattern somewhere, a great original from which they were made. But where shall we find this pattern? God has not left us in darkness on this point. In the year A. D. 96, heaven was opened to the beloved disciple, in vision, on the isle of Patmos. Rev. iv. And he looked and behold a door was opened in heaven, and a throne was set in heaven, and one sat on the throne. And there were seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, which are the seven spirits of God. Recollect the golden candlestick with its seven lamps. We have now found something that it resembles; something that may answer for its pattern.

But still further in chap. viii, 3, he sees an angel with a golden censer, and much incense was given to him that he should offer it with the prayers of the saints upon the golden altar which was before the throne. Then we have here found something that may be a pattern of the golden altar of incense; and we would bear in mind that the golden candlestick and altar of incense were placed by the express direction of God in the first apartment of the sanctuary, in accordance with the pattern; and we are now looking into the temple in heaven.

But yet another point is shown us in this revelation to St. John. In chapter xi, 15, 16, where we are carried down in the course of events, to the sounding of the seventh angel, he says: And the temple of God was opened in heaven and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament. We recollect the ark, and also its position in the most holy place in the tabernacle built by Moses. Hence we should conclude that the patterns of the earthly things, the tabernacle and its appendages, were found in heaven; and on this point we are forever established by the direct testimony given by Paul. He plainly states, [Heb. ix, 24,] that "Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands which are the figures of the true," and in the verse above he calls them (the holy places made with hands) the patterns of the things in the heavens; and in chap. viii, 6, he says: "Who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things, as Moses was admonished of God when he was about to make the tabernacle: for so (saith he) that thou make all things according to the pattern showed to thee in the mount."

Now we've found the pattern for which we were seeking, the great original of the earthly sanctuary. We have found that it is in heaven the "True Tabernacle which the Lord pitched and not man," and contains two holy places as the earthly building, its true copy, teaches. This Jesus calls "my Father's house." John xiv, 2. David, Habakkuk and John call it "the temple of God in heaven." Ps. xi, 4; Hnh. ii, 20; Rev. xi, 19. It is also called God's holy habitation; [Zech. ii, 13; Jer. xxv, 30;] and Paul speaks of it as the "greater and more perfect tabernacle." Heb. ix, 11. A glorious high throne from the beginning in the place of our Sanctuary, says Jeremiah; [xvii, 12;] and the Psalmist adds, "For he hath looked down from the height of his Sanctuary: from heaven did the Lord behold the earth." Ps. cii, 19.

Thus definitely in our first inquiry answered, and we are plainly told what constitutes the Sanctuary. It includes, first, the tabernacle erected by man, embracing the tabernacle of Moses, the temple of Solomon, and the temple of Zerubbabel, and, second, the great original in heaven, the True Tabernacle which the Lord pitched and not man. This point being settled, we are led to inquire,

2. How is the SANCTUARY CLEANSED? or, What is the nature of its cleansing, and how is it accomplished? With the earthly sanctuary there was connected a ministration, which Paul says served unto the example and shadow of heavenly things. By the ministration therefore of the earthly sanctuary, is shadowed forth the ministration of the heavenly Sanctuary. And when we see the work that was carried on on earth, we may understand the work that is carried on in heaven. We will then notice, briefly,

The Ministration and Cleansing of the earthly sanctuary. This ministration was accomplished by the Levitical order of priest-hood, and consisted of two great divisions: the daily ministration in the holy place, and the work in the most holy place at the end of the year. The daily ministration embraced the regular morning and evening burnt-offering, [Ex. xxix, 38-43,] the burning of sweet incense on the golden altar, every morning when the high priest dressed the lamps, and every evening when he lighted them; [Ex. xxx,] also, the additional work appointed for the Sabbaths of the Lord, and the annual sabbaths, new moons and feasts, [Num. xxviii, xxix,] besides the particular work to be accomplished for individuals as they should present their offerings throughout the year.

This latter was an important part of the service and was performed as follows: Whoever had sinned brought his victim, that was to be offered up for him, to the door of the tabernacle. He then laid his hand upon the head of the victim which signified that his sin was transferred to it; it was then slain on account of that transgression, and the blood borne in by the priest and sprinkled in the sanctuary. Lev. i, iii; iv. Thus the sin of the individual was transferred first to the victim, and then through his blood to the sanctuary itself.

This ministration went on continually through the year; and so through the sacrifices were the sins of the people transferred to the sanctuary; hence, the necessity of its being cleansed; which brings us to the second division of the ministration; namely, the yearly service, or cleansing of the sanctuary. To accomplish this, the work of the high priest was changed from the holy place, where he had ministered during the year, to the most holy within the vail. It took place on the tenth day of the seventh month. Lev. xvi, 20. Here he entered with the blood of a bullock as a sin-offering for himself. Lev. xvi, 3. He was then to take of the congregation of the children of Israel, (verse 5,) two kids of the goats for a sin-offering; upon these he was to cast lots, (verse 8,) one lot for the Lord and the other for the scape-goat. He then offered up the goat upon which the lot fell for the Lord, for a sin-offering for the people, (verse 15,) and bore his blood within the vail, and sprinkled it with his finger upon the mercy-seat eastward, and before the mercy-seat seven times, and made an atonement for the holy place because of the uncleanness of the children of Israel, and because of their transgressions in all their sins, &c. Verse 16. And when he had made an end of reconciling the holy place, and the tabernacle of the congregation, and the altar, he brought the live goat, (that is the scape-goat,) and laid both his hands upon the head of the live goat, and confessed over him all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and all their transgressions in all their sins, putting them upon the head of the goat and sent him away by the hand of a fit man into the wilderness; and the goat bore upon him all their iniquities into a land not inhabited. Verses 20-22. This done, the cleansing of the sanctuary was finished; the sins of the people were borne away, and the yearly round of ministration in both the holy places was complete. In view of these facts, let us listen to the teachings of Paul in regard to

The Ministration and Cleansing of the heavenly Sanctuary. "Now of the things which we have spoken this is the sum: We have such an high priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens; a minister of the Sanctuary, and of the True Tabernacle which the Lord pitched and not man." Heb. viii, 2. This settles the point that there is a minister in the heavenly Sanctuary as there were ministers or priests in the earthly sanctuary. Verse 3. "For every high priest is ordained to offer gifts and sacrifices: wherefore it is of necessity that this man have somewhat also to offer." This fixes another fact; namely, that the minister of the heavenly Sanctuary has an offering to make as well as the priests of the earthly or typical sanctuary.

Who is this minister, and what is his offering? Chap. ix, 11, 12. "But Christ being come an high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building; neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us." We have now learned that Christ is our great High Priest, and the minister of the heavenly Sanctuary; that he offers his own blood instead of the blood of goats and calves which the priests offered in the earthly ministration, and the earthly ministration is typical of the heavenly, as Paul says, [Heb. viii, 5,] "Who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things."

Between them there was this difference: the earthly priests were many, because they were not suffered to continue by reason of death; [Heb. vii, 23,] and their ministration was many times repeated, one round being completed every year; but the priesthood of Christ is an unchangeable priesthood; [Heb. vii, 24,] for he is made a priest forever after the order of Melchisedec; (verse 21;) and once for all hath he offered up himself a sacrifice for our sins. Heb. vii, 27; ix, 25, 26, 28. On him was laid the iniquity of us all, [Isa. liii, 6,] and he bore our sins in his own body on the tree. 1 Pet. ii, 24. In this connection study carefully Hebrews, chapters, vii-x. Christ, then, is the great antitype of the offerings connected with the typical sanctuary; and he who brought his victim to the door of the tabernacle, to be then slain on account of his transgression, through that sacrifice pointed to "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world."

Here is made manifest the wisdom and goodness of God. Thus was instituted that system of types and shadows that through them the people of that dispensation might lay hold on the merits of a coming Saviour; and that we, while there is now no sanctuary on earth with its ministration carried on before us, might look back upon these, and thus learn the work of the heavenly Sanctuary where our great High Priest is now ministering for us.

By our investigation, thus far, we have found that several important points are established by the Word of God; viz., 1. That the Sanctuary, the pattern or antitype of the earthly building is in heaven. 2.

That Christ is the minister of that Sanctuary. 3. That the ministration of the priests connected with the earthly sanctuary, pointed to the ministration of Christ in the heavenly Sanctuary.

We will now consider the time when the heavenly Sanctuary took the place of the earthly, when the type met its antitype, and the shadow was lost in the substance—and the events that marked the change.

In regard to the point of time there can be no dispute: the shadow ceases when the substance comes: the type cannot reach beyond the antitype: the offering of goats and calves was no longer serviceable when the great offering for the world, Christ the Son of God, had died on Calvary. Here then is the dividing point. Christ said as he departed from the temple, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets and stonest them that are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not! Behold your house is left unto you desolate." Matt. xxiii, 37, 38. And when amid the terrific scenes of the crucifixion day, the veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom, it was a solemn demonstration that its services were forever finished; for that blood was now shed that was to be ministered for us in the heavenly Sanctuary, and there from henceforth, the world was to look for salvation and pardon.

The sacrifice of the New Testament being offered up, at once connects us with that Tabernacle where his blood is to be ministered; it is impossible to disconnect the idea: we cannot unlink the chain and step off upon the land of Palestine or any other portion of the earth as the Sanctuary: those who attempt to do this destroy all the significance of these types, and render the whole typical dispensation from Moses to Christ, void and of none effect.

We have now seen when the typical or earthly sanctuary gave place to the Sanctuary in heaven; and Christ, when he ascended, there began, as a minister of that Sanctuary, his mediation for us. He began his ministration in the first apartment, as we may learn from these facts: 1. That the Sanctuary in heaven has two apartments, or it was not, as declared to be, the pattern of the earthly. 2. If there are two apartments, they are both designed for some purpose. 3. As the blood of those sacrifices of which Christ was the antitype, was offered in both apartments of the earthly sanctuary, so his blood must be ministered in both apartments of the heavenly Sanctuary to fulfill the type.

Since, then, we are perfectly antitled when the service commenced in heaven, and where it commenced, i. e., in the first apartment, we next inquire, How long will it thus continue? How long will that division of the ministration continue, ere the final work of cleansing the Sanctuary is commenced?

This is that question which is graciously answered by the Word of God. Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the Sanctuary be cleansed. But how do we know that this refers to the heavenly Sanctuary? We know from the fact that only 490 of the 2300 days are allotted to the Jews and the earthly sanctuary. "Seventy weeks are cut off upon thy people and upon thy holy city." Dan. ix, 24. The Prophet then introduces the heavenly Sanctuary with these words, "To anoint the most Holy." This refers to an act preparatory to the commencement of the ministration in the sanctuary, which was to anoint both the holy places and all the sacred vessels. Ex. xl, 9-11.

Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the Sanctuary be cleansed. We are now prepared to understand the nature of the cleansing of the Sanctuary, and what is to be understood by that expression. Look back to the type ordained expressly to shadow forth the work in heaven, and what are we taught? We there see the high priest on the tenth day of the seventh month entering in within the veil into the most holy place, to make an atonement for the people and cleanse the sanctuary. Lev. xvi. Hence we learn that our great High Priest at the end of the 2300 days entered into the Most Holy Place of the heavenly Sanctuary, and there commenced the final work of cleansing that Sanctuary.

But it may be asked, How can there be anything in heaven that needs cleansing, anything that is impure? We would reply, that the expression, "then shall the Sanctuary be cleansed," does not imply that the Sanctuary is of itself impure. Look at the earthly sanctuary. Into the holiest of all, where God manifested his glory, the high priest alone entered, once only, every year. Was there any thing to make that literally impure? certainly not; yet it was, according to law, to be cleansed. Why? Because the sins of the people had been borne in there by the blood of sin-offering, and from thence it must be freed: in this sense only it was impure.

So with the heavenly Sanctuary. The sins of all those who come to Christ for salvation and pardon, are through his blood transferred to the Sanctuary: from thence it must be cleansed. All can understand this. Paul also bears direct testimony to this point. He says: And almost all things are by the law purged with blood; and without shedding of blood is no remission. It was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these. Heb. ix, 22, 23. That is, the patterns of things in the heavens (the earthly holy places) were cleansed with the blood of goats and calves, but the heavenly things themselves (the True Tabernacle in heaven) with better sacrifices than these, that is, with the blood of Christ; and Paul here plainly states that both were cleansed for one and the same reason.

> Again, we read in Dan. viii, 13, about treading the Sanctuary under foot; and it may be asked how a Sanctuary in heaven can be trodden under foot. These expressions are figurative as well as seen by Heb. x, 29, which speaks of treading under foot the Son of God. The Sanctuary can be trodden under foot in the same sense that the Son of God, its minister can. Thus the Pope has trodden under foot the Sanctuary, by calling his own sanctuary, or temple, the temple of God, and turning away the worship of men from the temple of God in heaven to his own sanctuary at Rome. And he has trodden under foot the Son of God, the minister of that Sanctuary, by exalting himself above all that is called God, and assuming to be the head of the church in the place of Jesus Christ. <

THE SANCTUARY.

BY CHAS. SMITH.

(Concluded.)

JOHN saw when the first apartment of the heavenly Sanctuary was opened. He "looked and behold a door was opened in heaven." That he was looking into the first apartment we understand from what he saw before the throne. Rev. iv, 1, 5. Again, he is carried down to the "days of the voice of the seventh angel," and sees the Most Holy Place opened. "And the temple of God was opened in heaven and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament." Rev. xi, 19. Before this ark containing God's holy law, the ten commandments, Christ, our great High Priest, has been ministering since the termination of the 2300 days. "He that hath the key of David, he that openeth and no man shutteth, and shutteth and no man openeth," [Rev. iii, 7,] has opened the door between the Holy and the Most Holy Place, and is now performing his last ministration for a fallen world. To this open door all may come for pardon of their transgressions, for whom mercy yet lingers. Christ is pleading his blood before the mercy seat; and while people would come and avail themselves of his mediation, let them remember the law of God beneath that mercy seat, and see that they are living in obedience to all its precepts. Men may affirm that the law of God is abolished; but we see how far from truth this is, when we learn that it occupies the choicest place in heaven. The tables of the covenant, which God gave to man, were only a duplicate: the great original still exists, beneath the guardian watchfulness of his eye, who "slumbers not nor sleeps."

The cleansing of the Sanctuary being finished, the only remaining event was for the priest to bear out the iniquities and transgressions of the children of Israel, and place them upon the head of the scape-goat, and send him away into a land not inhabited. Lev. xvi, 20-22. In the type they sent away a literal goat; but when Christ shall have finished his work of atonement, and bear away the sins of his people from the heavenly Sanctuary, upon whom will he lay them as the antitype of the scape-goat? The Hebrew word for scape-goat, as we learn from Lev. xvi, 8, margin, is Azazel. Azazel, according to the oldest opinions of the Hebrews and the Christians, is the name of the Devil. The Syriac, also, has Azazel the angel (strong one) who revolted. Hence the scape-goat is a type of Satan. As the goat bearing the iniquities of the people was sent away into a land not inhabited, so the antitype of that act will be most strikingly fulfilled when the events mentioned in Rev. xx, shall be accomplished; when the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil and Satan shall be bound a thousand years, and cast into the bottomless pit and shut up and sealed that he shall deceive the nations no more till the thousand years be fulfilled. Some men's sins, says Paul, are open beforehand, going before to judgment; and some men they follow after. 1 Tim. v, 24. The sins of all those who are pardoned through the blood of Christ will at the close of his ministry, be borne away from the Sanctuary, and thrown back upon the head of their author, the Devil; while the sins of all those who are not forgiven will rest upon themselves and sink them down into everlasting ruin.

We have endeavored thus far, though briefly, to present a plain and harmonious view of the Sanctuary, as clearly taught in the Word of God. The reader will bear in mind the evidence adduced in favor of the position we have taken, while we attempt to answer a few questions which may arise in the minds of some.

1. Why may not the Earth be the Sanctuary? The earth cannot be the Sanctuary, because, 1st, the definition of the word, itself, is enough to contradict such an idea. It is defined by Walker, "A holy place;" by Webster, "A sacred place;" by Cruden, "A holy or sanctified place, a dwelling-place of the Most High;" and we learn from Ex. xxv, 8, that it is a dwelling-place for God. Now any one knows better than to claim that this polluted earth is a holy place, or a sacred place, or a dwelling-place for God. This therefore, alone, should be sufficient to exclude forever the idea of its being the Sanctuary. 2d. Of all the times that the word, sanctuary, occurs in the Bible, it is never once applied to the earth. In nearly every instance in which it is used, it refers directly to another definite object, which God calls his sanctuary. Hence those who teach that the earth is the Sanctuary, are not only dependent for their authority on the word of man, but they must take it against the plain testimony of the Word of God an hundred times repeated. If any should think that the earth will be the Sanctuary, after it is purified by fire, [2 Pet. iii, 10,] we answer that even then God does not call it his Sanctuary, but merely the place of its location. Isa. lx, 13; Eze. xxxvii, 26-28; Rev. xxi, 1-3.

2. Why may not the Land of Canaan be the Sanctuary? A few texts are sometimes urged in favor of this view, which we will here notice: 1st. "Thou shalt bring them in and plant them in the mountain of thine inheritance, in the place, O Lord, which thou hast made for thee to dwell in, in the sanctuary, O Lord, which thy hands have established." Ex. xv, 17. "And he led them on safely, so that they feared not: but the sea overwhelmed their enemies. And he brought them to the border of his sanctuary, even to the mountain which his right hand had purchased." "And he built his sanctuary like high places, like the earth which he hath established for ever." Ps. lxxviii, 58, 59, 60. The first of these texts, it will be seen, is a prediction of Moses, the second is a record of facts by the Psalmist. What Moses foretells concerning Israel, David relates as a matter of history. The two texts taken together render the subject perfectly plain. The land of Canaan was the mountain of the inheritance. Ex. xv, 17. That mountain was the border of the sanctuary. Ps. lxxviii, 54. In that border God built his sanctuary. Verse 60. In that sanctuary God dwelt; [Ps. lxxiv, 7;] and in that border the people dwell. Ps. lxxviii, 55. Moses understood the matter when he said, [Ex. xv, 2,] "He is my God, and I will prepare him an habitation." The border of the sanctuary must not be confounded with the sanctuary itself. The lot on which a house is built is not the house.

Isa. lxiii, 18, is sometimes quoted to prove the land of Canaan the Sanctuary: "The people of thy holiness have possessed it but a little while: our adversaries have trodden down thy sanctuary." It affords no evidence in favor of that view. The facts are simply these: when God's people were driven out from the land of Canaan, they were not only dispossessed of their inheritance, but the sanctuary, built in that land was laid in ruins, as is plainly recorded in 2 Chron. xxxvi, 17-20; which explains the whole matter.

Isa. lx, 13, may by some be urged as evidence that the land of Canaan is the Sanctuary: "The glory of Lebanon shall come unto thee, the fir-tree, the pine-tree, and the box, together, to beautify the place of my Sanctuary; and I will make the place of my feet glorious." Isaiah here refers to the glorified state, or the new earth; and we are ready to admit that that will be the place of the Sanctuary. If any still persist in calling the place of the sanctuary, the sanctuary itself, we would remind them that the same text calls the same place, the place of the Lord's feet; hence the same principle of application which would make the land of Canaan the Sanctuary, would make it the Lord's feet also.

The word, sanctuary, occurs in the Bible 145 times; yet the few texts above quoted are all that are ever urged in favor of the land of Canaan. But even if it was a sanctuary, it could not then be the Sanctuary of Dan. viii, 13, 14; for the Prophet had in view the habitation of God. Canaan is neither a holy place, nor a sacred place, nor yet a dwelling-place for God.

3. Why may not the Church be the Sanctuary? The church cannot be the Sanctuary for the following reasons: 1st. It is never called such in the Word of God. 2d. Another object is called the sanctuary; and the church is associated with it as the worshippers: the sanctuary being the place of that worship, or toward which their prayers were directed. 1 Kings viii, 22-24; 2 Chron. xx, 8, 9; Ps. xx, 2; lxxiii, 17. 3d. Because God has many times called the tabernacle or temple, which were patterns of the true, his sanctuary; and because the church is spiritually called the temple of God, [2 Cor. vi, 16,] some infer that the church is the Sanctuary. To how much weight such an inference is entitled in comparison with the plain testimony of the Scriptures on this subject, the reader may judge. 4th. Even if a single text could be found to prove that the church is ever called a sanctuary, it could not be the Sanctuary of Dan. viii, 13, 14; because the church is there represented by the word, host. "To give both the Sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot." That the word, host, here means the church, none will deny; the Sanctuary then is another object. The church is the host or worshippers; the Sanctuary is the place of that worship or toward which it is directed.

We find then that the idea that the earth, or the land of Canaan, or the church, is the Sanctuary, is without foundation in the Word of God; and these are the only objects which to our knowledge have ever been claimed as such by our opponents. And we find no dissenting text from the plain view already presented, that the Sanctuary embraced first the tabernacle erected by man, and now consists of the True Tabernacle in heaven which the Lord pitched and not man; that its cleansing is performed through the ministration of a great High Priest, and by means of blood; that the work accomplished is the bearing away from the Sanctuary the sins of God's people that they may be remembered no more against them forever; and not the burning of the earth by those final purifying fires which shall melt the elements with fervent heat.

Thus we see that we were not warranted by the declarations of the prophecy, to expect the Lord at the end of the days. If in the type the high priest after finishing his ministration in the first apartment, "had traveled off a thousand miles and cleared off the rubbish from some patch of land," we might have had some reason to expect that Christ, at the end of the days, would leave the Sanctuary and descend to cleanse this polluted earth; but by following out the type we may be saved from all such inconsistency.

The subject of the Sanctuary is a subject of vital importance to the people of God. An understanding of it is essential to a well-grounded position in the Advent faith. By this alone can the past be harmonized and the present established. By this alone can it be shown that the events of time and the words of the prophecy do perfectly agree. With an understanding on this point we have all the bright evidences of the past, and all the harmony of the Scriptures to sustain us; and with these and the mighty array of signs now fulfilling before us, no honest child of God can find room to doubt. A misunderstanding of this subject is the great cause of the ruinous work which has torn and scattered the flock since 1844.

INEXPLICABLE POSITIONS

Let us notice a few of the inconsistent positions to which people are driven by not taking a Bible view in regard to the Sanctuary. Assuming that the earth or the land of Palestine is the Sanctuary to be cleansed at the end of the 2300 days, to admit that they had ended would involve a positive failure of the word of God; for no portion of the earth has yet been cleansed. But to admit that God's Word has failed would not do: what was to be done? To extricate themselves from this dilemma has been the great object of all those who have found themselves thus situated; hence the incessant effort to prolong the days and place their termination yet future.

As one of the many results of this we may mention more especially the recent movement on time. This new-time theory assigns for the termination of the 2300 days the year 1854 Jewish time, and assumes as the date of their commencement, the grant to Nehemiah in the 80th of Artaxerxes. In the former part of this article we saw that there was nothing granted to Nehemiah which could be called a decree; and the only reasonable place from which to date was from the decree given to Ezra. Ezr. vi, 14. Would they take a scriptural view of the Sanctuary, there would be no necessity of embracing such inconsistencies as we meet with in this theory. But aside from their chronological reckoning, there are other points which we call in question. Admitting, even, that the days do end as they declare, will the Lord then come? NO! there is no such promise. Then shall the Sanctuary be cleansed? They assume that the Lord will then appear; but there is no scripture for such an expectation. There is no particle of evidence in the Word of God that the earth or the land of Palestine is the Sanctuary. Yet they assume these points also. Let them show their proof for such a position. We challenge them to do it.

The teachings of the Holy Scriptures on this subject are most unequivocal. On these we take our stand. This is the only consistent position. It precludes the necessity of wresting the Word of God, removing the old land-marks, and giving the lie to the declarations of prophecy. Whenever a view is presented conflicting with these plain teachings, we demand, and justly too, the authority on which it rests. Will those therefore who teach that the earth or Palestine is the Sanctuary, and that the Lord is to come at the end of the 2300 days, show their authority for these views, or will they admit that they are based upon mere human speculations. If the foundation be false, however fair a structure may be reared thereon, 'tis doomed to fall. The Bible view of the Sanctuary not only explains every objection which can arise from the apparent failure of 1844, but furnishes a safeguard against the present as well as against any attempt which may in future be made to prolong the days and create a false excitement on the preaching of time.

But there are others, and among these we may mention the Advent Herald, who have found themselves driven into an extremely embarrassing position on this question. The Herald has from time to time, in years past, furnished unanswerable proof for the true dates of the prophetic periods, and also for the connection between the 70 weeks and the 2300 days. It has regarded it as the "position of our opponents" to deny this connection. It has claimed that "this involves one of the great questions which constitutes the main pillars of our system of interpretation, so far as prophetic times are concerned;" and it has admitted that "if this connection does not exist, the whole system is shaken to its foundation." But rejecting the scriptural exposition of the Sanctuary, the Herald has been unable to account for the passing of the time in 1844; and as a last resort to solve the mystery, it has taken the "position of our [their] opponents," and denied the connection between the 70 weeks and the 2300 days. The arguments produced in 1844 for their connection were unanswerable: they are unanswerable still the Herald itself cannot disprove the testimony; yet it has denied the point, acknowledging that its only reason for so doing was the passing of the time. Whether that reason is sufficient to justify the course it has taken, or not, the reader can now readily decide.

Thus the Herald has thrown away one of the main pillars of prophetic chronology; for of what use are the 2300 days viewed in this light? Just none at all; as no one can tell where they commence, or where they end; hence they become totally useless, a mere dead letter. So it seems Paul was a little too fast when he said, All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable! &c. We know of no way for the Herald to do but to wait till the Lord comes to find their termination and then reckon back 2300 years to find their commencement!!

Having thus yielded one of the strong points of the original Advent faith, the way is opened for another step in this work of apostasy. The special signs of the Advent in the sun, moon and stars are next called in question as being fulfillments of prophecy, or precursors of the great day of God. On what the Herald now bases its faith for the soon coming of the Lord, if indeed it has any such faith, we are unable to determine. It will not admit the premises of the new time. It presents unobjectionable vindications of the true date of the 70 weeks, but will not admit the termination of the 2300 days in the past, because the event which it expected, did not then transpire. It therefore rubly tears asunder the two periods, and so finds itself standing on nothing. It cannot now present its readers with a harmonious system of truth on this great question. It cannot furnish them with a well-grounded consistent position. We cannot therefore be so much surprised to see so many of its prominent men embracing the new-time teachings; for if the consistency of two such positions will admit of degrees of comparison, we must confess, we think the new time has the advantage.

But there is another class whose organ is the Advent Watchman, which has professedly no position. Suffice it to say, it has given up the past, rejects the light on the Sanctuary, and consequently cannot tell the inquiring traveler where he now stands.

Again, there is what professes to be the Advent Harbinger; but so far has it drawn back and apostatized, that it openly renounces all connection with the Advent faith. Point after point it has given up till the whole harmonious theory is finally rejected; and what has it taken in its stead. It has embraced

"A strange belief that bears its latest back
On folly's topmost twig."

A belief in a future age and temporal reign of Christ on earth. A belief that the Lord will come, but in such a way that the man of sin shall not be consumed by the spirit of his mouth nor destroyed by the brightness of his coming. 2 Thess. ii. 8. It has embraced, in short, a slight modification of that siren doctrine of the Devil—the temporal millenium. It nevertheless styles itself the Advent Harbinger; but why should it profess to be what it so long since ceased to be both in theory and in practice.

Thus by taking a brief glance at the positions of professed Adventists, we are at once impressed with the importance of our subject. Why are they thus divided among themselves? Why are they thus driven to apostatize from the true faith, and renounce and trample upon those glorious doctrines which they once held as sacred truth? There is a cause for all this! They have rejected the true light on the Sanctuary! they have not followed down the track of prophecy as marked out in the Word of God! Truth is ever onward. It was its onward progress which in 1844 walked out from the dormant church—great Babylon—a zealous band to herald the coming of the Lord. It is onward still: it did not stop with the first or second angel's work; for yet a third was to go forth with a final message of mercy to the world. Light on the Sanctuary of God in heaven, and light on the law of God, contained in the ark which is in that Sanctuary, was yet in store for God's true people. That light has now come. "The temple of God was opened in heaven and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament." "Here," says the third angel, "are they who keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus." Light on these points, we say, has now come: happy are they who receive it, but fearful is the net of those who shut it out.

Great and momentous is that work which the world's High Priest is now commencing before the ark of God in heaven. Whether men know it or not they have an interest there. The last great act in the plan of salvation is being accomplished; and the last messenger announcing that mercy yetingers, is fulfilling his mission. All that could be done for sinful, rebellious man, has been done. Life has been freely offered. The Son of God has died to make an atonement for their transgression. Yet a few more days will he plead his blood in the Sanctuary in their behalf, and the work is forever finished. But there is soon to come "a great voice out of the temple of heaven, from the throne, saying, It is done." There is soon to go forth a decree, "He which is filthy, let him be filthy still; and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still." Sin, which for nearly six thousand years has triumphed over a fallen world, shall be blotted out, together with its author, and the workers of iniquity. And when he who sitteth upon the throne, shall "make all things new;" when he shall make the earth restored, to blossom as the rose; then with "the fir tree, the pine tree, and the box together, will he beautify the place of his Sanctuary;" then "the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads;" then will "the tabernacle of God be with men, and he will dwell with them;" his "Sanctuary will be in their midst forevermore."

The Relation which the Sabbath sustains to other Points of Present Truth.

No truth need be more clearly demonstrated than that the Sabbath of the Lord, instituted and given to man at creation, is still binding upon the whole human family. Perhaps no truth can be more clearly demonstrated: indeed, the fourth commandment itself enforces its own obligation. Aside from the vast amount of evidence which is found throughout the whole Bible from Genesis to Revelation, that commandment alone is sufficient to establish its own perpetuity, and show the obligation, which everywhere rests upon men to remember the Sabbath-day to keep it holy. It was a fact that in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and rested on the seventh; on that fact the institution is based; and there lies the reason why it should be enforced. If that reason was good then, it is good at the present day; and if good now, the institution which rests upon it is no less immutable. This none can deny, unless they would affirm that God is changeable, and make him altogether such an one as themselves.

But while the child of God rejoices in the clear light which shines upon this subject, in itself considered; that he has been enabled to turn away from the commandments and traditions of men, and remember and honor the great Creator by keeping the Rest-day which he has instituted; there is another consideration calculated to inspire gratitude in every true heart: it is, that the mighty evidence on this point goes to strengthen other portions of the truth of God. Such is the connection, relation and dependence of one great truth upon another, that every additional evidence upon one, proportionably strengthens all the rest; and thus, by this reciprocal strength which each point furnishes to the others, the great platform of truth is established, on which God's people will finally be found standing; and which will abide the test of the great day. While therefore we feel established upon the subject of the Sabbath, and that we may safely challenge the world to disprove our position, we should feel equally strengthened upon other subjects of present truth; for by this they are rendered so much the stronger.

That we may more clearly perceive the relation which this truth sustains to our present position, let us consider how the matter would stand, if there had not been, or if there was no need of, any reform upon this subject. The third, and last, angel, under whose message we believe we are now living, announces a company who keep the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus: he points them out in distinction to the great mass who worship the beast and his image. Now if it was the case that the great portion of the world were keeping all the commandments of God; if it was not true that most of professed christianism were disregarding or misapplying one of the plainest precepts of the law, and that those who give heed to this message, were endeavoring to repair the breach, to restore the broken commandment, and keep the whole law in its holiness and beauty;—if these things were not so, there would be no meaning in the declaration, "Here are they that keep the commandments of God;" but as it is, it is most cogent and direct: there is the most beautiful harmony between such an announcement and the facts themselves. And here we have reciprocal proof that the third angel is now fulfilling his mission. Independently of the long chain of prophecy from the reign of Nebuchadnezzar to the present time, by which we are led to the same conclusion, the fact that there is a class coming up on the length and breadth of the land, guided by the light of revelation, who answer the description there given, and are fulfilling the work there assigned, is strong circumstantial evidence at least that that message is now going forth.

Again, the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament. The temple was opened and the ark was seen. Attention being thus especially called to the ark, we are led to consider it further. By referring to the type we find it, with its mercy-seat and cherubim of gold, and above it the visible manifestation of God's glory, the most important object connected with the Sanctuary. Considering the ark we are led to consider its contents. It contained the tables of the testimony: the ten commandments engraved with the finger of God in two tables of stone. Beholding these commandments, that they occupy so holy and exalted a place, we examine them more attentively. But we find that the decalogue of the present day does not agree with the decalogue of God. The fourth commandment has been removed; and though an attempt has been made to supply its place with a wretched Pagan substitute, it is as good as destroyed. We trace this work more directly to the man of sin. Beyond him we find it springing from Paganism, and consequently from the Devil. It becomes then the duty of all those who by faith understand the work of our great High Priest in the heavenly Sanctuary; who follow him into the Most Holy, where he performs the last act of his ministration; who behold there the ark before which he ministers, and the immutable law which it contains;—it becomes the duty of all such to restore the breach which has been made by Antichrist, and keep the commandments according to the requirements of God. All who believe and understand this work will do this. Thus we see that the subjects of the Sanctuary and the Sabbath are inseparably connected. Whoever admits the truth of the first, must admit it also on the second: the Sanctuary contains the ark, the ark contains the law, and the law contains the fourth commandment unabolished and unchanged.

But when we say that light on the Sabbath is so intimately connected with the work in the Sanctuary, work which has taken place within a short time comparatively, it may be asked if there have not always been those who have kept the Sabbath of the fourth commandment. Very true, there have. God has never suffered any one of his precepts to fall entirely into disuse; and there have been those from the days of Adam to the present time who have kept the fourth. But this is no objection to the view that in the purpose of God, especial attention should be called to this point in these last days; that as the last work in the plan of salvation is being accomplished, and it becomes necessary that the man of God should be "perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works," new light should break forth on this vital truth, which has been shrouded in darkness by the great apostasy. That light is being seen, and by a people who perceive whence it comes; therefore are they endeavoring to render to their Creator, obedience to every precept of his perfect law.

Rev. xii, 17. "And the dragon was wroth with the woman and went to make war with the remnant of her seed which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ." Here again is a distinction between the remnant or the people of God, and the armies of the dragon. This distinction is something connected with the commandments; but how could this exist, if things were not as they are in regard to the fourth; for the dragon himself is perfectly willing that one should keep the other nine, yea, he would make war upon you, if you did not; and you may keep the fourth, without any trouble, or endeavor to do so, if you will only observe it on Sunday.

In Rev. xiii, we read about the mark of the beast. This mark the third angel explains to be something contrary to the commandments of God, or which those who keep the commandments of God do not receive. But this could not so be, were it not that the beast, the Catholic power, had robbed the law of God of its signature, its seal of royalty, and placed its own in its stead.

By this brief outline we perceive something of the nature which the Sabbath sustains to other prominent points of present truth. If we believe the third angel's message, it leads to an examination of this subject. If we admit that the 2300 days terminated in the past, (and the man is not living who can disprove it,) we must admit the truth in regard to the Sanctuary. If we admit this, we must admit the Sabbath. So in regard to other points which we need not mention. Therefore whatever additional evidence we gain on any one point of truth, so far goes to strengthen the whole; for they are inseparably connected.

THE SANCTUARY.

A NOVEL ARGUMENT.

We find a short article on this subject in the World's Crisis for Dec. 30th, in regard to which we cannot forbear making a few remarks. After quoting Dan. viii, 13, 14, the writer opens his article as follows:

"Three interesting particulars I want you should take for granted. They are points which are already settled. 1. The 'sanctuary' is the earth. 2. The 'cleansing' is its physical renovation by literal fire. 3. The days are prophetic and denote literal years. These points are beyond successful dispute."

We cannot be called upon to take for granted any propositions except such as have abundant evidence to sustain them, and for which sufficient reason can be readily presented. Let us then inquire why we should adopt the first two of the above "interesting particulars," without further investigation.

1. "The 'sanctuary' is the earth." What are some of the reasons why we should take this for granted?

1st. If the earth was the Sanctuary it would be recognized as such by the word of God; but instead of this it is nowhere in that Word thus recognized. 2d. If it was the Sanctuary, we should expect to find the term many times applied to it, pointing it out as such; but the fact is, the term is distinctly applied to another definite object which God calls his Sanctuary. 3d. The term sanctuary is defined, A holy place, A sacred place, A dwelling place of the Most High. Ex. xxv, 8. Is the earth a holy or a sacred place? "Curse is the ground for thy sake," Gen. iii, 17. Is it the habitation of God? "Thus saith the Lord, the heaven is my throne, the earth is my footstool," Isa. lxvi, 1. "The Lord shall roar from on high and utter his voice from his holy habitation," Jer. xxv, 30. "For he hath looked down from the height of his Sanctuary; from heaven did the Lord behold the earth," Ps. cii, 19. 4th. Paul thus discourses upon the Sanctuaries of the first and second covenants: "Then verily the first covenant had also ordinances of divine service, and a worldly sanctuary. For there was a tabernacle made; the first wherein was the candlestick, and the table of shew-bread; which is called the sanctuary; [for holy margin:] and after the second veil the tabernacle, which is called the Holiest of all," &c. Heb. ix, 1-3. This refers to the building erected by Moses, at the express command of God, and in exact accordance with the pattern shown him on the mount. Ex. xxv, and onward. This Paul plainly declares was the sanctuary of the first covenant. This was the sanctuary, therefore, till the introduction of the new covenant by the Messiah. Now by what process has the earth taken the place of that sanctuary and become the Sanctuary of the new covenant?

With this sanctuary of the first covenant, Paul introduces another, the Sanctuary of the new covenant. He calls it a greater and more perfect tabernacle not made with hands; "the true tabernacle which the Lord pitched and not man;" "things in the heavens." The first-covenant sanctuary was a "figure for the time then present," or a pattern of the true tabernacle which should take its place when the new covenant should be established. In it "were offered both gifts and sacrifices that could not make him that did the service perfect as pertaining to the conscience; which stood only in meats and drinks, and divers washings and carnal ordinances imposed on them until the time of reformation." But the time of reformation came—Christ came an high priest of good things to come, the way of the heavenly holy places was laid open, and the earthly sanctuary gave place—not to the earth but to the greater and more perfect tabernacle which the Lord pitched and not man, where Christ our great High Priest has entered, not with the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood, now to appear in the presence of God for us. Heb. viii, ix.

Here the sanctuaries of the two covenants are plainly set before us: the earthly pitched by man; the heavenly pitched not by man: the earthly, with its mortal priesthood, and its sacrifices of goats and calves; the heavenly with its more excellent ministry, its better mediator, and to be cleansed at last with better sacrifices. Heb. ix, 23.

We know of no reasons of other import than the above, which can be brought forward upon this question; and, we appeal to the reader, are these the reasons why we should take it for granted (!) that the sanctuary is the earth? When the earth is never once called the sanctuary in the word of God; when another definite object is pointed out expressly as such, and is the only thing that God owns as his Sanctuary; when an Apostle plainly teaches us that the Sanctuary of the new covenant is in heaven, the greater and more perfect tabernacle, where Christ our great High Priest now ministers in mercy for fallen man;—when we have such plain, scriptural facts as these before us, we are not so ready to take for granted the absurd position under consideration, as our writer in the Crisis would wish to have us.

The next "interesting particular," is its cleansing. "2. The 'cleansing' is its (the earth's) physical renovation by literal fire." Where in the Bible is the only source from which we derive instruction on the cleansing of the Sanctuary? There is one, and there is but one; and that is the typical ministration of the earthly sanctuary. The services of this ministration are all minutely described, and the particular work which was performed at the end of the year is clearly presented. Lev. xvi. This was called the cleansing of the sanctuary; and to no other work than that which was here performed, and the event which this foreshadowed, in the expression, cleansing of the sanctuary, ever applied. When therefore men are pointed forward, and told that at the end of a certain period the Sanctuary shall be cleansed, why will they not go back to the true fountain for information on this subject? Why will they not derive instruction from those events which God in mercy ordained, and left on record for our learning; for "whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning."

We look back upon the type: we behold the victim of expiation brought up before the door of the tabernacle: we see the transgressor confessing over him his sin, and thus transferring to him his guilt: we see the victim slain on account of that transgression, and the blood bearing that guilt sprinkled within the sanctuary, which henceforth becomes the receptacle of the offender's sin: we see this service carried on throughout the year till the day of atonement comes: we then behold the high priest with the blood of a sin-offering for himself and for the congregation of Israel, entering within the veil into the Most Holy Place, and while the cloud of the incense from his burning censer covers the mercy-seat, we see him sprinkle of that blood before and upon it seven times, to make an atonement for the holy Sanctuary, for the tabernacle of the congregation, for the altar, for the priests, and for all the people of the congregation, because of their uncleanness and because of their transgressions in all their sins. And when he had made an end of reconciling the holy place, all the sins which had been borne into the sanctuary, were transferred to the head of the scape-goat: over him the high priest confessed all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and they were borne away into a land of forgetfulness. Thus was the sanctuary cleansed.

That this work prefigured something none will deny; nor can it be denied that it prefigured the cleansing of the true Sanctuary, the last great work to be accomplished in the plan of man's salvation, when the sins of God's true Israel will be blotted out forever. But who would gather from all this that this earth would one day be purified by fire? We should no more come to such a conclusion, than we should expect by following the shadow of a tree to come to a burning, fiery furnace.

The sanctuary of Dan, viii, 14, is a sanctuary that is to be cleansed. That cleansing, whatever it is, is dependent on, and the result of a ministration; and both the ministration, and the cleansing are performed by means of blood, as we are taught in the types. We have no record of any other, and we have no warrant to look for any other as connected with the Sanctuary. But who supposes that such services ever have been, or ever will be, connected with this earth?

True this earth will be purified by fire. The effects of sin and the curse shall be removed forever, and it shall bloom again in more than its Eden glory; but this event is as independent of, and as foreign to, the cleansing of the Sanctuary, as was the destruction of Sodom, to the ministration at Jerusalem.

"3. The days are prophetic, and denote literal years." With this we are happy to agree. The first two points only we have occasion to call in question. Those the writer wishes us to take for granted, assigning as the reason, that they are already settled, and are beyond successful disputation. But we should be happy to learn when these points were settled, and how, and where. We think the true reason for the request that is made, is not presented. If he had said that these points could not be successfully maintained; if he had said, I want you to take these points for granted, because I cannot prove them, and they are necessary to my view of the subject; we apprehend that we should then have had the plain truth in the matter.

Truly this is a novel mode of discussing a subject of such importance: coolly ask your readers to take for granted the fundamental points involved in the question, and then deliberately walk off upon the unqualified assumptions.

U. S.

The Original Advent Faith.

We have received a friendly letter on this subject from Bro. R. D. Newton. We give below as much as is necessary to answer his inquiries. He says:—

"I see in the Review and Herald, Apr. 18th, 1884, you say,

"We claim to stand on the original Advent faith, therefore do not reject the past movements on this great question, which has called out a people to prepare for the coming of the Lord. We claim all the light of past time on this glorious theme, and cherish it as from Heaven."

"If it were from heaven I don't see how you could surrender one inch of faith; for if that voice and that cry, 'Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him,' was from heaven, then Christ did come on the tenth day, seventh month, 1844; for many declared that he would come as sure as there was a God in heaven, and time would be no longer. This is the original faith you claim to stand upon. And if it was the revelation of Jesus Christ which God gave unto him to show unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass, then Christ has come; and you are bound by the original faith, and every principle of truth and righteousness to prove that Christ has come, how and when. That was what the Apostles labored to prove after the death and resurrection of Jesus. You admit all the prophetic periods have run out, and now what wait we for?"

"I want you to give me all the light you have upon this all-important subject. The truth is what we want."

The above remarks would seem to make the whole Advent faith depend on the personal appearing of our Lord in 1844; and since that event did not then occur, we may be assured that what would be understood by the original Advent faith, has proved an utter failure. Very many of the world's people, who were observers of that movement, wonder why we still persist in our belief of the Advent doctrine. They say, Has not your time passed? Hasn't your theory failed you? Haven't you been disappointed in all your expectations? And they laugh at our credulity or stubbornness (for they hardly know to which to attribute it) in still clinging to what they term our folly and delusion. How completely is the way thus paved, that, when a few more days are passed, and the great event finally comes, it shall steal upon them like a thief in the night, and take them unawares.

True, the Lord did not appear in 1844. Our expectations failed; and the disappointment fell upon us—how heavily, those can best judge who felt it; and we would that all such would prove the sincerity of the love they then professed for Christ and his coming, by heeding the greater light which now shines upon this subject, and accepting the explanation which God, in his word, has given us. There is an explanation for all this, and in that explanation, a new flood of light is thrown upon our pathway.

We do not claim that the Lord came, as it is promised that he shall come, visibly in the clouds of heaven, in 1844; and if this is the coming the writer above refers to, we are not bound to prove "how and when" it took place; for we frankly admit that it has not yet occurred. Well, then, the inquiry comes up, are you not surrendering the Advent faith? We think not. The Advent faith is founded wholly on the word of God; and it is a cheering fact, that, notwithstanding our disappointment, not one single promise or prophecy has yet failed. The declaration of our Saviour that heaven and earth should pass away sooner than his word should fail, still holds good. When we expected the Lord in '44, as we have of en said and often proved, we were expecting that which we had no warrant for in the Scriptures of truth. We drew a wrong conclusion; but yet every argument on which we rested our hope is as good now as it was then.

Those clear chains of prophecy given us in the book of Daniel, still remain sterling truth; and their fulfillment, as far as it has been developed, stands as a veritable pledge that that which still remains, will surely be accomplished. The commencement and the termination of the prophetic periods, as we then held them, we are no necessity and no reason for changing. We only mistook the event to occur at the end of those periods, and being corrected on this one point, all is harmonious and clear.

It may now be said, You admit that your expectations in then looking for the Lord, were wrong; why then do you not reject a movement which was the result of those expectations. Here, for our encouragement and comfort, our past experience and disappointment are not without a precedent in the history of God's people. Go back with me to the time of Christ's entry into Jerusalem, and explain the meaning of that shouting multitude. Why are all classes, young and old, pressing in the way before and behind him, and, absorbed in one emotion, shouting, Hosanna to the Son of David! Blessed be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord! Hosanna in the highest! They cut down branches from the trees and strewed them in the way, and they spread their garments before him, an act which was due to royalty only. Doubtless they expected that his kingdom should then be set up. In their rejoicing they quote from a psalm which probably applies to the future reign and triumph of the Messiah. They thought the time had come for those events to be realized. In these expectations they were to be disappointed; but were they therefore wrong in shouting and rejoicing as they did? Let Jesus answer: "I tell you that if these should hold their peace, the stones would immediately cry out."

In this light we are disposed to regard the great movement which took place upon the Advent doctrine in '44. A faith was there manifested, seconded by works, which like that of Noah, will rise up in the judgment and condemn an unbelieving world. We regard the message of the first angel as there having its fulfillment; and we believe that it was accomplished according to the purpose of God. Further light has shown us the work that was to be accomplished by our great High Priest in the heavenly Sanctuary; it has shown us another angel with a solemn message who must fulfill his mission; and those who reject the past reject some of the plainest portions of a chain of prophecy through which God is now leading his people. Those who reject the light of the past on this subject, have let go their only anchor, and are now adrift among the perilous delusions of these last days. This is attested by the numbers who have sought out many strange and discordant theories since that time. Either apostasy or some baneful systems of error, have swallowed up the mass of those who have forsaken their first love. And last, but not least, those who will not acknowledge the validity of the great movements of the past, on this question, are absolutely unable to present the inquirer with a harmonious system of truth, on this all-vital subject. This is a significant fact, and worthy of due regard.

The writer, above, says, You admit that the prophetic periods have all run out; and now what wait we for? The answer is easy: We are striving in all honesty to heed the admonition of Paul when he says, For ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise. We are waiting till he who is our life shall appear, and then we expect to appear with him in glory. We are waiting till the last solemn ministration of our High Priest shall be accomplished, the destiny of mankind decided, and the day of our redemption and deliverance comes. For this time we can but earnestly long, while in these days of our exile and pilgrimage; and also for that fullness of time, when sin and its agents, dating far back, from the first apostasy, that of Satan himself, shall be swept from creation, its effects all repaired, and the whole universe shall be as fair and holy as it was before sin had ever entered to mar the handiwork of God.

THE OLDRASSING OF THE SANCTUARY.

Ever since his fall man has had a connection with the Sanctuary. The very first victim that was offered after Paradise was closed upon our race, pointed to the great Sacrifice, which should be offered that he might recover from the fall. This was more fully developed in after years when God designed through a chosen people and by a system of types to instruct the world. We therefore behold among the camps of Israel the tabernacle of the congregation erected, and within that tabernacle, the veil dividing the holy from the most holy place; and within that veil, the ark of the testimony; and above that ark the Shekinah, the visible manifestation of the presence of God. Here was the heart and center of that typical system. Here the eyes of all were directed as to the place where were centered their highest interests. The present dispensation has no less a glorious center, around which cluster the eternal interests of man. It is the great substance of which the former was the shadow only. It is the true tabernacle above, with its holy places, its vessels of ministration, its ark, in which still exists the immutable law of God, its great and merciful priesthood, and its exceeding glory; and to this should all eyes now be directed; for with this Sanctuary and its service is connected our everlasting destiny; and the last act of its ministration is now being accomplished. This being the case, the importance of the subject is at once seen.

Of the literal existence of the Sanctuary in heaven we will not now stop to offer proof. We wish to inquire concerning its cleansing. When does that work commence? and what is the position of the true Israel during that time? We cannot with the natural eye look into heaven and behold what is passing, but we can look back to the shadow which these heavenly things have cast on earth, and from that by an eye of faith comprehend our present position. We have said that the only source from which to derive instruction on this subject was the typical ministration, and thought there was no danger of being misunderstood. We would not by this repudiate all that the Bible elsewhere says on this question. Paul in his epistle to the Hebrews gives us a divine commentary on the system of types, and their application to the present dispensation. Blot out the book of Hebrews, and we might learn what was once the sanctuary, and we might infer what it now is; since the former was made from a pattern, and we have intimation where that pattern is to be found; but that is all. On the other hand take away the earthly sanctuary and its typical ministration, and when Paul discourses to us of a Sanctuary and its priesthood in heaven, what should we understand by his language? Therefore it is emphatically true that that system of types is the root and source of all our instruction on this subject; but it is also true that to form a correct understanding of it at the present time, we must connect with it the teachings of Paul.

The epistle to the Hebrews will guard us against transferring the secondary ceremonies of the type to the fulfillment of the antitype. Let us consider it a moment. It was written to the Hebrews, those who from their earliest infancy had been connected with the service of the earthly sanctuary. Every ceremony, every minute act, had been repeatedly and thoroughly impressed upon their minds. The time had come for the dispensation to change, and the earthly sanctuary and its ministration to give place to the true. When therefore they should learn this fact, how natural would it be for them to connect with the new ministration, all the minutiae of the service to which they had been accustomed. We are thus particular on this point because some, at the present time, are disposed to do the same thing. Paul therefore guards them against this by explaining the difference that exists between the two, and the superiority of the priesthood of Christ over that of Aaron. We will notice this in some of its particulars.

1. Christ is a priest after the order of Melchisedec, and not after the order of Aaron. Heb. v, 6.

2. Perfection was not of the Levitical priesthood; for if it had been, says Paul, what further need was there that another priest should rise after the order of Melchisedec, and not after the order of Aaron. Chap. vii, 11.

3. Those priests were many; because they were not suffered to continue by reason of death; but this man because he continueth ever hath an unchangeable priesthood. Verse 23, 24. And from this Paul draws a most clearing conclusion in the next verse. Wherefore he is able to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him: seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them.

4. It was necessary for the priests of the house of Levi, to offer up sacrifices daily, for their own sins and those of the people. Verse 27. This embraces all the various offerings that were made by those who had transgressed. But all this Christ did by one act when he offered up himself. The same fact is also expressed in chap. ix, 25, 26, 28; x, 10, 12, 14. It is a fact which we wish particularly noticed, that all the sacrifices which were offered under the former dispensation, centered in, and met their antitype in the one great Sacrifice, that died on Calvary.

5. All the blood which was offered in the former dispensation, was offered for past transgression only, and made no provision for the future; while the merits of that blood which was shed on Calvary applied not to the past alone, but to the future also.

6. As the blood of Christ is the only blood ministered in connection with the heavenly Sanctuary, whether by actual presentation, or by virtue of its merits we need not inquire, the same blood must be ministered in both apartments.

7. The work of cleansing the earthly sanctuary was a work of judgment. The high priest went into the most holy place, bearing the breast-plate of judgment, and on that breast-plate the names of the twelve children of Israel, to make an atonement for the holy sanctuary, and for all the people of the congregation. Lev. xvi, 33. This prefigured a solemn fact; namely, that in the great plan of salvation, a time of decision was coming for the human race; a work of atonement, which being accomplished, God's people, the true Israel, should stand acquitted, and cleansed from all sin. But who shall limit the work of the perfect system with which we now stand directly connected, to all the lesser details and conditions of that typical system, of which Paul says there was no perfection? In the type a complete round of the service of the sanctuary, was performed every year; but the ministration of the heavenly Sanctuary, is performed once for all. When the last act, that of its cleansing, is accomplished, the plan of salvation is ended—the result is told! From that decision there is no appeal; for there is thenceforth no more offering for sin. Heb. x, 18. There must therefore be a defilement in this work, unknown to the type. Atonement was there made for the people of Israel as a body: here the work has to do with individuals; for as individuals we must stand condemned or acquitted at the judgment seat of Christ. We read in Dan. vii, 10, that the judgment was set, and the books were opened. Again in Rev. xx, 12, the books were opened, and the dead were judged out of those things written in the books, according to their works. From this we learn that a record is kept of the acts of all men; and from that record, their reward is given them according to their deserts. There is no judgment in this sense of the term, independent of these books of record; but we read [1 Pet. iv, 17] that there is a time when judgment must begin at the house of God; when some men's sins are open beforehand, going before to judgment; [1 Tim. v, 24;] and if, says Peter, it first begin at us what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God. This must be a judgment of the same nature and can refer to no other work than the closing up of the ministration of the heavenly Sanctuary, hence that work must embrace the examination of individual character; and we conclude that the lives of the children of God, not only those who are living, but all who have ever lived, whose names are written in the Lamb's book of life, will during this time pass in final review before that great tribunal. We see, therefore, how in this respect, the work of the type, is infinitely surpassed by that of the antitype.

8. As long as Christ fills the office of priest, so long he is a mediator between God and man.

Owing to a misconception of some of these points the idea is being entertained by some,

1. That, as under the type, no offering could be presented while the high priest was in the most holy place; so when our great High Priest enters upon that work, probation closes, the cases of all are decided, no confessions can be made and accepted, and no sins forgiven.

2. That as probation still continues, and the 2300 days, at the end of which the Sanctuary was to be cleansed, have ended, it could not mean that they were to mark the commencement of the particular work called the cleansing of the Sanctuary, but they mark "the commencement of the antitypical day of atonement;" hence that Christ has not yet entered the Most Holy place, and the Sanctuary is not yet being cleansed.

3. That the sins of Israel are blotted out, not singly, but all at once; that every thing is ready before the High Priest enters the Holiest, and then by one instantaneous act, the whole is accomplished.

These views we also notice, set forth in print, in an article entitled, "The Day of Atonement and cleansing of the Sanctuary;" which article, R. Hicks, writing in this Office, in his zeal to express its merits, calls "one of the hailstones spoken of by Ezekiel;" forgetting, I suppose, that he thereby makes it one of the plagues! But let us subject this "hailstone" a moment to the torch of truth and see if it won't melt.

Much testimony is adduced to show that those who brought their offerings under the former dispensation, must bring them to the door of the tabernacle, unto the priest. They then say that our prayers and confessions of sins are our offerings and sacrifices; that consequently we can present them nowhere else than at the door of the tabernacle; that we can do this only while our High Priest ministers in the first apartment; and that after his position is changed to the second apartment, he will not accept them.

Now all who hold such a view as this, most certainly make our prayers and confessions, the antitype of those ancient offerings; and in doing this they betray, an enormous misapprehension of the whole subject. We have shown from the testimony of Paul that Christ was the great antitype in which these all centered; and who will for a moment suppose that when a person offered up his victim at the earthly tabernacle, it signified that people under the gospel dispensation would pray and confess their sins! But it may be asked, Have we then no sacrifices to make? We have, in the sense in which this term is applied to the duties of a Christian. We will present a few examples: Ps. cxvi, 17. "I will offer to thee the sacrifice of thanksgiving, and will call upon the name of the Lord." Ps. cvii, 22. "And let them sacrifice the sacrifices of thanksgiving, and declare his works with rejoicing." Ps. li, 17. "The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart. O God, thou wilt not despise." Paul says in Heb. xiii, 15. "By him therefore let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually, that is, the fruit of our lips, giving thanks to his name;" and he adds in the next verse, "But to do good and to communicate forget not: for with such sacrifices God is well pleased." He tells us again in Rom. xii, 1, I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service.

Here are brought to view the sacrifices we are to make; but to suppose that these constitute the antitype of those typical sacrifices, is a most manifest absurdity. If, because the offering was brought to the door of the tabernacle, the antitype to which that pointed must be brought there also, it has nothing to do with our prayers and confessions; for that antitype was Christ. But there were prayers and confessions made, under the typical system, independent of the offerings, and we are curious to know what they then signified, since they have now become the antitype of those offerings! It is on this wrong premise that the whole article, above referred to, is based; and we might content ourselves with having shown the falsity of this, but there are some other points we wish to notice.

It is said that "In order for the children of Israel to hear the sound of the high priest's bells when he goes into the most holy, they must not be sounding trumpets, and calling upon their fellows to come up and offer their offerings, (at a time when there is to be no man in the tabernacle of the congregation, and they are forbidden to offer anywhere else,) but they must of necessity be silent listeners; from which they would reason, that when our High Priest enters the Most Holy we must not be presenting our offerings (7) but must be waiting in silence. This they say is "in keeping with Luke i, 9, 10, 21, where the multitude were waiting and praying without, while Zacharias went into the temple to burn incense." But we learn by reading the passage that Zacharias was not a high priest, but performed the priest's office in the order of his course, [verse 8,] and his lot was to burn incense when he went into the temple, [verse 9,] and there appeared unto him the angel of the Lord standing on the right side of the altar of incense. Verse 11. The altar of incense was in the first apartment and not in the second; therefore it is not the time of the cleansing of the sanctuary that is here brought to view; and his act of burning incense on that altar, in the first apartment, is by no means the same as that of a high priest going into the most holy with a burning censer. So they have here taken the wrong man, the wrong time, and the wrong event to illustrate their position.

It is further said that this is in keeping "with Rev. viii, 1, 3, 4, where there was silence in heaven during the time the incense was offered with the prayers of all saints;" by which we are of course to understand that the silence mentioned in Rev. viii, 1, is what, according to the theory of these persons, will exist during the cleansing of the heavenly Sanctuary. Let us look at this. We read, "And when he had opened the seventh seal there was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour." We are aware that events are not brought to view in their chronological order in the book of Revelation; but any such chain of events as the seven seals, the seven trumpets, &c., cannot of course, be disarranged. We cannot place the fourth seal before the third, nor the fifth before the fourth, nor the seventh before the sixth. But what takes place under the sixth? We learn from Rev. vi, 12-17, that under the sixth seal, the heavens depart as a scroll, the kings of the earth and the great men hide themselves in the dens and rocks of the mountains, and cry unto them, Fall on us and hide us from the wrath of the Lamb; for the great day of his wrath is come and who shall be able to stand. In other words, the sixth seal, beholds the coming of Christ and the end of the world: and it is not until the seventh is opened that there is silence in heaven for the space of half an hour; and yet they apply that silence to the cleansing of the sanctuary, before Christ leaves it: an event which must take place under the sixth seal! The whole of the seventh seal is applied to one of the many events which transpire under the sixth seal! I can hardly conceive how it would be possible to make a more palpable misapplication of sacred scriptures!

As regards the offering of incense mentioned in verses 3-5, it can have no connection with verse 1, from the fact that verse 2 introduces another chain of events; namely, the seven trumpets, which, according to universal acknowledgment, began to be fulfilled far in the past.

We are now prepared for the inquiry, Has the cleansing of the Sanctuary commenced? It was told Daniel, "Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the Sanctuary be cleansed." Clearly enough those days are in the past. Unless, therefore, the words of the angel have failed, a work has commenced called the cleansing of the Sanctuary; but there is no work either in the type or out of the type, to which this expression ever has been, or ever can be, applied, except to the entrance of the high priest into the Most Holy place, and his ministrations while there. Whenever the expression is used, this is the work which is brought to view, and this only.

I know of no period of time which is designated and set apart, in the Scriptures, as an "antitypical day of atonement" in which the Sanctuary shall be cleansed, more than that in which this work is performed. We consider this idea as springing from an undue regard to the formulas of the type, in reference to which we have already spoken. And the matter is carried still farther, when it is urged, because the first part of the day of atonement was the night season, and there were also several offerings to be made, before the cleansing of the Sanctuary could commence, that therefore the greater part of this "antitypical day of atonement" must pass, before the cleansing of the true Sanctuary shall take place.

Dan. viii, 14, does not read that, unto 2300 days, then shall the antitypical day of atonement commence, and somewhere in the latter part of that day, the length of which nobody knows, the Sanctuary shall be cleansed! All that gave the day of atonement in the type its distinction and importance, was the fact that on that day the great work of cleansing the sanctuary was performed. In the antitype this great event only is brought to view, and the definite period of its commencement is marked out. Here is a point that no sophistry can evade. If the 2300 days have ended, the cleansing of the Sanctuary is going on. Doubtless they would deny that the days have ended were it not that that point is settled by a "demonstration" in which they have implicit faith.

Num. xxix, 7-11, where an account is given of the offerings of the day of atonement, is quoted to show that we have now an opportunity of offering our sacrifices, that is, our prayers and confessions; also that we must come to the door of the tabernacle, the first apartment; and also that the cleansing of the Sanctuary must be for a time deferred. Now all who regard the matter in this light, since they profess such adherence to the type, and since they make our confessions the antitype of those offerings, are bound by consistency to show how many and what kind of confessions answer to "one young bullock! one ram! and seven lambs of the first year!" &c. The idea might be followed out till it would become ridiculous in the extreme.

There are other considerations which to my mind are proof on this point; and I make no one responsible for the positions taken. If the Sanctuary is not yet being cleansed, it involves all three of the angels of Rev. xiv, in a failure.

The first angel proclaimed, Fear God and give glory to him; for the hour of his Judgment is come. At the end of the 2300 days, when that message closed, had that time come? If the judgment scene which takes place in the second apartment of the Sanctuary, to which this proclamation doubtless refers, did not then commence, it had not come; and the first angel with his message, was too fast. But we believe that work did then commence; that there was the time when judgment began at the house of God, and the time came when Daniel, and all the righteous in the person of their Advocate should stand in their lot.

The second angel proclaims that Babylon is fallen. Why is Babylon fallen? Because she rejected special truth. A time was coming, in fulfillment of the designs of Heaven, when a change should take place in the position of our great High Priest, and, consequently, a change in his relation to the world. A truth was given which would prepare people for that change. This truth she scornfully rejected. Could God continue his Spirit and blessing to her in such a course? No. Could he withhold the accomplishment of his plans? No. The second angel uttered his warning; and all who then felt the force of that truth left her communion. The work moved on: our great High Priest withdrew himself to his closing ministration in the second apartment of the holy Sanctuary; and great Babylon was left in her barren pomp, destitute of the spirit and power of vital godliness. She is now becoming a hold of every foul spirit; and when this has progressed far enough to be apparent to every honest mind, we believe they will heed the voice of Rev. xviii, 4; and that, consequently, another thinning of her ranks yet awaits her.

Our High Priest has entered the second apartment, and the way is prepared for the third angel. One portion of his message is, "Here are they that keep the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus." This is based on the fact that "the temple of God was opened in heaven, (when Christ changed his position,) and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament. God's people are permitted to look by an eye of faith, into the inner apartment of the true Tabernacle: they there behold the ark of God, and their attention is called at once to the law contained within it; and the fact that there is now a special movement taking place in regard to that violated law, is proof that the second apartment of the Sanctuary has been opened, and the ark of the testament is seen. No person can receive the true light on the Sanctuary, and the present position and work of our great Mediator, without having his attention especially directed to the ten commandments. There is a beautiful harmony in all this, just such as we would expect to find in the plan and work of God.

Since, then, the closing work of the Sanctuary is being performed, it may be asked, What is the position of God's people and of the world, during this time; and how are we now to obtain forgiveness of sin?

It is a prerogative of this dispensation over the former, that the blood of Christ does cleanse us from, or take away, our sins. Ever since he commenced his work for mankind as Priest in the holy Sanctuary, it has been their privilege to avail themselves of the merits of his blood by faith in him. As long as that blood is ministered they can do this; and we have noticed that it is ministered in both apartments of the Sanctuary, the second as well as the first. But a consistent faith in Christ, involves the necessity of an understanding of his position and of his work; here therefore a restriction must be made. Light enough has been given us in the Word to trace our Saviour through all his characters as Prophet, Priest, and King, and we must keep our eye fixed upon him. He says, "I am the way, the truth and the life;" and unless we heed the light which reveals to us his position and work, be witnesses against us when he says, "Ye will not come to me, that ye might have life." To come to him therefore at the present time, and to exercise an effective faith in him, we must have an understanding of his present position. We come to him therefore as our great High Priest, performing his last and special work, pleading his blood before the mercy-seat, beneath which reposes God's righteous law, a violation of which has made his sacrifice and mediation necessary; and as the scene is thus presented before us, we see the necessity of keeping that law in all its requirements. Those who therefore, with the present light on this subject, shall attempt to find in Christ a Saviour, while living in violation of that holy law, or shall seek him as minister in the first apartment of the Sanctuary, will find that he has withdrawn himself from them, and knows them not.

Again, while Christ exercises the office of Priest, he is a mediator between God and man, and those who will come unto him may avail themselves of his mediation. He is Priest in the second apartment as well as the first. If we confess our sins, he is yet faithful and just to forgive us our sins." But as surely as Babylon is fallen, and evil men and seducers are waxing worse and worse, and all are being drawn into the absorbing whirlpool of spiritualism, so surely his Spirit and sympathy is withdrawn from them as a body. Some may here call us bigoted and exclusive; but they may as well say the same of the whole plan of salvation, because it contains prescribed conditions with which men must comply, or they can never be saved.

We see then that to those who are honest enough to seek salvation according to the light of revealed truth, there is yet left a brief hour of probation, while the work of the Sanctuary is closing, and the last message of mercy is going forth. In view of these things how solemn is our position! How should we let our light shine! What manner of persons ought we to be! What manner of lives ought we to live! With what zeal should we engage in the service of God, that we may find at last to our eternal joy, our sins forgiven, and our names retained in the Lamb's book of life.

D. W.

A COMPREHENSIVE VIEW OF THE SANCTUARY.

As advocates of consistency, we feel compelled to notice any theory which presents a wide departure from, and a false application of, the teachings of sacred Scripture on Sanctuary subjects. On the subject of the Sanctuary we find a short article in the Christian Reformer, of Jan. 10th, by O. D. Gibson, which we will briefly notice, as we wish to present our readers with the various phases of thought that may exist on this important portion of present truth. We do not like to see people make this question altogether of the earth, earthly, nor altogether spiritual, and foggy. The view under consideration is a strange mixture of both, and very "comprehensive" inasmuch as it takes in both earth and heaven! We will present its main features by extracts from the article. It reads:—

"It seems from reading the 6th chap. of Daniel, that no one need mistake what is the Sanctuary, to which he is being instructed,

"This one was to be 'trodden' under foot by the wicked governments, symbolised in the vision. Hence the inquiry, How long the vision to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot? The last horn power in the vision 'magnified himself even to the prince of the host,' and by him was the place of his sanctuary cast down, or trodden under foot. It is said of this same power, in the 7th chap., 'And shall devour the whole earth, and shall tread it down, and break it in pieces.'

'Now how long shall this treading down last, or continue. The wicked kingdoms of earth have trodden under foot the host or people of God—saints of the Most High, each in their turn, and also the sanctuary, the place of worship, or offering, which is neither at Jerusalem or in the mountains of Samaria, but in any and every place under heaven where there is any one of the host to offer praise from a sincere heart. 'Unto 2300 days, and then shall the Sanctuary be cleansed.' Of what shall it be cleansed? Of those wicked, cruel powers, or governments, which have oppressed and trodden it under foot, with its rightful heirs.

"The earth, God's sanctuary, Christ's kingdom, is now cleansed out, and no more trodden under foot. Christ is the officiating high priest, of this host that worship in this down-trodden sanctuary. There was once a typical priesthood in the order of Aaron with a typical sanctuary and typical laws, but types were not to last always. Paul says, For the priesthood being changed there is of necessity a change of the law. Christ is the anti-typical High Priest; the new covenant, or gospel, is the anti-typical law.

"Now what is the anti-typical Sanctuary? In order that some minds may grasp this truth let me explain the old tabernacle, or its main features.

"It was longer than wide, divided into two rooms and a curtain, called a veil, hung as the partition between. The first of these rooms was called the sanctuary; into this room went the high priest every day, offering sacrifices and ministrations. See Heb. ix. The second room, within, or beyond this veil, was called the holy of holies; into this room the high priest went only once a year and always alone, to carry the blood of the sacrifices and sprinkle before the mercy seat to make atonement for the sins of the people.

"Now if I can understand Paul, he makes the anti-typical tabernacle to be earth and heaven, with a veil between. Earth the first room or sanctuary. Heaven the second, or holy of holies. Christ, our high priest, has offered himself a sacrifice for sins once for all, and has gone into the holy of holies, or heaven itself, to carry and present his own blood before the mercy seat. Inasmuch as the high priest in the type offered his sacrifices in the sanctuary, and passed from thence through the veil into the holy place, so Christ offered himself in the first room of God's great tabernacle and has gone within the veil into the second room or heaven itself."

It seems hardly necessary to reply to the ideas above set forth, and in doing so we are aware that we should only be using arguments that have been an hundred times repeated. A few words must therefore suffice.

Much stress is laid upon the phrase "trodden under foot;" and the writer concludes therefore that the Sanctuary must be something that the literal feet of literal men, can literally tramp upon. Here he makes the first departure from just conclusions. We are not to determine what the Sanctuary is from the fact that it is to be trodden under foot; but first let the Bible tell us what the Sanctuary is, and then we will determine from its teaching what the treading under foot is. But let us look further at this point which is so much harped upon by our opponents. Suppose the earth or the land of Palestine is the Sanctuary, which the treading under foot is supposed to prove, and we inquire, Is the treading it under foot, the literal treading upon it by men? No one will contend for a moment that it is, when brought right to the point at issue. What then is it? Why, the desolating and desecrating it. All then must admit that the treading under foot is a figure; and being a figure we can as well apply it to a Sanctuary in heaven as to one on earth. Thus we can take this objection out of the mouths of our opponents from their own confusion. Jesus is the minister of the heavenly Sanctuary; and which is the most consistent, to speak of treading under foot the Sanctuary, or its minister? yet the Bible speaks of treading under foot the Son of God, the minister of the Sanctuary; [Heb. x. 37;] and we say therefore that to speak of treading under foot the heavenly Sanctuary, in the same sense, is both scriptural and reasonable.

How Dr. G. gets such an "understanding" of Paul as to think that he makes the antitypical tabernacle to be earth and heaven, he does not tell us. Paul refers us to the true tabernacle in heaven, only, as the Sanctuary of the new covenant. Heb. viii. 1-5; ix. 23. He speaks of the first covenant, and tells us of its "worldly sanctuary," and from that he points to the true Sanctuary above which the Lord pitched and not man.

It is admitted above that the first tabernacle was typical; but the writer does not tell us by what analogy that building erected by Moses, thirty cubits long and twelve wide, could be a type of both earth and heaven. That tabernacle, with all its instruments, was made according to the pattern shown Moses; [Ex. xxv. 9, 40; Heb. viii. 5;] but can we suppose that the earth was shown him as the pattern of the first apartment, and heaven as that of the second? and if this were so, of what would the golden candlestick, the table of show bread, and the golden altar of incense be typical? There is no shadow of consistency in such a position, and we see not how any one can "grasp" it.

It is said that the Sanctuary is to be cleansed—of those wicked, cruel powers, or governments which have oppressed and trodden it under foot with its rightful heirs; but if those who entertain such a view would examine their subject they would learn that the cleansing of the Sanctuary is not of such a nature: it is cleansed by means of blood, and not by the destruction of the wicked; [Lev. xvi; Heb. ix, 22, 23;] it is cleansed of sin, and not of sinners. Sinners are never permitted to inhabit God's Sanctuary.

The idea that the sanctuary is any and everywhere where there is an honest worshiper, is sufficiently disproved by the fact that although there were synagogues, places of worship, scattered throughout Judea, there was nevertheless the sanctuary at Jerusalem. So there is now, though the worshippers are scattered up and down the land, a true Sanctuary in heaven.

O. D. Gibson says that Christ performed a part of his ministry on earth, the "first room" of the great tabernacle; but Paul says of Christ, "If he were on earth he would not as a priest." Heb. viii. 4. This is a fact that should be well borne in mind; Christ performs no part of his priesthood on the earth; which again is conclusive proof that the earth can have no claim of being the Sanctuary. We are glad to have him admit that the tabernacle or sanctuary of the first covenant, was a type of that of the second: so far he appears to be hovering around on the borders of truth; but we are surprised at his antitype. On a subject of such moment as the Sanctuary, around which cluster our eternal interests, and with which is connected almost every branch of present truth, it is important that we have correct ideas. With these few thoughts we submit the subject to our readers to be carried out as much farther as they choose in their own minds.

A BARR VIEW OF THE 2300 DAYS. OPINION OF A MILLERIANIST.

The last view of the 2300 days we have ever been called to consider, lately came under our observation in a tract entitled, "Pius Ninth, the last of the Popes." Commenting upon Matt. xxiv, 34, the writer says:

"Verily, I say unto you, this generation shall not pass away until all these things be fulfilled." Christ is here prophesying as to the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, and calls it the abomination which maketh desolate, spoken of by Daniel the prophet. This certainly gives us the time from which to commence the period of 2300 years. Titus destroyed the temple in the year 70 of the Christian era, within the lifetime of the generation to whom our Saviour foretold this terrible event. Therefore the 2300 years shall not have elapsed until the year 2370, which is 516 years from this present time. At that time the Jewish temple will be rebuilt, and all their former glory return to them again. They will never thereafter wander from the ways of God. He will receive them again into favor, and taking from them their hearts of stone, will give them hearts of flesh, and they shall believe."

We do not present this view for the sake of entering into any particular reply, or because we think it worthy of any, but to show our readers to what monstrous conclusions mind may be led which is not guided by the light of present truth. It is one of the concomitants of that theory which supposes that the Jews according to the flesh, are entitled to peculiar privileges above all people, and that there are glorious prophecies yet to be fulfilled in them, in their restoration to their native land, and to more than their former glory. And whenever the advocates of future Jewish national blessedness wish to set a time for their marvelous predictions to be fulfilled, we recommend to them the theory under consideration; as it is the best we know of on the subject, and it so well corresponds, as far as both reason and scripture are concerned, to their belief on other portions of this question.

But to return: the destruction of Jerusalem, in the words of the writer, "certainly gives us the time from which to commence the period of the 2300 years." We rarely meet with a declaration concerning scripture subjects, which compares with this in bearing upon its very face so little regard to the event concerning which it is spoken; so little regard to the context; so little regard to the prophecies which must harmonize with it; and so little regard to all laws of harmony and reason.

"This certainly gives us the time from which to commence the period of the 2300 years!" How do we know? How are we ever to know when the 2300 years commence? What event is to mark their commencement? Now we must know when this period commences and ends, or it follows that the Holy Spirit has numbered the sacred page with a revelation which is useless and absurd; namely, that at the end of the 2300 days a certain event is to take place, but no mortal is to know when the period commences!

Dan. viii, 14, is the only mention we have of the 2300 days; but that text is silent as to midnight about their commencement, or the events that mark it; hence Daniel says at the end of the chapter, that he was astonished at the vision, and none understood it. We must therefore look farther for an explanation. The time mentioned in chap. viii, above remained unexplained; hence when an explanation is given, it will be on time. We accordingly find in chap. ix, 20-25, when Gabriel comes to Daniel again, to give him "skill and understanding," and tells him to "consider the vision," (the same vision of course which before he understood not, Dan. viii, 27) he commences upon the time the very point, and the only point, before left unexplained.

Another period is now introduced to our notice. "Seventy weeks," says the angel, "are determined," others who rendered "cut off," upon thy people, &c. Events to mark the commencement of this period are plainly described in verse 25. "Seventy weeks are cut off." Cut off from what? From the consecration of the two visions of chap. viii and ix, and from Gabriel's own explanation, we learn that this is spoken of the 2300 days. Seventy weeks, or 490 days, are cut off from the 2300 days; hence the two periods must commence together. But the seventy weeks commence from the "going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem;" [Dan. ix, 25;] therefore the 2300 days must commence there also.

This is the only reasonable and scriptural explanation of this important period. It is the only one on which the honest student of prophecy can conscientiously base his faith; for the moment we endeavor to separate the two periods of the seventy weeks and the 2300 days, we destroy them both. We then become most as blind as some others, who believe that these days must extend to the coming of the Lord, and as the Lord has not yet come, they cannot commence with the seventy weeks; since commencing them at that date, (457 A. D.) they expired in 1844; and hence that they do not know where they do commence, and therefore they must wait till the Lord comes to find their termination, and then count back to find their commencement!! How brilliant these prophecies must be to such minds and how much strength and comfort they must derive from perusing them in God's book of revelation! The course of such does not furnish an illustration of that cheering declaration that "the path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day;" for theirs has been growing darker and darker, and bids fair to end in eternal night! Brethren, our only safety is in clinging to the sure word; in standing firm in that position which harmonizes with the declarations of prophecy, establishing the past, and sheds light on the present and future; a position, which, though many have apostatized from, they cannot refute.

If the 2300 days do not commence with the 70 weeks, no man knows, or can know, when they commence; and we may as well set them aside at once; for they become a mere cipher in the prophetic chain for which no place can be assigned. Now did not the writer above quoted know that the 2300 days must date from a commandment to restore and build Jerusalem? and did he think any such command went forth in the year 70? and does he think that Titus fulfilled the command to restore and build Jerusalem, when he destroyed the city, and razed it to the ground? Or how shall we account for this singular position? We can only do it by taking into consideration its intent, which is very evident. The writer appears to have made up his mind to have the Jews return at all events, and being settled upon this, he forgot to take into consideration what the Bible had to say upon the subject: very much like others at the present time, who have got their eye fixed on an ignis fatuus in the future, and have forgotten present truth, and present duty. He seems to have had a faint recollection that there was a prophetic period of 2300 days somewhere mentioned in the Bible, and doubtless thinking it gave an air of sanctity to his disposition of imaginary events, he clays it in with the most reckless disregard for all truth or propriety.

We will notice one more point before dismissing this subject. At the end of this period of 2300 days the Sanctuary is to be cleansed. Now what is the Sanctuary? and what is its cleansing? These are questions which have a vital connection with this prophetic period; and whoever would attempt to show when it terminates, must of course show that an event will then take place which the Bible recognizes as the cleansing of the Sanctuary. Unless he does this, he omits the most important portion of his subject and entitles his views to no notice or credence. But this writer says, "At that time the Jewish temple will be rebuilt, and all their former glory return to them again!" Is this then the cleansing of the Sanctuary? Surely it would be hard to conjecture whether he had ever read the Book of Hebrews, or ever raised his thoughts from earth to heaven. But then, that glorious land of Palestine, that "inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away," (everything but reserved in heaven! 1 Pet. i, 4.) must be the Sanctuary of course! and the restoration of the Jews there, and the rebuilding of the temple, &c., must be its cleansing! Of course it must!

In contrast with these absurdities, let us look for a moment at the true position; a position sufficiently in harmony with itself and with the word of God, to commend itself to every man's conscience; a position which is in harmony with all our past experience, and the more it is contemplated the more it will lead us to lift up our hearts in gratitude to God for the way in which he has led us, and the work he is doing for us.

The 2300 days (years) commence with the 70 weeks, in the 7th of Artaxerxes, king of Persia, v. u. 457; for then the decree went forth for the restoration and building of Jerusalem. Es. vii. That this is the true date is sufficiently attested by the fact that it is the only one which will harmonize with all those prophecies given in Dan. ix. concerning the Messiah. The days therefore ended in A. D. 1844. At that time Christ our great High Priest, the minister of the heavenly Sanctuary, entered from the Holy into the Most Holy, of the true Tabernacle above, there to commence his last act of ministration which is the cleansing of the Sanctuary, according to the teaching of Leviticus and Hebrews. Consequently the last work for man's salvation is now being accomplished. Most of our readers are well acquainted with the plain Bible testimony for these truths; and those who are not will find it set forth in our publication.

Brethren, it will be well for us if we keep our eyes fixed on present truth, and strive to know present duty, and remember the interest we have in the heavenly Sanctuary the closing ministration of which is now going on, and prepare ourselves for that final sentence which is soon to go forth, "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still; and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still; and he that is holy, let him be holy still." Rev. xxii. 11.

THE SANCTUARY OF THE NEW COVENANT.

THAT the building which we have been contemplating in the "History of the Worldly Sanctuary," did solely constitute the Sanctuary of the first covenant, cannot possibly be doubted by any one who professes faith in the inspiration of the Bible; and if there are any who deny it, we have only to remark, that to such we have nothing to say; since it is our design in this article to treat with Bible believers only.

That Sanctuary we have followed to its end; we have traced in its institution and its history; we have had before our mind its various offerings and sacrifices, and the institutions of its priesthood; and we are now prepared to inquire in the language of Bro. J. N. Andrews, "Why did God ordain this extraordinary arrangement? The sacrifices offered in the building could never take away sins. Why then were they instituted? The priests which here ministered were so imperfect that they had to offer for themselves. Why then was such a priesthood ordained? The building itself was but an imperfect, temporary structure, though finished to the perfection of human art. Why then was such a structure erected? Surely God does nothing in vain, and all this is full of meaning. Nor will the student of the Bible be at a loss to answer these questions."

When Paul speaks of a first covenant, [Heb. ix.] he necessarily implies a second; and when he connects with that covenant a Sanctuary and ordinances of divine service, he as clearly implies that the second will have a Sanctuary, with divine service also. But more than this, what was shown the prophet Daniel, decides definitely that the new covenant has its Sanctuary, and that with that Sanctuary is connected a priestly ministration. Only 490 years of that period of 2300 which was opened before Daniel, belonged to the first covenant, the earthly Sanctuary, and the Jewish church. At the end of that time he was given to understand that the Saviour would have accomplished his ministry on earth, and would have confirmed the new covenant with his people. From that point he is then carried forward eighteen hundred and ten years, and told that then the Sanctuary should be obtained. Dan. viii. 12. What is the Sanctuary here brought to view in the question we wish to decide; for this of course must be the one to which the earthly Sanctuary gave place when its services were finished—when the old covenant was succeeded by the new.

As we enter the field to search for truth on this point, four prominent views rise up before us. It is claimed by some that the land of Canaan is now the Sanctuary. Others of more relaxed views, claim that it comprises the whole earth. Still others there are, who take the word in a more spiritual, but no less unauthenticated, sense, and say that it means the Church. While the fourth view, which draws largest on our imagination and marvelousness, makes out this rolling earth to be only the first apartment of the new-covenant Sanctuary, and all heaven the second.

In seeking for correct views on this question, there is one thing which we must keep constantly before us, and that is, the relation which the Sanctuaries of the two covenants sustain to each other; namely, that of type and antitype. By keeping our eyes steadfastly fixed upon this, it will be almost as hard to arrive at wrong conclusions, as it would be easy, were we to lose sight of it.

We notice then, first, the numerous instances in which we are informed that the worldly Sanctuary was erected according to a pattern which God furnished. Mark his instructions to Moses: "Let them make me a Sanctuary . . . according to all that I show thee, after the pattern of the tabernacle, and the pattern of all the instruments thereof, even so shall ye make it." Ex. xxv. 8, 9. "And look that thou make them after their pattern which was showed thee in the mount." Verse 40. See chap. xxvi, 30; Acts vii, 44.

Every one will agree with us in the conclusion, that, wherever we may find this pattern, we shall find in it the antitype of the earthly Sanctuary; or in other words, that the pattern from which was erected the Sanctuary of the old covenant, is itself the Sanctuary of the better covenant under which we now live.

To this view, then, we will subject the theories which have been introduced. You who believe that the land of Palestine is now the Sanctuary, can you suppose that that land was shown Moses for a pattern? We should gather from Deut. xxiv. 1-4, that he never saw the land but once, and that was from the top of Pisgah. But if this was the case, Moses could not have followed his pattern very accurately; for no one can claim much of a resemblance between the land of Canaan and the building which Moses erected, thirty cubits long and ten broad. And if the land of Canaan is the antitypical Sanctuary, we inquire further, What in the antitype answers to the two apartments of Moses' building? and what to the golden candlestick, and what to the altar of incense? and what to the ark of the covenant? and what to the earthly priesthood, and their continual service? We here see that one of two positions must be immediately surrendered, and we must admit: (1.) that the pattern from which Moses built the typical Sanctuary, has no connection with the antitype; or, (2.) that the land of Canaan is not that antitype. Which shall we yield? We unhesitatingly reply, The latter; for, whereas this has nothing to support it, the former has nothing to oppose it.

These remarks will apply equally well to either of the other views mentioned, whether we take the first, that would make out the whole earth to be the Sanctuary, or the second, which would make it the Church, or the third, which would take in both heaven and earth together; and to subject either of these views to the questions above proposed, would lead us to the same result.

We will now turn to the Revelation of St. John; and while we continually bear in mind that he is looking, not to any spot on earth, or to the Church, but into Heaven, we will mark some of the objects which he there beholds. First, he beholds seven golden candlesticks [Rev. i. 12.] or seven lamps of fire burning before the throne; [chap. iv. 5;] second, he sees an angel with a golden censer, offering incense upon the golden altar which was before the throne; [viii. 3, 4;] and third, he witnesses the temple of God opened and beholds therein the ark of his testament; [ix. 19;] but we know nothing concerning the gold-den candlestick, the golden censer, the altar of incense, and the ark of the testament, only as they are connected with the Sanctuary. What then shall we conclude? that the true Sanctuary is in heaven? that John was here beholding the instruments of that Sanctuary? and that these were the patterns of the earthly vessels? Yea; for so Paul directly tells us, whose testimony we will now notice.

After discoursing upon the new covenant and the superiority of Christ's priesthood over that of Aaron, in the first seven chapters of Hebrews, Paul opens in the eighth as follows: "Now of the things which we have spoken this is the sum: We have such an high priest who is set on the right hand of the throne of the majesty in the heavens; a minister of the Sanctuary and of the true tabernacle which the Lord pitched and not man." He declares plainly in chapter ix, 23, 24, that the holy places made with hands were "figures of the true," and that the earthly tabernacles and its sacred vessels, were "patterns of things in the heavens."

He furthermore states concerning the priests on earth, that they served "unto the example and shadow of heavenly things," as Moses was admonished of God when he was about to make the tabernacle; for, we, saith he, that thou make all things according to the pattern showed to thee in the mount." Chap. viii, 5. From this we not only learn that the earthly Sanctuary was a figure, or type, of the Sanctuary in heaven, but also that the service of the priests here, was typical of the ministry of Christ above. And there is another important fact which will be universally conceded; and that is, that all the sacrifices offered in connection with the worldly Sanctuary pointed to the great sacrifice of Christ when he offered up himself on Calvary.

That the heavenly Sanctuary, like the earthly, has two holy places, is very evident, from the fact that the latter was a correct copy of the former; and not only this, but Paul distinctly speaks of it thus: "The holy places made with hands, which are the figures (plural) of the true," holy places. And the word rendered "holiest of all," and "holy place," in Heb. ix, 8, 12; x, 19, is plural in the original, and by Blacknight is rendered in these texts, "holy places," and by the Douay Bible, "the holies."

Thus are we established in the fact, that Christ when he ascended commenced his ministry in the first apartment; for otherwise there would have been no need of that apartment in the heavenly Sanctuary, and his ministry would not have been a correct antitype of the worldly service, which was performed throughout the entire year, except upon the day of atonement, in the holy place. And hence we see how wide of the truth that view comes, which will have it that all heaven is the most holy place, and that Christ has now been employed more than eighteen hundred years upon that abode and cleansing work, the cleansing of the Sanctuary, which, according to the type, was the only service to be performed in this apartment. And as this view includes the earth also as the holy place or first apartment, we would here remark, that the fallacy of any view which would connect the earth with the Sanctuary, is sufficiently shown by the following facts: 1. Christ is the minister of the Sanctuary; but, 2. No part of his ministry is performed on the earth; for "if he were on earth he should not be a priest," as there were priests chosen from among men to perform the services of the Sanctuary as long as it remained on earth. Heb. viii, 4. Therefore it is utterly futile to talk of the earth's being the Sanctuary, as a whole, or as any of its divisions.

Thus have we found satisfactory answers to each of those inquiries which led us forth in the commencement of this article. We have found that the earthly tabernacle was but a "figure of the true," a pattern of the Sanctuary in heaven. The priests which there ministered, served unto the "example and shadow of heavenly things;" and the sacrifices there offered continually pointed forward to the great sacrifice that should be made for the sin of man.

The way into the heavenly holy place, says Paul, "was not yet made manifest, while as the first tabernacle was yet standing." Heb. ix, 8. That is, God did not during the typical dispensation, lay open the true tabernacle, but gave to the people a figure or pattern of it. But when the time came that the service of the worldly Sanctuary ended, when the great Sacrifice was offered up on Calvary; when the dying Saviour cried with a loud voice, "It is finished," and darkness overspread all the land, and the earth quaked, and the rocks burst, and the veil of the temple was rent in twain from top to bottom, (which was of itself evidence enough that its work had for ever ceased,) then the way of the temple of God in heaven was laid open. The true Church has had since that time neither Sanctuary nor priesthood in ancient Jerusalem, but it has had both in heaven.

With this view of the subject there is a divine harmony apparent throughout the entire plan; the means devised for our salvation are laid open before us, as could in no other way be done; and we behold a force and beauty in those forms and ceremonies, which would otherwise appear useless and without meaning.

We have not spoken, nor did we in this article design to speak, particularly of the ministrations of the Sanctuary. We have here only aimed to offer a few reasons why we believe that there is a literal Sanctuary in heaven, the antitype of the earthly building. In the work of our great High Priest, as connected with this Sanctuary, is found a rich and ample field for the Bible student or any who feel an interest in the plan of salvation. With the scripture testimony on this point, doubtless our readers are mostly familiar.

Let us then remember that as the worldly Sanctuary was the great center of worship in the typical dispensation, so is now the heavenly Sanctuary above; that as the ark with the mercy-seat, was the "root, heart and marrow" of the whole temple, even so is it now. Within the ark were the tables of the covenant, the law of God; and as by faith we behold the ark in the temple in heaven, we are reminded of the same holy law. There it rests securely beneath the eye of Jehovah, and the man of sin may think in vain to change it. Before it Christ sheds his blood for those who seek pardon for his transgression. Let us see to it then that all our sins go beforehand to judgment, [1 Tim. v, 24] realizing that now is the time to do this work, and remembering that the services of the heavenly Sanctuary are accomplished once for all. They are not oft-repeated as was the case in the earthly building, but when its ministration has once closed, the last veil that would avail itself of

THE SCAPE-GOAT.

"And Aaron shall cast lots upon the two goats; one lot for the Lord and the other lot for the scape-goat." Lev. xvi, 8.

We find this passage in the description of the services performed on the yearly day of atonement under the typical dispensation; and as the goat of the sin-offering upon which the Lord's lot fell, and whose blood was ministered in the Most Holy Place, to make atonement for the Sanctuary and for the transgressions of Israel, typified, according to universal consent, the Saviour and the offering he made on Calvary, we naturally inquire, as we look forward to the great work which constitutes the antitype of the ancient yearly atonement, to what the scape-goat pointed, and who will be found in connection with the heavenly Sanctuary, and the closing up of the plan of salvation, bearing his character and answering to his antitype.

Because John says, [chap. i, 29,] "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh, (margin, beareth,) away the sin of the world," and because it is said of the scape-goat that he "shall bear upon him all their iniquities into a land not inhabited," [Lev. xvi, 22,] it has been concluded, without further consideration, by some, that the latter is a type of the former; and Dr. Clarke, also, in his note on Lev. xvi, 10, makes this remark: "Did not all this signify that Christ has so carried and borne away our sins, that against them who receive him as the only true atoning sacrifice they should never more be brought to remembrance?"

From the view, however, that Christ is the antitype of the scape-goat, we are compelled to differ, for what we consider very plain reasons.

1. If Christ, in bearing the sin of the world, fulfilled the antitype of the scape-goat, he must have accomplished it at the crucifixion; for Peter says of him, "Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree." 1 Pet. ii, 24. But in the type the goat was not sent away till after the cleansing of the Sanctuary; hence the antitype of this work cannot be performed till after the termination of the 2300 days; for it is not till after those days have ended that the Sanctuary is cleansed. Dan. viii, 14; Heb. ix, 23. It is therefore impossible to carry this work back to the crucifixion of Christ, which was even before he commenced his ministration in the Sanctuary above; and therefore he cannot be the antitype of the scape-goat.

2. Christ is our great High Priest, the minister of the Sanctuary; but the goat is something to be sent away by the priest: therefore he cannot be the priest himself: in other words, he cannot in this dispensation be Christ; but he must be a being whom Christ, after he has loaded him with the sins borne from the Sanctuary, can send away into a land not inhabited.

3. The goat was sent away from Israel, into a land not inhabited, to be heard of no more forever. But Christ will dwell in the midst of his people, the true Israel of faith.

4. It is impossible that two goats, one of which was chosen by the Lord, and is called the Lord's, and was for a sin-offering, while the other is not so called, but was left to perform an entirely different office;—it is impossible that these both should typify the same person.

From these considerations we think it must be evident to every one that Christ cannot be the antitype of the Levitical scape-goat. Who then can be? We answer, The Devil; and our reasons for this position are at hand:

1. We know of only two beings which any one has ever thought could possibly be typified by the scape-goat; and these are Christ and Satan. We have shown above that the goat cannot be a type of Christ; we must therefore look to the Devil for its fulfillment.

2. The Hebrew word for scape-goat, as given in the margin of Lev. xvi, 8, is Azazel. On this name, Jenks in his Comprehensive Commentary remarks, "Scape-goat. See diff. opm. in Dochart. Spencer after the oldest opinion of the Hebrews and Christians thinks Azazel is the name of the Devil; and so Rosenmüller, whom see. The Syriac has, Azazel, the angel (strong one) who revolted." The Devil is here evidently pointed out. Thus we have the definition of the Scripture term in two ancient languages, with the oldest opinion of the Christians in favor of the view that the scape-goat is a type of Satan.

3. In the common acceptance of the word, the term scape-goat, is applied to any miserable vagabond who has become obnoxious to the claims of justice; and while it is revolting to all our conceptions of the character and glory of Christ, to apply this term to him, it must strike every one as a very appropriate designation of the Devil, who is styled in scripture, the accuser, adversary, angel of the bottomless pit, Beelzebub, Belial, dragon, enemy, evil spirit, father of lies, murderer, prince of devils, serpent, tempter, &c., &c.

4. Our fourth reason for this position is the very striking manner in which it harmonizes with the events to transpire in connection with the cleansing of the heavenly Sanctuary, as far as revealed to us in the Scriptures of truth.

We behold in the type, 1. The sin of the transgressor imparted to the victim. 2. We see that sin borne in by the priest in the blood of the offering into the Sanctuary. 3. On the tenth day of the seventh month we see the priest with the blood of the sin-offering for the people remove all these sins from the Sanctuary, and lay them upon the head of the scape-goat. 4. The goat bears them away into a land not inhabited.

Answering to these events in the type, we behold in the antitype, 1. The great offering for the world made on Calvary. 2. The sins of all those who avail themselves of the merits of Christ's shed blood, by faith in him, in that blood are borne into the Sanctuary. 3. After Christ, the minister of the true tabernacle, [Heb. viii, 2,] has finished his ministration, he will remove the sins of his people from the Sanctuary, and lay them upon the head of their author, the antitypical scape-goat, the Devil. 4. The Devil will be sent away with them into a land not inhabited.

If we want a description of this event in plain terms we find it in Rev. xx, 1-3: "And I saw an angel come down from heaven having the key of the bottomless pit, and a great chain in his hand. And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil and Satan, and bound him a thousand years, and cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more till the thousand years should be fulfilled."

Now we would ask, What could be more fitting than that the author and instigator of all sin should receive the guilt of those transgressions which he has incited mortals to commit, but of which they have repented, back upon his own head? And what could be a more striking antitype of the ancient ceremony of sending away the scape-goat into the wilderness, than the act of the mighty angel in binding Satan and casting him into the bottomless pit at the commencement of the thousand years.

This is a point of transcendent interest to every believer. Then the sins of God's people will be borne away to be remembered no more forever. Then he who instigated them, will have received them back again. Then the serpent's head will have been bruised by the seed of the woman. Then the "strong man armed," (Satan,) will have been bound by a stronger than he, (Christ,) and the house of the strong man (the grave) spoiled of its goods, the saints. Matt. xii, 29; Heb. ii, 14. Then will the work of the enemy, in sowing tares among the wheat, [Matt. xiii, 24-43.] be forever remedied: the tares will have been gathered into bundles to burn, and the wheat gathered into the garner. Then our great High Priest will have come forth from the Sanctuary to pronounce the everlasting blessing upon his waiting people. Then shall we have come unto mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels. Then will the redeemed, placing the foot of triumph upon the world, the flesh and the devil, raise their glad voices in the song of Moses and the Lamb. O glorious day! May the Lord hasten it in his good time. Who would not, in view of this, take up the petition of the beloved John, "Even so, come Lord Jesus!"

These are scenes to which the children of hope in this lower world love to look forward. On these hang their brightest anticipations. There are the very portals to the glorious city, and to their eternal inheritance.

Such, we sincerely believe, is the order in which the Bible has introduced these events to our understanding. But there are those who would disturb this divine harmony, and mar the beauty of this arrangement, by denying some of its essential points. A correspondent writes under date of Nov. 14th, 1856, as follows:

"There are some who will not admit that the Devil is the scape-goat. One objection is on the word, atonement, in Lev. xvi, 10. They say, We don't believe the Devil is in partnership with Christ in making the atonement. This question has caused some division among Sabbath-keepers."

We have already made mention of the only two positions that can be taken on this question. He who, therefore, denies that the Devil is the antitypical scape-goat, is necessarily driven to the position that Christ fulfills this office; which view we think is not only very derogatory to the character of Christ, but involves some manifest absurdities.

If those who thus object had ever given any substance or tangibility to their views; if they had ever shown any good reason for believing that Christ is the great scape-goat of this dispensation; we should know better how to answer their objections. We should then be better able to judge whether they draw their views from sound premises, or whether they entertain them because they love to have a way of their own, and to differ with the mass of their brethren. As it is we can but re-iterate what appears to be the plain teaching of the Bible on the point, which we had supposed would, from its very consistency, stand from revelation, command itself to every candid man's belief.

The use of the word atonement in Lev. xvi, 10, is certainly a very trivial point to make the fulcrum of so important a question. The part which the scape-goat was to act, is in that chapter clearly defined; and any one can judge for himself how much merit there was attached to his office, and how much connection the part he acted had with removing the sins from the children of Israel. The only office he performed was to receive the sins of the people from the hands of the priest after he had borne them from the Sanctuary, to retain them upon his own head, and go away from Israel forever into a land not inhabited.

Reasoning from type to antitype, we believe the Devil will have a similar part to act. We can come to no other conclusion than that, the cleansing of the Sanctuary being finished, the sins of all those who have escaped his insidious wiles will be laid upon him and he be cast into the bottomless pit. People may call this if they choose, being in partnership with Christ, or they may designate it by any other expression; but the consistency of the view, and the testimony of the Bible on the point, cannot be altered.

We know that some will say that sins cannot be suffered for but once, and that it is absurd that Satan should suffer for those sins for which Christ has already suffered. But how long will such hold to this position? Let us see. For whom did Christ die? for a chosen few only, or for all? Evidently for all, otherwise all could not have an opportunity of repentance. "Well then," says one who is wedded to the pleasures of sin, "if sin can be suffered for but once, and Christ has suffered for my sins, what have I to fear? There is no suffering for sin for me to endure. I will therefore call all the enjoyment I can from the pleasures of this world, and on the threshold of eternity I will take my stand beside the holiest saint that ever lived, and claim an equal right with him to the glories of heaven; for Christ suffered for me as well as for him; and therefore I am as free." This is exactly the issue of the view taken; but the staunchest Universalism would require nothing better. Unless therefore we wish to yield the specific teachings of the Bible and become Universalists at once, we must abandon this theory. But its advocates may still contend that the wicked are exceptions, but that certainly sins that have been pardoned can never after be occasion of suffering to any being. But if when sins are pardoned that is the last of them, we would inquire how it happens that those very sins are transferred to the Sanctuary, and impurity imputed to it on their account. That this is so is one of the plainest teachings of the Bible. It is also certain that these sins are to be removed from the Sanctuary; and we would ask those who endorse the theory under consideration, what then is to be done with them, unless they are to be laid upon the head of their old author, the Devil.

From the fact that our sins when forgiven are only transferred through the blood of Christ to the Sanctuary, we learn that the pardon of our sins is only removing from us their guilt, by imputing to us the righteousness of another. But we are not the originators of sin. Behind all our transgressions there stands a guilty instigator; and why should it be thought more incredible or unscriptural that the guilt of those sins of which we repent, should be imputed to him who prompted us to commit them, than that the righteousness of Christ, upon our repenting, should be imputed to us? Rom. ii, 22; 2 Cor. v, 21.

Why it was anciently that the sins of Israel were borne into the Sanctuary and finally carried away on the head of the scape-goat into the wilderness, and why our sins are now transferred to the Sanctuary through the blood of Christ, to be laid finally upon the head of the great antitypical scape-goat, the Devil—why this arrangement was made instead of some other, is not for us to inquire into nor question. It is among the "mysteries of godliness;" [2 Tim. iii, 16;] and, says the Prophet, [Dent. xxix, 29,] "The secret things belong unto the Lord our God; but those things which are revealed belong to us and to our children for ever."

Is the Silence in Heaven During the Cleansing of the Sanctuary?

As John was shown in vision things which must shortly come to pass, he was carried forward to an event which he describes as follows: "There was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour." Rev. viii, 1. Is this the time during which the Sanctuary in heaven is being cleansed? We answer, It is not, and will proceed to offer our proof, simply premising at first that we are called to the subject by the following from a correspondent:

"I think your views (in the main) relative to the Sanctuary are correct; but I do not believe that our great High Priest has yet entered the Most Holy of the heavenly Sanctuary. When he enters there, I believe there will be silence in heaven about the space of half an hour—then the Son of man will be revealed."

We can assign no grounds on which a man can entertain such a view as this, only a want of attention to the order in which events are brought to view in the book of Revelation. We are well aware that all events from first to last in that book are not presented in their chronological order; but there are certain series presented which can in no wise be disarranged, but must take place one after the other in regular succession. Such are the seven seals of chapters vi-viii. The seven trumpets, commencing with chapter viii, the three angels of chapter xiv, and the seven angels with the plagues of chapter xvi. Such series of events as these, we say, cannot take place in any other than their regular order. This all will admit.

We will now look more particularly at some of the events transpiring in order under the seven seals; for with these seals our subject is connected. We read, "And when he had opened the seventh seal, there was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour." This silence as far as we have any account, occupies the whole of the seventh seal, and is the only event to transpire under it. But the seventh seal cannot be opened before the sixth; and the events of the sixth cannot take place before the fifth; but they must come in their order: the fifth, then the sixth; and after the events of the sixth have all transpired, the seventh, is opened which brings silence in heaven.

Fixing this fact in our mind, we will go back a little and see what took place under the sixth seal: "And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal and, lo, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood; and the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs when she is shaken of a mighty wind: and the heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together; and every mountain and island were moved out of their places: and the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every freeman, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: for the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?" Rev. vi, 12-17.

No one can be at a loss to understand the events here brought to view. If we are not here carried to the end of this present state, and the coming of the Son of man, we know of no scriptures carrying us to those events. It must be evident to any one, therefore, that when the great men of the earth shall call for the rocks and mountains to hide them from the presence of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb, Christ will have left his mediatorial position, and the cleansing of the Sanctuary will have been finished. But it is not till after these events that the seventh seal is opened, and there is a silence in heaven for the space of half an hour. Therefore it is fixed beyond the least shadow of a possibility of contradiction that the silence in heaven has nothing to do with the cleansing of the Sanctuary; for this cleansing is all finished under the sixth seal, before the seventh seal is opened, under which the silence occurs; and this objection therefore to the view that our great High Priest is now doing up his last work for the salvation of mankind, vanishes into thin air.

The Hour of His Judgment is Come.

A Correspondent writes:

"Is there not a definite period of time brought to view in this announcement? How long is an hour? And fifteen days. Each day for a year would be fifteen years. Commencing on the tenth day of the seventh month, 1844, more than twelve years are in the past. We have several examples of double symbols in the Bible; as in Rev. xi, the two olive trees, and the two candlesticks, and in chapter xvii, the seven heads and seven mountains, and also the woman, that great city. Why may not this be so? It looks to me as if it might be."

Answer.—It is true that there are double symbols, and the instances referred to, are good illustrations; but we have no instances of time's being doubly prophetic. The rule which is given us for the application of symbolic time is found in Num. xiv, 34 and in Eze. iv, 6; a day for a year. Now if after applying this rule once, and making a prophetic day symbolize a literal year, we may take that literal year, and make it prophetic, symbolizing 360 other literal years, (that being the number of days allowed for a prophetic year,) where shall we place any limit to this work? Why not make a third application, and so on? Thus having a day to start with we might make it symbolize one year, or 360 years, or 129600 years, as convenience or fancy might dictate; and all the force and definiteness of prophetic time would be destroyed.

As a day is sometimes prophetic, so the aliquot parts of a day may also be prophetic; and we have a prophetic hour. But is the hour of Rev. xiv, 6, prophetic? If it is we see that it can at most, denote but fifteen days. But there exists no necessity for calling it prophetic. The word there translated, hour, is abundantly used in the New Testament in three different senses: 1. As denoting a literal hour of about 60 minutes; 2. Denoting time indefinite; 3. Prophetic. Instances of its use in the first sense need not be multiplied. They are such as John xi, 9: "Are there not twelve hours in a day?" &c. It is used indefinitely in instances like the following: "The hour cometh when ye shall neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem worship the Father." John iv, 21. "Ye were willing for a season to rejoice in his light." 1b. v, 35. "But this is your hour and the power of darkness." Luke xxi, 33. "Yes, the time cometh that whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God service." John xvi, 2. "Now it is high time to awake out of sleep." Rom. xiii, 11. "He therefore departed for a season." Philom. 15. "The time is come for thee to reap." Rev. xiv, 15. And when it is said, "The hour of his judgment is come," we think that time indefinite is also brought to view. An instance of its prophetic use is found in Rev. ix, 15.

The hour of his judgment is come. To determine further whether the hour in this text is designed to express definite time, we inquire if there are any other scriptures referring to this period of judgment, which point out its duration. This work of judgment is evidently the cleansing of the Sanctuary. Where it is announced, it says simply, "Unto two thousand and three hundred days, thou shalt the Sanctuary be cleansed;" [Dan. viii, 14:] but how long a period would be occupied in this cleansing, we are not told. Again: "For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God," [1 Pet. iv, 17:] but how long it would be before the judgment of the house of God would be completed, is not said. There is another text however more definite. The mighty angel of Rev. 2, standing with one foot upon the sea, and the other on the land, lifts up his hand, and swears that time shall be no longer. As this angel is supposed to be identical with the first angel of Rev. xiv, his message would carry us to the commencement of the period of the judgment of the house of God. But he declares that time shall be no longer; from which we understand that all the prophetic periods there terminated; and that since then, there are no events to be marked by definite prophetic time. If our application of this scripture be correct, it decides beyond controversy that the word hour, in the proclamation "The hour of his judgment is come," is not prophetic, and does not denote a definite period of time. A large proportion of that hour of judgment is past. The remaining work in the heavenly Sanctuary we believe will be brief; while a corresponding work on earth will be impelled by the energies of the Holy Spirit, and cut short in righteousness.

THE 2300 DAYS

What takes Place when they Terminate?

It has appeared to us not a little strange that on a subject claiming so much attention as this has, so little thought should apparently be bestowed by some upon the question above proposed. All are fast being driven to some definite conclusion on this question; and we hope that after a little, there will be less wild and reckless speculation in regard to it, than there has been for some time past.

Two points, the seventh and the twentieth of Artaxerxes, are the only ones which can be taken for the commencement of this period. And since it terminated in 1844, as it would, commencing in the seventh of Artaxerxes, 457 u. c., for which we think there is abundant evidence, every year has been more or less prolific of new points set for its termination. As point after point has passed, the matter has been extenuated and extenuated, upon every imaginable ground that human ingenuity could invent, till now the most distant point, the present year, to which it can possibly extend, has been reached, and we wait to see, when this is past, where their landing point will be.

But what has been the cause of all these efforts to prolong the days? Simply this: It is assumed (for we must consider it entirely an assumption) that the Lord must come at the end of the days. When therefore the time in 1844, to which the mass of testimony pointed as the termination of that period, and on which all Adventists were agreed up to that date, passed by, it followed that if the prophecy located the appearing of the Saviour in the clouds of heaven at the end of those days, they had not then ended.

Upon this ground but two positions then remained to be taken: either to give up the movement as a delusion, or to extend the days still further into the future. The Advent Herald, perceiving that there was no testimony, historical or scriptural, by which they could be shown to reach beyond the Fall of '44, provided they commenced with the seventy weeks of Dan. ix, simply detached them from that period, (by which alone we have any clue to their commencement,) and set them adrift; and it has prudently refrained since then from assigning any date for their termination: designing apparently to wait until time shall bring us unmistakably to their close, when we can readily, if curiosity so prompt us, calculate when they commenced. This is one way of prolonging the days.

But there is another class to which we more especially refer, who have been more consistent in one thing; namely, in not endeavoring to separate the seventy weeks from the 2300 days, but less consistent in another; and that is, in endeavoring to remove the starting point, so as to bring their termination to some point in the future. To this course the Crisis still adheres; although it is evident from the spirit of its articles, that the writers themselves have but very little faith in their own positions, and fail to inspire any in others. Such expressions as this, "If they do not end this Spring, I expect they will in the Fall," betray an utter lack of confidence in the minds of those who make them, and show that they are groping their way through a labyrinth of mere conjecture and uncertainty.

Point after point, as we have said, has been set, and passed; but their advocates, nothing daunted by their passing, which shows again that they put no great faith in their own teaching, have been ready to gage about and set another. To such an extent has this been carried that we can look upon it in no other light than mere trifling with the prophetic scriptures. Against such a course, we enter our solemn protest. What is, what must be, its effect, upon the community at large? Most disastrous! The Advent movement in the eyes of the people is turned into a mere farce! Their confidence is destroyed in anything that teaches the near coming of Christ; and their ears are closed from perceiving ever hearing the truth on this subject, whatever it may be. ~~Then~~ ^{at} least, pause and seriously consider before rushing headlong in a course leading to such results as these, the effects of which may be for eternity. Again we protest against it.

But what should have been done? We answer that the movements which we have been considering, and the confusion that has arisen on this subject since 1844, need not, and we honestly think would not, have taken place, if candid attention had been given to the question proposed at the head of this article.

What are we to expect at the end of this prophetic period of the 2300 days? Is it said that the Lord shall then come? We answer, No. But it is said, The prophecy reads that then the Sanctuary shall be cleansed. Very well, we believe it; but wherein does this prove that the Lord will then appear the second time? It is answered, The earth is the Sanctuary, it is to be cleansed by fire, and this takes place at the coming of Christ. To these assertions we object. The earth, we know, is to be purified by fire, but when does this take place? Peter tells us [2 Pet. iii, 7] that it is reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men. When does the perdition of ungodly men come? Answer. At the second resurrection, 1000 years from the first. Rev. xx. We are therefore that the renovation of the earth by fire will not take place at the second coming of Christ, but 1000 years after; and hence it has no connection with the 2300 days.

But here is not the root of the difficulty. This lies, we think, in considering the earth, or any part of it, the Sanctuary. Where is the testimony that the earth is the Sanctuary? The definition of the word, and its usage throughout the Scriptures, forbid such an application; for of the 146 times that the word occurs in the Bible, it is not once applied to the earth. Only two or three texts are ever urged with any confidence as applying to the land of Canaan; but these upon a moment's consideration will be seen to harmonise with the other passages, which almost uniformly refer to the typical tabernacle on the earth, or to the true Sanctuary pitched not by man, of which the former was but a figure or pattern.

We do not design to enter here into any particular argument on the Sanctuary. It is sufficient for our purpose in this article to deny positively the correctness of that theory which would make it the earth or any part of it. We wish all adherents to that view, whose eyes may fall upon these lines, to know that their belief is here called in question and denied; and we would respectfully request them to consider this a sufficient reason for a careful and thorough re-examination of the subject on their part. The truth is what we all want; for error will benefit none of us; and the truth, carefully and scripturally sought after, may be learned; for the wise shall understand. We have heretofore called upon that class of Advent believers called Timonians, for their evidence that the Lord would appear at the end of the 2300 days. We have not seen it presented. Again we put the question, What do you expect to transpire when the days end? The Lord will not then come: there is no such promise. But another work entirely is there located; namely, then shall the Sanctuary be cleansed. And, we repeat, could it be shown that the period extends to the present year, you are doomed to disappointment, if you embrace in your expectations the coming of the Lord.

The present year will soon be past. What position will you then take? Will you disconnect the seventy weeks and 2300 days, as the Herald has done? or will you admit that the prophecy contemplates another event than that which you have expected? If the latter, you will doubtless be willing to go back, and admit its termination where the weight of evidence conspires to place it—in the seventh Jewish month of 1844.

We cannot admit that any prophecy has failed; or that the great movement on the Advent doctrine in the past, was not in the main correct. We believe rather that according to the word of God, the cleansing of the Sanctuary there commenced; that the closing work of our great High Priest in the tabernacle above for the salvation of men, has since then been going on, and will soon be closed up forever. We know that many do not credit, and some are disposed to ridicule, the idea of a Sanctuary in heaven; but we see not how any can thus regard the subject after an intelligent reading of the books of Leviticus and Hebrews; after beholding the earthly tabernacle which is expressly declared to be a figure of the true; and after studying the work of the priests on earth, who, as the Apostle tells us, ministered unto the example and shadow of heavenly things. Heb. viii. By this we are brought down into the "little while," during which we are admonished by the Apostle to have patience; for, says he, he that shall come will come, and will not tarry. By this alone can the prophetic word be harmonized, and the past explained. This establishes the present, and flashes its glorious light into the future.

"AND NO MAN CAN SHUT IT."

We read in one place in the Revelation, "that the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament." To the church which should be living when this took place, Christ says, referring manifestly to the same event, "Behold I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it."

What connection the two events here brought to view have with each other will not probably be apparent at first to those by whom the Bible is but little read, or who have not made the plan of man's salvation a particular study. But to those who are acquainted with the teachings of the scriptures on the subject of the Sanctuary, the ministration therein performed, the nature of its cleansing, and the entrance of our High Priest from the Holy into most Holy Place, at the appointed time, we need offer no explanation.

Another consideration engages our attention: it is that when Christ opens before his church a door which no man can shut, there is seen the ark of his testament. This ark of the testament, whether contemplated on the earth, as man was connected with it under the former dispensation, or in heaven as it is here introduced to us, is equally an object of interest.

Considering that the Sanctuary of the first covenant was but a type or shadow of the Sanctuary of this, which now exists in heaven, who may tell us that the ark of the true tabernacle which the Lord pitched and not man, differs from the former, either in the purposes for which it was used, or the things which it contains? The ark of the earthly sanctuary was called the ark of the testimony, or testament. Ex. xxv, 22. It contained the tables of stone, on which were engraved by the finger of God the ten commandments, and just as he engraved them. Ex. xxv, 16, xxxi, 18. The ark of the heavenly Sanctuary, called also the ark of his testament, as in the text at the head of these remarks, must also contain similar tables, else it was not prefigured by the former.

The ark, then, under whatever dispensation we view it, suggests to our mind the same idea: the commandments of God, as he uttered them from Sinai, and engraved them with his own finger.

But who can suppose that thoughts of the ark, or the writing it contained, suggested to the mind of a Jew, the observance of the first day of the week as a day of rest? Neither does it suggest such an idea to our minds, but quite another, according to the reading of the fourth commandment contained in it, which says the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God, &c.

Such are some of the considerations which naturally connect themselves with the ark of God. But, says the Revelation, "The temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament;" therefore considerations like the above have been agitating the minds of the people; and as we have seen through the declarations of his word, those tables of the law carefully preserved in the holy temple of the Highest, impressions of the immutability and perpetuity of that royal law have rolled over us, and we could do no otherwise than turn our feet to the keeping of all those holy commandments.

Here is a nail in a sure place. The tables of the testimony are enthroned in heaven. There they exist without liability of changing or perishing. Men may legislate and hold councils, and pass decrees, and vent their rage against those who will acknowledge the claims of the royal law, but they cannot touch the law: as high as heaven from earth it still remains above their reach. What must man do to change it? He must ascend to heaven, dethrone Jehovah, burst through the angel guards into the sacred temple, wrest from the ark the mercy-seat, and with his own would-be omnipotent finger, change the writing of the imperishable tables.

And yet people will talk about the change of the law as a very little thing, or even proceed farther, and speak of its abolition. They might as well talk of abolishing earth and heaven.

The temple has been opened in heaven, and there is seen the ark of his testament. I have set before thee an open door; and no man can shut it. Men may endeavor with all their energies to obscure the claims of the law, but they cannot obscure them. They may raise all the stir they please amid the dirt of earth, and chuckle over the dust they succeed in throwing into their own eyes; but we have only, as it were, to look to heaven, and behold the ark of his testament.

We have told what man must actually do if he would affect in one jot or tittle the law of God, provided the view we have taken of the passages in Revelation be correct. To prove that we are not correct in our application, it must be shown that the ark of the former dispensation, and consequently that dispensation itself with its attendant ministry, looked forward to no antitype; that there is no temple nor literal city, called the New Jerusalem, in heaven; that there is no ministration in this dispensation in behalf of mankind, of which the former was a figure; that the expression, the ark of his testament, does not now mean what it used to, or that the scene of Rev. xi, 19, is not laid in this dispensation, or that the language has no intelligible meaning.

But we have no fears for the bulwarks of truth on these points; and we feel safe for the present in resting down upon the evidence that a door which reveals to us the ark of God's testament has been opened in heaven, with the divine assurance that no man can shut it.

SYNOPSIS OF THE PRESENT TRUTH. No. 8.

THE SEVENTY WEEKS AND 2300 DAYS.

HAVING passed through the symbols of the second, seventh, and a portion of the eighth chapters of Daniel, we turn again to this last chapter to notice some other points there introduced. As recorded in verse 13, Daniel heard one saint ask another the question, how long the vision should be concerning the daily sacrifice and the transgression of desolation to give both the Sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot. The angel then addressed himself to Daniel and said, Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the Sanctuary be cleansed. How far this declaration was designed to be an answer to the question, which he had heard, we will not endeavor to determine; but this much is revealed—enough for Daniel to know, enough for us—that unto twenty-three hundred days, then shall the Sanctuary be cleansed. This period is not alluded to again in that chapter: all the other parts of the vision are there fully explained; and it must have been therefore, this point concerning the time, that troubled the mind of the Prophet, and in reference to this, solely, that he exclaims at the end of the chapter, "I was astonished at the vision, but none understood it."

It was in the third year of Belshazzar, B. C. 553, that Daniel had this vision of chap. viii. Fifty-three years previous to this time, Jerusalem had been taken by Nebuchadnezzar, and the seventy years' captivity commenced; and thirty-five years before this, the Chaldeans had utterly demolished the city, broken down its walls and burnt the house of God with fire. 2 Chron. xxxvi, 19. Daniel had learned from the prophecy of Jeremiah, [chap. xxv,] that the seventy years of captivity were drawing near their close. In the first year of Darius, B. C. 538, as we read in the first verses of Dan. ix; and it is evident that he so far misunderstood the period of the 2300 days as to suppose that they ended with the end of the seventy years of Israel's servitude; therefore turning his face toward the prostrate city and the ruined temple of his fathers, he prays God to cause his face to shine upon his sanctuary which is desolate. Verse 17.

"And while I was speaking and praying," says he, [chap. ix, 20-23,] even the man Gabriel whom I had seen in the vision at the beginning, being caused to fly swiftly, touched me about the time of the evening oblation. And he informed me and talked with me, and said, O, Daniel, I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding. At the beginning of thy supplication, the commandment came forth, and I am come to show thee; for thou art greatly beloved; therefore understand the matter, and consider the vision. Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people and upon thy holy city." &c.

That this is a continuation of the explanation of the vision of chap. viii, would seem sufficiently evident from the very face of the matter, without the aid of any special argument to prove it so. But as there is a vital point that hinges upon this fact, and as that point has been denied by some who in so doing were evidently sinning against their own better judgment, and the light which God had given them, we will offer a few reasons, which place it beyond the limits of contradiction, that the vision upon which Gabriel explains in Dan. ix, is the same that is recorded in chap. viii.

1. Gabriel had received a charge, [chap. viii, 16,] to make Daniel understand the vision; but at the end of that chapter, Daniel says he was astonished at the vision, but none understood it. Gabriel therefore did not complete his mission in chap. viii: the charge still rested upon him, "Make this man to understand the vision."

2. The being who came to Daniel at the time of his supplication, was the very same who had appeared to him in the vision at the beginning; namely, Gabriel. And that he had now come to undeceive him concerning his application of the time, is evident in that he says, I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding. Why did he not give him a full understanding of the vision at first? Because, we answer, he revealed to him all that he was then able to bear; for he fainted and was sick certain days.

3. Direct reference is made to the vision at the beginning; and if that is not the vision of chap. viii, it is impossible to find it. And again, if Gabriel does not explain in chap. ix, what he omitted in chap. viii, it is impossible for any man to show wherein Gabriel fulfilled his commission to make this man understand the vision; and we have nothing then to shield him in our minds from the charge of being a fallen angel. But a position which will lead to either of those results, is utterly unlawful.

4. When Gabriel commenced his further explanation he does not explain the symbol of the ram; for that he had already explained: he does not explain the goat; for he had likewise explained that: neither does he commence about the little horn; for he had made that plain also in chap. viii. What then does he explain? The very point there omitted; namely, time.

If there are any to whose minds these facts are insufficient to show the connection of Dan. ix, with the vision of chap. viii, we may as well bid them farewell right here; for they are not in a condition to be affected by any evidence; and they may as well not attempt to follow us any further in this argument.

But how do the words of Gabriel, "Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people," &c., explain the period of the 2300 days? The answer is, The word rendered, determined, signifies literally, cut off. Says Josiah Litch, in Midnight Cry, Vol. IV, No. 25, "Seventy weeks are determined," literally 'cut off.' The Hebrews all admit that the word determined, in our English version, does signify 'cut off.' Not one has disputed it." Prof. Whiting, also, in Midnight Cry, Vol. IV, No. 17, says: "Thus Old Testament and Rabbinical authority, and that of the earliest versions, the Septuagint and Vulgate, give the single signification of 'cutting off' to this verb. Should it be inquired why a tropical sense has been attributed to it, such as 'determining,' or 'decreeing,' it may be answered that the reference of the verse (in which it occurs) to Dan. viii, 14, was unobserved. It was therefore supposed that there was no propriety in saying, 'seventy weeks are cut off,' when there was no other period of which they could have formed a portion. But as the period of 2300 days is first given, and verses 21 and 23 compared with Dan. viii, 16, show that the ninth chapter furnishes an explanation of the vision in which Gabriel appeared to Daniel, and of the 'matter'—(the commencement of the 2300 days)—the literal (or rather, to speak properly, the only) signification demanded by the subject matter is that of 'cut off.' The Englishman's Hebrew Concordance says, "Determined, literally, divided."

From what period are the seventy weeks divided, or cut off? From the 2300 days; for there is no other period given from which they can be taken; and this is placed beyond a doubt by the connection of the two chapters, which has already been proved. The seventy weeks, then, are the first 490 days of the 2300; and this is the key to the whole mystery. This is vitally necessary to an understanding of that period. On no other ground can it be explained. Yet some who were once sound in the truth on this subject, have rashly denied this; but for how good reason, we shall by and by see. The commencement of the seventy weeks therefore marks the commencement of the 2300 days; for the former being cut off from the latter, they of course commence together. From what point shall we date them is our next inquiry.

SYNOPSIS OF THE PRESENT TRUTH. No. 9.

The Command to Restore Jerusalem.

We have already seen in the investigation of Dan. viii, that the field of the Prophet's vision, was the empire of Persia, Greece and Rome. The period of 2300 days there given, cannot therefore be literal days; for literal days (scarcely six years and a half) would by no means cover the duration of any one of those empires singly, much less embrace so nearly the whole of their existence put together, as they evidently do. They must consequently denote 2300 years; and hence the seventy weeks which are cut off from them, must be seventy weeks of years, or 490 years, as will appear sufficiently plain when we come to trace their fulfillment.

Continuing his instruction to Daniel concerning the time, [Dan. ix, 25-27,] (Gabriel says, [verse 25,] "Know therefore and understand that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem, unto the Messiah, the Prince, shall be seven weeks and three score and two weeks. The street shall be built again, and the wall even in troublous times."

There are but four events to which this language can be in any way applicable; first, the decree of Cyrus for the re-building of the house of God u. c. 536; second, the decree of Darius for the prosecution of the work which had been hindered, a. c. 519; [Ez. vi;] third, the decree of Artaxerxes to Ezra, u. c. 457; [Ez. vii;] and fourth, the commission of Nehemiah from the same king in his twentieth year, u. c. 444. Neh. ii. In determining which of these acts is in favor of the Jews answers to the "commandment to restore Jerusalem," from which the seventy weeks are to be dated, we must consider how much is included in the phrase, "to restore and to build Jerusalem," and also what commandment will allow the seventy weeks, dating from the time of its promulgation, to fulfill the conditions of the prophecy by reaching to the events therein specified.

How much then are we to understand by the words, "to restore and to build Jerusalem?" If they refer merely to the mechanical work of erecting buildings necessary to constitute a city, the decree of Cyrus has the pre-eminence above all others; for that was the first decree issued in favor of the Jews after the giving of the prophecy; and we are told in Isa. xlv, 28, that it was Cyrus who should say "to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built; and to the temple, Thy foundation shall be laid." Again, the Lord says of this same Cyrus, [Isa. xlv, 13,] "he shall build my city, and he shall let go my captives." And it cannot be supposed that a license to build the house of God at Jerusalem, which this decree granted, would not give permission also for the erection of buildings around it.

But the decree which the prophecy calls the commandment to restore Jerusalem, is one which goes forth 69 prophetic weeks, or 483 years previous to the manifestation of the Messiah; for from the going forth of that commandment "unto the Messiah, the Prince, shall be seven weeks and three score and two weeks;" but if we date from this decree of Cyrus, a. c. 536, the 483 years will terminate 53 years before even our Lord was born.

Two points may therefore be considered settled from these considerations: 1st. The prophecy does not point us to the decree of Cyrus, as the commandment from which to date the seventy weeks; for dating from that point the 69 weeks which were to extend to the manifestation of the Messiah the Prince, terminate 53 years before even his birth; and this proves, 2d. That the expression, "to restore and to build Jerusalem," means something more than merely the building that is necessary to the re-existence of the city, which it must be admitted the decree of Cyrus fully granted.

As to the second decree, that of Darius, u. c. 519, it was but a confirmation of the original one of Cyrus; and the same objection otherwise exists against this as against the former; namely, the 483 years dated from that point terminate by far too soon, leaving full thirty-six years between their ending and the birth of the Saviour; whereas they should extend to the commencement of his public ministry.

We come now to the decree granted to Ezra, by king Artaxerxes in the seventh year of his reign, u. c. 457. Let us apply to this also the measuring rod of the prophecy. Dating from this year, 483 years carry us to a. d. 27. And what took place then? Luke tells us: "Now when all the people were baptized, it came to pass that Jesus also being baptized, and praying, the heaven was opened, and the Holy Ghost descended in a bodily shape like a dove upon him, and a voice came from heaven which said, Thou art my beloved Son; in thee I am well pleased." Luke iii, 21, 22, a. d. 27; margin. After this Jesus came "into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying, The time is fulfilled." The time here mentioned must have been some predicted period; but no prophetic period can be found, then terminating, except the 69 weeks of the prophecy of Daniel, which were to extend to the Messiah the Prince. The Messiah had now come, and himself proclaimed, The time is fulfilled.

That Christ commenced his ministry in a. d. 27, is further proved from this fact: At the first passover which he attended, the Jews told him that the temple had been forty and six years in building. John ii, 20. Herod commenced the building of that temple in the year u. c. 19.* This will bring the passover, forty-six years afterwards, in the year a. d. 28. He must therefore have commenced his ministry in a. d. 27.

Having found perfect harmony on this point, it is due that we look further at the words of the prophecy. The period of the 70 weeks appears to be marked off into three general divisions: first, seven weeks; second, threescore and two weeks; and third, one week. Seven weeks are allotted for the building of the wall, &c., in troublous times; and from that point events are thus predicted: [Dan. ix, 26, 27:] "And after threescore and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off, but not for himself. . . . And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week; and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease.¹¹

Sixty-nine weeks have brought us to the Messiah; and from the above we learn that he was to confirm the covenant for one week, that is, the seventieth, (7 years,) and that in the midst of this week he should cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease. These Jewish ordinances, pointing to the death of Christ, could only cease at his cross; and there they did virtually end, though not in form till A. D. 70. It is the same therefore as if it had read, And after threescore and two weeks in the midst of the seventieth week, shall Messiah be cut off, and cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease. Now does the term, midst, refer to any fixed point in the week? It does; for it means, the middle. The word from which it is translated, occurs in the Old Testament, according to the Englishman's Hebrew Concordance, one hundred and sixteen times. One hundred times it is rendered, half; four times it enters into composition and is translated, midnight; eight times it is rendered, in the midst; once, in the middle, and three times, part. We are to understand therefore that the crucifixion is fixed to the middle of the week. When did this take place?

"The Saviour attended but four passovers, at the last of which he was crucified. John ii, 13; v. 1; vi, 4; xiii, 1. This could not bring the crucifixion later than A. D. 31, as recorded by Aurelius Cassiodorus, a respectable Roman Senator, about A. D. 514:

'In the consulato of Tiberius Caesar Aug. V, and Atilius Sejanus [v. c. 784, A. D. 31], our Lord Jesus Christ suffered on the eighth of the calends of April.' In this year and in this day, says Dr. Hales, agree also the Council of Oursara, A. D. 106 or 108, the Alexandrian Chronicle, Maximus Monachus, Nicephorus

Constantinus, Cedrenus; and in this year but on different days, concur Eusebius and Epiphanius, followed by Kehler, Hucher, Patinus and Petavius.¹² "It is recorded in history that the whole time of our Saviour's teaching was three years and a half, which is the half of a week [of years.]"¹³

Three and a half years reckoned backward from the Spring of A. D. 31 where the crucifixion took place, carry us to the Autumn of A. D. 27 where the 69 weeks ended and Christ commenced his ministry. And three and a half years, the last half of the week, reckoned forward from that time, bring us to the Autumn of A. D. 34, for the termination of the 70 weeks. Their close is marked by the martyrdom of Stephen, the formal rejection of the gospel of Christ by the Jewish Sanhedrim in the persecution of his disciples, and the turning of the apostles to the Gentiles. Acts ix, 1-18.

From the facts above set forth, we see that reckoning the 70 weeks from the decree given to Ezra in the 7th of Artaxerxes, A. D. 457, there is the most perfect harmony concerning the events which were to cluster around and mark their close. So far it seems all must be satisfied. There are two more questions to be settled: 1st. Is the 7th of Artaxerxes rightly fixed to the year A. D. 457; and 2d. Will the decree given to Ezra sustain the full import of the words, "to restore and to build Jerusalem." This will be the field of inquiry in our next.

SYNOPSIS OF THE PRESENT TRUTH. No. 10.

We proceed to inquire,

1. Is the seventh of Artaxerxes, when Ezra received his decree concerning Jerusalem, [Ez. vii.] rightly placed in the year B. C. 457? The following extract * will aid us on this point:

"Ptolemy mentions an eclipse of the moon in the seventh of Cambyses, which, according to modern astronomical calculation, took place in the night following the 10th of July, in the year of the Julian period 4101, at the beginning of the second year of the sixty-fourth Olympiad. As the vulgar era is dated from January 1st 4714 of the Julian period, it follows that this eclipse was B. C. 523. The date of this eclipse, decided by the unerring record of astronomy is undisputed. Consequently as Ptolemy observes, it is 'the cardinal point and foundation, on which depend the arrangement of preceding and succeeding times and the concord of sacred and profane history.' (De Doct. Temp. Lib. x. c. 14.)"

This was in the seventh of Cambyses. Cambyses reigned seven years and five months; or, if we include the seven months of the usurper Smerdis who followed him, according to the canon of Ptolemy, eight years. He therefore reigned one year after this eclipse. He was followed by Darius, who reigned thirty-six years; and he in turn by Xerxes who reigned twenty-one years; and this brings us to the first of Artaxerxes, B. C. 464. These are undisputed records of history, from an undisputed starting point, based on the calculations of astronomy. There can therefore be no dispute in regard to it. The first, then, of Artaxerxes being 464, his seventh would be B. C. 457. Here the canon of Ptolemy places it, which is a canon of undoubted authority, the accuracy of which is demonstrated by the concurrent agreement of more than twenty eclipses." And before it can be shown to be wrong, the calculation of these eclipses (and they have been repeatedly calculated) must be shown to be incorrect, which is an impossibility.

2. We come therefore to the second inquiry. Did the commission granted to Ezra, answer to the prophecy to restore and to build Jerusalem? What is the intent of that phrase? We answer, to restore the Jewish state, civil and ecclesiastical, and re-settle it according to the law of Moses. A thing to be restored, must be brought back to its original state. The condition then of the Jewish state and church previous to the captivity, we may take as a standard for its restoration after that event. But how was it with them previous to the time of Ezra? The Scriptures were in a manner lost, the people in a profound ignorance of the law, the worship of God neglected, and everything in great disorder and confusion. This we learn from the reformation which Ezra set about on his arrival at Jerusalem.

We read in Ez. vii. 11, "Now this is the copy of the letter that king Artaxerxes gave unto Ezra the priest, the scribe, even a scribe of the words of the commandments of the Lord and of his statutes to Israel." "The letter then follows, written not in Hebrew, but in Chaldaic, or Eastern Aramic, the language then used at Babylon. At the 27th verse the narrative proceeds in Hebrew. We are thus furnished with the original document, by virtue of which Ezra was authorized to 'restore and to build Jerusalem.'"[†]
